

ESSAYS IN PHILOSOPHY, CULTURE AND HISTORY

By A. J. Reffes

January 2023

Progress Publishers

For Kathy, friend, mentor and wife. Stupor Mundi.

Copyright © 2023 by A. J. Reffes. All rights reserved. Published by Progress Publishers, Berlin, Germany.

INTRODUCTION

These reports are intended for a general, nonspecialist audience. They run the gamut of the arts and sciences, historical and current events, and should provide the reader with useful introductions to given topics. May they encourage a few happy hours of suggestive thought!

TABLE OF CONTENTS

The Philosophy Of Common Sense
Culture Conflict: Apollo Versus Faust
Helter Skelter
Enlightenment—Counterenlightenment
The Curse Of Romanticism
America Fronts For Communism
Secretary Of State For The Reds
Framed
Equality, Fraternity, Terror
A Pincer Movement In Spain
Surrender In Korea
The Betrayal Of China
The Global AntiTrump Movement
The Pied Piper
Director Oppenheimer
The Virus House
Retreat From Victory
A Profile In Courage
America's Red Century
The National Red Caucus
The Antiindustrial Revolution
The Decline And Fall Of The West
The Indian Character Of Western Philosophy
Innocent And Behind Bars
The Myth Of Medical Mental Illness
Subversion, PhD
Person Of The Year
The End Of The Classical World
The Media On Trial
The Free Speech Crisis
September 2, 1945: The Victory Of World Communism
Red Combatants Attack The West
The Fourth Reich
Two Million Dead, One Quarter Of A Nation
Freaks
Classicide: The Crime Of The Century
Code Name: Critical Theory
Genocide In Russia
The Great Leap Into Terror
The Open Sewer Of Multiculturalism
The Red Attack On The Rule Of Law
The State Of The Arts
405 East 42nd Street: World Headquarters Of The Totalitarians
The Death Rattle Of The European Union
The German-Arab Nexus
World War I: World Ideological Conflict
The Leftist And Libertarian Assault On Reason
A Picture Gallery Of High Cultures
Reds Take Over The Nation
High Treason At Fort Monmouth
The Face Of The Nation
A League Of Gentlemen
On The Waterfront
Black Communism, Black Fascism
Not Guilty
Labor Doesn't Work
The Golden Age of the Airways: Brought To You By The Reds
Red Mobs Maul The Constitution
Antisemitism: A Leftist Disease
Mission To Moscow

The Faustian Destruction Of Architecture
The Reign Of Antisystems
Noncontradiction
Heidegger, Wittgenstein And The Death Of Philosophy
Covid 19: A Lesson
Reds Upend The Melting Pot
Ordered Liberty Versus Mammon And The Reds
A New Disease, An Old Refrain
Summer Camp
Like Parent, Like Child
A Committee Investigates America
The Red Propaganda Tower Atop The World
The Faustian Perversion Of Property
Report From The Grim Reaper
A Pandemic Of Tyranny
Spartacus And The Reds In Ancient Rome
Christians And Marxists Against Man
The Shot Heard Around the World
China's Kristallnacht: 1966 To 1976
Adolf Hitler, Marxist
Unchained
Red Dot Com
Corporate Reds Attack Capitalism
A Worldwide Web Of Subversion
Two Months Which Shook The World
Red Thunder Clouds Over The World
The Irish Red Army
The Red Money Press
Reds Target Israel
They Walked Alone
The Witch Doctor's Drumbeat Of Words
Aristotle Versus Frege
Midnight Rolls Through The World
Western Imperialists Liberate The World
Logic And Evolution
Perceptual Realism And Its Enemies
The Colors Of Danger
Timeline Of The West
Englishmen And Germans
Common Sense Cosmology Versus The Big Bang
Two Trials In Antiquity
The Yellow Peril
The Shame Of The Cities
The Enemies Of Global Capitalism
A Message From Garcia
Citizen Hearst
The Journey Of Charles Lindbergh
Red Cells Spread Across The Nation
Ancient Poisons From The East
David And Goliath
Attorney General Palmer
America's Reds Join Forces
The Implosion Phenomenon
The Klan Rides Again
The Red Donor Class
Jaws
The Soul Snatchers
The Heavy Truncheons Of The Thought Police
Antifa Takes Over The West
Three Cheers For Three Americans
The Civil Rights Act Which Ended Civil Rights
America's Race Wars And The Reds

Corruption In City Hall
Psychopathic Marx
Schizophrenic Christ
The Materialists Versus The Idealists
Removed, Renamed, Rebranded: Revolution
Hegel And The Medicine Man
Kant: Philosopher Of Crime
Battle Cry Of Freedom: Let Us Be Divisive
Descartes And The DSM
Superman At Large
Existentialist Hoodlums
Headmen Take Over Philosophy
The Marxist Final Frontier
The Rawlsian Swamp
Postmodern: PostEnlightenment
Modern Mathematics: The Art Of Madness
FDR's New Deal For The Reds
Prophets Of The Primitives
Reds Repeal Popular Culture
Experimental Noise
Empty Canvases
Streams Of Consciousness
Big Tech Reds Present The Internet War
History As He Saw It
Lights Out
The Triumph Of Leni Riefenstahl
The Agitator
American Jews Front For The Reds
Gotham City Reds
Satan's Mission To Massachusetts
1917: America Joins The Reds
Killers In Theory, Killers In Practice
Lock Them Up
The Antidiscrimination Jackboots
Reds Bang The Gavel In The Democratic Party
Reds Beget a New Aryan Class
The Bonfires Of The Reds
Mathematical Physics: Prediction, Yes, Explanation, No
Red Briefs For The Arabs And The Indians
Monster From The Steppes
Marx's Master Builder
Bard Of The Reds
Red Central At Weimar
Red Alert At Haymarket Square
Reds' Night Out At The Oscars
Reds Open Fire
Head Chef At The Red Cafe
Market Prices, Social Prices And Fair Prices
The Killing Machine
Chairman Of Murder Incorporated
Attila Takes Command Of Psychology
Head Banker For The Reds
Ballot Stuffing, Court Packing, Courtesy Of The Reds
The Legacy Of A Red Judge
Manchurian Candidates Mass Produced By The Reds
A Green New Deal For The Totalitarian Reds
Faustian Antiarchitecture
Sculpting Psychosis
Substantive Due Process And The Survival Of Liberty
Riders Of The Apocalypse
Invaders From A Red Planet

The Third Rail, Laid Down By The Reds
Fear In The Night
The Sewers Of London
Hume's Hospital
Monads And Madness
Spinoza At The Stake
Hegel's Magic Abortion, The Reds And The Christian Right Decadence Spelled Jazz
Wanted: Bishop Of Berkeley
Locke's Secret Substratum
England Then And Now
The Wheel Of History
The Reds' Inflation: Ravager Of Nations
Ayn Rand Versus Aristotle
Human Events
A Forgotten Man's Philosophy
Doctor Of Cultures
Title Deed Of The Reds
General Ludd And His Green Party
Reds Steal The Election
The Reds Of Sherwood Forest England's Early Reds Minister Erhard
The Reds' Big Three Fraudulent Elections In A Failed State
The Big Brown Book Of The Reds Fritz Lang Directs For The Reds
Reds Repeal Free Speech
Reds Declare War On America Court Greenlights Electoral Fraud
The Press Organs Of Red Revolution Reds Provoke Secession
The 2020 Presidential Election: Anatomy Of A Crime
The Reds' Final Solution Against Trump
A Red Cancer Spreads Through Society Decadence Kills The Death Penalty A Sham Called Judicial Review America Leaves The West Indian Removal: The Conquest Of Subhumanity
The Boxer War Against The West Liberty: Banned By Brussels Horst Wessels On The March Freedom Fighters Storm Washington Assault On The Capital: Trump's Greatest Legacy Reds Sweep The National Government
The Red Civil Liberties Union
Reds Purge Society
Wanted: An Insurrection
Merkel's Pharmacy
Albert Speer: Architect Of A New Movement
The Republican Party, 1854-1940, RIP
The Red Onslaught
Biden--Allende
Reds On The Couch
The Voice Of Destruction Truth As Correspondence: Banned In The West
The Reds' Wall Around America
The Brass Knuckles Of Critical Race Theory Critical Legal Theory: Lawyers For The Reds
The Fuhrer Of Feminism
A Place, Not A Country

Reds Run Senate Trial
John Kennedy, Fascist Portrait Of A Mugging Political Equality: Repealed By The Reds Nine Red Judges All In A Row Reds Move In On Mathematics Killer Clowns At Large Reds Assassinate Lincoln Reality Deplatformed
HR 1: Reds Roll Back Democracy
Reds Set Up Banana Republic In Washington Calling All Cars: Revolution In Progress
Red Judges Commit Treason Philosophy In The Twenty First Century Reds Open Up The Abyss
The Grim Mentor
Reds Bankrupt The Nation
The Red Schoolmaster
Reds Hunt The Rich
Reds Take Aim At The Best And The Brightest Reds On The Dole
Black Death Hits America
Karl Marx The Second
A Marriage In Mexico
From The Left Bank To Los Angeles
Max Stirner And His Anarchists
Reds Transform The West
Socialism And Slavery: A Grassroots Movement Hermann Hesse And The Red Terror Boy Wonder Fights The Reds
The Reagan Revolution That Wasn't Reds Convict Floyd Cop
A Century Of Color And Communism Russia's First Red
Last Stop: Red Town, USA Director Welles Wows The Reds Steinbeck's Grapes Of Hatred And Envy Hemingway Fights For Stalin
A Singer For The Red Folk America Today: Red Coup And Red Revolution Guthrie's Dusty Road To Russia Reds Take Over France
America's Darkest Hour Communist Playwright Wins Pulitzer Prize
Black Devil In Baritone America's Number One Exports: The Theories And Tactics Of The Reds Muckrakers Attack America Portrait Of A Bush League Fuhrer Marxist Professor Promotes Cartesianism German Reds Invade America Aristotle Versus Locke Orwell Exposes Communist England Student Red Pays Her Dues Disintegration
The Reds' Global Tax Regime
Reds Abolish Money
Marxist Death Squads Gun Down Whites Hollywood Director Contacts The Dead Swastikas Hawked In Diversity Shops
Reds Take America Behind The Iron Curtain
Supreme Court Mafia Saves Obamacare Greek And German Myths: A Study In Contrasts

Reds Graduate Hitler's Children
Red Environmentalists Turn Back The Clock Why The Reds Hate Columbus 1000 AD
Drug Use Dooms The World
Faust's German Playwright Reds Cancel The Fourth Of July Reds Blow Up The Courts
Reds Kidnap School Kids
Women On The Supreme Court: A History Of Failure
The Black Boys From Brazil Faust's English Playwright Underman From Moscow
Before The Islamists: Blacks And Jews Lead World Revolution World's Teachers Rally On Red Square
The Method School Of Nonacting
Reds Open The Borders
America's Lost Wars, Lost By The Reds Biden's Red Channels Animals Overrun South Africa Gas Chambers Readied For Whites
The Reds' Project Fear Communism On The March Global Capitalism Under Attack
Why The Reds Hate Trump Reds Appoint Hitler Med School Dean
The We Generation
The Roaring Twenties: Roaring With Degeneracy America In His Crosshairs Private Property, RIP Speech Unfree, Elections Unfair
Reds' Victory In Afghanistan Broadcast Journalism's Red In Chief Dementia 2020
A Brief History Of The Reds
Reds Install Rogue President Reds Take Political Prisoners
Joe Biden Versus The Free World
Red's Mein Kampf Sets The World On Fire Reds Elect Killer In Chief Masses On The Dole
SOS America
Red Traitors Stab Freedom In The Back
"Neoconservative" Communists Come To Washington European Union Votes For Communism
The West Today: The House That Marx Built Raw Sewage South Of The Border Merkel's Legacy Of Destruction
The Reds' Nazi Forests Empiricism Repealed By The Reds' Nazi Science
Red Brawlers Attack The Press
Black Hole In The North Atlantic The Paris Climate Accords: Reds Expropriate The West Red Pornographers Crowd The Nightstand Popper's Antiscience
Aristotle And Kant On Morality Communists Bomb Court School Board Reds Expel Gifted Children Feminist Freislers Build Hangman's Court Reds Throttle America Nation Mourns Red General Visual Perception: The Basis Of All Knowledge

Soviet Cities Spread Across The World The Reichstag Fire: Vanguard Of Red Terror
 Reds Peddle Jew Hatred Communist Revolution In America Massachusetts Reds Take Over School System Red Winds From The Pampas Satan's Red Faction
 Reds Stage Second Wannsee Conference Christian Reds And Communist Christians Campus Crusade Of Communism Red Tide Submerges Free Nations
 Red Media Masters Shut Down The West Reds Launch Race War And Class War
 Reds Kill The Rich Boy Hero Battles The Reds
 The Reds' Covid Police
 HR Bill 5376: The Build Back Communism Better Act
 The Red Cult Of Death
 Red Acid Dissolves Borders
 Law In The Twenty First Century: Black Man Boss Abortion Rights Properly Grounded
 The History Of Cinema: Degeneracy From Day One Earth Opens In California Crime Wave Hits The West
 The World's First Terror Network
 The Vanished Voice Of Freedom Covid Forever
 Two Lads From Linz
 Aristotle And The Higgs Field
 Joe Biden's America
 The Spanish Civil War: Reds Sent Back To Russia
 Germany 1919 to 1933: An Arc Of Red Terror Hurtles Across The Nation Communism: The End Stage Of Democracy
 Bishop Of Hate
 This Red Realm, This Red Isle, This Red England
 Reds Ban Cars
 January 6, 2022: First Anniversary Of A People's War Weimar Communists Set Up Shop Reds In White Coats Doctors For Communism
 The Transgender Assault On Civilization
 The Red Planet
 The West Abolishes Science
 Reds Molest Children
 2020: The Election Year That Wasn't America's Reds Rewrite History King Communist Reds In Charge
 Reds Launch Witch Hunt Church Of The Reds Gathers Congregation Antiliterature Empties Bookshelves
 Red Pharmacists Dispense Poison
 The Greatest War Ever Fought Germany's Freikorps Defends The West Red Tanks Bulldoze Freedom Convoy
 Joe Biden Greenlights Global Chaos Red America Burns The Flag
 Reds Roll Through Canada
 Reds Revive Race Politics
 The West Surrenders Ukraine Democrats Form Paramilitary Wing Russia Invades The West

Biden Nominates Black Woman Communist To High Court Biden Deals Death In Ukraine
The Reds' Selective Indignation Western Cowardice Dooms The World Total War
Reds Shut Down Shockley
Red Swastikas Festoon Free Nations
Red Caesars And Their Mobs
A Century Of The Red Menace
Russia's Victory Over The West
George Kennan: Father Of Surrender Scourge On Mankind
Reds Bury Biden Scandals
Red Front With Iran Chinese Flag Flies Over The West
Zelensky Sells Out Ukraine
The Black Oscars
Reds Cover Up Biden Mafia
From Washington: The Red Channels Of Voice Of America Disney Leaves America Historic First: Black Woman Communist Joins High Court Reds Take Over Beethoven
Red Orchestras Crowd The Concert Hall Rampage Across Civilization Red Curators Smash Museums
Red Judge Hangs Trump Freedom's Exodus From California
Red Librarian Burns Books Migrant Cancer Consumes Civilization Red Inflation Plunders Nations Carnival Barkers Push Climate Change
Red Storm Over Social Media Dartmouth Reds Terrorize Students Harvard Reds Restart The Inquisition Daytime Nightmare
Christian Totalitarians Strike Apocalypse Now
Social Democracy, Liberal Democracy, Virtue Based Democracy Red Mobs Lynch Freedom
Mass Murderers And Double Standards
The Abrahamic Faiths: Three Points Of Darkness Savagery And License From The Cape to Cairo Caesars March On Civilization Red Activist Opens Fire
The Pandemic Of Transgenderism Social Entrepreneurs Fight For Communism
Henry Kissinger: Diplomat Of Amoralism Reds March Through The Modern Age Reds Unleash Global Famine Black Klan Rides Through Chicago
Implosion USA
The Two Headed Serpent Red Committee Targets Trump Land Without Hope Attack Of The Red Managers Prophet Of Intersectional Politics
The Wreckage Of The West Reds Take Over Private Schools
Red Policies Bankrupt America
Supreme Court Greenlights Theocracy
The 2020 Presidential Election: Fraud At The Polls Tyrannosaurus Rex

Reuters Red Press
Walmart's Red Wares
Ireland's High Schools Hijacked By The Reds Independence Day Dishonored
China Doomsday
Harvard's Reds Rally Jew Haters Moral Relativism And Its Murderous Harvest The Red Towers Of AT&T A Man And A Woman
Reds Take Over Los Angeles
Corporate Hitlerites Promote Diversity, Equity And Inclusion CVS Dispenses Rage
Google's Red Alphabet
Red Arsonists Incinerate America
White Flag Over Ukraine Degeneracy In Drag
The New Red FBI Whites Wear The Jewish Star Verizon: Global Carrier Of Red Revolution Reds Shut Down Nuclear Power America's Red Army
Reds Raid Trump
Biden's Inflation Production Act
Reds Imperialists Invade America
Red Missile Strikes America Three Theories Of Value: Capitalist, Communist And Classical Child Killers Turned Loose
Black Power Communists Attack The West
The FBI: Public Enemy Number One Biden's Debt Relief For Deadbeats Subversion In Sacramento's Schools
The Biden Regime
The Devil From Konigsberg
Berlin 1936: The World's Greatest Olympics Communist Night Riders Terrorize Whites Biden's May Day Speech Rallies Reds Red Queen Dies
Royal Family Of Radicals Death Of A Formalist
The Biden Crime Family
Red Alert: Red Attack World Communist Forum
Reds Shatter The World
The Laboratory Versus The Mystic Reds Shut Down America
The Axis Returns Brothers Red And Black
The Voice Of Today's Frankfurt School
The Swastika And The Red Crescent Southern Poverty Law Center: Reds In Charge Elon Musk: Investor, Magnate and CEO Of Communism Red Revolution At Yale Law school High School Theater In Massachusetts: Starring Black Power Parkland Killer Set Free
Common Sense And The Character Of Time
Red Ballots Bury The West
Free Fall
Reds Jail Steve Bannon
Reds Repeal The Rule Of Law
Voltaire And Alex Jones
Climate Change Vandals Hit Museums Islamists Invade France

Red Activist Hammers Comrade Dead Souls In Venezuela's Schools Bill Gates: Programmer For Communism Joe Biden's Praetorian Guard
Bull Connor And His Black Power Dogs America's Midterms: Christian Right Brings Victory To Communists Red Secretaries Write ESG Transgender World Airlines
The Shadow Of George Soros Election Fraud In Brazil America: November 1620 to November 2020 RIP Richard Branson's Red Conglomerate Arizona Reds Hijack Election
Red Delinquent Runs Wild Britain Underwater
Three Points Of Darkness Migrant Plague Blackens Europe
The Faithful Congregate In The Religions Of The Reds America Descends Into Disintegration Germany Today: Communist And Fascists Battle For Control Black Communist Lesbian Flies Home Red Tentacles Consume Twitter Washington State Governor Starts Revolution Migrants Open Fire On Sweden
Trump Secretary Gunned Down In Chicago MeToo Monster Jails Weinstein For Life
The New Millennium: Fields Of Ruination America's Military: Reds Take Command Joe Biden's Holdings
The British Board Of Red Censors

THE PHILOSOPHY OF COMMON SENSE

Common sense is the fundamental ability to perceive, think and judge shared by all people possessing normal mental equipment. Synonymous with mental soundness and sanity, common sense is the outlook and philosophy which lay at the basis of Greco-Roman culture and its tenets were systematically set forth by Aristotle. Common sense affirms that there exists a physical world outside of consciousness which is as it is. Any attempt to challenge or deny the existence of the physical world inevitably assumes its existence, inasmuch as language and consciousness ultimately refer to something beyond themselves or they refer to nothing whatever and cannot exist. A consciousness held to be conscious of nothing but a form of consciousness itself is a contradiction in terms, because it would be a consciousness which was conscious of nothing. Before consciousness is conscious of itself, it must first be conscious of something. The proof of the existence of the physical world is the existence, the substance, the perception and the consciousness of the physical world itself. Common sense affirms that to be is to be something, that existence is determination, and that an existence held to be indeterminate or nonspecific would be an existence which was everything at one and the same time and is a contradiction in terms. The fundamental law of reality is the law of noncontradiction, the law that A is A, which states that everything which exists is as it is and cannot possess contradictory sensory attributes at one and the same time or act in manner which contradicts its specific nature or essence. Common sense affirms that all things act in accordance with the type of things they are, and that a thing which could act in any manner whatever, would be an actual, moving, changing, growing, expanding, evolving contradiction. Common sense affirms that any attempt to deny the law of noncontradiction inevitably assumes its validity, inasmuch as the purported denial is not held to be both a denial and an affirmation of the law at one and the same time, but to be an absolute, unqualified denial. Common sense affirms that natural facts, such as the law of gravity, the atomic number of gold or the boiling point of water, are necessary facts; they could not be other or different from what they are without matter not being matter, gold not being gold, water not being water, and A not being A; while man made facts, such as the birth of Napoleon, the founding of America or the start of World War II, are purely contingent facts and could have been otherwise and different. Common sense affirms that since concepts correspond to reality, every aspect of a concept, both defining and nondefining, is necessary, just as every aspect of an object, both defining and nondefining, is necessary. Common sense affirms that there is no supernatural realm which transcends the physical world or man's senses, inasmuch as such an existence would occupy no specific place, or if it did, would be one more physical existence. Common sense affirms that an alleged supernatural existence could not be everywhere, inasmuch as no two things can occupy the same place at the same time. Common sense affirms that the universe is necessarily uncreated, eternal and indefinite in extent, inasmuch as there can be nothing "before", "after" or "beyond" physical existence except more physical existence itself. Common sense affirms that the notion of creation of something out of nothing is a contradiction in terms, inasmuch as a void is void and there is no nothing, only something. Common sense affirms that existence cannot be an unknowable, unperceivable, noumenal thing in itself, inasmuch as the denial of the reality of the perceived world in favor of a transcendent world would necessitate the absurdity that man is blind because he sees, and deaf because he hears, and touches nothing because he touches something, and is deluded because he reasons and thinks. Common sense affirms that while not all colors are real, some colors must be real, or at least one color must be real, inasmuch as an object which was extended but absolutely colorless would be an object indistinguishable from its surrounding space, and that just as a colored object is necessarily extended, so an object which is extended is necessarily colored. Common sense affirms that all man's knowledge is acquired through the senses and any attempt to deny the validity of man's senses presupposes the validity of the senses, inasmuch as any denial necessarily involves the adducing of sensory evidence. Common sense affirms that man's concepts are formed by a process of abstraction or induction from the data of the senses, a process in which the mind identifies, abstracts, induces, isolates or removes common attributes from particular objects, and general laws from particular instances. Common sense affirms that the notion of apriori knowledge, or knowledge acquired by nonsensory means by resort to such things as feeling, emotion, instinct, revelation or intuition, is a contradiction in terms, inasmuch as such knowledge would necessarily be subjective, because the apriori forms would be imposed by the mind and not discovered in experience, and subjective knowledge is knowledge of nothing. Common sense affirms that the laws of logic are grasped empirically and every special science is an empirical science. The law of identity, the law that a thing is as it is or that A is A, cannot be known prior to some form of perception. It cannot be known prior to the perception of objects, or prior to the perception of the notation $A=A$, or prior to the perception of a sentence such as man is man or a rational animal is a rational animal. In the latter two sentences, it is not necessary to grasp the meanings of the words in order to grasp the law of identity, for one can perceive the law by perceiving a mere alphabetic identity. For a statement such as man is a rational animal, after a suitable translation, after either man is translated as rational animal or rational animal is translated as man, an alphabetic identity emerges which instantiates the law on the perceptual level. Common sense affirms that any denial that knowledge of reality is objective, absolute and necessary in character is a contradiction in terms, inasmuch as the purported denial is itself assumed to be absolutely, necessarily and objectively true. Common sense affirms that an empirical mathematics is one which excludes as impossible real dimensions higher than three and thus gives primacy to Euclidean geometry. It as well excludes as impossible a real zero and real negative numbers and thus gives primacy to physical arithmetic and physical algebra. Common sense affirms that an empirical physics is one which includes color in its catalogue of real attributes. While affirming that the vast majority of colors are subjective sensations caused by photon frequencies, an empirical physics affirms that at least one color must be real, although such a color would lack all relevance to a system of mathematical, measurement based physics. Common sense affirms that theories of mathematical physics are not literal descriptions of reality but tools of prediction. Relativity theory is not literally true because reality is not pure field but consists of objects which produce motions or produce fields. Quantum theory is likewise not literally true because motion is real and is not quantized or made up of static frames or snapshots which create a motion picture type illusion of motion. Common sense affirms that reality consists of particles plus fields. Common sense affirms that morality is absolute in character and not relative to persons, places, times, cultures or societies, and affirms that the doctrine of moral relativism is inconsistent. Proclaiming the relative character of all moral prescriptions, the relativist inconsistently proceeds to advocate one of the following prescriptions as absolute: he either advocates a policy of tolerance toward those who hold different moral values, or he advocates a policy of intolerance and advocates the use of force and violence against those who hold different moral values. Common sense affirms that man's moral perfection consists in a life of rational flourishing, inasmuch as man's unique means of survival is through the use of his reason. Although man possesses two special qualities, reason and volition, it is only through the use of his reason that he can acquire the conceptual knowledge necessary to achieve the intellectual, technological and industrial progress special and distinctive to man, which constitute man's crown and glory. Common sense affirms that all systems of morality which reject rational flourishing as man's supreme good are forms of moral relativism and thus founder in inconsistency. The morality of deontologism, which states that man's moral perfection consists in obedience to a set of rules or duties regardless of consequences, duties which are known by means of special feelings, voices, instincts, intuitions or the reading of external commands, is a form of moral relativism, inasmuch as it relativizes the good to the arbitrary legislation of some person, group or divine being. The morality of hedonism, which states that man's moral perfection consists in leading a life of pleasure or happiness, is a form of moral relativism, inasmuch as it relativizes the good to whatever actions produce these consequences. Common sense affirms that inasmuch as those who reject the life of rational flourishing are not, morally speaking, human beings, it is morally right and proper for rational flourishers to use force and violence against them, as they would use force and violence against biological animals. Common sense affirms that individuals and only individuals have rights, but the rights to life, liberty and property are not absolute but conditional upon the use to which they are put, and there is no right of an individual to life, liberty or property if such right is utilized to achieve irrational ends. Common sense rejects both liberalism and socialism. It rejects socialism because individuals and only individuals exist outside the mind and groups have no existence except as abstractions or figures of speech. Common sense rejects liberalism because individuals do not enjoy a right to live in the manner of an animal, and the liberal proviso that no person may initiate the use of force against any other proceeds from the fallacy of moral relativism. Common sense affirms that justice is the distribution to each of what is morally due to him or due to him as a rational flourisher, and that those who do not rationally flourish, those who do not use their life, liberty or property to act in accordance with their rational nature and lead the good life of reason, are not in justice entitled to receive anything. They are in justice the rightless slaves of those who live well or humanly flourish or live a life of knowledge and intelligence. Common sense affirms that the purpose of the state is to promote justice by ensuring that those who rationally flourish alone are granted rights and freedoms and those who do not rationally flourish are deprived of their rights, enslaved, and compelled to serve those who do. Common sense affirms that a rational criminal justice system is one which draws a distinction between accusations and evidence and prohibits the conviction of defendants without either credible, independent, eyewitness corroboration or credible physical evidence. Common sense affirms that wages, prices and profits must be grounded in reason and reflect the values of the goods and services themselves. Common sense affirms that economic value is assigned by the intrinsic nature or essence of the goods and services exchanged and neither by the votes of the market nor the votes of the proletariat nor the edicts of the state or society. There are three types of price: a market price, a social price, and a fair, moral and just price. Common sense affirms that a rational economic system is one which exalts fair prices, fair wages and fair profits above their capitalist and socialist alternatives. Common sense affirms that beauty is a state of order and harmony without contradictions or clashes of any kind. The purpose of art is to create this objective state of beauty and any deviation from this purpose constitutes a perversion of art. Thus art is neither a free play of pure forms without content, nor a documentation of journalistic information without form. Art is the recreation of reality in some physical medium in accordance with the nature or essence of the objects portrayed. Art involves an act of abstraction which isolates the essential and defining characteristics of an object and presents it in concrete examples. Common sense affirms that architecture must be reality based and be functional and that the form of a building must proceed from its function. Thus common sense rejects Modern architecture as an exercise in pure form, as an architecture of pure space, whose buildings are subject to superheating, supercooling and water leakage; lack proper ventilation and air circulation; and in their vast open rooms and workplaces, deny the elementary requirements of human privacy. Reality as pure mind; reality as an unknowable noumenon; reality as dialectical contradiction; reality as will power, want and desire; reality as a stream of consciousness; reality as the ego and self; reality as experience and its reconstructions; reality as subjective and intersubjective in character; reality as interpretations, hermeneutics and their endless deconstructions; reality as narrative and text; reality as the phenomenology of pure essences, forms and consciousness which has bracketed and excluded the existence of physical objects; reality as human consciousness, thereness and presence which creates the illusion of physical objects; objects as things which are perceived, not things as they are in themselves; consciousness as the sole, self evident certainty; logic as an arbitrary linguistic convention; science as undetermined and underdetermined by the data of experience; physical objects as unreal cultural posits; physical objects as artifacts of language games and forms of life; gender as fluid and changeable in character and as a subjective construction; the objects of knowledge as ideas, perceptions, impressions, signs and sensations; mathematics as an antisystem without completion or coherence of any kind; morality as a series of categorical imperatives to commit acts of evil or a series of hedonistic desires to commit acts of evil; liberty as animal license and liberal chaos; liberty outlawed in the parliaments and politburos of welfare statism and red totalitarian tyranny; art as formalist psychosis or journalistic minutiae; art as stories without plots or meaning, music without melody or harmony, and paintings which paint nothing; buildings which merge with the surrounding space, are antifunctional statements of pure bodiless form, and symbolize a philosophic pathology: an exaltation of consciousness over physical reality. Such is the onslaught against common sense and human sanity launched over the centuries by the Faustian culture of the West. There have been two pseudoAristotelian doctrines which have caught the attention of real Aristotelians: the philosophy of Thomas Aquinas and Ayn Rand's Objectivism. Thomism dissolves into incoherence in its attempt to combine Christian faith, revelation and mysticism with the principles of Aristotle. Rand's Objectivism dissolves into incoherence on three points: on its view of the nature of percepts, its view that knowledge is contextual, and its support for liberal democracy. Rand states: "A perception is a group of sensations automatically retained and integrated by the brain of a living organism, which gives it the ability to be aware, not of single stimuli, but of entities, of things." (The Objectivist Ethics by Ayn Rand). In actual fact, sensations, being subjective feelings, illustrated by the feelings of pleasure and pain, cannot constitute perceptions, which are directly of and about physical objects. If perceptions were integrations of sensations, they would be as subjective as sensations. Rand states: "Concepts are not and cannot be formed in a vacuum; they are formed in a context; the process of conceptualization consists of observing the differences and similarities of the existents within the field of one's awareness (and organizing them into concepts accordingly). From a child's grasp of the simplest concept integrating a group of perceptually given concretes, to a scientist's grasp of the most complex abstractions integrating long conceptual chains—all conceptualization is a contextual process; the context is the entire field of a mind's awareness or knowledge at any level of its cognitive development." (Introduction to Objectivist Epistemology by Ayn Rand). In actual fact, only provisional definitions are contextual, not final definitions, for if all definitions were provisional or contextual, there would be no such thing as knowledge. The definition of man as a rational animal can never be superseded or expanded upon. Rand states: "Whatever may be open to disagreement, there is one act of evil that may not, the act that no man may commit against others and no man may sanction or forgive. So long as men desire to live together, no man may initiate—do you hear me? no man may start—the use of physical force against others." (Atlas Shrugged by Ayn Rand). In actual fact, individuals who do not rationally flourish fall short of the definition of man as a rational animal, and as human appearing animals, they may be aggressed against as biological animals are aggressed against. Rejecting the currents of irrationalism and subjectivism in all their forms, in both their explicit Western Faustian varieties or in their latest pseudoAristotelian packages, the common sense philosophy of Aristotle offers the only means to human flourishing and salvation.

CULTURE CONFLICT: APOLLO VERSUS FAUST

A culture is collection of customs, institutions, arts and achievements which are unified by a principle. In the absence of this unifying principle, culture becomes indistinguishable from mere geography, location, distribution and population and loses all meaning and significance. Among the preeminent articles of faith in the study of world cultures is the belief that Western Culture constitutes a continuum reaching from the ancient Greco-Roman world and extending up to the present day. This is the belief that the history of the West can be understood in accordance with a tripartite plan or scheme: Ancient—Medieval—Modern. This firmest of firmly held beliefs is in fact unsupported by an examination of the thought and achievements which have arisen on the European continent over the past three thousand years. Such an examination reveals the existence of two separate, opposed, independent cultures, not a single culture, and two cultures which are indeed as opposed to each other in spirit and soul as night is opposed to day and a statement is opposed to its contradiction. If philosophies which recognize the existence of physical objects, such as the common sense philosophy of Aristotle, and philosophies which do not, such as the subjectivist philosophy of Immanuel Kant, can be located within the same culture, then there is no such thing as culture, but only geography, location, distribution and population. From the record of man in Europe over the past three millennia, an unbiased, fair minded, empirically oriented, reality based mind can discern the existence of two diametrically opposed cultures: the culture of the Greeks and Romans, which ended in the fourth century AD, and the culture of the West, which arose on the continent around 1000 AD. If the term culture is to refer to anything beyond geography, location, distribution and population, then a study of world cultures is constrained to recognize on the European continent the existence of a culture symbolized by the figure of Apollo, god of the sun, reason, knowledge, sanity and noonday, light defined existence, and a culture symbolized by the figure of Faust, the protagonist of a classic German legend, a sorcerer and alchemist who made a pact with the Devil in which he exchanged his soul and reason for the achievement of unlimited will and power. In the sanctuary at Delphi on Mount Parnassus was worshiped the most Greek of all Greek gods. Here was the world of Apollo. It was a world which affirmed the individual as the primary existent. It was a world which affirmed that existence is determination and that to be is to be something, and that an existence which was without determination would be an existence which was everything and nothing and nothing and everything. It was a world which affirmed that the primary law of reality is the law of noncontradiction, the law that A is A, that a thing is as it is, and cannot possess contradictory attributes at one and the same time, or act in a manner which contradicts the specific type of thing which it is. It was a world which affirmed that any attempt to deny the truth of the law of noncontradiction eventuates in self contradiction, inasmuch as the purported denial would be both a denial and an affirmation of the law at one and the same time, and would be both true and false at one and the same time. It was a world which affirmed that the act of perception is the perception of physical objects and that an act of perception which terminated in a mental content would be the perception of nothing and would not exist. It was a world which affirmed that the proof of the existence of physical objects lies in the act of perception itself and in the fact that if physical objects did not exist, then nothing whatever would exist. It was a world which affirmed the notion of a subjective perception is a contradiction in terms. It was a world which affirmed that all knowledge is based upon experience and that concepts are formed by an act of abstraction or induction from experience, an act in which the mind isolates, separates and removes common attributes and forms a general idea or a universal law. It was a world which affirmed that the notion of apriori knowledge, or knowledge acquired independently of experience, is a contradiction in terms, inasmuch as the alleged apriori forms would be imposed upon experience and would constitute what was known, rendering all knowledge to be subjective. It was a world which affirmed that all change presupposes a thing, an object, a subject, a substance, which changes and that pure change itself does not exist apart from things which change. It was a world which affirmed that man's moral good is based upon the definition of man as a rational animal, as an animal whose unique means of survival, success, progress, flourishing, well being and well doing is through the use of his rational intelligence, and that a life of rational flourishing is the only truly, authentically human type of life. The life of rational flourishing is man's ultimate good, the moral purpose of his life, and this life, this virtue, this flourishing, is its own reward. It was a world which affirmed that groups are nothing more than abstractions or summations which possess no existence outside the mind and that individuals and only individuals possess rights. But because man has an objective essence as a rational animal, and an objective moral perfection residing in a life of rational flourishing, individuals who use their rights not to flourish have misused and abused their rights and are, morally speaking, no better than animals, and do not in justice deserve to possess their life, liberty or property. It was a world which affirmed that the mass killing of nonflourishers is not an act of mass murder but is an act of mass fumigation designed to disinfect and purify the planet of the moral vermin which beset it from all sides. It was a world in which beauty is an objective state, a state of order, harmony and noncontradiction in things and movements, a state which pleases, charms, refreshes and reinvigorates the senses. In tearing storms, engulfing fogs, soaring, twilight forests, winding, twisting pathways, and deep, dark study chambers the spirit of Faust is at work guiding the development of his fearsome and terrifying Western Culture. Here is the world of Faust. It is a world which exalts consciousness as the sole and primary existent and proclaims that reality is a monad, an ego, a form of life, a language game, a cultural posit, an ever flowing stream, an infinite substance, a will to power, a will to pleasure, a will and representation, a dialectical somersault, an intersubjective consensus, a linguistic analysis, a logical analysis, a local narrative, a metanarrative, a deconstruction, a phenomenology, a social construction, an individual construction, a thereness and a throwness, a hermeneutics, an interpretation and a perspectivism of an absolute mind. It is a world which proclaims that physical objects are products of man's apriori forms of perception of space and time, that the world which man perceives is not real, that reality is constituted of things in themselves or things as they are not perceived by man, and that man is blind because he can see, deaf because he can hear, numb because he can feel things, and ignorant because he can think. It is a world which proclaims that morality is a categorical imperative, pure expression, a pure commanding, a pure obeying without regard to consequences for good or evil, that liberty is license, that rights can be possessed by human appearing animals, that politics is the will to power, that man has no rational essence, that truth is the product of gender, race or class tribes, that logic is a social convention, that science is undetermined and underdetermined by experience and is completely arbitrary, that science is pseudoscience and should serve to advance political agendas, that gender is changeable and optional and has nothing whatever to do with biological realities, that art is disorder, that beauty is pure form without content, and that beauty only exists in the eye of the beholder. It is a world which is devoid of all weight, gravity mass and bodily existence, a world in which mathematics is pure space and is nonvisual, nonEuclidean and nonarithmetical in character, and architecture is pure space and pure form and is therefore uncomfortable, nonutilitarian, nonfunctional Modernist and Postmodernist in style. The West throughout its history has always been Faustian and nothing but Faustian. The so-called Renaissance was a feeble, superficial antiFaustian countermovement which never touched the Faustian soul. Far from representing a rebirth of Greco-Roman ideals, the pseudoRenaissance brought forth Shakespeare's monologues and soliloquies without hearers or listeners, Bacon's devaluation of knowledge to the level of a handmaiden of technical power, and Luther and Calvin's exaltation of God as pure, unbounded, arbitrary, unintelligible will. The so-called Enlightenment, professing a commitment to empiricism, was as well unreal, bringing forth the apriorist, subjectivist philosophies of Descartes and Kant. The antithesis of Plato and Kant serves to bring into high relief the antithesis of Classical and Western cultures. While Plato projected a superior reality, knowable by reason alone, existing above the world of physical objects, he never denied the reality of objects. By contrast, Kant categorically denies such reality and projects reality to be an unperceivable, unknowable, noumenal thing in itself. The recognition that the ancient Greco-Roman world and the world which developed in Western Europe centuries after the fall of the Classical world constitute separate, independent, diametrically opposed cultural entities rests upon two fundamental facts. Fact number one: that such things as cultures exist which, as spiritual organizing principles, are different from and transcend geography, location, distribution and population. Fact number two: that the study of world cultures is an empirical study which is not driven by bias, prejudice, wishes or desires. The rational, civilized members of Western Culture who reject the Faustian will may derive guidance and inspiration from the common sense philosophy which underlay Classical culture. They may attend the academies of the ancients and take delight in a world of objectivity, order, perfection, solidity, soundness and sanity so tragically different from their own world of the West. But what they cannot do is appropriate Classical Culture and make it a part of the history and culture of the West. This they cannot do without doing violence to the facts.

HELTER SKELTER

He was ten steps away from his doom. Ten steps away from the trap door which would plunge through the rungs of hell and damnation. In this short time, he telescoped the course of his life and surveyed the ideas which had fueled it on its terrifying journey. Psychopath, terrorist, torturer and mass murderer, responsible for the deaths of thousands, he had studied the luminaries of Western culture and absorbed their fearsome message. From Faust, the prime symbol and mover of the West, he learned that man is an irrational animal, a creature controlled by will and passion, a relentless, ruthless, fire breathing adventurer, for whom the achievement of freedom, power and mastery is worth infinitely more than all the jewels of wisdom and knowledge which have blessed and brightened the human soul. From Rousseau, he learned that mass murder is justified in the name of the General Will and the prerogatives of the noble savage. From Kant, he learned that mass murder is justified as an imperative of the noumenal will. He learned morality consists in obedience to a series of unconditional, categorical imperatives, or obedience without regard to consequences, and though it bring about the deaths of millions. From Marx, he learned that mass murder is justified to liberate the working class from the yoke of its bourgeois oppressors and exploiters. He learned that the class of entrepreneurs, executives, innovators and intellectual workers is a class of parasites which steals the profits produced by the proletariat and this class must be exterminated. He learned that in the pursuit of social justice, any and every crime is justified up to and including the slaughter of entire nations and populations. He learned that under the banners of the Workers of the World and From Each According To His Ability And To Each According To His Need, the individual must be subjugated, collectivized, nationalized, robbed of all his freedom and dignity, and killed in cold blood. From Nietzsche, he learned that mass murder is justified in the name of the will to power, the transvaluation of all values, and their avatars and embodiments: the rampaging blond beast and the steely hearted superman. From the existentialists, he learned the mass murder is justified as the supreme expression of the neoKantian philosophy of decisionism, actionism, formalism, heroism, authenticity, commitment and enactment of the decrees of subjective consciousness which one and all form the basis of a truly human morality. From the neoNietzschean postmodernists, he learned that mass murder is justified in the name of the rejection of all universal, Enlightenment metanarratives and the affirmation of local, national socialist, myths and stories. From psychologists in offices and universities throughout the world, he learned that mass murder is justified in order to release feelings of hostility, rage, tension and frustration and to achieve gratification of instinctual desires and impulses. From the identity theorists of gender, race and class, he learned that mass murder is justified to defend the rights of the marginalized and the excluded and to achieve justice for women, transgenders, nonwhites, indigenous cultures and the poor, and must lead to the extermination of successful, white, gender adjusted males of European descent. Western culture is a Germanic culture, a romanticist culture, a culture which exalts action and power above law and restraint, and a culture which has spread its strength and capacities across every region of the earth. In the one thousand years of its development, Western culture has carried its Faustian subjectivism and moral relativism to ever increasing heights of virulence and intensity, and in a trajectory which has commenced with Faust and progressed through Kant, Marx and their heirs and descendants, has crash landed into global mass murder in the twenty first century. Like its brother doctrine cognitive relativism, moral relativism is inconsistent, but its inconsistency is one of action and performance and not of mere statement. Professing to deny the existence of an absolute, unchanging, universal morality, the moral relativist proceeds to exalt one of two policies as moral absolutes. He either exalts of tolerance and nonaggression, or exalts its opposite and preaches a religion of bigotry, chauvinism and violence. The first policy provides the foundation of liberal democracy and reveals its essential falsity. The second policy provides the foundation of a socialist society and reveals its essential falsity. The moral relativist views moral values as products of arbitrary decrees. He is prepared to justify mass murder as an expression of the brotherhood of Christ, the liberation of the Holy Land or the community of Allah's faithful. He is prepared to justify mass murder as an expression of one's own feelings, intuitions or inner voices. He is prepared to justify mass murder as an expression of gender, race and class politics. Rejecting all forms of arbitrariness and relativity, the philosophy of common sense views moral values as proceeding from man's rational nature and sanctions the use of force and violence against those who have chosen not to rationally flourish and have renounced the life of intelligent thinking, living, doing and acting. He sanctions the elimination of those who are, from a rational, moral, spiritual and substantive point of view, nonpersons and subhumans. The principles of morality discernible by the common fund of intelligence and experience of all mankind, requires that individuals who are principally or predominantly governed by forms of mysticism or irrationalism be judged to be less than human and deprived of their freedom, dignity and life. As premises generate conclusions and ideas have consequences, the philosophy of moral relativism, part of the edifice and infrastructure of Faustian culture, has produced in the present day a pandemic of violent crime without precedent in the history of mankind. Since the early decades of the twentieth century, violent crime has been steadily increasing throughout the world. This has ranged from street assaults to random shootings to serial murders to politically or religiously motivated acts of terror. In the 1960s, this crescendo exploded into stratospheric levels and in the present day, cities and states have been reduced to savage jungles too dangerous for civilized people to inhabit. A day does not go by when the world is not convulsed by torrents of bombings, shootings and knifings which have left no home, school, office or neighborhood untouched.

Since the dawn of the twentieth century, the world has witnessed a pandemic of mass murder without precedent in the history of mankind. It is an axiom of common sense that people are not machines but create ideas and concepts and reason on the basis of experience, and the beliefs people have held have guided cultures and directed the course of human development. The most grievous of crimes, mass murder is caused by the severest of all sicknesses of the soul: by a state of total moral indiscipline and breakdown. Every culture in its stage of decline and fall has experienced outbreaks of violent crime. But the virulence and intensity of the violent crime which has stricken the West has dwarfed outbreaks in all previous cultures and formed a relentlessly moving spillway and flooding plain of blood which has murdered the soul if not the person of every man, woman and child on earth. This acute pathology afflicting the West is the result of the unique premises upon which the culture was founded. Contrary to popular belief, Western culture did not arise silently and serenely on the sundrenched islands and promontories of ancient Greece but thundered into existence in the dark, gloomy, midnight forests of ancient Germany. Contrary to popular belief, there is no Western historical scheme of development progressing through ancient, medieval and modern times. On the continent of Europe, over the past two thousand years, there have in fact been two cultures which have emerged, one in the South and one in the North. The Classical culture in the South was symbolized by the god Apollo, figure of light, clarity, wisdom and knowledge, and the stasis of a soul which exalts a world of rational excellence, healing and perfection. Emerging upon the stage of history around 1000 AD,

Western culture in the North is symbolized by the figure of Faust, German sorcerer, alchemist, adventurer and scholar of the magical and mystical arts who renounced every value revered by Apollo and sacrificed his soul in the blazing inferno of the Devil, and received in exchange the imperial robes of infinite power, will, experience, expansion, and vigorous, transforming activity. On the pages of a thesaurus, under the entry Romanticism, every synonym describes the character and culture of the West. Liberty, equality, fraternity, socialism, capitalism, communism, nationalism, ethnicism, environmentalism, social justice, inclusion and diversity, affirmative action, formalism, expressionism, actionism, decisionism, categorical imperatives, the politics of gender, race and class, the release of feelings and emotions, and the gratification of instincts and impulses. Such are the multifarious banners of romanticism in the name of which the citizens and soldiers of the West have activated the guns and bombs of mass murder. There has not been a culture in the history of mankind which has sanctified the commission of mass murder under so many different guises and pretexts as the West has. Under a black sun of a thousand different social, political, economic, religious and personal ideologies, the West has granted to those with murder in their hearts a license to spread terror and fear. The ubiquity of mass murder in the present day is a systemic Western phenomenon. It stems from the moral relativism lying at the heart of Faust's philosophy. Rejecting the existence of moral absolutes, rejecting a morality which is not dependent some power or will, human or divine, Faust has unchained monsters who derive maximum pleasure from mass killing and allowed them the freedom of action which they would not enjoy in any other culture. Rampaging across the world, they have composed the concluding chapter of the decline and fall of the West.

The time is 1000 AD. The place is Northern Europe. The scene is a moonlit night arched over by drifting, portentous clouds. High up in the German mountains, a castle seethes with evil and violence. In the center of the castle is a crypt watched over by baying wolves and screaming bats. The crypt opens and a figure steps out. This is a figure made out of pure darkness, a figure which cannot be viewed in a mirror and which reflects no natural light. Its eyes gleam with the churning currents of will philosophies of every stripe and variety and shine with ruthless, predatory greed. Shaman, satanist and conjurer of the black electricity of the irrational, the insane and the unsound, whose legend and exploits have captivated the imagination of the West as nothing else has, Faust is the prime mover of a culture whose appearance at his command in the ancient evening lands of Germany was the most ominous and momentous event in the history of human cultural development. As the centuries resounded down the corridors of time, and the West broke through the dawn of the twentieth century, the Faustian philosophy of will power reached a fever pitch and sent the mental temperature of every region on earth exploding into the stratosphere and vaporizing every institution cherished by civilized people. Dueling with heavy sabers marked Kantianism, Marxism, Existentialism and Postmodernist Nietzscheanism, the Faustians of the past one hundred years have cut down the voices of reason in cold blood and ushered in an age of cruelty and disorder. They have proclaimed that the essence of morality consists in expressing oneself by every means at one's disposal and unleashing one's rages, resentments and primal screams against every home and school in society. They have proclaimed that the essence of morality consists in obeying the special feelings, voices, intuitions and categorical imperatives of the psychotic within us and breathing death and destruction across the face of the waters and the rooftops of decent, law abiding citizens. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which conducts relentless war in the name of diversity and inclusion, the marginalized and the oppressed, and the rights of women, nonwhites and the poor, and has targeted the class of successful, white, heterosexual, nontransgender men for physical elimination. They have proclaimed that human civilization and its world of industrial fairs, exhibitions, laboratories, research centers and technological revolutions is a source of urban smog, greenhouse gas emissions and noxious invasions of plants and animals which are one and all blackening, beleaguering, suffocating, asphyxiating and burning up the planet. The clock of history must be sent racing backward past the eons before time began and all human life must be extinguished. They have proclaimed that the highest form of identity is tribal identity, the highest form of politics is tribal politics, and supreme moral and political enlightenment are achieved by the recognition that the sole meaningful form of human existence is that which is in the tribe and for the tribe and is never outside the tribe or against the tribe, and that tribes have the right to kill each other in the name of gender, race and class. They have proclaimed that the individual, autonomous self is a paltry and purposeless existence and must be transcended by a commitment to something bigger, better, greater and more ennobling. This is the welfare of the state and society and under its banners of the voices of freedom must be murdered by the millions wherever they are found. They have proclaimed that the belief that man is a free born agent is a white, male, bourgeois myth and must be swept aside by the recognition that moral fulfillment can only be achieved by a commitment to community organizing, activism and rabble rousing which will ignite the vitriol and malice of hatred and resentment and spill fire upon the creators of wealth and value. It is impossible to commit mass murder employing as justification the Classical morality of rational flourishing. This philosophy sanctions mass killing but not the mass killing of innocent people. It sanctions the mass killing of those who promote Faustian ideologies of liberty and license in the name of the individual or the tribe and reject the guidance of human intelligence and understanding, and who are, morally speaking, no better than the bestial denizens of the forests and fields. A thousand years ago, Faust ascended from the depths of hell and damnation and conjured up a new culture. The story of the West was laid out from start to finish in the fiery studio of Satan's Faustian scenarioist. It is the story of a cancer spreading into every region and nation on earth. This is the cancer of relativism, radicalism and rank subjectivism and its fearsome and terrifying progeny are the Marxists, Mansonites and McVeighs who have assumed control over the streets of the present day. They are Faust's final Grim Reapers and the grave diggers of human civilization. Promoting mass murder in the name of gender, race, class, capitalism, libertarianism, and high speed, worked up, hotted up, souped up nerve excitement, they have brought a thousand year old tragedy to a climax. The keys of Faust have unlocked a nightmare of infinite dimensions and proportions and the jaws of death have flung wide open. They will consume every man, woman and child on earth.

ENLIGHTENMENT—COUNTERENLIGHTENMENT

In the seventeenth century, the rays of reason broke without hindrance across the West for the first time in its history. Emerging in Northern Europe around 1000 AD, Western Faustian culture was conceived in the dark, satanic matrix of the will and never until the Enlightenment knew the blessings of pure, unadulterated reason and sanity. Emerging from the tearing, swirling storms and forests of the Germanic North, the culture of the West, symbolized in the figure of the Faust, the German sorcerer who sold his reason to the Devil to acquire infinite, disordered power, was not a congenial home to the Enlightenment. This antiFaustian movement was doomed to fail right from its inception, but before it did, it conferred upon mankind the crown and glory of rational human flourishing which had last been worn by the Apollonian culture of the Greeks and Romans. The Age of Enlightenment, the Age of Reason, the Century of Philosophy, was inaugurated with the publication of Isaac Newton's Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy. In its scientific academies, literary salons, books, journals and pamphlets, the Enlightenment championed the world of Newton: the world of secularism, empiricism, logic applied to experience, and scientifically grounded certainty. It championed the rational determination of the cosmos, the rational knowability of existence, the rational character of facts, laws and necessities, the rational powers of consciousness, the rational sovereignty of the mind, the rational methods of science, the rational perfectability of man, and the rational progress of society, as embodied in a system of individual liberty, constitutional government, and scientific and industrial progress. The essence of the Enlightenment is expressed in the philosophy of Newton. This is a philosophy of observation, experimentation, induction, the drawing of conclusions from the data of the senses, the dismissal of all apriori methods and ideas, and the rejection of scientific theories which are not derived from experience: "Newton believed that his science was based upon a philosophy of induction. In the third edition of the Principia, he introduced rule 4, so that 'the argument of induction may not be evaded by hypotheses.' Here he said that one may look upon the results of 'general induction from phenomena as accurately or very nearly true,' even though many contrary hypotheses might be imagined, until such time as the inductive result may 'either be made more accurate or liable to exceptions' by new phenomena. In rule 3, in the second and third editions, he stated his philosophical basis for establishing general properties of matter by means of phenomena. Newton's philosophical ideas are even more fully developed in query 31, the final query of the later editions of the Opticks, in which he argued for both the philosophy of induction and the method of analysis and composition (or synthesis). In both mathematics and natural philosophy, he said, the 'Investigation of difficult things by the method of analysis, ought ever to precede the method of composition.' Such 'analysis consists in making experiments and observations, and in drawing general conclusions from them by Induction, and admitting of no objections against the conclusions, but such as are taken from experiments, or other certain truths.' " (Isaac Newton by I. B. Cohen, Complete Dictionary of Scientific Biography). Forming the fundamental basis of Classical culture, the Newtonian philosophy of reason and experience, as soon as it was proclaimed, came under sustained bombardment and attack by the Faustians who remained in charge of the West and continued to define its essence and character. Inspired by Newton, the new Classical minded Westerners were thus swimming against deep moving Faustian currents and their philosophy advocating human soundness and sanity in opposition to Faustian romanticism and will power underwent a process of immediate, accelerating disintegration. Leading the charge of the Faustians against the Enlightenment interlopers were Rene Descartes and Immanuel Kant. The tenets of the Faustian philosophy of Descartes are as follows: the mind is an immortal substance which can exist apart from the body and directly knows only its own ideas; the faculty of perception is a source of untruth and illusion; the existence of the physical world is not self evident and the only thing we can know clearly, distinctly, self evidently and with certainty to exist is just the existence of our own consciousness; man is a self perceiving, self thinking, mental substance who can prove his existence not by means his own senses, not by simply looking at himself, for nothing can be proved by means of the senses, but by his mind alone, as expressed in the statement: "I think, therefore I am"; all knowledge is arrived at by deduction from the contents of consciousness independently of experience and true science is that which rejects the method of induction and is an exercise in pure, apriori witch doctory and voodooism. The tenets of the Faustian philosophy of Kant are as follows: the world of space, time, matter and causality is a veil of illusion and reality consists of things in themselves, which are things as they are not perceived by man; the act of perception shapes, structures and creates all that we perceive and philosophy requires a Copernican Revolution which acknowledges that man's perception does not depend upon or revolve around physical objects, but rather what is called reality in fact revolves around or is produced by man's perception; science operates independently of experience and consists in transcendental, apriori deductions from the tables and categories of consciousness; morality is apriori and subjective in character and based upon feelings, which reveal to man a special set of duties, called categorical imperatives, which he must obey blindly and unconditionally, without regard to consequences, and though all manner of evil and injustice, and all manner of harm to himself and harm to others, be unleashed; beauty is apriori and subjective in character and consists in the free play of the imagination, a chaos of purely formal elements, such as lines, shapes, colors, shades, sounds, marks, words and movements, which is independent of reason, cognition and natural phenomena; judgments of beauty are determined by the emotional responses of the spectator and have nothing whatever to do with the facts of reality. The influence of these Faustian philosophies ensured that the Enlightenment would be a short lived historical phenomenon and that the Faustian tides of subjectivism would soon resume their development without interruption. The world of the Counter Enlightenment was the world of the real West, the world of the pure Faust, and its philosophers would continue the true story of the culture unencumbered by alien freight of rationalism. This was the world of Jean-Jacques Rousseau, who proclaimed the fundamental goodness and nobility of a life of savagery, sacrifice and the mystical General Will of the tribe, and the fundamental evil and ill effects brought by reason, individualism and modern civilization. It was the world of Sturm and Drang, which exalted individual subjectivity, free expression and gratuitous emotional extremes which would unshackle man from the constraints imposed by reason, and its primary philosophers were Johann Hamann and Johann Wolfgang von Goethe. It was the world of the French Revolution's Reign of Terror induced by the mystical philosophies of equality and fraternity which were ranged against reason, liberty and constitutional rights. It was the world of Edmund Burke, who exalted religion as the true basis of morality, stability and the good of the state. It was the world of Chateaubriand, Frederich von Hardenberg and Samuel Coleridge, who condemned reason as a meaningless void opposed to the blessed fields of beauty, the soul and the spirit. It was the world of Francisco Goya, who exalted monsters, nightmares and irrational dream content as the basis of all reality. It was the world of Friedrich Nietzsche, who coined the term Gegen Aufklarung and placed upon its throne the will to power of the superman, rampaging beyond the restrictions imposed by reason and morality. It was the world of Karl Marx, who condemned reason and objectivity and exalted the class character of all truth and reality. The world of the Counter Enlightenment was the world of the twentieth century and is the world of the present day. It is the world of Max Horkheimer, Theodor Adorno, critical theory and the Frankfurt school, which condemn reason and civilization as the products of totalitarian bourgeois philosophy and exalt feeling, violence and savage regression as the sole sources of human liberation. It is the world of the postmodernists, who condemn reason as a prison house persecuting criminals and the insane. It is the world of identity theorists, who condemn reason as the mortal enemy of the sacred myths of gender, race, class and soil.

Consuming the world in a firestorm and bloodbath without precedent in the history of mankind, today's race wars, ethnic wars, gender wars and class wars are the final, fearsome, terrifying legacy of Faust and his Counter Enlightenment. They have tolled the death knell of the West.

THE CURSE OF ROMANTICISM

The period of the late seventeenth and eighteenth centuries was a period of interruption and anomaly in the history of the West. This period was the Age of Enlightenment and for a century it interrupted the dark flowing currents of irrationalism in which the West, the West of Germanism, Northern Europe, soaring, twilight forests, and the restless, driving figure of Faust, was conceived. Exalting the Classical, Apollonian world of reason, empiricism, order and restraint, the Enlightenment was doomed to be swept away by the onrushing tides of Faustianism, and swept away it was, and replaced by the true, real and deepest story of the West, the fearsome and terrifying story of romanticism, in the nineteenth century. In 1800 the Faustian West reemerged and reasserted itself after a century of eclipse, and resumed the attack against reason which had been the trademark of the culture since its inception and had placed it in sharpest relief against the world of Greece and Rome. In 1800, Faust sounded his trumpet of victory over the Enlightenment and led the armies and movements of romanticism in a war to smash and overturn the achievements of reason, sanity, science and industrial progress. The reignited Faustian inferno emphasized feelings and emotions, glorified the prehistoric past, worshiped the mystical oneness of nature, and exalted the spiritual gargoyles and monstrosities of the Christian Dark Ages. It hated factories, technology and scientific analysis. It opposed universalism and objectivity and proclaimed the national, tribal and class character of all truth and reality. It proclaimed that beauty is ineffable and inexpressible, and is horror and terror, and is anything and everything except rational order and harmony. It exalted primitive customs, folk art and mindless spontaneity in art. It opposed urban growth, metropolitan populations and sought to break up cities. It worshiped heroic individualists, leaders and artists who were unshackled by the constraints of reason, and exalted their rash, careless, unthinking deeds, and gave them kudos for raising the quality of society to undreamed of heights. It exalted the free, arbitrary, unbounded imagination as the highest authority in art because it gave the artist the power and the means to transcend the deadening, stultifying Classical norms of reason. It exalted the free expression of feelings as the highest law of the artist. It rejected the Classical emphasis upon peace and tranquility in favor of a spontaneous overflow of powerful, bestial feelings. It proclaimed that the content of art should arise from the feelings, intuition and imagination of the artist un beholden to the artificial rules of logic and reality. It proclaimed that true originality is the ability to think independently of the laws of logic and the facts of experience and is essential to outstanding artistic creation. It proclaimed that the highest type of artistic creation is creation from nothingness, creation from the bottomless depths of pure consciousness, without reference to the external world of matter, objects, substance or essence. It proclaimed that nothing whatever, no facts of the universe or strictures of sanity, may be allowed to impede the free flow of the artist's sensations, impressions, feelings, reveries and streams of consciousness, because such are the supreme founts of artistic enlightenment and achievement. It proclaimed that the greatest artists are those who have the willingness and capacity to diverge from the noonday rules of objective representation, to plunge into rank incoherence and contradiction, and to swim in the dark, turbid waters of formalist psychosis. It proclaimed that the worst artistic sin is to forsake independence, creativity, inventiveness and self assertion and to attempt to derive one's work from objects in reality. It proclaimed that transcending reason and the senses and achieving mystical contact with nature is a mental and moral necessity to lead a happy, healthy and wholesome life. It proclaimed that the highest type of art is that which turns its back on the physical world and expresses the personal, disordered, screaming, schizophrenic voice of the artist. It proclaimed that man's supreme moral perfection resides in a life of perpetual restlessness, nervousness and agitation; in the exaltation of change for the sake of change, originality for the sake of originality, self assertion for the sake of self assertion and revolution for the sake of revolution; in the commencement of journeys without destination and the search for goals without possibility of achievement; in a violent bursting forth from the prison house of rational forms and logical laws; in the preoccupation with subjective, diseased, kaleidoscopic states of consciousness; in an unappeasable longing for the unbounded, the indefinable, the arbitrary, the supernatural and the incomprehensible; in the destruction of modern civilization and the return of mankind to the primitive, mystical, irrational wellsprings of life. The quintessential, defining movement of the Faustian West, romanticism took a hammer to Classical reason, Classical objectivity, the Classical models of reality and the Classical mirror of nature and smashed them to pieces. On the floor of Faust's chamber, these shards of glass became windows into a world of insanity. This was a fearsome and terrifying world in which pages, canvases and sounds became savage jungles of freedom and creativity unbounded by the strictures of logic, representation or reality. This was a world in which painters, novelists, poets and composers proclaimed it their life's mission and their overriding passion to banish Classical mimesis to the hinterlands of cultural nonexistence and to invent a disordered anticocosmos from their feverish visions and self expression and promote it as the highest form of art. This was a world in which the concern to depict the nature of reality and obey eternal truths was condemned as a betrayal of the sacred calling and vocation of the artist, which listens only to the frenzied commands emanating from within and to the swirling symphonies of schizophrenic breakdown. Shouting down the noonday voices of external reality and the stern remonstrations of human soundness and stability of mind, this was a world in which ontology, ethics, politics and esthetics were placed in the service of subjective existence, pure consciousness and a bestial will to power and license, which spelled the doom of human progress and enlightenment: "In the realm of ethics, politics, esthetics it was the authenticity and sincerity of the pursuit of inner goals that mattered; this applied equally to individuals and groups—states, nations, movements. This is most evident in the esthetics of romanticism, where the notion of eternal models, a Platonic vision of ideal beauty, which the artist seeks to convey, however imperfectly, on canvas or in sound, is replaced by a passionate belief in spiritual freedom, individual creativity. The painter, the poet, the composer do not hold up a mirror to nature, however ideal, but invent; they do not imitate (the doctrine of mimesis), but create not merely the means but the goals that they pursue; these goals represent the self expression of the artist's own unique, inner vision, to set aside which in response to the demands of some external voice—church, state, public opinion, family friends, arbiters of taste—is an act of betrayal of what alone justifies their existence for those who are in any sense creative." (The Crooked Timber of Humanity: Chapters in the History of Ideas by Isaiah Berlin). The world of romanticism was a world which worshiped on the fiery altars of the supernatural, the occult, and disturbed, dysfunctional human psychology. It was a world of German forests,

German myths, German motifs and German folk literature which one and all churned the dark, satanic mills of the formless, the shapeless, the cruel, the tearing, the raging, the storming and the barbaric. It was a world of horror and menace rising from the dead and venturing forth from Gothic castles and Gothic darkness. It was a world of mental somersaults turning logic head over heels and landing in the fever swamps of unintelligibility and contradiction, conducted under the auspices of absolute idealism and its prophets, Fichte, Schelling and Hegel. It was a world of class will, class war, class transformation, class revolution, class totalitarianism and the ferocious fires of brute violence, whose incendiary was Marx. It was a world which worshiped a special kind of hero, the antirational, antivirtuous, antihero, who instantiated attributes which could only have been made in the West: a talent for violence; a passion for destruction; a distaste for civilized society; a hostility toward traditions and institutions exalting education and refinement; a lack of respect for the community of honest, industrious, productive achievers; an unsavory moral and psychological character; an arrogant dismissal of facts, laws, precepts and principles; and an unbounded daring, recklessness and acting without proper justification or concern for consequences. Conceived a thousand years ago in the German evening lands in the gloomy forests of the Devil, the West is romanticism as no other culture in the history of mankind is romanticism, and the curse of romanticism is the curse of the West. Rejecting the Classical world of rational values, traditions, truths and absolutes, the Marxist, Nietzschean, Byronic hero of romanticism, the hero of the West, has taken control over the future and launched an age of regression.

AMERICA FRONTS FOR COMMUNISM

As effects follow from their causes and conditions and conclusions follow from their axioms and premises, a nation's betrayal of its principles of liberty to any degree will eventuate, if not corrected, in an active, full throated endorsement of communist totalitarian tyranny. When the rays of dawn ushered in the twentieth century, socialism in America was already making headway and on the march, and in a few short decades it would come to dominate the life of the nation. Moral sewers, cesspools, swamplands and the reeking squalor of hate pornography: such are the fearsome currents in which the masses swim and have always swum since the masses first walked upon the face of the earth. The terms ignoble and obscene can be defined most descriptively and incisively by reference to the mindset, attitude and psychology of the masses: envy and resentment toward one's betters and superiors; fear and loathing of freedom and independence and the desire to merge oneself into a mass movement and sacrifice oneself for the sake of a totality; and the rejection of reason and the senses as veils of illusions producing the shadow play of separateness and individuality, and the exaltation in their place of mystical feeling and intuition which alone can grasp the essential oneness and collective character of all things. This psychology of man as a mindless savage as opposed to man as a rational human being forms the basis of all forms of socialism and is the fundamental mental characteristic of anyone who occupies any portion of the political spectrum dominated by the left. The socialism endemic to the mass mind which took hold of America in the early decades of the last century developed unchecked like a raging firestorm and transformed a nation conceived in rapturous acclaim for the rights of man into a whirlwind of authoritarian bedlam goose stepping to the rhythmic noises of red propaganda. The twentieth century, the most terrifying and spine chilling century in the history of mankind, saw America crossing the threshold of marriage and entering into the curtained chamber of passionate love for socialism, communism, Marxism, Soviet Russia, and the international communist movement and conspiracy. The new red decades of America saw President Roosevelt grant diplomatic recognition to the Soviet Union in November 1933. They saw the establishment of a network of Kremlin directed organizations across the nation whose official names belied, concealed and contradicted their true aims and intentions: the American League Against War And Fascism; the American League for Peace and Democracy; the American Youth Congress; the League of American Writers; the National Negro Congress; the Abraham Lincoln Brigades; and the American Congress for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom. The new red decades of America saw the Congress of Industrial Organizations fall under the control of 280 members of the Communist Party, including Soviet spy Lee Pressman, who served as the union's general counsel. The new red decades saw Washington influenced at its highest levels by Soviet espionage agents: John Abt, Noel Field, Alger Hiss, Charles Kramer, Victor Perlo, Mary Price, Bill Remington, Vincent Reno, George Silverman, Nathan Gregory Silvermaster, Henry Julian Wadleigh, and Harry Dexter White. When Assistant Secretary of State A. A. Berle informed Roosevelt about Whittaker Chambers's disclosure that senior State Department official Alger Hiss was the leader of a Soviet apparatus whose aim was to influence American foreign policy and transmit classified information and documents to the Soviets, Roosevelt told him to "go jump in the lake." The new red decades of America saw Joseph Davies, ambassador to the Soviet Union, defend Soviet brutality, repression and the liquidation of thousands of foreigners as necessities for the construction of a progressive society. Davies proclaimed that Soviet workers were happy and contented in building socialism and set a shining example to workers throughout the world. He defended the terror of the Moscow show trials: "The Kremlin's fears [regarding treason in the Army and Party] were well justified". He exalted communism as a peaceful, benevolent, humanitarian power: "Communism holds no serious threat to the United States. Friendly relations in the future may be of great general value." He proclaimed that the world of communism is the world of free, compassionate, benevolent people and its shining temples of worship are charnel houses and gas chambers for the capitalist entrepreneurs and dynamos of society, temples manned and protected by the international proletariat and their red commissars. He wrote a book entitled Mission to Moscow, which was an international bestseller translated into every major language and adapted as a popular Hollywood motion picture. The book and picture portray communism in the most positive light imaginable, as a utopia of liberty, democracy, dignity and opportunity for the individual, and they defend the Moscow show trials, the Soviet-German nonaggression pact and the Soviet invasion of Finland. The film's obeisance to political correctness and its conscious, willful falsification of communism is described by its producer, Robert Bruckner: "An expedient lie for political purposes, glossily covering up important facts with full or partial knowledge of their false presentation." (Mission to Moscow by David Culbert). The moral character of Davies, impaired, unsound, devoid of righteousness and incapable of independent thought, is described by Bruckner: "I did not fully respect Mr. Davies' integrity, both before, during and after the film. I knew that FDR had brainwashed him." (Mission to Moscow by David Culbert). In 1941, Davies traveled to Moscow to pay his "respect and admiration" to Andrei Vishinsky, the state prosecutor of the Moscow show trials. The new red decades of America saw the acceptance of the Soviets as members of the Allies of World War II, on the view that national socialist mass murder and aggression were worse by magnitudes than Marxist mass murder and aggression. The red nations which ruled the Allies, America, Britain and the Soviet Union, the first two red by the ballot box and the last one red by armed seizure of power, were referred to as the Big Three during the war and formed the basis of the United Nations. With the unqualified approbation and support of America, this institution, established in 1945, was tainted from its inception by its inclusion in its General Assembly and on its Security Council of a regime of mass murder, the Soviet Union, without equal in the history of mankind. Professing to promote the aims of world peace, security and cooperation, the United Nations, with the approbation and support of America, promoted the diametrical opposite, and became an international defender, legitimizer and apologist for a global communist onslaught which trampled underfoot peace, security and cooperation among nations and imprisoned them behind the watchtowers and barbed wire fences of the Iron Curtain. The red decades of America saw the extension of the Lend Lease arrangement, the supply of military equipment and armaments, to the Soviets, unconditionally, without concessions of any kind, and solely as a gesture of moral and ideological support for communism. This act of treason was transmitted to Vyacheslav Molotov, Soviet Commissar for Foreign Affairs, by a Soviet spy operating in the White House: "A man at the very highest level of the Roosevelt administration has notified us that Mr. Hopkins will demand no concessions what ever. The sole wish of Mr. Hopkins is to ask nothing and give everything. What he wants is to keep us in the fighting--and that is all. Mr. Hopkins is completely on our side and may be trusted absolutely." (A Tragic Tale of Lend-Lease by Richard Stokes, Human Events, April 1, 1953). Under the Lend Lease program, American assistance poured into the Soviet state and military: fifteen million tons of cargo in 2,500 ships; hundreds of thousands of trucks; motorcycles and combat vehicles; millions of tons of staple foodstuffs; millions of tons of petroleum products; and electronics inventions of all varieties. The new red decades of America saw millions of pounds of restricted nuclear bomb materials transferred to the Soviets via the Canadian Radium and Uranium Corporation, which had communist connections in Washington. The new red decades of America saw the neighbors next door and the people down the block stealing and transmitting classified information to the Soviets: thousands of pounds of oil refinery maps; blueprints of the B-36 Super Fortress; and photostats of secret reports from the American embassy in Moscow. President Roosevelt expresses his admiration for communism as an ideology bringing peace, security, the rule of law and liberal democracy to the world: "I just have a hunch that Stalin doesn't want anything but security for his country, and I think that if I give him everything I possibly can and ask nothing from him in return, noblesse oblige, he wouldn't try to annex anything and will work with for a world of democracy and peace." (How We Won the War and Lost the Peace by William Bullitt, Life, August 30, 1958). Roosevelt expresses his admiration for communist dictatorship unhindered by democratic accountability and his desire to be a loyal friend and comrade of the reds: "If I can convince him that our offer of cooperation is on the square, and that we want to be comrades rather than enemies, I'm betting that he'll come in. And what helps a lot is that Stalin is the only man I have to convince. Joe doesn't worry about a Congress or a Parliament. He's the whole works." (White House Physician by Ross McIntire). The history of the mankind is a timeline of calamity propelled by the moral turpitude of the masses. In America, this timeline has appeared with particular tragic force in view of America's historical standing as the world's stronghold and arsenal of the liberal democratic order. America's timeline: Progressivism; the two Roosevelts; the New Deal; apologies and downplaying of Marxist genocide; the Fair Deal; an alphabet soup of statist agencies and a savage jungle of statist ideologies; the New Frontier; the Great Society;

Compassionate Conservatism; Hope and Change; health care entitlements completing the development of the welfare state and nailing the coffin of constitutional liberty; political correctness bludgeoning freedom of speech to death; black masked hoodlums spreading fear and intimidation across campuses and city streets; tenured professors indoctrinating students in a neoMarxist trinity marked Gender, Race and Class; hate speech blasted out against successful, white, heterosexual, gender adjusted males; radical environmentalism igniting an antiindustrial revolution; the dogmas of transgenderism and man made climate change casting a pall over the world of reason, science, common sense and sanity. America's timeline: the twentieth century; the opening decades of the twenty first century; the end.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE REDS

From the end of World War II to the fall of communism in 1989, the free world lost hundreds of millions of people to this international movement and conspiracy. Those most responsible for this tragic loss were the masses themselves who controlled the free world. The masses, the majority, the rabble, the refuse, those whose psychology is defined in terms of communist sympathies swimming in the sewers of envy and frustration, and whose mindset and attitude are settled in the lowest shelves of the darkest nightstands housing the most squalid volumes of political hate pornography. Throughout the free world's sham struggle against communism, it appointed governmental proxies to advance the cause of the enemy. Among the most prominent of these proxies and among the greatest symbols of the West's endemic softness on communism, the official who defined as few others were able to define what it meant for a Western government to be sympathetic, lenient, compassionate and tolerant toward an ideology dedicated to the destruction of human civilization, was United States Army Chief of Staff, Secretary of Defense, Secretary of State and Nobel Peace Prize laureate, George Catlett Marshall. Venerated by Americans as one of the nation's greatest heroes, this was the Marshall whose real self, dark, ruinous, unpleasant and unAmerican, was on full display in the nation's gallery of traitors and saboteurs active during the West's ambiguous, equivocal and ineffectual struggle against the forces of communism. This was the Marshall who as the primary advisor to President Roosevelt at the Yalta Conference praised communism as a progressive force and advocated allowing the Soviets to renege on their promise to allow the people of Eastern Europe "to create democratic institutions of their own choice" and to establish "through free elections governments responsive to the will of the people." This was the Marshall who ignored and concealed an intelligence report prepared by his own staff, dated April 12, 1945, which exposed the dangers to the free world of Soviet involvement in the war against Japan. The communization of China, Korea, Manchuria and Eastern Europe. Soviet governments installed in every capital city in the world. The suffocation of freedom beneath an Iron Curtain constructed by the Soviet armies of totalitarian slavery. The assassination of the friends and allies of freedom and liberty by communist military forces, intelligence agencies and their fifth columnists at work in homes, offices and schools throughout the world. Charters of individual rights, limited government and world peace under the rule of law shredded and burned by the round the clock machines of communist treachery and subversion. The destruction of national freedom and independence within a worldwide web of communist cells, satellites and subordinate bodies. The vanishing voices of virtue and decency fleeing in desperation to any islands and promontories they can find to escape the onrushing tides of the red menace. Such was the social, political, moral and material state of the world which Marshall worked to achieve. From the Elbe River to the Adriatic Sea to Beijing to London to Washington, an earthquake convulses the planet. This is the earthquake of communist incitement, revolution and armed invasion. Such was a specter and dream which made civilized people scream in the night. Such was a warning and portent of an epic tragedy which threatened to engulf all of mankind and crush the lives, resources, honor and dignity of free people. Such was the communist vision of paradise which animated the thoughts and actions of George Marshall: "The entry of Soviet Russia into the Asiatic war would be a political event of world shaking importance, the ill effect of which would be felt for decades to come. Its military significance at this stage of the war would be relatively unimportant. The entry of Soviet Russia into the Asiatic war would destroy America's position in Asia quite as effectively as our position is now destroyed in Europe east of the Elbe and beyond the Adriatic. If Russia enters the Asiatic war, China will certainly lose her independence, to become the Poland of Asia; Korea, the Asiatic Romania; Manchuria, the Soviet Bulgaria. Whether more than a nominal China will exist after the impact of the Russian armies is felt is very doubtful. Chiang may well have to depart and a Chinese Soviet government may be installed in Nanking which we would have to recognize. To take a line of action which would save few lives now, and only a little time--at an unpredictable cost in lives, treasure, and honor in the future--and simultaneously destroy our ally China, would be an act of treachery that would make the Atlantic Charter and our hopes for world peace a tragic farce. Under no circumstances should we pay the Soviet Union to destroy China. This would certainly injure the material and moral position of the United States in Asia." The real George Marshall was the official who was most responsible for the communist conquest of China. The real George Marshall was one whose mission to China sought to defeat the Nationalists forces assembled against communism: "As Chief of Staff I armed thirty nine anticommunist divisions. Now with a stroke of a pen I disarm them" The real George Marshall was one who opened up the Kalgan Mountain Pass so that the Soviets could supply the Chinese communists with the necessary arms and ammunition to seize control over the country. The real George Marshall was one who promoted a coalition government in China which gave substantial power to the communists and enforced an embargo against the Nationalists. Marshall's policy of giving the communists predominating influence in China is described by General General Lee Chennault: "The trend of a gradually stronger central [Nationalist] government was reversed and the military balance shifted again in favor of the Chinese communists" (How the Far East Was Lost by Anthony Kubek). The real George Marshall was one whose actions helped to build up, equip and expand the territory held by the Chinese communist army: a force consisting of 300,00 badly equipped troops confined to a small corner of the country was transformed under the aegis of Marshall into a well equipped, two million man army which would overrun China. The real George Marshall was one who described the Chinese communists as liberal democratic, Western style, agrarian reformers dedicated day and night to the cause of world peace and security. Exalted by his countrymen as the greatest living American, George Marshall was one of the most powerful men in the world. He was the among the most prominent voices of the Global Strategy. Manufactured by and for the red American masses and their parties in power, Democratic and Republican, this was a strategy for the expansion and consolidation of global communism and the destruction of the West.

FRAMED

A frame up is defined as a plan or campaign to make an innocent person appear guilty of a crime. There have been many frame ups staged against Donald Trump during the course of his presidency, but the most serious one is the latest, because it has led to impeachment hearings against him. Trump is accused of the following crimes: abusing the power of the presidency by withholding military aid and a White House meeting as a means of pressuring the president of Ukraine to launch an investigation into corrupt activities involving Joe Biden, Biden's son Hunter, and Burisma Holdings, a Ukrainian natural gas company, and to launch an investigation of possible Ukrainian interference in the 2016 presidential election; soliciting a bribe from Ukraine in the form of the sought after corruption investigations; and obstruction of justice in challenging House subpoenas and refusing to cooperate with the House impeachment inquiry. On any definition of bribery or abuse of power, the accusations against Trump do not hold up. Abuse of power can be defined as malfeasance in office, as official misconduct, and as the commission of an unlawful act which affects the performance of official duties. It can also be defined as the use of power solely or primarily for personal gain. Bribery can be defined as the act of dishonestly persuading someone to act in one's favor by the payment of money. It can also be defined more expansively, as was done by Representative Adam Schiff: "As the founders understood bribery, it was not as we understand it in law today. It is much broader. It connotes the breach of the public trust in a way where you're offering official acts for some personal or political reason, not in the nation's interest." When evaluating whether Trump committed an abuse of power in any sense of term or solicited a bribe in any sense of the term, the key question to be asked is whether in fact there was corruption in Ukraine involving Joseph Biden and his son, and whether in fact there were reasonable grounds for suspecting Ukrainian interference in the 2016 election. If there were, then Trump had a moral right to demand that they be investigated, and therefore had a legal right to do so as well. If Trump had a moral and legal right to do so, then his motivations in exercising this right are irrelevant. If a right is conditional upon the reasons for its exercise, then it is not a right. The facts of the Biden case are clear, well established and unequivocal. In the aftermath of the 2014 Ukrainian revolution, Burisma Holdings was found to have engaged in money laundering involving members of the Obama administration. In order to cover up this involvement, Vice President Joseph Biden had his son appointed to the board of Burisma in 2014. Hunter Biden served on the board until April 2019. During his time of service, he was officially paid 50,000 dollars per month and performed no work except that of seeking to conceal Obama administration involvement in Burisma. In 2015, Ukraine's prosecutor-general, Viktor Shokin, announced an investigation into Hunter Biden's appointment and the corruption endemic in Burisma. His investigation discovered that Hunter Biden's firm, Rosemont Seneca Holdings, had received regular transfers of 166,000 dollars per month from Burisma for fraudulent consulting services, from the spring of 2014 to the autumn of 2015, which totaled over three million dollars. In response to the investigation, Joseph Biden threatened to withhold one billion dollars in loan guarantees from Ukraine if Shokin was not dismissed and the investigation terminated. Both of these conditions were met in 2016. Biden describes his successful effort to obstruct justice in Ukraine and effort to hire a politically reliable successor to Shokin: "I said, Nah, I'm not going to—or, we're not going to give you the billion dollars. They said, You have no authority. You're not the president. The president said—I said, Call him. I said, I'm telling you, you're not getting the billion dollars. I said, You're not getting the billion. I'm going to be leaving here in, I think it was about six hours.

I looked at them and said, I'm leaving in six hours. If the prosecutor is not fired, you're not getting the money. Well, son of a bitch. He got fired. And they put in place someone who was solid at the time." (Council on Foreign Relations, 2018). In a sworn affidavit in 2019, Shokin describes President Poroshenko's efforts to halt the investigation into Burisma in response to pressure from the Obama administration: "On several occasions President Poroshenko asked me to have a look at the criminal case against Burisma and consider the possibility of winding down the investigative actions in respect of this company, but I refused to close this investigation." With respect to Trump's desire to investigate possible Ukrainian interference in the 2016 election, there were reasonable grounds to believe such, inasmuch as the Democratic Party had withheld its server from the FBI and gave it to CrowdStrike, a company founded by Dmitri Alperovitch, a Russian born American with close Ukrainian ties. With respect to the accusation of obstruction of justice leveled against Trump, the record does not support such. The Constitution establishes three separate and equal branches of government, the executive, legislative and judicial branches, and allows the executive branch to challenge congressional investigations into it by appealing to the courts. If the executive was not allowed to challenge legislative actions, then it would reign supreme over the other branches, in violation of the Constitution. In the 2016 presidential election, 54 percent of the electorate voted against Trump and he lost the popular vote by three million. Since that time, this red majority has been seeking to reverse the results of the election and to remove Trump from office. In violation of everything which America has traditionally stood for, the antiTrumpers, NeverTrumpers and radical left in control of the nation have been conducting a campaign. It is a campaign to impeach, convict and remove Trump, to file criminal charges against him, to throw him into jail, and along with him, two centuries of decency, integrity, public virtue and lawful government in America.

EQUALITY, FRATERNITY, TERROR

On July 14, 1789, a mob set its sights upon the Bastille prison in Paris and stormed it. The warden of the prison was stabbed, beaten, beheaded and his head was paraded through the city streets. The mob next descended upon city hall and assassinated the mayor. Waves of violence and robbery soon thundered across the nation. Dressed up as "popular sovereignty", the cancer of mob rule spread into every family, home, school and office. Across the countryside, farmers swept up in the contagion blasted out the insurrectionary flames of the Great Fear. In fourteen days from the storming of the Bastille, law and order had collapsed throughout France. Such were the events which marked the commencement of the French Revolution, one of the most momentous events in the history of mankind, one whose cries, chaos, carnage and clarion calls for class war were seen and heard throughout the world at the time, but bore fullest fruition in the twentieth century in the rise of the international communist movement and conspiracy. A century before Marxism exploded onto the scene in the nineteenth century, there were the French revolutionary thinkers and statesmen who peddled the politics of class hatred to the sewers of society, and whom Marx himself worshipped as among his chief prophets and inspirations. The first social and political movement to plant the red flags of socialist agitation in the heart of Europe, the French Revolution launched a fusillade of programs, platforms, activists and agitators whose trajectory would hurtle across the centuries and inspire the red party leaders and red disaffected masses of the twentieth century in their crusade of sabotage, subversion and armed invasion aimed at the traditions and institutions of liberal democracy. Rumbling, resounding and crashing through the corridors of history and deafening all those in its path, the outburst of red energy and red anger known as the French Revolution produced Maximilien Robespierre, the Jacobin Club and the Reign of Terror which saw 16,000 people perish in the guillotine. It produced Francois Noel Babeuf who sought to abolish money and voluntary exchange and force people to give the products of their labor over to a "common storehouse" owned and operated by the state. Babeuf brought together the figures of filth and squalor parading as artisans, farmers and skilled tradesmen and founded the first communist movement in Europe. Babeuf condemned all forms of private property and the rule of law as weapons of oppression in the hands of the bourgeois and established the lineaments of a red totalitarian tyranny in the name of "egalitarian communism" and "absolute equality". Founding a Conspiracy of Equals with his friends, allies and partners in crime, Babeuf advocated violent revolution by the lowest, most vengeful and most morally disordered classes of society. He commanded the rising class of reds and radicals to seize control over the state, force their will on society, incite people to commit murder, whip up people to stage armed uprisings, dissolve the national parliament, unlock all the prisons and mental hospitals, and worship exultantly at the altars of terror. The French Revolution produced a League of Outlaws and a League of the Just which fashioned a guillotine marked State Enforced Equality, the Abolition of Private Ownership and the Christian Apocalypse and beheaded the spirit, the soul, the essence and the progress of the Enlightenment. It produced Louis Blanqui, the leader of the first communist government in Europe, the Paris Commune, which carried out a program of killing and destruction which left tens of thousands of people dead and the cultural relic and monuments of Paris in ruins. In 1840, the League of the Just relocated to London and established the communist front organization, the Educational Society for German Workingmen. In 1847, the league joined forces with the Communist Correspondence Committee led by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels. This organization formed the Communist League, again led by Marx and Engels, and at this time, Marx and Engels wrote The Communist Manifesto. In The Holy Family, Marx describes the debt he owed to the French Revolution. The revolution encouraged his exaltation of totalitarian hierarchies, the destruction of private property, the abolition of individual accountability, the leveling down of intellectual excellence and nobility, the rejection of eternal truths and morality, the sacrifice of freedom and dignity upon the altars of equality and sharing, the sacrifice of peace and benevolence upon the altars of class war and class struggle, and the worship of an omnipotent government which will outlaw the pursuit of rational virtue in the name of a red religion and red world order of universal slaughter: "The revolutionary movement which began in 1789 in the Social Circle and which finally with Babeuf's conspiracy was temporarily defeated, gave rise to the communist idea which Babeuf's friend Buonarroti reintroduced in France after the Revolution of 1830. This idea, consistently developed, is the idea of the new world order." The French Revolution produced a plethora of clubs and societies which confronted two common enemies: the Bourbon monarchy of King Louis XVI, and the system of individual rights and freedoms under the rule of reason and law, which the American Revolution had championed. It produced a regime which proclaimed that supreme human liberation is achieved in the sacrifice of the individual to the social good, the destruction of the free personality, the regulation of all thought and opinion by the jackboots of political correctness, and the crushing of liberal democracy and private existence beneath the dead weight of a top down, red totalitarian order. It produced a regime in which every aspect of the individual's life has been politicized, nationalized, collectivized and all those who show resistance and stand up to defend their freedom and dignity are condemned as enemies of the people's law and the people's revolution and liquidated. The influence of the French Revolution upon communist ideology and the growth of the red menace across the face of Russia, Europe, America and the West is described by Albert Mathiez in Bolshevism and Jacobinism. Class hatred, class dictatorship, class terror, class requisition, class confiscation, class taxation, class redistribution, and the transformation of civilized societies into savage jungles ruled by red warlords was the world created by the French revolutionaries, the Soviet Marxists and the international communist movement which seized control over the twentieth century: "Lenin, like all the Russian socialists, is nourished by the history of our great French Revolution, is inspired by its example, and puts it into practice while adapting them to his country and the circumstances. Both Robespierre's Jacobinism and Lenin's Bolshevism were class dictatorships operating by the same methods: terror, requisition, and taxes, and proposing as a final outcome the same goal, the transformation of society. And not only of Russian or French society, but of universal society." The French Revolution produced an extremist society which marched liberal, capitalist, parliamentary democracy out onto the public square and hanged it from gallows manned by the Montagnards, the Rousseauists, the philosophers of the General Will and the fearsome agents of the Committee of Public Safety. The totalitarian nightmare which was the French Revolution was the first of its kind in the history of humanity. It was a monster like no other monster, within whose grasping, biting, crushing jaws human liberty was consumed in an instant. It was a whirlwind like no other whirlwind, within whose swirling center human dignity was smashed to pieces. It was a gallows like no other gallows, within whose noose the voices of reasoned, liberal dissent were hanged a thousand times. It was a cavern like no other cavern, within whose dungeons and cells human civilization was strangled, suffocated and condemned to eternal damnation as an enemy of the mystical, sovereign will of the people: "You can hope for no prosperity as long as the last enemy of liberty breathes. You have to punish not only traitors but even those who are neutral. Since the French people have declared their will, everyone who is opposed to it is outside the sovereign body; and everyone who is outside the sovereign body is an enemy." (Louis Antoine de Saint Just). The French Revolution produced a campaign of mass invasions and mob terror which christened the commoners from the drainage ditches and underground sewers of society the Sans Culottes and let them rampage across farms and plunder the storehouses with bombs, knives, guns and bayonets. It produced a regime which swept away the liberal traditions of free speech and freedom of association by a Law of Suspects under which anyone who associated with the wrong people, or said or wrote the wrong things, or in any manner opposed the policies of the national collectivist movement was placed on the guillotine. Synesthesia is the production of one sensation related to a sense organ by the stimulation of another sense organ. The painting The Storming Of The Bastille by Jean Pierre Houel provides a case study of this psychological and physiological phenomenon. The picture deafens the ears with the sounds of mob gunfire, scorches the body with the wild fire of mob passion, and reeks to high heaven with the stench of mob politics. In the eyes of the rampaging mob partisans can be viewed sequential scenes of the future. In these scenes are a statue of Robespierre in Moscow commissioned by Lenin, the worldwide spread of communist terror, the carnage of communist class holocausts, the communist chaos of the Cultural Revolution, and the descent of the present day in the fever swamps of communist induced identity politics. This descent: the final act of the West.

A PINCER MOVEMENT IN SPAIN

The advent of the twentieth century brought the beginning of the end of the cause of human liberty. Fueled by the mass psychology swimming in the sewers of envy, resentment, victimhood and hate, this was the onset of the senility of the West, the process of moral downfall and disintegration in which, in nation after nation, social ideals supplanted liberal ideals and mass movements went on the march and exultantly trampled underfoot the rights, freedoms, dignity and worth of the individual. The great political conflicts waged over the past one hundred years have not been between liberty and socialism, the former having long been vanquished, but between competing varieties of socialism, and in particular, between the nationalist variety and the Marxist variety. The swastika and the hammer and sickle symbolize the two most momentous movements of socialist tyranny to appear over the past one hundred years; they symbolize the movements of race-gender socialism and proletarian class socialism; and the story of history during this turbulent time has been the story of their death struggle for world domination and their war to seize control over and carve up the dead body of liberal civilization. A civil war is defined as a war between two elements in the same system. The history of the world since the dawn of the twentieth century has been a history of wars fought between two brother doctrines, a history of purely internal wars, a history of wars fought between the exponents of human enslavement in the name of a race, ethnicity or gender, and the exponents of human enslavement in the name of an international, panracial, all gender class of bacterial scum. Nowhere has the story of these civil wars which have ravaged the world over the past one hundred years been more dramatically encapsulated, vividly articulated and set forth in such clear, stark and unequivocal terms than in the Spanish Civil War, which took place from 1936 to 1939. It was a war fought between two open and unabashed exponents of social justice, between two direct, candid enemies of liberal democracy. It was a war fought between the fascists, who opposed liberal democracy in the name of social justice for the nation, and the communists, who opposed liberal democracy in the name of social justice for the international class of the proletariat. It represented a pincer movement of two related ideological bodies converging upon a common enemy: the system of reason, liberalism and constitutional government built up and fought for over the centuries from the great thinkers of the Age of Enlightenment. The triumph of fascism under the leadership of the Nationalists meant the end of any hope of establishing a liberal democracy in Spain. The triumph of communism would have meant the same thing, but in addition the establishment of a totalitarian dictatorship without precedent in the annals of tyranny and the destruction of Spanish national existence within the jaws of an international, imperialistic movement and conspiracy. It would have meant the abolition of any form of law and order and the establishment of a permanent reign of red anarchy, red revolts, red authorities, red bosses, red assassins and red murderers gunning down innocent people with the pistols and automatic weapons of social equity and class supremacy. It would have meant the rolling thunder of revolutionary strikes paralyzing and convulsing the nation, plundering the sources of wealth and value, and forcing honest, respectable, antiradical working people to flee for their lives. It would have meant a campaign of savage attacks and unremitting vandalism launched against national monuments, national art and national treasures of all types by red hordes in the service of an alien, foreign government. It would have meant the imposition of martial law to silence the voices of freedom, imprison the opponents of red terror, and prevent the advocates of Spanish sovereignty from speaking out in public and disseminating their views. It would have meant the triumph of a crusade to overthrow European civilization by the tanks and airplanes of red barbarism and the mobilization of the riff raff, refuse and rabble of the world under the leadership of the Red Army. It would have meant the transformation of a civilized nation with a history and heritage rooted in the West into a wild, unruly zone of red violence and lawlessness littered with the graves of those who died in defense of a liberal democratic order. It would have meant the liquidation at the hands of the Communist International of tens of thousands of soldiers from friendly nations all across the world fighting under the flags of liberty. It would have meant the invasion of Spain by ruthless servants of Soviet Russia dedicated to the plundering and destruction of homes, villages, towns, cities, offices, factories and banks. It would have meant the infestation of Spain by agents of a hate filled ideology whose targets were Spanish frontiers, Spanish independence, and the sovereignty and independence of every producer of affluence, every engine of enterprise, and every free, self respecting man, woman and child in the nation. It would have meant the sacrifice of Spanish greatness and prosperity upon the altars of equalitarian levelling, egalitarian redistribution, and the rights of the shiftless, the feckless, the bitter, the frustrated, the irresponsible, and the moral and spiritual lepers of the world. It would have meant the establishment of a despotism in the hands of red executives and red missionaries whose fearsome and terrifying new religion was that of class separatism, class war, the expropriation and extermination of the men of the mind, and the abolition of morality, justice, education and industry in Spain. It would have meant the violation of the laws of humanity and proper warfare by the use of major population centers as storage sites for arms, ammunition and explosives. The victory of communism in Spain would have established a state of affairs without precedent in a Western European nation. The term massive fails to do justice to the scale of destruction which obtained in the regions under Republican control before the victory of the Nationalists. Massive violations of the law; massive assaults against property; massive political violence; massive waves of unsanctioned, illegal, politically motivated strikes; massive arson attacks; massive seizures of farmland; massive seizures of Catholic schools, churches and property; massive arbitrary arrests; massive impunity for crimes committed by members of communist or communist front organizations; massive manipulation, rigging, politicization and perversion of the course of justice; massive dissolution of anticommunist organizations; massive fraudulent elections which excluded anticommunist opposition; massive subversion of the police, army and security forces, massive communist takeovers of local and provincial governments; a massive reign of fear and terror which led to the deaths of thousands; and a massive crusade of red aggression against which the anticommunist opposition was weak and divided. Such was the world of the communists in the half of Spain under their control and such was a warning and a sign to decent, civilized people of the shape of things to come if the communists emerged victorious during the civil war: "The frequent overt violations of the law, assaults on property, and political violence in Spain were without precedent for a modern European country not undergoing total revolution. These included massive, sometimes violent and destructive strike waves, large scale illegal seizures of farmland in the south, a wave of arson and destruction of property, arbitrary closure of Catholic schools, seizure of churches and Catholic property in some areas, widespread censorship, thousands of arbitrary arrests, virtual impunity for criminal action by members of Popular Front parties, manipulation and politicisation of justice, arbitrary dissolution of rightist organisations, coercive elections in Cuenca and Granada that excluded all opposition, subversion of the security forces, and a substantial growth in political violence, resulting in more than three hundred deaths. Moreover, because local and provincial governments were forcibly taken over, decreed by the government in much of the country rather than secured via any elections, they tended to have a coercive cast akin to that of local governments taken over by Italian fascists in northern Italy during the summer of 1922. Yet as of early July the centrist and rightist opposition in Spain remained divided and impotent." (Franco: A Personal And Political Biography by Stanley Payne). In the land of the Conquistadors who spread civilization into Mexico and Peru, in fields of battle reaching from Madrid to Barcelona to Valencia to Seville to the Basque Country, the soil lies stained with the blood of soldiers who sacrificed their lives for the sake of deadly ideologies diametrically opposed to that which the Conquistadors had fought for. These were ideologies of violence and destruction whose banners of statism and socialism draped the coffin of Western civilization and carried human freedom and human dignity into the graveyards of Spanish history. Marching under the banners of fascism were the Nationalists, an alliance of Falangists, monarchists, conservatives and Catholics. Marching under the banners of communism were the Republicans, an alliance of Socialists, Anarchists, Loyalists, Popular Front parties and International Brigades. The Spanish Civil War: a war fought between the black hordes of fascism and the red hordes of communism, the leading factions of our times, the avatars of modern day mass politics, and the composers of the final chapter of the story of the West. The Spanish Civil War: a dress rehearsal and staging post for the forces which have destroyed civilization.

SURRENDER IN KOREA

Political philosophers have known for thousands of years that democracy begets socialism because it empowers the masses, whose impulses are toward equality and not freedom. The great triumvirate of Classical thought, Socrates, Plato and Aristotle, recognized that inasmuch as mass psychology drips with the grease of the sewers and flows with the underground currents of envy and hatred, any system which affords to the masses a legal voice and representation will eventuate in the enactment of programs and platforms which confiscate, expropriate, nationalize, collectivize, level down and exterminate the class of producers and creators of wealth and value, those whose moral distance from the masses who envy and hate them is equal to the distance between a specimen of vermin and a flourishing human being. The breaking rays of dawn which ushered in the twentieth century brought the thunder claps of a raging storm soon to make landfall and smash the citadels of freedom and liberty. The storm was mass politics and its legitimization and empowerment of the lowest, basest, most shameful and most ignoble emotions known to man. Beginning in the twentieth century, Western liberal democracies made a turn toward Marxism, whose philosophy of class war and class revolution expressed in purest form the desires and aspirations of the morally disordered masses. In the field of foreign policy, the Marxist reorientation of Western liberal democracies saw the following: the decision of France and Germany to declare war against Germany over its invasion of Poland, but not against the Soviet Union over its own invasion; the decision of the West to include the Soviets as Allied Powers during World War II; the decision by the West to give the Soviets control over eastern Germany and Eastern Europe, including Poland, after the war; and America's betrayal of the Nationalist forces in China by reneging on its pledge to supply them with military weapons to fight the communists. But this picture of Western perfidy and support for communism around midcentury would not be complete without an expose of the greatest loss of blood and treasure America would suffer in the immediate postwar period, and suffer in vain, during a war of surrender known as the Korean War. Rejecting a policy of roll back of communism which a moral nation would have promoted, the postwar red American masses opted for a policy of surrender to communism and dressed it up as "containment". This policy of surrender-containment would define the permanent character of postwar American foreign policy, and its first great casualty was the loss of 36,000 American soldiers and the consignment of North Korea to communist totalitarian enslavement. The story of America's surrender in Korea is the story of its refusal to expand the prosecution of the war beyond the territorial limits of the Korean peninsula in order to confront the global reality of the communist enemy. It is the story of its refusal to fight the Chinese communists who were providing sanctuary and protection to the North Koreans. It is the story of its refusal to subject the Chinese to naval and air bombardment. It is the story of its refusal to intensify its economic blockade against China. It is the story of its refusal to impose a naval blockade against the Chinese coast. It is the story of its refusal to rescind restrictions on military observations of China's coast and Manchuria. It is the story of its refusal to rescind restrictions on the Nationalist forces in Formosa and refusal to provide them with organization and planning support in their struggle against the communists. Confronted by a global threat to human liberty without precedent in the history of mankind, confronted by the threat of communism, the American people, in the twilight of their culture and in the evening of their nation, chose the path of surrender. Moved by the fires of an ingrained, insatiable bitterness, resentment, malice and spite toward the movers, shakers, engines and dynamos of society and the capitalist system which protects their rights and freedoms, the red partisans in control of America consigned the human race to oblivion beneath the banners of expectation, acceptance, active embracing and joyous celebration of freedom's defeat at the hands of the communists. Unwilling to safeguard the national interest or the future of humanity, and unwilling to counter the voices of destruction rampaging on the Korean front, the American people transformed Asia, as they had transformed Europe, into a gateway to communist hell. The issue of communism was a world wide issue and the radical majority which ruled America derived maximum pride and satisfaction in their contribution in Korea to stoking a global conflagration called communism and encouraging the advance of a red god of war: "I stand on this rostrum with a sense of deep humility and great pride--humility in the wake of those great American architects of our history who have stood here before me; pride in the reflection that this forum of legislative debate represents human liberty in the purest form yet devised. Here are centered the hopes and aspirations and faith of the entire human race. I do not stand here as advocate for any partisan cause, for the issues are fundamental and reach quite beyond the realm of partisan consideration. They must be resolved on the highest plane of national interest if our course is to prove sound and our future protected. I trust, therefore, that you will do me the justice of receiving that which I have to say as solely expressing the considered viewpoint of a fellow American. I address you with neither rancor nor bitterness in the fading twilight of life, with but one purpose in mind: to serve my country. The issues are global and so interlocked that to consider the problems of one sector, oblivious to those of another, is but to court disaster for the whole. While Asia is commonly referred to as the Gateway to Europe, it is no less true that Europe is the Gateway to Asia, and the broad influence of the one cannot fail to have its impact upon the other. There are those who claim our strength is inadequate to protect on both fronts, that we cannot divide our effort. I can think of no greater expression of defeatism. If a potential enemy can divide his strength on two fronts, it is for us to counter his effort. The communist threat is a global one. Its successful advance in one sector threatens the destruction of every other sector. You can not appease or otherwise surrender to communism in Asia without simultaneously undermining our efforts to halt its advance in Europe." (Farewell Address To Congress by Douglas MacArthur, April 19, 1951). Having become communist sympathizers down to their innermost core and essence, the American people signaled to the ruling circles in Washington their desire to achieve Satan's peace in Korea. The communists plunged South Korea into war and the American people sought peace not through the victory of freedom, but peace through appeasement, indecision, stalemate, yielding to blackmail and abject surrender to the armies of red violence and terror. This was a false peace, a fraudulent peace, an immoral peace and a dishonorable peace which the American people forced upon their own courageous soldiers and upon the courageous soldiers of South Korea, and thereby brought the struggle to create a single Korea conceived in liberty to a swift and ignominious end: "But once war is forced upon us, there is no other alternative than to apply every available means to bring it to a swift end. War's very object is victory, not prolonged indecision. In war there is no substitute for victory. There are some who, for varying reasons, would appease Red China. They are blind to history's clear lesson, for history teaches with unmistakable emphasis that appeasement but begets new and bloodier war. It points to no single instance where this end has justified that means, where appeasement has led to more than a sham peace. Like blackmail, it lays the basis for new and successively greater demands until, as in blackmail, violence becomes the only other alternative. 'Why,' my soldiers asked of me, 'surrender military advantages to an enemy in the field?' I could not answer." (Farewell Address To Congress by Douglas MacArthur, April 19, 1951). In June 1950, Soviet backed North Korea crossed the thirty eighth parallel and invaded American backed, anticommunist South Korea. After three years of fighting, America settled for a ceasefire in which it allowed the communists to remain in power in the north. Confronted by the jackal packs of communist expansionism, America chose a lack of resolve; it chose appeasement; it chose not to sustain its counterattacks; it chose to run away from the Chinese Red Army troops which had crossed the Yalu River; it chose to employ disgraceful means to achieve a shocking end; and it signed a truce with a white flag of a degrading and self abasing surrender. The Korean War ended in America's surrender because it had failed to liberate the North Koreans from communism and unite the Korean peninsula under the banners of freedom. The timeline of the war is as severe, stark and unequivocal as it is tragic, disastrous and cataclysmic. It is a timeline in which the Korean people risked everything they had, all their blood and treasure, in order to defeat the jackboots of communist tyranny. It is a timeline in which the dying plea of the Korean soldiers to their American commanders was: "Do not run away from the Pacific". It is a timeline in which American soldiers died by the thousands and exhibited unimpeachable honor, professionalism, courage and commitment in the theater of war, qualities which were one and all squandered in the achievement of an incomplete, no win, "victory" without victory, demanded by public opinion at home. The unfolding of a series of events scripted and directed by the Marxists in power in America, it is a timeline which decent, civilized, law abiding, freedom loving people have studied and evaluated in horror and shame.

THE BETRAYAL OF CHINA

America in the twentieth century descended into a fever swamp of socialist politics and ideologies and saw the abandonment of its traditional individualist ideals. The specific turn toward socialism was toward the Marxist variety, for Marxism had captured the imagination of the great rising class of malcontents, the failures, the frustrated and the functionless as no racist or nationalist versions of socialism were able to do. Promoting the politics of mass equality, mass egalitarianism, mass redistribution and mass leveling, Marxism plied the masses with the hate objects their impulses and prejudices demanded and in a manner in which its great rival national socialism, not appealing to all masses and all scum everywhere, equally, throughout the world, without regard to race or color, was definitionally unable to do. Thus before America's final descent into national socialism in the 1960s via the new left movement, Marxism ruled the nation's establishment and the consequences of this rulership were harmful and destructive in the extreme to the cause of world peace and freedom. They were destructive because they empowered, advanced, encouraged and emboldened the greatest enemy of world peace and freedom ever to exist in the history of mankind: the international communist movement, network and conspiracy. The Marxist orientation of American foreign policy nowhere bore more lethal fruit and nowhere planted a greater harvest of shame than in the America's betrayal of China to the reds. This tragic story saw United States Army General Joseph Stilwell acting in a conspiracy with the communists to overthrow the Nationalist government led by Chiang Kai Shek and set up in its place a Soviet style regime. It saw a communist cell and apparatus in Washington dominated by the following, whose mission was to defeat the Nationalists and hand over China to the communists: Secretary of State Dean Acheson, who as a lawyer represented Soviet interests in America; Soviet espionage agent Alger Hiss; John Carter Vincent, director of the State Department's Office of Far Eastern Affairs, identified by the Daily Worker as a communist; John Stewart Service, Foreign Service Officer in China who provided the Chinese communists with classified State Department information and was apprehended by the FBI in the Amerasia espionage case; Foreign Service Officer John Davies, who steadfastly championed the communist cause; and Owen Lattimore, exposed as a communist by Whittaker Chambers and Elizabeth Bentley. The activities of communists reaching up to the highest levels of the diplomatic service are described by Ambassador to China, Patrick Hurley: "These professional diplomats were returned to Washington and were placed in the Far Eastern and China divisions of the State Department as my supervisors." The communist ruling circles in the State Department and their drive to push out their anticommunist colleagues is described by Louis Budenz, Soviet espionage agent and editor of the Daily Worker: "The communists relied very strongly on Service and John Carter Vincent in a campaign against Ambassador Hurley." The story of America's betrayal of China is the story of State Department reds employing the tactics of concealment and dissimulation to advance their cause. It is the story of Owen Lattimore describing Chinese communists as benign, democratic, peace loving, agrarian reformers with no Soviet connections or affinities: "Owen Lattimore told me that the Chinese communists under Mao Tse-tung were real democrats and that they were really agrarian reformers and had no connection with Soviet Russia." (Kenneth Colgrove). It is the story of Thomas Bisson describing Chinese communists as Western, liberal democratic statesmen: "By no stretch of the imagination can this be termed communism; it is, in fact, the essence of bourgeois democracy applied mainly to agrarian conditions." (Far Eastern Review). It is the story of senior American governmental officials actively promoting the cause of totalitarian dictatorship, authoritarian browbeating, Soviet style republics of repression and regimentation, and the overthrow of constitutional government in China: "Although the Nationalist Government of China was frequently and derisively described as authoritarian or totalitarian, there was a basic difference between it and its communist enemies, since the Kuomintang's ultimate aim was the establishment of a constitutional republic, whereas the Communists want to establish a totalitarian dictatorship on the Soviet pattern. In my two years of close contact with Chiang Kai Shek, I had become convinced that he was personally a straightforward, selfless leader, keenly interested in the welfare of his people, and desirous of establishing a constitutional government." (General Albert Wedemeyer). It is the story of Harry Dexter White, Assistant Treasury Secretary and Soviet espionage agent, delaying and withholding gold shipments to the Nationalist government led by Chiang Kai Shek. The efforts of American governmental officials to overthrow the Nationalists and instal a communist regime in China is described by Walter Robertson, Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs: "We stood by and saw China drift into a state of complete economic collapse. The currency was worthless. In China, we withheld our funds at the only time, in my opinion, we had a chance to save the situation. To do what? To force the communists in." The story of America's betrayal of China is the story of American State Department officials demanding that the Nationalists form a coalition government with the communists in order to enable the latter to seize control over the state. America's support for this Trojan Horse tactic to undermine freedom in China is described by John Davies: "A coalition Chinese government in which the communists find a satisfactory place is the solution of this impasse most desirable to us." It is the story of United States special enoy to China, George Marshall, denying that the Chinese communists were activists for totalitarian dictatorship and describing them instead as traditional, liberal minded, friends of the people. It is the story of Marshall demanding that the Nationalists lay down their arms and make peace with the communists. Admiral William Leahy describes Marshall's support for communism: "I was present when Marshall was going to China. He said he was going to tell Chiang that he had to get on with the communists or go without help from us. He said the same thing when he got back." It is the story of Marshall forcing the Nationalists to agree to a ceasefire with the communists. This ceasefire allowed the communists to reassemble, bring in Soviet supplies, train their guerrillas, and expand their control from 57 counties in China to 310. The effects of Marshall's ceasefire, to save the outnumbered communists from annihilation, to allow them to escape from the grip of the Nationalists, and to allow them to march across the nation and commence an offensive, are described by General Claire Chennault: "North of Hankow some 200,000 government troops had surrounded 70,000 Communist troops and were beginning a methodical job of extermination. The Communists appealed to Marshall on the basis of his truce proposal, and arrangements were made for fighting to cease while the communists marched out of the trap and on to Shantung Province, where a large communist offensive began about a year later. On the East River near Canton some 100,000 communist troops were trapped by government forces. The truce teams effected their release and allowed the communists to march unmolested to Bias Bay where they boarded junks and sailed to Shantung." In 1949 the cause of freedom in China collapsed and red thunder bolts and a red star rolled out of the country. They rolled out because American public opinion had taken the side of Mao's communists and looked benignly upon the forces of red imperialism, red fascism, red reaction and red corruption. They rolled out because the American media establishment had favored the Chinese communists, published only procommunists books, reviews and reportage, and had become the American domestic arm of the Soviet press. They rolled out because respected and renowned American organizations, such as the Institute for Pacific Relations, were communist front organizations whose members, among whom were Alger Hiss, Frederick Vanderbilt Field, Owen Lattimore and John Stewart Service, were faithful agents of the communist world conspiracy. They rolled out because the institute's journal, Amerasia, had reprinted a classified government document in one of its articles, had stolen thousands of classified documents including those which described the placement and stationing of Nationalist forces, and had served as a front for Soviet espionage. They rolled out because America had reneged on its program, promise and pledge to deliver usable military weapons to the Nationalists on a timely basis, while the communists were receiving unlimited, usable supplies from the Soviets when and as needed. The communist conspiracy at work in the American government to bring about the victory of communism in China is described by Representative Walter Judd: "On the law of averages, a mere moron once in a while would make a decision that would be favorable to the United States. When policies are advocated by any group which consistently work out to the communists' advantage, that couldn't be happenstance." As a result of America's betrayal of China, the Nationalists were compelled to escape to the island of Formosa, where they set up the Republic of China and established the nation as a stronghold of freedom and liberty. On the mainland, the communists engulfed the people in a whirlwind of horror and fear without precedent in the history of Chinese civilization. They set up a totalitarian dictatorship, slaughtered tens of millions of people in the name of social justice and a Great Leap Forward, and spread lawlessness and savagery into every home, school, office and factory in the name of a Cultural Revolution. The march of the reds into China had made history march backward into the year zero and signed the names of the American reds who made it happen across the face of the land.

THE GLOBAL ANTITRUMP MOVEMENT

Prior to the twenty first century, there had never before been a unanimous global movement in the history of mankind. There had been movements with a global reach, global players and global participation, but never before a movement which claimed the allegiance of every man, woman and child on the planet. A movement in the present century has accomplished just this and in so doing has indicated a certain attitudinal state of the world which has directed seven billion people downward into the abyss of moral and spiritual extinction. This is the global movement to unseat, discredit and destroy Donald Trump and it is symptomatic as nothing else is of the radical character of present day politics and the grievous pathologies which afflict the present day soul, and ensure that the early decades of the new millennium will introduce the closing decades of the West and the final decades of mankind. The world hates Trump because the world is the West and the West has entered into its concluding chapter of mass politics and virulent Faustian romanticism which has redefined truth as a form of tribalism and relativized reality to the needs and interests of gender, race and class formations. The present century has seen the end of the line of a thousand years of Western subjectivism and the culmination of its late modern cancer of leftist ideologies, and inasmuch as Donald Trump has actively opposed this trend, the world has set its sights upon him and sought to consign him to the dustbin of failed statesmen and the museums of cultural irrelevancy. Donald Trump, winner of the electoral college but massive loser of the popular vote by a margin of millions, a steadfast opponent of the leftist establishment and its lockstep of political correctness, and the red majorities which the establishment represents in every nation in the world, has been painted with a bullseye and stood before the people's firing squads. In nation after nation, the volleys of red partisanship have rung out, silenced the voices of rational dissent, and sent out a miasma of tribal hate politics, high temperature sewer emanations, and party lines for the marginalized, excluded, disadvantaged and discriminated against, for the failures, the frustrated and the degenerates of the world, which have made the planet reek from a moral stench which will endure for all time to come. The world hates Trump because the world is no longer a morally recognizable place of human habitation but a fever swamp of slogans, discourses, policies, orthodoxies, measures and mass agitations which have shut down the defenders of free inquiry, empirical science and critical discussion and ushered in an apocalypse of violent, rampaging antiliberalism. The world hates Trump because he has denounced the social justice warriors of Hollywood who would like to punch, beat, behead, blow up, stab, shoot and incinerate him for being the most consistently conservative president since Calvin Coolidge. The world hates Trump because he was exonerated of the charges of Russian collusion and obstruction of justice. Transgressing the fundamental precepts of logic and common sense, Robert Mueller stated that he could not exonerate Trump of the charge of obstruction despite the fact that there were reasonable doubts about his guilt. The world hates Trump because he opposes Medicare for All and universal health care entitlements paid for by the dynamos and producers of society. The world hates Trump because he has opposed the antiindustrial revolution demanded by the Green New Deal. The world hates Trump because he is opposed to slavery reparations and the notion of mystical collective responsibility upon they are founded. The world hates Trump because he is opposed to a wealth tax which seeks to punish those with business talent, ability, intelligence and acumen. The world hates Trump because he is opposed to forcing taxpayers to pay off student college debts. The world hates Trump because he is opposed to the transformation of national borders into open sewers for the marauders, mafias, malcontents and mass murderers of the world. The world hates Trump because his policies of deregulation and low tax rates have brought economic benefits and resulted in record low unemployment levels, millions of poor, inner city blacks finding work, increases in employees' pay of 5,000 dollars per capita, and America becoming the largest producer of oil and natural gas in the world. The world hates Trump because he has remade the federal judiciary and eliminated the dominance of leftist judges for whom the textual meaning of the Constitution must be subordinated to welfare rights, mob rule and the preservation of popular social programs. The world hates Trump because his policy of maximum pressure has reduced the North Korean nuclear threat. The world hates Trump because his hardline policies have resulted NATO member states increasing their contributions, China agreeing to conduct more fair trade with America, and greater border security and a decrease in the number of illegal aliens. The world hates Trump because he has ended Chinese currency manipulation and Chinese theft of intellectual property including military technology. The world hates Trump because his relaxation of the rules of engagement and determined pursuit of Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi has resulted in the rollback and decapitation of the Islamic State. The world hates Trump because he has withdrawn from the Iran nuclear deal which allowed Iran to develop ballistic missiles to deliver nuclear warheads. The world hates Trump because he has withdrawn from the Paris Climate Accord which is based upon the uncorroborated theory that man made carbon dioxide emissions are causing the planet to warm and to warm in ways which are dangerous.

The world hates Trump because he has challenged the notion that America has a responsibility to protect foreign nations, and has inaugurated an America First foreign policy and commenced withdrawals from Syria and Afghanistan and forced Saudi Arabia to pay for its own defense. The world hates Trump because he has been a steadfast supporter of Israel, an outpost of Western liberal democratic values in lands which have never known such and are incapable of knowing such, and supports Israel's right to have its capital in Jerusalem, its right to build settlements spreading Western freedom across the West Bank, and to annex Palestinian territory for the cause of Western freedom. The world hates Trump because he has understood that Islamic terror poses a greater threat to world security than Syrian President Bashar Al Assad, just as he understood that Iran posed a greater threat than Hussein's Iraq, and communism posed a greater threat than fascism decades before. The term world politics has traditionally referred to a form of politics based upon considerations affecting the world as a whole. The twenty first century has produced another definition of the term in consequence of the presidency of Donald Trump. The new definition in the age of Trump refers to the viewpoints and opinions embraced by literally every person on the planet. To date, there has been one and only one instance of this latter sense of the term: the perfervid antiTrump politics which has blanketed the planet and consumed the soul of the world. Trump is condemned by the people next door as a racist, a sexist, a thief, a bully and as mentally deranged. Trump is denounced by psychiatrists, anonymous op-ed writers, and United States military officers who call for his immediate removal from office by any means possible. Trump is declared to be guilty of high crimes, misdemeanors and abuse of power over his desire to see corruption in Ukraine involving Joseph Biden and his son investigated. In 2014, Joseph Biden had his son appointed to the board of Burisma Holdings, one of the largest private natural gas companies in Ukraine. In this position, he earned 50,000 dollars per month and performed no work for the company. He stayed on the board until February 2019. In 2016, Joseph Biden had Viktor Shokin, Ukraine's prosecutor-general, removed from office because Shokin had been investigating his son's corrupt activities. The notion of a leftist Deep State, a body of people working in the government in civilian and military agencies who are thwarting the capitalist, constitutionalist will of the people by secretly manipulating government policy, has no basis in reality. It is a matter of record that the American people in the present century occupy the radical left portion of the political spectrum. It is a matter of record that there is a national consensus upon the following: that health care is a universal human right; that the text of the Constitution is meaningless and irrelevant before social exigencies and national emergencies; that entrepreneurs owe their success not to their enterprise or initiative but to the benefits conferred upon them by society; that discrimination on the basis of race and gender is permissible in the name of diversity and inclusion; that successful white men represent the Devil incarnate and must be eradicated from the face of the earth by a policy of racism, sexism and classism on behalf of women, nonwhites and the poor; that the male population is a demographic of rampaging, brutalizing misogynists the most effective defense against which is the abolition of due process requirements in sexual assault cases and the jailing of male defendants on the basis of false or frivolous claims and the word of an accuser or series of accusers; that the pursuit of self interest is the most vicious of all evils and must be transcended by a morality of community commitment, national interests and global sacrifice; that industrial civilization is a source of greenhouse gas emissions which are burning up the planet and civilization must be dismantled and its infrastructure buried in the bottom of the ocean; that the liberal capitalist order is lash of oppression, exploitation, marginalization and exclusion in the hands of successful, white men and must be swept away by a regime of red totalitarian power and by the banners of multiculturalism and gender, race and class politics; that gender has nothing whatever to do with genes or chromosomes but can be changed at will by surgical, chemical or psychological means; that freedom of speech has no place in a progressive society which demands a unity and lockstep of thought and opinion within a deafening, shattering echo chamber of political correctness; and that the use of force and violence against those who support capitalism is a necessity to combat hate speech, microaggression and discrimination against women, nonwhites, transgenders, Islamists and the poor. This national consensus furnishes proof positive that the notion of a Deep State is entirely mythical. This national consensus and this international consensus furnish the final and conclusive reason why the world hates Trump and has fueled, propelled and organized a movement against him. The global leftist establishment and the masses who have put it in power will only survive by the defeat of Trump and will only endure within the ashes of Trump's destruction. Throughout the world, the people on the street and their appointed mouthpieces, the classes of intellectuals, writers, experts, authorities, commentators, members of think tanks and partisans of the mainstream parties, have launched an unrelenting, unappeasable crusade against Trump. They have sought to reestablish an unimpeded advance of radical tribalism and totalitarian dictatorship which have sealed the doom of the West.

THE PIED PIPER

An idiot savant is defined as a person who is highly knowledgeable about one subject but knows little or nothing about anything else. The condition is rare and characterizes one in a million people. Over the last one hundred years, the world has received the bountiful blessings and suffered the baneful consequences of the career of an idiot savant known to every school child and to every man and woman on the street. He was the greatest physicist since Isaac Newton, one who placed mathematical physics upon a completely empirical basis without admixture of any terms which could not be defined in terms of measurements and operations. This was the field in which he advanced the progress of mathematical physics by leaps and bounds and brought about its perfection and fulfillment. Outside this field, he played a completely different role; his career told a fundamentally different story; and the moral development of mankind and the cause of world peace and freedom were set back by decades because of it. Outside this field, he played the role of a Pied Piper who enticed and led a community of rats into the abyss and sent all mankind following after them. His name was Albert Einstein and the community of rats were the reds who dominated the scientific community and the red masses on the street, who one and all looked upon him as their teacher, guide, prophet, inspiration, savior and salvation. Einstein led two lives, pursued two careers and wore two hats: he was the leader of the community of physicists as physicists, and was the leader of the community of physicists as reds, and in the role of the latter, he gave his troops their marching orders to depart to the field of battle and defend the banners of communist totalitarian tyranny and the enslavement of the planet within a web of red networks, movements, conspiracies, cells and satellite nations. Einstein the physicist and Einstein the political activist, Einstein the scientific savant and Einstein the moral defective: two entities housed within the same soul and within the same person, whose single heart simultaneously beat out the rhythms of human intellectual glory and human spiritual degradation. Inflicting a morally destructive force equaled only by the physically destructive force his physics unleashed against Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Einstein the political activist composed a program and manifesto for the eradication of the liberal capitalist order known, understood, built up and fought for by free people for the past three centuries since the Age of Enlightenment. He proclaimed that morality has nothing whatever to do with reason or science and is a matter of pure mystical feeling and intuition and the highest form of morality is that which is revealed in the intuition of socialist dictatorship and enslavement. He proclaimed that the culmination of human social development will bring about the abolition of the selfish, predatory system of individual rights and freedoms and the onset of the ethical, idealistic system of class extermination and red totalitarian dictatorship. He proclaimed that when capitalism is finally trampled underfoot by the thunderous march of history, the exploited and oppressed working class can look forward to the gleaming socialist society of the future. In this society, every person will be able to overcome his regressive impulses toward individual freedom, advance beyond the narrow, selfish, bourgeois way of thinking in terms of individual dignity, and give himself fully and unreservedly over to the people's republic of service and sacrifice to a relentless, fire breathing monster known as the state. Einstein the political activist proclaimed that human social problems can only be addressed by the methods of force and violence and the reorganization of society along the lines of authoritarian lockstep and the regimentation of all thought and action. He proclaimed that the only way to safeguard, defend, protect and advance the existence of mankind is through the establishment of a supranational organization and government which will eliminate from every corner of the planet the gravest threat to world peace and security: the liberal capitalist system of individual rights and freedoms. He proclaimed that political systems which allow people to live and work for themselves and choose the path of their own destiny un beholden to the claims of the state or society have inevitably plunged the human race into conflict, crisis, disequilibrium and instability. This woeful state of affairs can only be alleviated by the institutionalization of class prejudice and the launching of a Final Solution against the producers and creators in society in the name of social equity and social justice. He proclaimed that all the ills and misfortunes which beset mankind can be solved in one fell swoop by the implementation of a simple and easy formula: hate entrepreneurs, hate innovators, hate industrialists, hate risk takers and kill them off, one by one, and love, protect and exalt the failures, nonachievers, misfits and malcontents of the world. He proclaimed that the notion that man is an autonomous, rational, free born being is a bourgeois fantasy and delusion and must be replaced by the recognition that the nature of man is that of a social, collective, sacrificial being whose moral perfection consists in protecting the existence, pandering to the desires, satisfying the pleasures, developing the abilities, improving the conditions, advancing the welfare, alleviating the distress and promoting the happiness of others. He proclaimed that man's highest impulses are to serve others and not himself and those who ignore these basic, biologically grounded, socialist impulses will plunge into inner crisis, disharmony and disequilibrium and descend into spiritual and psychological ruination. He proclaimed that what are called truth and reality are nothing more than social constructions and have no existence outside of society and true philosophic wisdom and enlightenment consists in the realization that human individuality, separateness and the autonomous personality are bourgeois idols and illusions. It consists in the realization that all people are emanations of the social environment, social organism, social structures, social frameworks, social relations and social traditions; that all physical, emotional, volitional and intellectual existence is completely social in character; that there are no acts of thinking, feeling, imagining, remembering, striving, working, developing, accomplishing, speaking, writing, eating or dressing except those which are performed by, in and for society; and that society is a small word but possesses the greatest possible meaning and significance, providing the essential ground and content of all human existence and being the name of an infinite, divine, mystical presence which spans endless nations and generations and is the creator and destroyer of all facts, entities and worlds. Einstein the political activist proclaimed that the highest form of philosophic wisdom consists in the recognition that the individual is nothing more than the sum total of his social patterns and his interrelationships; that there exist no forms of being or consciousness except social being and social consciousness; that the individual has no power to influence the course of his life through his own will or conduct; that the dependence of the individual upon society is as rigid, necessary, unshakeable and unyielding as the dependence of any effect upon its cause; and that a progressive society is a primitive society, one which is grounded in a socialist ontology and recognizes that human beings are no better than ants or bees and must have every detail of their lives planned and controlled by the commissars of the people's red totalitarian state. He proclaimed that Soviet leader Vladimir Lenin was a shining paragon of conscience and morality, a guardian and restorer of true human civilization, and the greatest statesman who ever lived, because he had the will, the energy and the bestial ruthlessness to carry out the Marxist program of mass extermination in the name of social justice: "I honor Lenin as a man who completely sacrificed himself and devoted all his energy to the realization of social justice. I do not consider his methods practical, but one thing is certain: men of his type are the guardians and restorers of the conscience of humanity." (Einstein Archives: 34-439). In the town of Hamelin in Germany during the Middle Ages, there was a piper dressed in multicolored clothing who lured the rats away with his magic pipe and sent them drowning in the Weser River. This story created a theme: that of a popular, charismatic leader who leads his followers by false ideas into their doom and ruination. In the twentieth century, this theme returned with terrifying force and intensity in the career of the century's most esteemed scientist. The piper was Albert Einstein. His clothing was not multicolored but colored in the brightest possible shade of red. His pipe sent forth the lugubrious notes of class hatred, class politics, class war, class revolution and a global red movement and conspiracy. His followers were the inhabitants of rat land who ruled over the scientific establishment and agitated in the sewers of society. Ignited by the fires of rage and resentment, Einstein the political activist was a disgrace to Einstein the physicist, and this simultaneous commander in chief of the world's community of scientists and commander in chief of the reds in the West composed a Dance of Death. This was a dance choreographed to drumbeats of red propaganda and to the rolling waves of revolutionary thunder. Like the Pied Piper of the Middle Ages, Einstein perpetrated a mass drowning. In the twentieth century, this was a mass drowning in seas of radical ideologies, communist sympathies, communist affinities, communist violence and a communist bloodbath. Its waters have not receded a millimeter in the present day and are destined to bury every man, woman and child on the planet.

DIRECTOR OPPENHEIMER

A curriculum vitae is a account of a person's education, qualifications and occupations sent out with a job application. A curriculum vitae which is falsified can result in the immediate termination of the employee. In 1942, Robert Oppenheimer submitted a CV to General Leslie Groves, head of the Manhattan Project, for the post of scientific director. Every word of this CV was a falsification and dissimulation of Oppenheimer's true education, qualifications and occupation, which if known, would have shocked the conscience of those among his colleagues who were decent, civilized, law abiding citizens. Had they known about the real Oppenheimer, they would have demanded his immediate dismissal as an active promoter of totalitarian tyranny and the agent of a foreign power. Unbeknown to his loyal, American friends and colleagues, the real Oppenheimer was a member of the Communist Party beginning in the late 1930s and donated 2,000 dollars per month, in current dollars, to communist front organizations and Communist Party officials, including Isaac Folkoff, liason between the Communist Party and Soviet intelligence. Oppenheimer's record of deceit and disinformation concealing a mission of sabotage is described by John Earl Haynes and Harvey Klehr in Venona: Decoding Soviet Espionage in America: "Throughout his life Oppenheimer declined to provide a detailed or accurate accounting of his relationship with the CPUSA in the late 1930s and early 1940s and of his knowledge of Communists who worked on the Manhattan Project." Oppenheimer's membership in the Communist Party is described by Paul Crouch, party organizer for Alameda County in California, in United States Senate, Executive Sessions of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Government Operations, 1953: "Chairman: Is there any doubt in your mind that Oppenheimer was a member of the Communist Party? Crouch: No, sir, none whatever. I met him in a closed meeting of the Communist Party in a house which was subsequently found to have been his residence at the time, and following that I met him at quite a number of Communist Party affairs in Alameda County." The real Oppenheimer was a loyal, disciplined, unswerving member of the Communist Party who appointed Soviet spies to the Manhattan Project and turned over nuclear secrets to the Soviets or directed others to turn them over. The real Oppenheimer was active in nuclear espionage from 1942 to 1944 during which time he provided the Soviets with classified reports on the development and construction of a nuclear bomb. The real Oppenheimer was a primary player in a global communist espionage network which provided the Soviets with progress reports on the Manhattan Project through stolen documents and oral communications: "I set up a network of illegals who convinced Robert Oppenheimer and other scientists in America and Great Britain to share atomic secrets with us. We received reports on the progress of the Manhattan Project from Oppenheimer and his friends in oral form, through comments and asides, and from documents transferred through clandestine methods with their full knowledge that the information they were sharing would be passed on. One agent cited Oppenheimer's stressing that information should be leaked so as not to be traceable to those who worked in Los Alamos. In all, there were five classified reports made available by Oppenheimer describing the progress of work on the atomic bomb. (Special Tasks by Pavel and Anatoli Sudoplatov). Oppenheimer's pivotal contributions to the Soviet nuclear weapons program are described by Pavel and Anatoli Sudoplatov in Special Tasks: "Department S [Sudoplatov's department] rendered considerable help to our scientists by giving them the latest materials on atom bomb research, obtained from such sources as the famous nuclear physicists R. Oppenheimer, E. Fermi, K. Fuchs and others." After the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki and the surrender of Japan, Oppenheimer became an antinuclear activist in order to prevent the use of nuclear weapons against the Soviets. Oppenheimer's role as a key Soviet asset in a nuclear disarmament campaign is described by Pavel and Anatoli Sudaplatov in Special Tasks: "NKVD Chief Lavrenty Beri said we should think how to use Oppenheimer, Szilard and others around them in the peace campaign against nuclear armament. Disarmament and the inability to impose nuclear blackmail would deprive the United States of its advantage." Oppenheimer advocated the sharing of nuclear weapons secrets with the Soviets and influenced American policy in that direction: "Oppenheimer told me that the President's statement to Congress had been written by Dean Acheson's assistant, a Mr. Herbert Marks, and that he Oppenheimer had had something to do with helping Marks on the message." (The Price of Vision: The Diary of Henry A. Wallace edited by John Blum). The real Oppenheimer demanded that America surrender its nuclear monopoly to international control under the United Nations with Soviet participation and veto power. Reacting to this demand, President Truman told Secretary of State Acheson: "I don't want to see that son of a bitch in this office again." The real Oppenheimer opposed American development of the hydrogen bomb to protect Soviet power and interests, the Soviets at the time lagging far behind America in weapons research, and sought to influence the highest levels of American government to abandon the program. Inspired by Oppenheimer, Vice President Wallace issued a statement in which he rejected the right of free nations to defend themselves against communist aggression and supported the victory of red totalitarian power: "We should prefer defeat in war to victory obtained at the expense of the enormous human disaster that would be caused by its determined use." (Hiroshima: The World's Bomb by Andrew Rotter). Oppenheimer's disloyalty toward America, his secretive, dishonest, underhanded behavior, his opposition to the vital interests of the free world, and his rejection of wisdom and judgment in favor of blind, uncritical ideological service are described by Edward Teller: "In a great number of cases I have seen Dr. Oppenheimer act in a way which for me was exceedingly hard to understand. I thoroughly disagreed with him in numerous issues and his actions frankly appeared to me confused and complicated. To this extent I feel that I would like to see the vital interests of this country in hands which I understand better, and therefore trust more. If it is a question of wisdom and judgment, as demonstrated by actions since 1945, then I would say one would be wiser not to grant clearance." (Hearings of the Atomic Energy Commission, 1953). In 1953, the Atomic Energy Commission voted to deprive Oppenheimer of official permission to have access to classified nuclear information on the grounds that he had fundamental defects in moral character and was a Soviet agent. In 1997, the KGB museum in Moscow held an exhibition on Soviet espionage agents in the West and the classified documents they purloined. The exhibition featured a picture of Oppenheimer alongside a picture of Soviet spy Klaus Fuchs and a picture of a Manhattan Project laboratory. Oppenheimer was honored by the museum because he had cooperated with Soviet intelligence, provided the Soviets with key information about the nuclear bomb, recognized that fascist mass murderers were worse than communist mass murderers, and worked to advance the cause of communist power and influence against the lands of freedom protected by America and the West: "Oppenheimer and other top scientists cooperated with us. He and others gave us information about the atom bomb. They were fearful that Hitler might defeat the Soviet Union in World War II and because Oppenheimer and the other scientists wanted to create a balance of power between the United States, which had the bomb, and the USSR, which didn't." (We Told You So: Secret Venona Intercepts by Stephen Goode). "Yes, he did cooperate with Soviet intelligence. That's why his picture is here." (The Week, in National Review, July 1997). In the mid 1930s, Chyron, the ferryman of the dead, conducted a deceased soul into Satan's chambers for a special employment interview. The Prince of Darkness was looking for a candidate with impeccable red credentials, red qualifications, red experience and red occupations, to join the United States federal government and undertake a fearsome and terrifying mission. This was a mission to rise to the highest levels of scientific and technical service and transmit to Satan's emissaries on earth, the agents, operatives and commissars of communist power, secret information which would enable the communists to accomplish the following. It would enable them to construct weapons of mass destruction, which would in turn enable them to seize control over China and set up a regime which would murder seventy million Chinese; invade South Korea and launch a war which would claim the lives of over 30,000 American soldiers; and commence a nuclear arms race which would engulf the free world in the shadow of a holocaust. After listening to the candidate's spellbinding oratory and impassioned commitment to the cause of social justice, egalitarian politics, class war and the collectivization of man, Satan hired him. He gave him a mandate and authorization, "You have become death, the destroyer of worlds", and unleashed him upon the world. The candidate's name was Robert Oppenheimer. His assignment was to become scientific director of America's nuclear weapons program. When Director Oppenheimer died in 1963, his legacy was the loyal, devoted fulfilment of Satan's command: a free world world rendered unsafe and insecure before the violence and aggression of a global, totalitarian slave empire.

THE VIRUS HOUSE

A virus is an infective agent which is able to multiply only within the cells of a living organism. A virus can survive only by feeding off the forms of life and dies instantly when placed outside a living being. In July 1945, in White Sands, New Mexico, the world's first nuclear bomb was detonated by a viral agent code named the Manhattan Project. Renowned as the world's first successful nuclear weapons research and development undertaking, the Manhattan Project was in its deepest essence and reality a national center of red harm and corruption, a center surpassing all other such centers, a staging post for red agents, vehicles and aircraft en route to a fearsome and terrifying destination: to bomb the homes, schools, offices and factories of free societies and send out clouds of radioactive poison which would spell out the doom of civilization for all time to come. The red virus of the Manhattan Project was a vampiric shadow, an unearthly black light and a pool of total darkness stationed by the Soviets in the midst of living, healthy people with a mandate to incinerate them in body and soul. Controlled from top to bottom by the reds and their sympathizers and given a mission to manufacture the weapons to destroy America and the free world, the Manhattan Project illustrated as nothing had the fundamentally lethal character of the democratic system and the masses which stuff its ballot boxes. Permeated by socialists throughout the twentieth century, American society organized the Manhattan Project as a communist front organization and filled its ranks with agents and operatives serving the interests of an alien power which pitched its appeal to the lowest, the most frustrated, the most resentful and the most hate filled members of society. The promoters and proselytisers of a gutter religion called Marxism, the Soviets found no shortage of reds in America to serve in the Manhattan Project and advance the Soviet cause. They found no shortage of people who were willing and eager to betray their nation and the ideals upon which it was founded and stab their decent, upstanding, law abiding neighbors in the back. The story of the Manhattan Project is a story of red perfidy and red subversion in America reaching their most virulent, pathological and dangerous levels, and serves as a warning, a lesson and a reminder of the immoral, unsound and unstable character of any system of democracy, founded as it is upon the impulses, the degeneracy and the pornography swirling in the sewers which have floated to the top and risen to the commanding heights of society. The story of the Manhattan Project is the story of its director, Robert Oppenheimer, who was a spy for the Soviet Union. Oppenheimer was a member of the Communist Party, the communist underground, the Communist International and was a major intelligence asset of the Soviet Union. Oppenheimer's role as a key espionage facilitator, providing access to vital weapons information, is described by Boris Merkulov, Commissar of State Security, in a letter to Lavrenty Beria, Commissar of Internal Affairs, in October 1944: "In 1942 one of the leaders of the scientific work on [uranium] in the USA, Professor Oppenheimer, while being an unlisted member of the apparatus of Comrade Browder, informed us about the beginning of work. On the request of Comrade Kheifitz, confirmed by Comrade Browder, he provided cooperation in access to research for several of our tested sources including a relative of Comrade Browder." Oppenheimer's espionage activities in the Manhattan are described by Pavel Sudoplatov in Special Tasks. Secret methods and classified reports were employed by Oppenheimer to provide the Soviets with knowledge of how to construct a nuclear bomb: "I set up a network of illegals who convinced Robert Oppenheimer and other scientists in America and Great Britain to share atomic secrets with us. We received reports on the progress of the Manhattan Project from Oppenheimer and his friends in oral form, through comments and asides, and from documents transferred through clandestine methods with their full knowledge that the information they were sharing would be passed on. One agent cited Oppenheimer's stressing that information should be leaked so as not to be traceable to those who worked in Los Alamos. In all, there were five classified reports made available by Oppenheimer describing the progress of work on the atomic bomb." The story of the Manhattan Project is the story of Klaus Fuchs. The most damaging nuclear spy in history, Fuchs was the primary physicist on the Manhattan Project. He gave the Soviets detailed information on the design and construction of a fission bomb, including pictures, sketches and dimensions. After the termination of the Manhattan Project, Fuchs returned to Britain and continued his espionage activities and provided the Soviets with detailed information on how to construct a hydrogen bomb. The story of the Manhattan Project is the story of Theodore Hall. In December 1944, Hall gave the Soviets the first nuclear secret from Los Alamos: the latest information on the development of a plutonium bomb. Hall described his opposition to the free world alone possessing nuclear weapons and the necessity for the West to share nuclear secrets with a red totalitarian power: "It seemed to me that an American monopoly was dangerous and should be prevented. I was not the only scientist to take that view." The story of the Manhattan Project is the story of Harry Gold. In 1950 when Klaus Fuchs confessed to spying for the Soviets, his confession implicated Harry Gold as his courier. Gold had been supplying the Soviets with nuclear information stolen from American industries since 1935. The story of the Manhattan Project is the story of Morton Sobell. Recruited as a spy in 1944, Sobell was provided by the Soviets with a microfilm camera and stock and transmitted copies of classified documents on military equipment. The story of the Manhattan Project is the story of David Greenglass. In 1950, Harry Gold identified Greenglass as his contact in New Mexico. The story of the Manhattan Project is the story of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. Julius provided classified information to the Soviets concerning radar, sonar, jet propulsion engines and nuclear weapons designs. In addition, he was a recruiter for the Soviets. Ethel Rosenberg concealed money and espionage equipment for Julius, served as an intermediary for Julius's communications with the Soviets, and gave Julius her evaluations of Julius's prospective recruits. The information provided to the Soviet Union on how to develop and construct a nuclear bomb was the greatest espionage achievement of the past one hundred years. It was made possible by the thorough red penetration of America's Manhattan Project via its mass politics and mass society. There was no wall of secrecy surrounding the Manhattan Project; when American scientists exploded the world's first nuclear bomb in 1945, Soviet leader Joseph Stalin knew more about the Manhattan Project than American President Harry Truman. Staffed by agents identified and unidentified, by the Oppenheimers, the Fuchs, the Rosenbergs and the Mr Xs operating around the world, and by world wide networks and cells commanded by Moscow, the Manhattan Project was in its official appearance and its brute reality two diametrically opposed things. In its appearance, it was an achievement of the American state, American organization, American science and American engineering. In reality, it was an achievement of the Soviet state, Soviet organization, Soviet science, Soviet engineering and Soviet intelligence. When the first nuclear bomb was detonated, it released a destructive force without equal in the history of military warfare. But this force was dwarfed by the moral, spiritual and cultural holocaust the bomb unleashed from the arsenals of a red democracy called America. While the Manhattan Project showed the world how to solve the problem of splitting an atomic nucleus and releasing vast quantities of energy from the severing of the strong nuclear force, it illustrated in the deadliest possible manner the fundamental problem of democracy. This is the problem in which the majority is placed in charge and not the best, the brightest or the most morally qualified. As the decades roll by, the majority shreds its constitutions, its charters of rights, its lofty declarations exalting the freedom and dignity of man, and sinks into the cesspools of envy, jealousy, rage and victimhood, and becomes radical and revolutionary, and votes the red parties and their program of socialist totalitarianism into power. Throughout the West, a sizable proportion of the population, people from every educational and socioeconomic level, were supporters of the Soviet Union, the socialist cause, and espionage activities conducted on behalf of the international communist movement and conspiracy. Infiltrated from top to bottom by reds of all stripes and varieties, and infiltrated by American reds, British reds, German reds and reds from every capital city, center and university in the world, the Manhattan Project was far more than a scientific, technical undertaking. It was a monument. An ionizing, fire breathing, death dealing monument to the final stage of democracy and its reds in command, the remorseless grave diggers of civilization.

AMERICA'S RED CENTURY

The curtain rose on the twentieth century with a foreordained script of red subversion and red revolution reaching all the way around the world. As the West had become the world and the world had become the West, the implosion of the West into a swampland of collectivism signaled the onset of an apocalypse the likes of which mankind had never witnessed before. In nation after nation, driven onward by their trademark emotions of envy and hatred and their defining impulses to level down and destroy all those who are morally, spiritually or economically superior to them, the masses sought to establish socialist and statist governments and eliminate every trace of freedom and liberty from the face of the world. In Russia, the masses established socialism by force and violence, by a coup d'etat, by a Bolshevik Revolution led by the Soviet commissars Lenin and Trotsky. In America, the masses established socialism by the ballot box and voted into power a red tyranny dressed up as progressivism which betrayed and nullified the values and ideals upon which the nation had been founded, ideals which encapsulated centuries of Anglo-Saxon law and Enlightenment humanism. America and Russia: two leaders of a global ideological conflict and death struggle between the forces of civilization and the forces of barbarism, but both infected with a red virus which would render them morally, culturally and politically indistinguishable as the decades rolled by, and would render the Cold War an essentially meaningless conflict. In America, the red assumption of power was especially tragic in light of the nation's traditions and institutions of constitutional liberty and individual rights, and the story of America from the dawn of the twentieth century down to the present day has been a story of democratic treachery, mass disloyalty and majoritarian despotism, and the greatest story of crucifixion, freedom's crucifixion, law's crucifixion, reason's crucifixion and virtue's crucifixion, ever told. This is a story revealed in the pages of the Venona decrypts compiled by the United States Army Signal Corps in the 1940s. Project Venona was a secret undertaking to decrypt messages exchanged between Soviet intelligence agencies and their operatives in America. This is a story revealed in the pages of a voluminous file compiled by Soviet defector Alexander Vassiliev, which contained copies of top secret intelligence records. This is a story revealed in accounts provided by other communist defectors: Oleg Gordievsky, Stanislav Levchenko, Victor Kravchenko, Whittaker Chambers and Elizabeth Bentley. This is a story revealed in the secret archives of the FBI which had tracked and recorded the activities of communists and Soviet agents operating in America since the 1920s. This is a story revealed in information gathered by congressional committees: the Senate Government Operations Committee, the Senate Internal Security Committee and the House Committee on UnAmerican Activities. This is a story of communist penetration of American government and society on a massive scale. This is a story of Soviet agents, Communist Party members and communist sympathizers and fellow travelers numbering in the thousands supported on government payrolls. This is a story of reds in America rejecting the nation's traditional, world renowned commitment to peace, law, righteousness and moral idealism and promoting in its place the cause of Moscow: mass murder in the name of social justice and global subversion in service to an alien, hostile, foreign power. This is a story of proSoviet operatives and apparatchiks occupying key positions in the State Department, the Treasury Department, the Commerce Department, the White House and wartime agencies, betraying the national interest, and planning and steering American foreign policy to serve the aims of Stalin. This is a story of Soviet espionage and influence operations, the theft of radar, nuclear and jet propulsion systems and the manipulation of foreign policy, operating together, in the same offices, in the same agencies, in the same departments and in the same people. This is a story of American officials providing the Soviets with inside information about planned American actions toward Germany, Japan, Poland, Spain and China. This is a story of agents of an enemy power, such as Alger Hiss and Harry Dexter White, recommending and guiding agreements and plans which served Soviet interests and harmed the West: the Yalta Agreement, which opened the door to the establishment of totalitarian governments and the abolition of personal liberty across eastern Europe, and the Morgenthau Plan, which advocated the destruction of mines, factories and industrial civilization in Germany. This is a story of American socialists of all stripes and varieties contributing to the rise of communism as a global power and advancing the Bolshevik program at the commencement of the Russian Revolution. This is a story of Soviet operatives seeking to prevent a rapprochement between Japan and America and maneuvering the countries into open war. This is a story of Soviet agents of influence playing a leading at summit conferences held during World War II, involving Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin, which sought to guide the West to further Moscow's advantage in the postwar years. This is a story of senior American officials manipulating grand juries to ensure that Soviet agents in the government were not brought to justice. This is a story of America condemning Japanese aggression against China but aiding and abetting communist aggression against China. This is a story of America condemning German aggression against Poland but allowing communist aggression against the country to stand. This is a story of America consigning Eastern and Central Europe, Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, Romania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Albania and Czechoslovakia, together with the eastern half of Germany, to a relentless vortex of communist power. This is a story of America advancing the cause of red conquest and allowing millions of people throughout the world to be hermetically sealed behind an Iron Curtain of repression and to be killed, tortured and imprisoned because they were members of the wrong class or held the wrong beliefs. Millions of people slaughtered in China, Korea, Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. Red police states set up from the Baltic to the Pacific to Africa to Latin America and denying individual liberty, shutting down homes, schools and offices, and locking up the voices of reason and dissent. Protected and defended by the red masses of America and their cultural and governmental leaders, the specter of the hammer and sickle cast its darkness and gloom across the face of the earth. Proclaimed as the summit of moral and political progressivism, it constructed the twentieth century as a revelry of violence and tyranny unsurpassed in the history of mankind. The thunderbolts of a red peril struck America when the sun rose on the twentieth century and the storm clouds and moral eclipse which they brought about would augment and intensify until they consumed the heart and soul of the present day. A scenario composed in Satan's chambers was read by all those who had eyes to read and filled them with fear and trembling. This was a scenario in which the masses, their professors, their pundits and their high government officials were made complicit in a crime without precedent in the history of the nation. This was a crime to undermine the safety and security of freedom's homes, schools, offices and factories by the supercharged currents of hate politics, conspiratorial cells, unabashed political pornography and feverish sewer emanations. In the late twentieth century, the global communist apparatus and empire disintegrated and the torch of subversion was passed in America to two forces: the networks of Islamist terror operating abroad, and the swastika politics of gender, race and class operating at home. America was now in the grip of a pincer movement tightening by the hour and by the minute at the hands of the masses and their establishment underlings and henchmen. Crisscrossing, interacting and joining forces throughout the nation, the neoMarxist identity theorists and the armies of Islam are the gravediggers of American civilization and the final players in a fearsome and terrifying drama. Its theme has been known by philosophers and statesmen for thousands of years and has filled them with dark forebodings of pessimism and gloom. It is a theme which Plato dramatized in his dialogues. It is a theme which Aristotle detailed and investigated on the pages of his political treatise. It is a theme which Socrates sought to teach the citizens of Athens, who put him to death as a result. It is the theme that democracy, the system made by, for and of the masses, inevitably votes socialist tyranny into power and extinguishes the freedom and dignity of man.

RETREAT FROM VICTORY

On April 30, 1975, a twenty five year history came crashing down to an ignominious end and splashed the blood of innocent people across the body and soul of American foreign policy. This was the history of American betrayal in Vietnam and on this day, South Vietnam surrendered to communism, communist indoctrination camps were constructed for the defeated, and the tragic flight of the Boat People, South Vietnamese refugees fleeing their country and seeking the shores of freedom in Hong Kong, Australia and anywhere they could find them, commenced. The curtain rose on this drama in the early 1950s, when America declined France's request for assistance to suppress a communist uprising and the request to use nuclear weapons against the Viet Minh communist guerrillas led by Ho Chi Minh. At the Geneva Peace Talks of 1954, the new communist country of North Vietnam was born while freedom was confined to the new country of South Vietnam. It was decided that there would be a referendum on the uniting of North and South Vietnam. The communists demanded a single referendum for all Vietnamese because they would be able to force every North Vietnamese to vote for them and thus ensure a victory for the communist government in a newly united Vietnam. Recognizing the communist plan to establish a forced majority in the North, America and South Vietnam demanded that two referendums be held, one in the North and one in the South. Because a referendum held in South Vietnam would have been free and fair and would have resulted in a resounding defeat of the communists, the North Vietnamese were steadfast in their opposition and no referendums were held. Seeing that they could not communize Vietnam by means of a rigged referendum, the North Vietnamese commenced a campaign of infiltration of South Vietnam and organized a communist guerrilla group in the South, called the Viet Cong, which sought to overthrow the Saigon government. Strongly supported by China and the Soviet Union, communist infiltration and insurrection grew in South Vietnam. Former President Eisenhower and retired army commander MacArthur both advised Presidents Kennedy and Johnson that the only way to defeat the Viet Cong was to sever the Ho Chi Minh Trail, the network of jungle trails and roads through which the North was infiltrating massive quantities of troops and supplies through Laos into the South. The Kennedy and Johnson administrations ignored this advice. In 1972, President Nixon commenced a massive bombing campaign, conducted from Thailand, Guam and aircraft carriers, against North Vietnam, which would see over 1,000 air strikes per day. During this campaign, major industrial and military targets in the capital Hanoi were bombed, along with the port city, Haiphong. As a result of the bombing, North Vietnam agreed to participate in the Paris Peace Talks and in January 1973, President Nixon gave a speech to the nation in which he announced that the Paris Peace Accords would soon be signed by the United States, South Vietnam, North Vietnam and the Viet Cong. In the treaty, America had pledged to South Vietnam that it would replace military hardware lost by the South on a piece by piece basis: bullet for bullet, rifle for rifle, truck for truck and helicopter for helicopter. The day the treaty was signed was celebrated as Victory in Vietnam Day, for the advance of communism had finally been halted. But America did not keep its promise. In the November 1974 congressional elections, the American people gave a landslide victory to candidates who sought to defund the military and renege on the nation's promise to South Vietnam. In April 1975, President Ford entreated a joint session of Congress to keep America's pledge to the South. During the speech, senators and representatives walked out of the chamber and refused to rescind their decision. Because of America's refusal to resupply the South, the North proceeded to violate the accords and invaded the South, and soon captured villages, cities and provinces, until it overran the nation and renamed capital Saigon Ho Chi Minh City. The indifference of the American people to the communist victory was encapsulated in a statement made by Senator William Fulbright: "I am no more distressed than I would be about Arkansas losing a football game to Texas." The Vietnam War was fought for the same reasons as the Korean War: in order to prevent a domino effect from occurring whereby a communist victory in one country would eventuate in communist victories in neighboring countries and lead to a loss of freedom across the entire region. But the different outcomes in the two wars illustrated the extent of the red penetration of America in the intervening years. The Vietnam War commenced in earnest in 1965 and by this time, the political and ideological climate had moved markedly to the left, so that while the Korean War resulted in a stalemate, the Vietnam War resulted in the total defeat and humiliation of America. The new deep dyed red coloration of the masses and the academic, political and media establishment which represented them ensured that 58,000 American lives would be lost and over one trillion dollars would be spent in vain. The Vietnam War was condemned by the left as a strategic blunder. But the agreement by North Vietnam in 1973 to a settlement which recognized the independence of a noncommunist South Vietnam proved the efficacy of President Nixon's bombing campaign. The Vietnam War was condemned by the left as a humanitarian disaster. But the humanitarian disaster was caused by the communists, whose victory over the South consigned twenty million people in the nation to totalitarian enslavement and led to two million South Vietnamese fleeing the country by boat between 1975 and 1995. President Nixon fought the North Vietnamese alone without popular support. Rejected by the Johnson administration, his strategy of continuous, saturation bombing brought the North to the Paris Peace Talks while the American people were convulsing and paralyzing the nation with procommunist, antiwar agitation. While American support for South Vietnam was dissipating, Soviet and Chinese support for North Vietnam was increasing, and while America refused to provide the South with promised material aid, the Soviets and the Chinese provided maximum support to the North and allowed the North to violate the treaty it had signed and to achieve total control over the South in April 1975. While in 1953, America had taken a stand against Soviet and Chinese backed aggression in Korea, placed few restrictions on its military commanders, and allowed President Eisenhower to effect a roll back of the aggressor nation back past a Military Demarcation Line, America beginning in the 1960s refused to take a stand against Soviet and Chinese backed aggression in Vietnam, placed maximum restrictions on its military commanders, and by giving the antiwar Democratic Party a mandate to surrender to the North in the 1974 midterm congressional elections, convinced the North that America would not enforce the 1973 peace agreement. With the moral and political support of the American people, the forces of red insurgency, red imperialism, red colonialism, red instigation and red aggression were allowed to do in Vietnam what they had not been allowed to do in Korea: cross an internationally recognized border and cast the gloom of totalitarian tyranny over the inhabitants in the South. In 1973, South Vietnam was saved by President Nixon's bombing strategy. In 1975, South Vietnam was lost to the North by a political choice made by an American people who had long since abandoned the conservative anticommunism which had wielded influence in the 1950s. The communist victory in Vietnam set into motion a vortex of fear and horror which smashed the ramparts of civilization across the Indochinese peninsula in Southeast Asia. Gulags, refugee crises, political spectrums painted totalitarian red, Cambodian genocide in which millions of people, one fifth of a nation, were slaughtered in the name of social justice, the destruction of peaceful, decent, upstanding citizens in the name of Resistance Against America, chaos, panic, hysteria and alarm stalking South Vietnamese anticommunists scrambling to escape from the enemy. Such were the casualties of the loss of freedom across Asia, made possible by a nation 14,000 kilometers away which had lost its freedom decades before in the red implosion of the West.

A PROFILE IN COURAGE

On February 9, 1950, Senator Joseph McCarthy delivered a speech at Wheeling, West Virginia and detonated a political bomb. This was a bomb which exploded into every home, office and school in the nation and revealed to the American people the extent of the red penetration of their government and the rumblings of a red god of war whose victories reached from Indochina to China to Russia to the heart of Europe. This was a bomb the likes of which the nation had never before witnessed: a shocking report of a red conspiracy and its cover up which composed the final chapter of American civilization in which it placed before itself the task of self destruction. McCarthy's speech set into motion a campaign undertaken by the American political, academic and media establishment to smear him beyond recognition or repair and to discredit, once and for all time, the cause of anticommunism. McCarthy's grievous crime was to expose to those who had eyes to see, and ears to hear, and an intelligence to understand, and a conscience to condemn, the identities of individuals employed by the federal government who were traitors to their nation, who were loyal or sympathetic to the communist cause, and who were actively shaping and guiding American foreign policy to advance communist interests. In his subsequent investigations. McCarthy continued his transgressions against political correctness and incurred the ever increasing wrath of the majority of Americans and their establishment lackeys. He was attacked because he had blown the whistle on a decades long infiltration operation conducted by the reds and their associates, sympathizers, fifth columnists and fellow travellers. He was attacked because he had prompted investigations of Elizabeth Bentley's allegations. Bentley had been a courier for the Communist Party, serving spy cells in Washington and New York, and had revealed her activities to the FBI in 1945, but until McCarthy's investigations, they had not been the objects of official attention. He was attacked because he had prompted investigations of Whittaker Chambers's allegations. Chambers had informed the State Department in 1939 that the Roosevelt administration was penetrated with communists, among the foremost of whom was the senior State Department official Alger Hiss. McCarthy was attacked because he had prompted investigations of Samuel Klaus's allegations. Klaus was a State Department official who in 1946 wrote a memorandum detailing communist penetration of the department which reached up to the highest levels. He was attacked because he had exposed the activities of John Stewart Service, head of the communist front Institute of Pacific Relations, which advocated American support for Mao Zedong in the 1940s and the withdrawal of support for Chiang Kai Shek. The institute was described by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee as "a vehicle used by Communists to orientate American Far Eastern policy toward Communist objectives." Service was a senior State Department official and important courier to Philip Jaffe, a close associate of Soviet agents and communist party leaders throughout Europe. McCarthy was attacked because he had exposed communist influence in the army's Signal Corp facility at Fort Monmouth, New Jersey. He was attacked because his investigations had led to tighter security procedures against communists and led to dozens of communists leaving the government. He was attacked because he had exposed numerous acts of conspiracy, espionage and treason, including the theft of technical information from nuclear, aerospace, radar and rocket programs, on behalf of the Soviet Union in the administrations of Roosevelt and Truman. He was attacked because he had exposed the activities of Fred Fisher, a lawyer in Joseph Welch's law firm, who had been a member of the communist front organization, the National Lawyers Guild. He was attacked because he had exposed George Marshall as a communist apologist who described the Chinese communists as agrarian reformers, forward looking statesmen and dedicated defenders of peace and democracy, He was attacked because he had exposed State Department official Owen Lattimore as an agent of the communist conspiracy against America. A respected academic and deemed to be the nation's top expert on the Far East, Lattimore for decades had been a member of the Communist Party. He was a member of the Institute for Pacific Relations and when a major change in the party line was transmitted from Moscow to the American Communist Party, it was done so via Lattimore who was in constant contact with Soviet officials. Lattimore was identified by numerous witnesses under oath as a member of the Communist Party and as a conscious, articulate promoter of Soviet interests. McCarthy was attacked because he had exposed State Department officials Mary Jane Keeney, Julian Wadleigh, Gustavo Duran, Alger Hiss and Dean Achesan as major players in a conspiracy to consign China and Eastern Europe to communist enslavement. He was attacked because he had exposed hundreds of State Department officials high and low as unfit to hold their jobs due to loyalty or sympathy to the Communist Party or to communists ideas. He was attacked because he had exposed Dorothy Kenyon, Haldore Hanson, Esther Brunauer, Frederick Schuman, Lauchlin Currie, Theodore Geiger, Edward Posniak, Edward Rothschild, Irving Peress, Annie Lee Moss and Harlow Shapley as prosocialists, procommunists, political radicals, antiAmericans and members of red front organizations dedicated to the overthrow of Western ideals and institutions. He was attacked because he had publicly exposed 114 persons employed in the federal government who had collaborated with communists, aided and abetted communist espionage activities, and shown no remorse for their actions. He was attacked because he had exposed Philip Jessup as a member of numerous communist front organizations around the country and an influential member of the Institute of Pacific Relations. He was attacked because he had exposed America's retreat and surrender before the onrushing tides of a red conspiracy, a red immensity, a red curse, a red blight and a campaign of red expansionism throughout the world, aided and abetted by the curses and maledictions against freedom launched by a new class of radical Americans and their policymakers in the government. In 1943 the US Army's Signal Intelligence Service initiated Project Venona, whose task was to decrypt messages transmitted by Soviet intelligence agencies to their American operatives. The contents of the messages revealed the identities of communist agents and sympathizers working across the the nation and in senior governmental positions and corroborated McCarthy's accusations. In the 1990s, Soviet intelligence files, the intelligence files in the former Soviet satellites, and FBI intelligence files were all made public and opened for inspection. The records again corroborated McCarthy's accusations. Anticommunism was never a grassroots movement in America. It was conducted by mavericks without popular support who were determined to protect their country from an international movement which sought to confiscate private land and factories, nationalize and collectivize the body and soul of the individual, exterminate the class of entrepreneurs, executives, innovators and knowledge workers, and run the state and society as a single, monolithic, proletarian, totalitarian enterprise. Unorthodox, nonpartisan, independent minded, and unshakeably committed to following the facts and evidence wherever they may lead, McCarthy was one such maverick who was targeted for total destruction by a new radical majority and its spokesmen in the media, the schools and the chambers of government who one and all possessed a deep, inner affinity for the values, ideals and policies espoused by communism. Seeking to rid the government of communist security risks, McCarthy was the target of a smear campaign launched by the American people and their top governmental officials in both Democratic and Republican administrations. McCarthy's exposure of red influence and a red conspiracy operating in the federal government was corroborated not only by Soviet and American intelligence files but by the record of history itself. This is a record of an alliance with communism during World War II, and then after the war, betrayal in Eastern Europe, betrayal in China, betrayal in Korea, betrayal in Cuba and betrayal in Vietnam. The fall of communism in the late twentieth century saw the torch of global antiliberalism pass to Islam. The new Islamist movement played precisely the same role as communism and was supported in the West by precisely the same people who had supported communism: by leftists of all stripes and varieties who saw in the new movement a reinvigorated effort to defeated the hated liberal order. In the postcommunist world, Iran under the ayotollahs and Iraq under Hussein played the same roles which the communists and the fascists played during World War II. Just as the American people and their political establishment had decided that Hitler was worse than Stalin and supported the communists over the fascists during the war, so the people and their establishment would support Iran over Iraq, and in so doing produce the same calamitous consequences. American support for communism resulted in the victory of the Soviet Union and its international movement, conspiracy and web of satellite states after World War II. The American decision to invade and overthrow Hussein's Iraq, the counterpart of the wartime fascist powers, led to the analogous consequence of the hegemony of Iran across the Middle East and its growth as a superpower and leader of an international Islamist movement, conspiracy and web of satellite states, the first among which is Iraq itself. Just as McCarthy was censured and vilified for his relentless pursuit of the communist menace and recognition of its unequaled evil, so another maverick in the McCarthy mold, Donald Trump, has been censured and vilified for his relentless opposition to Iran and recognition that just as communism was worse than fascism, so Iran was worse than Hussein's Iraq, and in truth represents the red crescent successor to the hammer and sickle. The downfall and defeat of McCarthy was the most tragic and momentous illustration in the history of the republic of a precept long established in political science: that when a nation, a society, a state, a civilization or a culture is destroyed, it is not from enemies without, but from enemies within.

THE NATIONAL RED CAUCUS

As the rays of dawn broke across the twentieth century, a revolution commenced which would ignite a firestorm of violence and terror and a century later consume the institutions of the present day. This was a revolution of mass movements and mass politics and it installed the psychology of the man on the street into the ruling circles of the West and made Envy, Hatred, Frustration and Victimhood the riders of an inferno which would bring the story of mankind to a spectacular finish. Envy toward those who possess more than he, hatred toward those who have achieved more than he, frustration at his wasted, meaningless, paltry existence, and a sense of being continually harmed, injured, oppressed, exploited, tricked, duped, cheated and killed in his spirit and soul by those who possess superior talent, initiative, ability and intelligence to his, whom he has designated as subhumans, nonpersons, and sworn enemies of the people's state and the values of a just society: such are the emotions of the masses which have shaped and guided the political developments over the last one hundred years and led to the overthrow of free institutions and constitutional government. This decline and fall of the West into a morass and swampland of totalitarian dictatorship has nowhere been more tragic and sorrowful than in America, the historical citadel and stronghold of freedom and liberty and the greatest police guardian of civilized order in the history of mankind. Under the shadow and gloom of the masses, America in the twenty first century has betrayed its founding ideals, established a national religion of antiindividualism, and transformed itself into a regime promoting socialist ideologies of every stripe and variety. Spreading like a cancer into every home, office and school in the nation, the new American friends and allies of virulent antiAmericanism have set forth a program and manifesto for the destruction of a republic born in the matrix of the Enlightenment and dedicated to the proposition that the state is the servant and not the master of the people and exists solely to protect the life, liberty and property of the individual. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a communist, fascist and national socialist police state whose model and inspiration is China, Cuba and North Korea. They have proclaimed that the Soviet Union and its worldwide web of slave satellites should properly, by rights, have won the Cold War and enchained the voices of liberty throughout the world behind a global, people's Berlin Wall. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has systematically dismantled free institutions in the name of social justice and prepared the way for the establishment of a communist regime. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a water logged, democratic socialist marshland which openly advocates international proletarian revolution and the dissolution of liberal structures and institutions. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has dissolved its borders, repealed its immigration and customs enforcement, shut down its ministries of interior and departments of homeland security, and swung its gates wide open to the extremists, agitators, religionists of hate, and advocates of illegal, violent action who swarm and multiply in the moral sewers of the world. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has consigned the defenders of individual rights and opponents of gender, race and class politics to the distant corners of cultural irrelevance. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which recognizes a universal right to health care and has nursed the scum of the earth back to perfect health on the backs of those work and produce. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a taxpayer funded lair of mental and moral corruption presided over by the social justice warriors of the world. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which mesmerizes, hypnotizes and sends into a trance those with evil in their hearts and commands them to go out and kill as many entrepreneurs, innovators, inventors and industrialists as they can in the name of the marginalized, excludeds and the oppressed layers of human appearing filth in the world. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose lawmakers are antiEnlightenment agitators who have sworn eternal fealty to the red, black, brown, queer, transgender, feminist and proletarian voices promoting an agenda to establish pure socialism and tribalism upon the smoldering ruins of liberal, capitalist civilization. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a leftwing, extremist, antiAmerican, antiIsrael, antiWestern fever swamp which has rounded up those who express opinions and attitudes at variance with the people's red party line and placed them into concentration camps for the rest of their lives. They have proclaimed that the terror bombing against America on September 11, 2001 was justified as part of a people's gender-race-class-Islamist demolition and reconstruction project, a campaign undertaken by those oppressed and exploited by Western liberal capitalism and determined to restore the forces of barbarism to their rightful throne. They have proclaimed that no outrage is too great and no crime is too grievous if committed in the name of women, nonwhites and the poor and their program to make America spiritually emaciated, morally anemic and stricken by a viral disease and swamp fever called community organizing and campus activism. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose ruling circles are composed of plotters, conspirators and campaigners marching under the banners of equity and inclusion and dedicated to rolling back centuries of liberal democratic progress and discrediting the Enlightenment wisdom of reason and individualism. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a Rousseauist, Marxist swampland which denies the reality of rational goodness, individual liberties and duties to oneself and champions in their place the mystical collectivist ideologies of communism, social engineering, the maximization of state power and the duty to chain oneself to the communal will. They have proclaimed that individuals and their rights are phantom creations of bourgeois minds and what exists are gender, race and class tribes and the supernatural will of the people. They have proclaimed that the pursuit of self interest is the greatest evil known to man because the self interested individual is devoid of all meaning and reality when placed beside the noble, elevated, exalted goodness and perfection of the primitive slave state and its dutiful, self sacrificing savages. They have proclaimed that the history of mankind is the history of ceaseless progression toward a communist state, a history which advances by means of a special, mystical, dialectical, superlogic of pure contradiction which proves that A is non A, a thesis is its antithesis, a position is its negation, opposites are synthesized, nothing is anything, and reality is total unintelligibility. They have proclaimed that the only way to increase our enlightenment about man is to acknowledge the illusory character of mind and consciousness and acknowledge that matter is the sole reality, that matter is God, that man is a mindless animal, that the only form of labor is brute, muscular labor, and that the culmination of history will bring the class of animal laborers, called the proletariat, to absolute power and see the expropriation and extermination of the people of the mind. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one under the lordship of a master class of proletarians, a class of have nots, incompetents, and worthless, contemptible vermin, who will oppress and exploit the inventors, innovators, titans of industry and producers of wealth, seize control over their offices and factories, distribute their wealth into every cesspool and container of waste on the face of the earth, and establish a new world order distinguished by its total lack of freedom and liberty. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one ruled by the writers and the politicians of the red persuasion. It is a primitive, backward, tribalist society which has stamped out the bourgeois voices of constitutional freedom and enacted a platform of radical red insanity. This is a platform of governmental intrusion into every aspect of the economy, government health care subsidies for the filth and grease flowing through the sewers, the rejection of biological definitions of gender in favor of a religion of transgenderism and gender constructionism, the systematic dismantling of liberal traditions and institutions, and a philosophy of violence burning through space and racing through people's feverish minds. This is a platform whose fearsome path has run from Marxism and Gramsciism, traced a trajectory of hatred and rage across the decades, and crash landed into present day America and transformed the nation into a cockpit of bloody violence and institutionalized terror justified in the name of women, nonwhites, Islamists, indigenous peoples and the poor. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is a school for radicals and institute for social research which has declared war against reason, logic, language, objective definitions, common sense, and advanced liberal capitalist societies in the name of Marxism, critical theory, rejectionist theory, negationist theory, Heideggerian deconstructionism, Nietzschean postmodernism and social justice. They have proclaimed that free societies are paragons of evil and injustice because they place power into the hands of those who do not deserve it, those who exhibit enterprise, initiative and bountiful mental and spiritual resources, and keeps power out of the hands of those who do deserve it, those who are indolent, unskilled, unemployable and averse to honest labor, and these societies must be criticized, dismantled, deconstructed, taken to pieces, smashed to bits, and scattered to the four corners of the earth. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has nationalized, collectivized and leveled down those who possess superior talent, ability and intelligence and reconstructed human affairs along the lines of equality, egalitarianism, brotherhood and brute force. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in the grip of the state which can do anything it wants, enforce any fiat, and commit any crime and transgression so long as it can justify it on the grounds of the public interest and the rights of the marginalized and the excluded. Revered by the radical left circles in control of America today, the names of Marcuse, Adorno, Horkheimer and Fromm are the emblems of a cultural pathology which has stricken the institutions of liberal democracy and sent them tumbling into the abyss. This is the pathology of red fever and legalized mobocracy and it has brought an end to the civilized, righteous, virtuous, disciplined order which for decades had governed America's homes, families, and practices of child rearing. The new American radicals have proclaimed that those who work and live by the use of their minds, the class of capitalists and the bourgeois, are the enemies of the working class and must be destroyed by them in order for true human emancipation to be achieved. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one based upon class structures, class distinctions, class stratifications, class explosions and class war which denies equal rights to intellectual laborers and knowledge workers and exalts unskilled proletarians as a new Aryan master race with the right to wipe out the people of the mind. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one is founded upon class envy, race hatred, sectarian anger, social strife and multiplying victim groups, and employs hatred, rage, resentment and maladjustment as crowbars to smash liberal institutions and traditional societal structures, and has burned down the houses of reason, enlightenment, human universality and essentialism with gasoline cans marked diversity and multiculturalism. They have proclaimed that women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders and the poor comprise a victim class whose ruthless oppressors are successful, white, heterosexual, gender adjusted males and these must be singled out, segregated and sent to their doom by the commissars of a new red totalitarian power. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one under the control of the Stalins and Hitlers of the world and their armies of partisanship and intolerance which have shut down the opponents of the people's party line and enforced ideological lockstep and obedience. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one ruled by a red totalitarian Big Brother who has redefined liberty as slavery, individual rights as weapons of injustice, freedom from censorship as a pathway to repression, and established dialectical antilogic and the unity of contradictions as the official religion of the people. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is a boycott, disinvestment and sanctions movement which has doxed, disinvited, hounded, persecuted, isolated , vilified and expelled the opponents of radicalism, the voices of conservatism, the supporters of empiricism, and the guardians of truth and objectivity against the champions of gender, race and class militancy. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a people's church which worships at the altars of the red Jesus and the red Saint Paul who preach from catechisms marked Rules for Radicals and Community Organizing. Marxist subversion from the inside. Islamist subversion from the outside. Such are the twin horrors which afflict America in the twenty first century in consequence of the ascendancy of the radical masses. Proclaiming that social ends justify the use of brute force and that liberal civilization is the sworn enemy of the people's liberation and must be overthrown by an uprising of those who are bitter, disgruntled and disenchanting with the world, the armies the left have joined forces with those who spread terror in the name of the Faithful and destroyed everything which is decent, noble, honest and respectable in America. The politics of personal destruction. Campuses taken over by black clad hoodlums. Constitutional rights condemned as evil and illegitimate. Entrepreneurs scorned, ridiculed, granted no legitimacy and deprived of all dignity. Homes, schools, offices and factories deluged with deception, disinformation, fake news and false information. Talented, successful, educated, white, European ancestry males harassed and persecuted without pity or compassion of any kind. Cities crawling with parentless children and stalked by homeless parents. The use of mind altering drugs given the green light of social and moral respectability. Industrial civilization condemned as a source of environmental doom and degradation. The rejection of liberal universality and the unity of man and the pulverization of society into warring factions of women, nonwhites, transgenders, homosexuals and the poor. The condemnation of global capitalism as a system of global poverty, injustice and exploitation and imperialism. The traditional power, position, image and example of America as first among free nations and their guardian and protector denigrated and dismissed as a weapon of Western imperialism and a capitalist reign of terror. The fundamental building blocks of civilized society, the belief in the primacy of reason and recognition of the rights, freedoms, dignity and worth of the individual, shattered by the hammers of social rights and the swastikas of gender, race, blood and soil. Abortion on demand subsidized by those who use contraception. AIDS research subsidized by those who practice safe sex. The supporters of Donald Trump and what he represents, the restoration of liberty, the promotion of virtue, the protection of the rule of law, and the exaltation of the greatness of a constitutionally bound republic, subjected to public opprobrium and detestation, chased out of every home, school and office in the nation, and drawn and quartered in the public square. A policy of open immigration and unsecured borders to let in the human appearing refuse and landfill of the world. Such are the steps of a fearsome forward march across America, the march of red political power and cultural degeneration, which has marked out the final decades of the nation. In the early decades of the twentieth century, a virus struck America and began multiplying in its homes, schools, offices and institutions. Too evil to be seen at first glance by civilized people, this was the virus of mass politics and its associated tribalist ideologies and it soon transformed the nation's major universities into incubation centers for radicals and revolutionaries determined to make the nation's shores a jungle of gender, race and class agitation bounded by tidal waves of neoMarxists, neoHitlerites, Heideggerians, Alinskyites, critical theorists, new leftists who had seized control over the world. Murrow, Spock, Dewey, Adorno, Horkheimer and Marcuse: among the chief infective agents who brought the red virus of permissiveness, expressionism, activism, fascism, national socialism and instant gratification to America and hoisted the flag of a new Third Reich over its dead, dying, smoldering institutions.

Circulating in Ivy League universities throughout the nation, from Princeton to Columbia to Brandeis to the University of Chicago, the cancer of leftist ideas has advanced and expanded over the past one hundred years and remade every enclosure with four walls into a chapter, branch and cell of the Frankfurt School of totalitarian regimentation and social, cultural, academic and media subversion. In Satan's chambers is a blueprint which has been read and studied by every radical in America. Transcribed by Satan's scribes under the rubrics of Capital and the Communist Manifesto, it is a blueprint for sabotage, subversion and revolution reaching around the world. It is a revolution to empower the disciples of Marx and the new left. It is a revolution to sweep away America's system of checks, balances and separation of powers for the protection of individual rights and liberties. It is a revolution to repeal the charters of human rights enacted by the nation's Founding Fathers. It is a revolution to establish a collectivist vision of society, a socialist people's republic, and a dystopia of suffering, injustice, totalitarianism and world destruction in the name of social progress, Occupy Wall Street and gender, race and class equity. They feed on the dead body of reason and civilization. They are the rabid dogs of leftist political action and discourse whose carrion are disheartened, dispirited, law abiding citizens. They are jackal packs promoting terror attacks under the names of Antifa, Al Qaeda and the Islamic State. They are the voices of moral and economic destruction and the overthrow of technological progress, industrial society and the liberal traditions of human rights in the name of a Green New Deal, environmental soundness and a multitrillion dollar welfare state. Their names are Alexandra Ocasio-Cortez, Ilhan Omar, Rashida Tlaib Ayanna Pressley, Bernie Sanders, Elizabeth Warren, the names of their friends, allies and fellow travellers, and the names of every man, woman and child in America. They have captured America's politics, soul and culture; they are the faces of a national contagion of tyranny and dictatorship; and the zealots and gossellers of an American apocalypse.

THE ANTIINDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION

The rejection of technology is one of the primary symptoms of the sickness of a culture. The fall of Rome saw the rejection of the bridges, roads, aqueducts and sewers which had been the pride of the empire and saw their continuance in the East, in the new culture of Byzantium. This rejection of technology due to a general cultural senility has been one factor in the rejection of technology in the West beginning in the mid twentieth century. It has been joined by another factor, however, unique and endemic to the West, which has aggravated and accelerated the process of decline: the deep seated hostility to reason and progress which characterizes the Faustian movement of romanticism. For the past half century, civilized people have observed with dismay, anxiety, consternation and horror the rise of a movement dedicated to the destruction of civilization and the return of mankind to a primitive subsistence existence. This is the environmentalist movement and it is driven by a twin propeller engine marked Universal Cultural Disintegration and a Faustian Feast of Unreason. Seeking to turn back the achievements of centuries which have been the crown and glory of the modern age, the agents of the decline and fall of the West have issued a program and manifesto for a revolution against the mind without equal in the history of mankind, without equal because it has been composed in part by the hand of Faust, who has made the pages burn with the white hot flames of romanticist nihilism and negation. The present day avatars of cultural collapse have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has resacralized nature, reconnected with the mystical origins of life and being, and turned back the clock to the year before zero. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which promotes a religion and philosophy of green anarchism, earth liberation, and direct action to sabotage offices and factories of modern industry. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has mounted an earth first ecodefense against the encroachments of the human race. They have proclaimed that due to the development of modern human society, individuals have lost contact with the earth and its primordial roots and they must in consequence sweep away society and merge with the untamed, uncultivated, undomesticated, inhospitable horror which is nature. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is an environmental life force which has launched a campaign of armed action against all forms of modern industry and agriculture. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a global incendiary device which seeks to consume the last five centuries in a raging firestorm from which there is no escape. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which conducts nonstop guerrilla warfare against factories and industries in defense of nonhuman life and in the name of earth liberation. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has eliminated mining activities, energy companies, road construction, and urban and suburban development in order to preserve the sanctity of the spiritual, supernatural planet. They have proclaimed that the supreme embodiment of human perfection is the ecowarrior who commits acts of sabotage, vandalism, terror and wanton destruction of human life. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a permanent camp for climate action and a global terror center whose red armies have converged upon and shut down every power station, transportation line and industrial installation on the planet and reclaimed the earth for the air, the trees, the water and the animals. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a religious movement which sees human activity as a source of environmental degradation of the sacred earth and has launched a campaign of assault against every man, woman and child on the planet. They have proclaimed that civilization is a system of oppression against nature and must be swept away by a whirlwind of environmentalist campaigning whose goal is one hundred percent human extinction. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has organized protest marches in cities throughout the world whose aim is to occupy and shut down every center of scientific, technological and industrial power. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose government has declared a climate and ecological emergency and taken immediate action against the greenhouse gas polluters of the planet: every form of advanced technology and human industry. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a violent, activist, green movement whose aim is to reduce carbon emissions and human civilization to zero and grind mankind into the dust of the forests and jungles. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a global citizens' assembly which has repealed by unanimous consent the Industrial Revolution in the name of achieving a carbon dioxide free planet. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one has outlawed airplanes, automobiles, industrial factories and meat and dairy products in diets in order to cleanse the earth of the world poisoner of all peoples: greenhouse gases. They have proclaimed that the future of the planet depends upon the abolition of industrialism, the destruction of civilized society, and the concentration of all power into the hands of rampaging mobs from the cliffs, hillsides and underground chambers of prehistory. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has halted automobile traffic, blocked bridges, smashed windows, shut down capital cities and fallen under the iron grip of environmentalist fanatics. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has unleashed militant environmentalists and ecoterrorists

to torch people's homes, conduct arson attacks against office buildings and inflict damage totaling hundreds of millions of dollars, and transform commercial and industrial developments into prehuman, preliterate, primordial dustbowls and depressions in which the only plants which flourish are the weeds of hopelessness and despair. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which sanctions the use of criminal violence against innocent people and private property in the name of environmental politics and the people's crusade against the oppressive structures of industry and technology. They have proclaimed that the partisans of the plants, the animals, the rocks and the the water are brothers in spirit and brothers in arms who have formed a mighty combatant front arrayed against the false and pernicious idols of the Enlightenment: reason, science, and technical and industrial development. They have proclaimed that for the sake of continuance of life on earth, the West must be dismantled, deindustrialized, reduced to a rural wasteland, and deprived of its ability to produce anything. They have proclaimed that the human species, by its achievements of logical inquiry, scientific research and technical advancement, has perpetrated a deadly war against nature, and those higher, enlightened souls who have transcended the veil of reason and the senses and been beatified by an affective, spiritual, religious connection to nature have a right to defend themselves by weakening the West beyond recognition, removing it from a map of the world, conducting round the clock acts of crime and violence against the people and industries which support the infrastructures of modernity, and unleashing a holocaust against everything virtuous, flourishing, successful and well doing in the world. They have proclaimed that the supreme embodiments of justice and morality are those who carry out terror attacks in major cities and business centers in the name of the superior rights of nature, and recruit and organize their families, friends, colleagues, associates and neighbors to do the same. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a terrorist family whose mothers, fathers, brothers and sisters have targeted for destruction every structure of theoretical, applied and industrial science and spray painted Murder Helter Skelter across the walls of skyscrapers and laboratories. In the nineteenth century in Nottingham, England, an organization called the Luddites arose which destroyed textile factory machinery as a form of protest against civilization. The term Luddite came to refer to anyone who is opposed to industrialization, automation, digitalization or any form of new technology. In the twenty first century, a fierce, intense, destructive blaze has broken out across the West. Ignited by bombs detonated by the pure Faustian romanticist school of the Luddites, a fatigued, exhausted, dying and decaying West has been unable to confront and combat this Faustian movement of nihilism, and has made its flames roar with ever increasing intensity. They have leaped into the stratosphere and seared a message across the heavens: Man Made Global Warming, Zero Carbon Emissions, One Hundred Percent Carbon Tax and the Greenhouse Gas Incineration Of The Planet. This is the message, the plan, the program, the strategy and the tactic of a project called Fear and it has achieved total victory in the closing decades of the West.

THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE WEST

One thousand years ago, on the plains of Northern, Germanic Europe, a culture was born which would confer untold blessings and inflict unimaginable horror upon the world. At this momentous time, Dr Faustus, sorcerer, necromancer, conjurer of the dead and foreteller of the future, looked at himself in the mirror and saw a saint and a devil, a holy man crowned by a halo of gleaming, heavenly, eternal light, and a grim, hooded, skeletal creature of pure, frozen death, staring back. This was the portent of a miracle and a tragedy which would soon arise in Europe and spread around the world. This was a portrait in allegorical form of the new Faustian culture of the West. As the centuries rolled by, the West would reach heights of glory and descend into depths of infamy undreamed of in all previous cultures, and this two fold development would uplift the lives of millions of people and sentence millions of people to enslavement and death. Unique in the history of mankind, Western culture is a fiery, spirited, romanticist, actionist, will based culture, a locomotive of driving force and energy whose prime symbol is the figure of Faust, and whose founding peoples were the Germans. The magnificence of the Faustian outlook was revealed in a series of world unique developments: the process of systematic scientific experimentation, analysis and collection of data; the creation of mathematical physics with its equations, algorithms, algebras of computing and its problem solving procedures; the application of mathematical physics to the manipulation and mastery of nature through the advancement of the mechanical arts and the promotion of high technology; exponential progress achieved in the fields of biology and medicine; and the exploration of the distant reaches of the inner earth, the geographical poles, the mountainous peaks, the dark, surging tides and the outer, immeasurable cosmos.

The magnificence of the West was epitomized in the Age of Enlightenment. Spanning the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, this was an age which rejected Christianity and the rule of faith which had governed the Dark Ages and exalted the power of reason and science to grasp the nature of reality. Among its leading figures was Descartes, and therein lay the seeds of its downfall. Proclaiming that man is a detached, supernatural, mental substance who acquires all knowledge in an apriori manner and can be certain only about the existence of his own consciousness, Descartes planted the rule of the witch doctor upon the shores of the Enlightenment and led to its subversion and destruction. Continuing this Cartesian movement, Kant proclaimed that the world of physical objects is a universal, collective delusion and the world of things in themselves, or things as they are not perceived and known by man, is noumenal, nonphysical and nonlocatable in character. These assertions that perception is a purely projective process which creates and does not perceive its objects and terminates in nothing beyond itself ran contrary to Classical, Enlightenment, common sense outlook and represented the resurgence of Faustian subjectivism and a comeback of the true character of the West. Enlightenment science alone came nearest to Classical thinking and all other manifestations of the West were explicitly Faustian. Soliloquies; monologues; speaking one's thoughts aloud; raging, outsized personalities; soaring, vaulting, expansive, massless architecture; the indeterminate music of many voices, many sounds, polyphony, counterpoint; mannerist, extravagant, ornate, baroque styles; aerial perspectives; and the world of Shakespeare, Vivaldi, Bach, Handel, Caravaggio and Rubens: such one and all were the unique creations of the Faustian spirit and signified the character of a culture located a universe apart from the light defined world of the Greeks and Romans.

The full wickedness of the Faustian outlook is revealed in the field of philosophy. It is revealed in ontologies which assert that the essence of mind is mind, space, spirit, will, power, cultural posits, language games, forms of life, mystical genders, races and classes, the falling, tumbling and crashing somersaults of dialectical logic which purport to prove that A is both A and non A and neither A nor non A, and an ultimate noumenal reality or thing in itself which is reality as it is not perceived and known by man. It is revealed in theories of knowledge which assert that the only thing we can be certain about is the existence of our own consciousness, and before this prior certainty of consciousness, the existence of the physical world has vanished into the shadows of absolute dubitability. It is revealed in theories of knowledge which assert that the existence of physical objects is not directly perceivable but only inferable by means of our ideas and representations. It is revealed in the assertion that we do not perceive physical objects because they do not exist, that consciousness is a condition of physical existence and not the other way around, and that the sole objects of perception are just our own sensations, images, impressions, signs, sense data and streams of consciousness. It is revealed in the assertion that the laws of logic are arbitrary conventions which could be other and different, that logical truths are not factual truths, and the law that A is A or that a thing is as it is has no applicability whatever to reality. It is revealed in the assertion that truth is pragmatic, instrumentalist and internally coherent in character, and is anything and everything except the agreement or correspondence of thought with reality. It is revealed in the assertion that nature, to be commanded, need not be obeyed, because it is completely subject to human will. It is revealed in the assertion that man is a simple, self thinking atom or monad which manufactures the illusion of physical objects. It is revealed in the assertion that reality is a single, divine, infinite, monistic substance which is the mathematical mind of God. It is revealed in the assertion that to be is to be perceived and that so-called physical objects are the artifacts of human minds and divine spirits. It is revealed in the assertion that reality consists in endless constructions and reconstructions by the mind. It is revealed in the assertion that reality consists in arbitrary interpretations, meaningless deconstructions, multiplying local narratives, subjective hermeneutical analyses, and the introspections undertaken by pure phenomenological subjects. It is revealed in the assertion that we acquire knowledge by a process of pure deduction from the contents of consciousness independently of all experience and that the process of knowledge is a process of pure witchdoctory which has nothing whatever to do with abstraction from sense data. It is revealed in the assertion that philosophy consists in the analysis of propositions and has no relation to the outside world. It is revealed in the assertion that scientific theories are apriori constructions which are underdetermined and undetermined by the facts of reality; that they are products of guesses and conjectures; that they are developments of basic concepts and experimental practices which are products of culturally imposed outlooks; that they are based upon subjective experience and not the accumulation of data; that they are created and replaced as a result of arbitrary paradigm shifts and not new discoveries of facts; that they are mystical incantations and ancient numerological constructs dressed up in mathematical form which have conferred upon man the magical power to predict and control the course of time and existence; that they are established by majority vote and express the consensus of scientific experts un beholden to experimental data; that they are intersubjective in character and decided on the basis of community dialogue and negotiation without reference to any objects in reality; that science is defined as anything which scientists do and decide on the basis of their collective whims and fancies; that different cultures possess radically different conceptual frameworks and terminologies and in consequence one culture's science is not understandable by or commensurable to any other culture. It is revealed in the assertion that mathematical theories are pure artistic creations and that mathematicians are painters and poets who discover nothing in reality. It is revealed in the assertion that numbers number nothing, and shapes are figures of nothing, and sets are sets of nothing, and reality is infinite, transfinite, negative, zero, dimensionless, irrational, null and void in character. It is revealed in the assertion that mathematical systems are incomplete, unproven and internally contradictory and that theorems cannot be proven on the basis of any axioms. It is revealed in the assertion that algebra consists in a series of arbitrary operations performed upon meaningless symbols and that geometrical figures are nonEuclidean, nonbodily, nonconceivable and nonimaginable in character. It is revealed in the assertion that moral values are purely subjective and represent the decrees of the state, society, classes, races, tribes, parties, or the feelings, passions, intuitions, tastes, proclivities, propensities, whims, fancies, and will to power and mastery of individuals. It is revealed in the assertion that the moral law is a special voice emanating from within which must be obeyed come what may and though all manner of evil and injustice be unleashed upon the world. It is revealed in the assertion that morality consists in a series of decisions which are carried out ruthlessly, relentlessly, categorically, taking full responsibility for and pride in the bloodshed they may bring about and joyously exulting in a life of pure, untrammelled, criminally motivated decisionism. It is revealed in the assertion that true morality is that which rejects the counsels of anger management, impulse control and the restraints against violence and is a primal scream and release of aggression which sweeps into every home and office in the land and deafens and shatters people with its fury and intensity. It is revealed in the assertion that there is no such thing as personal morality and there is only interpersonal morality and the individual has the right to live in any manner he chooses and to live in the manner of a degenerate, vitiated creature without mental or moral qualities of any kind, with the sole proviso that he does not inflict harm upon any others, and the purpose of the state is to protect the life, liberty and property of such nonaggressive, human appearing animals. It is revealed in the assertion that the supreme principle of morality is that might makes right; and is the law of the jungle; and is the principle that it is the superior prerogative of the strong to wipe out the weak. It is revealed in the assertion that moral values are relative to society and society has the right to dispose of the individual in any manner it sees fit, and to offer up the individual upon sacrificial altars marked Social Justice and Social Responsibility. It is revealed in the assertion that all morality is tribal morality and the individual is defined solely in terms of his gender, race, class and sexual orientation. It is revealed in the assertion that men constitute a class of bestial, predatory subhumans who pose a mortal threat to women everywhere. They must be hounded, pursued, persecuted and destroyed by means of false allegations of sexual assault, made singly or en masse, in one complaint or in a witchhunt of complaints, without physical evidence or eyewitness corroboration of any kind. It is revealed in the assertion that gender has nothing whatever to do with genes, chromosomes or basic biological determinants and can be changed by an act of will or by surgical and chemical procedures. It is revealed in the assertion that white people are the imperialist, colonialist oppressors of nonwhites and must be marginalized, discriminated against, segregated from nonwhites, and deprived of all their freedom, liberty and opportunities. It is revealed in the assertion that individuals who start their own businesses and become wealthy and successful did not create their wealth but stole it from society and must be expropriated, nationalized, drawn and quartered on the streets, marched up to the people's gallows, and hanged for all eternity. It is revealed in the assertion that health care is a universal welfare entitlement and the most worthless and contemptible human appearing filth have a right to receive medical attention subsidized by the achievers and producers of society. It is revealed in the assertion that advanced human civilization has been a blight and scourge upon the planet; that the Industrial Revolution marked the onset of a global environmental catastrophe without precedent in the history of the planet; that the technical and industrial progress achieved over the past four hundred years have resulted in the release of billions of tons of greenhouse gases into the atmosphere which will burn up the planet in ten years; that this imminent greenhouse gas doom can only be averted by a policy of zero carbon emissions and the commencement of an antiindustrial revolution which will turn back the clock of history to the age without automobiles, airplanes, rocket ships, factories, offices or mechanization of any kind, and to the nameless eons when the earth belonged to the air, trees, plants, animals and rapacious, primordial savages encamped upon the plains and jungles. It is revealed in the assertion that there is no objective standard of beauty and art is the free play of purely formal elements, a swirling congeries of sensations without content or reference of any kind. It is revealed in the assertion that art consists in a constantly changing movement of lines, colors, planes, notes, sounds, words and marks without organizing principles of any kind and has nothing whatever to do with the creation of pictures, portraits, melodies, plots or stories which refresh, delight, enchant and captivate the soul. It is revealed in the assertion that in architecture function does not follow form but is preempted by form and the highest type of building is a pure ideological statement which projects the primacy of space over mass, consciousness over existence, and under the banners of the Gothic, modernist and postmodernist styles rejects the value of artistic soundness and sanity. Such are the pathologies which have afflicted Western philosophy and cast a shadow of death and destruction over the culture. This negative, irrational, subjectivist aspect of Faustianism has ensured that in the thousand years of Western cultural development, the human mind would eventually be subverted, shut down and enclosed in total darkness and the lives of millions of people would be extinguished by a reign of disorder without equal in the history of mankind. This fierce, intense, Faustian firestorm has by constant strafing from thrill killings, serial murders, highway shootings, school rampages, terror bombings and vengeance weapons in the hands of ideologues embodying hatred and fanaticism reduced the grand, imposing achievements of the West to dead, extinct, smouldering ruins. Bearing Satan's fearsome, imperial scepter and the gruesome scimitar of the Grim Reaper, this reign has lowered the curtain on civilization and ensured that the twenty first century will be the final age of man. There is not a culture in the history of mankind which has not seen decline and fall into the abyss. But no decline and fall has been as spectacular, as momentous and as lethal as the decline and fall of the West.

Frightening, spine chilling and too horrible to contemplate, the leitmotif of the Faustian West is disorder. This is disorder in the realm of truth in the assertion that what is true for me or my tribe is not true for you or your tribe. Disorder in the realm of logic in the assertion that the law of noncontradiction is true only by language and convention and not by the nature of things themselves. Disorder in the realm of physics in the assertion that particles move by sheer chance, obey only the law of uncertainty, and are guided by nothing more than percentages of probability. Disorder in the realm of mathematics in the assertion that mathematical systems are antisystems in which theorems are not deducible from axioms, formulas come from the outside and consistency is not provable. Disorder in the realm of morality in the assertion that man is an irrational animal whose perfection resides in a life of arbitrary, capricious willing, deciding, commanding and acting. Disorder in the realm of politics in the assertion that the purpose of the state is to promote private license, mob rule, collective enslavement, universal sacrifice, and dictatorship in the hands of women, nonwhites, transgenders, homosexuals, indigenous peoples and the poor. Disorder in the realm of esthetics in the assertion that beauty exists in the eye of the beholder, and the arts consists in random combinations of formal elements and are exemplified in the spectacle of stories without plots, plays without action, motion pictures without progressions of events or interrelated sequences, music without melody or harmony, painting which paints nothing, sculpture which sculpts nothing, and singing which screeches.

There is an iron law of causality which says that conclusions follow from premises, theorems are derived from axioms, actions produce consequences, thought guides behavior, philosophies determine the character of cultures, and ideas rule the course of man's history. From the gloomy, twilight forests of Northern Europe, a diabolical adventurer named Faust brought forth a midnight philosophy of will power and created whirlwinds of irrationalism and columns of bestial, tumultuous blasts which have shattered the foundations of civilization and swept into power a new Dark Ages.

Since the dawn of the twentieth century, the world has witnessed an epidemic of mass murder without precedent in the history of mankind. It is an axiom of common sense that people are not machines but create ideas and concepts and reason on the basis of experience, and that the beliefs people have held have guided cultures and directed the course of human development. The most grievous of all crimes, mass murder is caused by the severest of all sicknesses of the soul: by a state of total moral indiscipline and breakdown. Every culture in its stage of decline and fall has experienced outbreaks of violent crime. But the virulence and intensity of the violent crime which has stricken the West has dwarfed outbreaks in all previous cultures and formed a relentlessly moving spillway and river plain of blood which has murdered the soul if not the person of every man, woman and child on earth. This acute pathology afflicting the West is the result of the unique premises upon which the culture was founded. Contrary to popular belief, Western culture did not arise silently and serenely on the sundrenched islands and promontories of ancient Greece, but thundered into existence in the dark, gloomy, midnight forests of ancient Germany. Contrary to popular belief, there is no Western historical scheme of development progressing through ancient, medieval and modern times. On the continent of Europe, over the past two thousand years, there have in fact been two cultures which have emerged, one in the South and one in the North. The Classical culture in the South was symbolized by the god Apollo, figure of light, clarity, wisdom and knowledge, and the stasis of a soul which exalts a world of rational excellence, healing and perfection. Emerging upon the stage of history around 1000 AD, Western culture in the North is symbolized by the figure of Faust, German sorcerer, alchemist, adventurer and scholar of the magical and mystical arts who renounced every value revered by Apollo and sacrificed his own soul in the blazing infernos of the Devil, and received in exchange the imperial robes of infinite power, will, experience, expansion, and vigorous, transforming activity. On the pages of a thesaurus, under the entry Romanticism, every synonym which appears describes the character and culture of the West. Liberty, equality, fraternity, socialism, capitalism, communism, nationalism, ethnicism, environmentalism, social justice, inclusion, diversity, affirmative action, formalism, expressionism, actionism, decisionism, categorical imperatives, the politics of gender, race and class, the release of strains, tensions and pressures, and the gratification of instincts and impulses. Such are the multifarious banners of romanticism in the name of which the citizens and soldiers of the West have activated the guns and bombs of mass murder. There has not been a culture in the history of mankind which has sanctified the commission of mass murder under so many different guises and pretexts as the West has. Under a black sun of a thousand different social, political, economic, religious and personal ideologies, the West has granted to those with murder in their hearts a license to spread terror and fear. The ubiquity of mass murder in the present day is a systemic Western phenomenon. It stems from the moral relativism lying at the heart of Faust's philosophy. Rejecting the existence of moral absolutes, rejecting all moralties which are not dependent upon some power or will, human or divine, Faust has unchained monsters who derive maximum pleasure from mass killing and allowed them the freedom of action which they would not have enjoyed in any other culture. Rampaging across the world, they have composed the concluding chapter of the decline and fall of the West.

The time is 1000 AD. The place is Northern Europe. The scene is a moonlit night arched over by drifting, portentous clouds. High up in the German mountains, a castle seethes with evil and violence. In the center of the castle is a crypt watched over by baying wolves and screeching bats. The crypt opens and a figure steps out. This is a figure made out of pure darkness, a figure which cannot be viewed in a mirror and which reflects no natural light. Its eyes gleam with the churning currents of will philosophies of every stripe and variety and shine with ruthless, predatory greed. Shaman, satanist and conjurer of the dark electricity of the irrational, the insane and the unsound, a figure whose legend and exploits have captivated the imagination of the West as nothing else has, Faust is the prime mover of a culture whose appearance at his command in the ancient evening lands of Germany was the most ominous and momentous event in the history of human cultural development. As the centuries resounded down the corridors of time, and the West broke through the dawn of the twentieth century, the Faustian philosophy of will power reached a fever pitch and sent the mental temperature of every region on earth exploding into the stratosphere and vaporizing every institution cherished by civilized people. Dueling with heavy sabers marked Kantianism, Marxism, Existentialism and Postmodernist Nietzscheanism, the Faustians of the past one hundred years have cut down the voices of reason in cold blood and ushered in an age of cruelty and disorder. They have proclaimed that the essence of morality consists in expressing oneself by every means at one's disposal and unleashing one's rages, resentments and primal screams against every home and school in society. They have proclaimed that the essence of morality consists in obeying the special feelings, voices, intuitions and categorical imperatives of the psychotic residing within us and breathing death and destruction across the face of the waters and into the homes of decent, law abiding citizens. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which conducts relentless war in the name of diversity and inclusion, the marginalized and the oppressed, and the rights of women, nonwhites and the poor, and has targeted the class of successful, white, heterosexual, nontransgender men for physical elimination. They have proclaimed that human civilization and its world of industrial fairs, exhibitions, laboratories, research centers and technological revolutions is a source of urban smog, greenhouse gas emissions and noxious invasions of plants and animals, which are one and all blackening, beleaguering, suffocating, asphyxiating and burning up the planet. The clock of history must be sent racing backward past the eons before time began and all human life must be extinguished. They have proclaimed that the highest form of identity is tribal identity, the highest form of politics is tribal politics, and supreme moral and political enlightenment are achieved by the recognition that the sole meaningful form of human existence is that which is in the tribe and for the tribe and is never outside the tribe or against the tribe and that tribes have the right to kill each other in the name of gender, race and class. They have proclaimed that the individual, autonomous self is a paltry and purposeless existence and must be transcended by a commitment to something bigger, better, greater and more ennobling. This is the welfare of the state and society and under its banners the voices of freedom must be murdered by the millions wherever they are found. They have proclaimed that the belief that man is a free born agent is a white, male, bourgeois myth and must be swept aside by the recognition that moral fulfillment can only be achieved by a commitment to community organizing, activism and rabble rousing which will ignite the vitriol and malice of hatred and resentment and spill fire upon the creators of wealth and value. It is impossible to justify mass murder in the name of the Classical morality of rational flourishing. Classical morality sanctions mass killing but not the mass killing of innocent people. It sanctions the mass killing of those who promote Faustian ideologies of liberty and license in the name of the individual or the tribe and who reject the guidance of human intelligence and understanding, and who are, morally speaking, no better than the bestial denizens of the forests and fields. A thousand years ago, Faust ascended from the depths of perpetual fire and wickedness and conjured up a new culture. The story of the West was laid out from start to finish in the fiery studio of Satan's Faustian scenarioist. It is the story of a cancer spreading into every region and nation on earth. This is the cancer of relativism, radicalism and rank subjectivism and its fearsome and terrifying progeny are the Marxists, Mansonites and McVeighs who have assumed control over the streets of the present day. They are Faust's final Grim Reapers and grave diggers of human civilization. Promoting mass murder in the name of gender, race, class, capitalism, libertarianism, and high speed, worked up, hotted up, souped up nerve excitement, they have brought a thousand year old tragedy to a climax. The keys of Faust have unlocked a nightmare of infinite dimensions and proportions and the jaws of death have flung wide open. They will consume every man, woman and child on earth.

THE INDIAN CHARACTER OF WESTERN PHILOSOPHY

There have been eight high cultures in the history of mankind spanning a time frame of five thousand years. Marked by a thousand years of flourishing and a thousand years of decline, these cultures are: Egyptian, Chinese, Indian, Mayan, Classical, Arabian and Western. In this gallery of advanced human development, two cultures stand out in their diametrical opposition to each other and two stand out in closest and most intimate affinity. Characterized by a recognition of the primacy of physical reality over consciousness and the rational, determinate character of the natural world, Classical culture is symbolized by the figure of Apollo. Characterized by a belief in the primacy of consciousness over physical reality and an ontology of infinitely wide, profound and yearning subjective space, Western culture is symbolized by the figure of Faust, the German astronomer and necromancer who gave his soul to the Devil in exchange for the achievement of endless freedom and power. The subject of world renowned literary studies undertaken by Goethe and Mann, Faust encapsulates an anticocosmos located at the farthest possible remove from Classical culture, a world whose signposts include Gothic architecture, the music of Bach, the mathematics of nonEuclidean space, and mentalist philosophies of all stripes and varieties. Beholding reality as through a dream and fantasy submerged in drenching monsoons, tempests, squalls and endlessly flooding river plains, Indian culture is a mirror image of Western Faustian philosophy and together with it has perpetrated a fearsome and terrifying crime without precedent in the history of human cultures: it has declared holy war against the external world. The Indian monk and the Western academician face each other as unshakeable brothers in spirit; they have attended the same schools of subjectivism, antirealism and apriorism; and they have promoted clearly and distinctly the same slogans and statements of a mind totally absorbed within itself, perceiving only its own forms and ideas, and detached from all forms of reality. Resounding out from the watery depths of the Indian subcontinent and from the soaring deciduous forests of Northern Europe was a philosophy of pure consciousness which sought to shut down and black out the lights of human soundness and sanity which have elevated the mind to the highest levels of scientific, technical and artistic achievement. The Buddhist contemplative and the relentlessly driving Faustian, the leading, representative voices of the East and the West, have set forth a program and manifesto for the rejection of normal human cognition and the promotion of the severest forms of mental illness. They have proclaimed that the world of matter is an illusion produced by finite minds unable to grasp the static, unchanging One which lies at the basis of all reality, and is pure Mind. They have proclaimed that the perception of physical objects provides no proof that they exist and the statement, "I think, therefore I am" constitutes the sole, self evident certainty known to man and establishes the existence of consciousness and nothing else. They have proclaimed that reality resides in Nirvana, in a state of extinguishing and blowing out, in a transcendent paradise in which there is no matter or self, and we are released from all forms of existence. They have proclaimed that mental substances alone exist; they are points, particles, monads and self enclosed worlds of pure deduction; they are calculating machines for algebraic manipulation and geometric integration; and what we call physical objects are projections of false empirical ways of thinking and are without foundation in reality. They have proclaimed that the individual must liberate himself from the tyrannical cycles of being and the evil illusions of existence by means of special spiritual practices called moksha. They have proclaimed that man perceives his own mental contents and nothing else; he perceives a world of sensations, feelings, impressions, signs, relations, functions, prehensions, apprehensions, cultural paradigms, community edicts, and gender, race and class constructs; he perceives anything and everything except the world of real physical objects. They have proclaimed that the world of perception is a kaleidoscopic phantasmagoria produced by a consciousness corrupted by the false idols of earth, sky, wind and sun. They have proclaimed that the world of physical objects is an unreal shadow play staged by the supernatural, noumenal ego, by the unknowable subject in itself, by the deduction of the categories which govern human cognition, and by our own subjective, apriori constructs of space and time. They have proclaimed that reality is that which is grasped by the practices of asceticism, vegetarianism and inward meditation and is a world of pure spirit. They have proclaimed that language is a game played according to arbitrary rules; that the act of defining a word represents nothing more than a move in the language game and is not constrained by any facts or features of experience; and the belief in the existence of physical objects is a product of the scientific language game and has no greater validity than the belief in the existence of purely mental objects, which is a product of the idealist language game. They have proclaimed that the path to salvation resides in obeying the precepts of the Enlightened One, the primordial sage who has peered into the essence of existence and beheld its nothingness and taught man not to perceive, not to think, not to will, not to judge, not to act, and to place himself beneath a dark tree and submerge himself within dark waters, and watch himself vanish into the clouds and mists of nonself, nonmind, nonconception and a nonconsciousness which perceives nothing beyond itself. They have proclaimed that having the desire to know and acting on that desire are the greatest sins which a human being is capable of committing, and the only way to gain the crown of virtue is to quench the candles of the cognition, snuff out the portals of the perception, and implode into a moral, spiritual and psychological vacuum, into a hermetically sealed chamber suffocated by the hemp weeds of esoteric contemplation and mental derangement. They have proclaimed that words are signs which signify nothing; they derive their sole meaning by fiat, by convention or by their relations with other words; and words which denote physical objects possess no greater validity than words which denote wizards, dragons or man headed ox progeny. They have proclaimed that it is impossible to acquire knowledge of the nature of reality or ascertain the truth value of philosophical propositions because reality is an utter void and it is useless and disadvantageous to believe otherwise. They have proclaimed that the belief in the existence of physical objects is the product of a web of belief based upon modern science and is undetermined and underdetermined by experience and possesses pragmatic justification only. They have proclaimed that the world of matter and bodies is replete with cruelty and violence and must be transcended by the mystical currents of the prayerful soul and the inward, reflective consciousness. They have proclaimed that true philosophy is a phenomenology of subjective consciousness in which the mind has bracketed, eliminated and expunged the existence of the natural world and narrowed its focus down to infinitesimal streams of forms which are forms of nothing, intentions which are intentions of nothing, definitions which are definitions of nothing, ideas and essences which cause and condition so-called matter, and a consciousness whose acts are identical to their objects and grasp nothing outside themselves. The world of physical objects is my diseased thought, image and perception and the essence of reality is eternal, unchanging emptiness. The mind and the self are identical to the whole world and every item of nature is a burning grove of absolute consciousness. Thus proclaims the wandering Indian ascetic, mortifier of the flesh, and voyager upon mystical, contemplative seas. The world of physical objects is my phenomenal representation and the essence of reality is the will to power and impulse to dynamism. Human perception terminates in a realm of mere appearances and the thing in itself, the true and ultimate reality, is devoid of all physicality and is the will within us. Thus proclaims the Western philosopher and student of Faust. Indian man: spirit, seer, possessor of supernatural visions and insight, and mental navel gazer who projects the cosmos as the self and everything as the oneness of mind. Western man: a rash, reckless, impetuous adventurer, heedless of danger and the consequences of his actions, riding thunderous waves of Faustian power and subordinating the facts of reality to the commandments of his will. Ideological friends, allies, fellow travellers and carriers of a sickness of the soul. Vaporizing physical objects into a fever and mist of hallucination and dissipation, this is a sickness marked subjectivism and it has spelled the ruination of their cultures.

INNOCENT AND BEHIND BARS

At the basis of any civilized legal system is the requirement that individuals who are accused of crimes be presumed innocent until proven guilty and may not be convicted without evidence. The right not to be convicted of a crime without evidence rests upon the fundamental recognition made by reasonable people that accusations are themselves not evidence but must be established on the basis of evidence. The difference between an accusation and evidence is the difference between a nullity and something, between an assertion and that which makes it true, and if accusations were self validating or cross corroborating, there would be no need to provide evidence of any crimes. The standard of proof required for a criminal conviction establishes a clear bright line which separates rational from irrational legal systems. Rational legal systems employ such formulas as proof beyond a reasonable doubt, proof to a logical certainty, clear and convincing evidence, and sufficient evidence. But they do more than this. They define the key terms involved in order to prevent accusations from being conflated with evidence and prevent the conviction of innocent people. They define evidence to be limited to independent eyewitness testimony and physical indications. They define proof to be the perfection of evidence, the sum total of the body of facts which establishes guilt, based upon an evaluation of the character, quality and credibility of the eyewitness testimony or physical evidence. They define certainty to be the state of mind achieved when proof of guilt is presented in the form of eyewitnesses or physical evidence and forecloses the possibility of error. They define sufficient evidence to consist in a sufficient number of credible eyewitnesses or a sufficient quantity of credible physical evidence to establish guilt. They define reasonable doubt to be the doubt or uncertainty which people should experience when confronted with a lack of credible eyewitnesses or credible physical evidence. In the absence of these definitions, standards of proof such as beyond a reasonable doubt or clear and convincing evidence become vague, meaningless requirements and descend into pure subjectivity and allow, as modern legal systems have for decades allowed, the conviction of criminal defendants on the basis of the word of an accuser or series of accusers. Centuries before the advent of Western legal systems, Classical systems had enshrined the right of the accused to have evidence presented against him in the principle of unus nullus. This was the principle that the word of an accuser equals the word of no witness and equals nothing with respect to evidentiary value. Recognizing that proclamations, declarations, contentions and statements by themselves carry no probative weight or force and that the difference between a trial by accusation or series of accusations and a trial by actual evidence is the difference between a witchhunt and a fact finding investigation, Classical legal systems deemed the testimony of an accuser to be the testimony of nobody and nothing and the notion of accuser testimony was deemed to be a contradiction in terms. In Western legal systems, this principle has been banished from the criminal courtroom and survives only in civil procedurers: "The unus nullus rule refers to the principle that the testimony of one witness is equal to none. In civil cases courts gives no weight to single witness. Single witness can give only presumptive evidence. In order to prove a transaction at least two witnesses are essential. For example, proving a will." (uslegal.com). Guided by the principle of unus nullus, Classical legal systems excluded criminal plaintiffs as bona fide witnesses and compelled plaintiffs to provide independent eyewitness corroboration or physical evidence for their accusations. Classical culture recognized that the first duty of a criminal justice system is the protection of innocent people and that a system which admits accusations as evidence and views accusers as witnesses, and multiple accusers as multiple witnesses, is a nonstop expressway into the jailhouse and a conviction machine running faster than the speed of light. In the absence of a defendant's right to have evidence in the form of independent eyewitnesses or physical evidence presented against him before he is convicted of a crime, all other rights he may enjoy, such as the right against self incrimination, the right to confront his accusers, or the right to be represented by counsel, are meaningless formalities which do nothing to protect the accused against false charges or wrongful convictions. The true test of a fair, objective, reality based criminal justice system is its power to protect the accused against conviction by an accusation or by a series of accusations; to protect him against the defamation committed by a single uncorroborated accuser or defamations committed by multiple accusers; to protect him against the word of a single probative zero or a mass of probative zeros. The right of the accused to have real evidence presented against him, in the form of eyewitnesses or physical evidence, is the fundamental procedural safeguard against the forces of tyranny and is an essential component of a civilized society.

THE MYTH OF MEDICAL MENTAL ILLNESS

The history of Western psychiatry is a history of virulent rejection of human freedom, dignity and responsibility. In stark contrast to Classical psychology which recognized that man is a free born agent and sovereign, rational being, Western psychiatry has throughout its career declared war against the rule of reason and projected man as a helpless plaything of forces beyond his control. This rejection of individual responsibility within a rational anthropology has appeared in the West in two main forms: Freudianism and materialism. Freud's doctrine that man is controlled by an immaterial cosmic will or Id which is comprised of unconscious desires and impulses toward sexual gratification gave way in the mid twentieth century to its brother doctrine that mental illness is a physical illness for which the individual cannot be held responsible. The belief that man is controlled by a relentless, implacable spirit or will was replaced by the doctrine that man is controlled by relentless, implacable chemical or cellular abnormalities and that those who suffer from mental disorders must be medically treated with the use of drugs or surgery. The materialists in charge of present day psychiatry have proclaimed that all true psychiatry presupposes a physicalist framework and is a branch of medicine. They have proclaimed that mental illnesses have nothing whatever to do with morality, because morality itself rests upon the fictional notions of reason and volition, and can only be addressed by means of medical remedies. They have proclaimed that psychiatric diagnoses are medical diagnoses and refer to a loss of structural or functional integrity of some aspect of the brain. They have proclaimed that mental illnesses can only be cured by a course of treatment which aims to eradicate physical lesions. They have proclaimed that mental illnesses can only be investigated by means of biological and neuroscientific research. They have proclaimed that the only possible basis for psychiatry is a neurobiological basis which alone recognizes the physical etiologies of mental illnesses and the essential relation between mental problems and brain disease. They have proclaimed that the domain of psychiatric discourse is the domain of human life itself and it is grave fallacy to believe that human behavior is consciously motivated behavior and falls within the orbit of volitional control, for no such control can be scientifically held to exist. They have proclaimed that psychiatrists are a class of physicians and individuals who suffer from mental issues must submit themselves to their strict medical care. They have proclaimed that the only valid therapeutic intervention for mental illness is medication and involves participation by the pharmaceutical industry. They have proclaimed that the individuals with mental illnesses are trapped in the unshakeable grip of a pathological entity and cannot be held to be responsible for their conduct. They have proclaimed that the condition of insanity has a medical explanation and excuses individuals from all criminal responsibility for their actions. They have proclaimed that mentally ill individuals are unable and are not competent to make decisions about their lives and should seek medical hospitalization immediately. They have proclaimed that mental illness fits the medical definition of disease and can only be adequately treated by specialists skilled in the study of physiological malformations. They have proclaimed that emotional, behavioral and interpersonal problems are caused by such things as histopathological injuries, genetic irregularities and infectious organisms and cannot be reasonably held to be the fault of the individual. They have proclaimed that there is no essential difference between a mental disease and a physical disease, and the sole difference is that the former affects the brain and manifests itself by means of mental symptoms, while the latter affects other organs, such as the heart or the eyes, and manifests itself by means of symptoms referable to those parts. To an arsenal filled with demons, witches and the Freudian Id, the present day psychiatric establishment has added medical pathology in Western psychiatry's centuries old assault against the freedom, dignity and rationality of man. Proclaiming that all disorders in thinking and behavior, all personal troubles and problems in living, can be attributed to physiochemical processes and are nothing more than diseases of the brain, today's psychiatrists have lowered the curtain on mind and humanity in the late modern age.

SUBVERSION, PhD

Professor Red Rabble Rouser stood before his students and inveighed against the oppressors and exploiters of the world. With cans of gasoline marked Identity Politics, Social Justice, Community Organizing, Diversity and Inclusion, Activism in the Name of Gender, Race and Class, and the Rights of Women, Nonwhites and the Poor, the professor set his audience on fire and turned it loose to burn down the citadels of Western civilization. At the back of the classroom sat a figure invisible to all except the professor. He listened attentively to the professor's every word, and at the end of the lecture, walked toward the professor to deliver his congratulations, lend his moral support, offer advice on strategy and tactics, and light up an imagination defying path to the commission of a holocaust. Standing before the professor's lectern in an empty hall, this figure was an emblem surpassing all other emblems of the radical left agitation, the primitive tribal politics and the dialectics of antienlightenment which have gripped the past one hundred years and consumed the present day. The master organist of the late modern age playing hymns of hatred and rage, this was the fearsome figure of Der Fuhrer. On every university campus in the world, a Hitler axis of tribal hate politics and global balkanization has assumed control and lowered the curtain on the future of liberal education. The greatest, the most influential and the most virulent student of Marx, Hitler developed Marxist methods, identitarianism, relativism and polylogism into racialized versions and paved the way for an onset of a gender, race and class trinity which rules over the West as the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit of Satan. The neoMarxists and neoHitlerites who comprise the tenured ruling circles of the educational establishment have proclaimed that a progressive university is one which has replaced traditional academic textbooks with tracts, pamphlets and manuals in support of street violence, repression and intolerance toward the voices of reason and liberty and done so in the name of the people's new democracy. They have proclaimed that a progressive curriculum is one which has replaced instruction in the rules of rational thinking with drumbeats of red propaganda churning out the raw flesh of tribal hatred and feeding it to the radicals in charge of the regents' chambers, the president's offices, the dean's faculties and the professors' departments in every university campus in the world. They have proclaimed that the notion of a universal, rational, political discourse which recognizes individual rights is a bourgeois myth and legend which has no place in a progressive, social justice oriented, university curriculum. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is one which promotes a new version of Nietzscheanism according to which what is called reality is a construct of the will to power of genders, races and classes and the belief in the existence of physical objects is a product of the will to power of successful, white males. They have proclaimed that the world of the West, the world of freedom, dignity, the rule of law, and scientific and technological progress, is a world of imperialism and colonialism directed against primitive, indigenous, tribalist cultures who are the noble children of the masters of the planet: the air, water, trees and animals. The world of the West must therefore be destroyed root and branch in a global conflagration which will blast the clock of history to specks and particles and send them raining down upon the jungles, forests, deserts and swamplands of the Orient, the East, the Southern hemispheres and every benighted region on earth which has never seen the footsteps of a real human being. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is a gender studies center which teaches students that objective criminal justice systems are weapons of patriarchal oppression and that sexual assault allegations made by women are magically, mystically and by political necessity self validating, self corroborating and not in need of any proof or evidence. Thus women who make sexual assault allegations should be automatically assumed to be victims and the men who are accused must be assumed to be guilty as charged. Men who are accused of looking at women, touching women or having contact with women in any way, shape or form are guilty of sexual assault and must be immediately be sent to jail by the people's social justice sex crimes tribunals. They have proclaimed that a progressive theory of knowledge is one which recognizes that anything whatever can be considered to be an object of consciousness, including ideas, signs, forms, essences, definitions, fictions, conventions, space, time, abstractions, shadows and streams of thought and cognition, anything, that is, except real, perceived, physical objects. They have proclaimed that real objects are forever withdrawn from the reach of consciousness and we can have no direct access to them. They have proclaimed that real objects are incommensurable, untranslatable, unperceivable, uncognizable, vacuum sealed, things in themselves which can never be brought into any relation with consciousness. They have proclaimed that we are forever confined to our own subjective forms of awareness and can only experience the outer world indirectly, vicariously, second hand and from the inside. They have proclaimed that only true ontology is that of panpsychism which investigates the cosmic layers of psyche, the essential mental reality which underlies everything which exists, and affirms that to be is to perceive, and that objects perceive insofar as they are. They have proclaimed that reality is an emanation, a projection, a stipulation and a mechanism of consciousness and has no relation to the physical objects of everyday, ordinary experience. They have proclaimed that there are as many ontological, cognitive, logical, psychological, mathematical, moral, political and esthetic systems as there are genders, races, classes, cultures and sexual orientations, no one of which may be held to be more valid or more legitimate than any other. They have proclaimed that man must liberate himself from enslavement to reason by embracing the bestial currents of violence and sex, killing and copulating, as expressed in the philosophies of Marx and Freud. They have proclaimed that true philosophy consists in critical theory and is a critique of rational values, society and culture, in the name of the base and superstructure of gender, race and class politics. They have proclaimed that truth is determined by social needs, interests, desires, exigencies and public opinion polls and its essentially plastic, pragmatic and irrational character is expressed under banners marked communicative rationality. They have proclaimed that that meritocracy is a system of white, male discrimination against women and nonwhites and must be replaced by a regime of preferential treatment on the basis of race and gender. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is one which provides separate dormitories for different identities and provides separate housing for women, blacks, lesbians, transgenders and male homosexuals.

They have proclaimed that the ideals of objectivity and individualism and the belief in the meaning and existence of the written word are weapons of white supremacy and must be swept away by a regime of alternative viewpoints, race and gender biases, rampant emotionalism, the ability to relate to others and a willingness to sacrifice oneself for the sake of the community. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is one which has outlawed freedom of speech on the grounds that it is rightwing protection of racism, classism, misogyny, homophobia, transphobia, ableism and xenophobia, and has established in its place a campus wide regime of intolerance, repression and totalitarian lockstep. An ideological echo chamber, one which hears only the sounds of its own predispositions, propensities, impulses, hatreds, biases and resentments, and is incapable of grasping the nature of the outer world, and is dark, deaf, dumb and blind. Such is the model of the human mind constructed by the new philosophy, the new psychology and the new anthropology disseminated by today's universities. Dissenters from the liberal order, spreaders of treason, agents and conspirators acting on behalf of alien philosophies dedicated to the overthrow of Enlightenment traditions, and builders of the funeral pyres of Western civilization. Such are the regents, presidents, deans and professors in charge of a twenty first century academic establishment whose assaults have lowered the curtain on the progress of modernity.

As the rays of dawn broke through the twentieth century, a fearsome and terrifying revolution was in the making. Listening the voices of the mob rising throughout the world, this was a revolution which rejected the world of empirical science, liberal individualism, capitalist economics, industrial progress and technological achievement which had commenced after the break up the Christian Dark Ages. Bacon, Galileo, Newton, Voltaire, Gibbon, Locke, Smith and Jefferson were among the postChristian luminaries studied and revered at universities prior to the red revolution of the twentieth century and formed the basis of their curriculum. Students at the pretwentieth century academy were taught that man is a rational, autonomous being who has a right to live and work for himself un beholden to the claims made by the state or church, and that the individual is defined in terms of his personal qualities and characteristics and not in terms of the gender, race, class or culture to which he belongs. They were taught that in human society, as in nature itself, the individual is the primary existent and groups are nothing more than abstractions which possess no rights, reality, value or worth of any kind. They were taught that the only legitimate form of morality is individual morality and that social moralities and religious moralities, which subordinate the individual to the claims made by mystical collectives on earth or mystical deities beyond the universe, violate the basic ontological tenet that the individual is the primary existent. They were taught that the state exists in a contract with the individual under which the individual agrees to give the state a monopoly on the use of force in exchange for the state agreeing to use its monopoly to protect the individual's right to life, liberty and property. They were taught that force may only be used to protect individual rights and may never be used aggressively to invade or subjugate the individual. With the ascendancy of antiliberal politics and radical ideologies in the twentieth century, a new class of intellectuals arose which expressed this political redirection in educational institutions throughout society. In any age, the intellectuals who wield influence are those who promote the values held by the majority; their mental antennas are unerringly attuned to changes in public opinion; and those who refuse to pay heed to the passions of the mob are ignored, discredited, vilified and consigned to the outer museums of cultural irrelevance. In the twentieth century, the man on the street, supercharged by the currents of hatred, rage and resentment, turned his back on the world of the Enlightenment and embraced collectivism, dictatorship and the romanticization of violence. He made a great leap backward through the centuries and landed in the primordial swamplands in which the individual did not belong to himself and had no property in his life but was the chattel slave of the tribe and its plundering, bloodthirsty kings, councils, chieftains and elders. He became a living, breathing, walking atavism in the modern age and sent his lieutenants and transmission belts, the newly risen class of the red intelligentsia, into the ivory tower to transform it into an indoctrination center for totalitarian politics and a recruitment agency for hoodlums wearing balaclavas on a mission to spread terror and fear through the streets. Under the impact of the masses, the university renounced its traditional aim of teaching students how to think, how to become liberal citizens and how to be guided by the principles of intelligent living, and assumed the task of teaching students what to think, how to become militants and inquisitors in the service of a Marxist inspired identitarian crusade, and how to faithfully parrot the slogans of the red party line. Black bloc clothing; bicycle chains; Molotov cocktails; pepper spray; human megaphones shouting down the voices of liberal dissent; the supporters of capitalism banned from campuses on the grounds of creating unsafe spaces; hate blinded fanatics rampaging through the streets; student activists shutting down classrooms; campus speakers standing up against the swastika bearers of gender, race and class hatred silenced by interruption, derision and aggression; networks and conspiracies of Marxists and Islamists launching a people's struggle against the precepts of reason, constitutionalism and the rule of law; campaigns of global destruction launched in the name of direct action, income and wealth inequality, equity and access, and "We are the ninety nine percent". Such are the symptoms of a contagion which has stricken the institutions of higher education in the twenty first century and created a sickness in the classroom without precedent in the history of pedagogy. In the nineteenth century, Marxist tribalism entered the stage of history. As the decades thundered down the corridors of Faustian cultural development, this tribalism spawned, by logical necessity, a host of race and gender tribalisms. In the present day, the radicalization of the culture has reached its culmination and burned up the academy in a fever of total insanity. The denial of a universal human essence and common humanity. The repudiation of every value cherished by civilized, nonpsychotic people: reason, adjustment, maturity, prudence, responsibility, stability, integrity and soundness of mind. The descent of human consciousness into a maelstrom of absolute subjectivity and a vortex of nihilistic hate politics. After a century of popular insurrection against the liberal order and the world of the Enlightenment, the curricula and course descriptions of today's universities have achieved horrifying completion and revealed an incurable malaria of the mind in the final century of mankind.

PERSON OF THE YEAR

In the early thirteenth century, a shepherd man from Germany and a shepherd boy from France led a movement of 30,000 children to liberate the Holy Land from the Muslims. Described by psychiatrist Justus Hecker as a symptom of "diseased religious emotionalism", this Children's Crusade was the first instance in the world of mass youth indoctrination. In 1922, the Soviet Council of People's Commissars established the Young Pioneers, a mass youth organization dedicated to indoctrinating children in the tenets of communist ideology and whipping them up to a white hot fever as Brothers of the Fire. As well in 1922, the National Socialist German Workers' Party established the Hitler Youth organization, the aim of which was to indoctrinate the youth of the nation in the tenets of national socialist ideology and make them fight like soldiers for Hitler's totalitarian dictatorship. In the twenty first century, the spirit of youth indoctrination has descended in a major way for the fourth time in 2000 years in the form of a global environmentalist youth movement led by a shepherd girl named Greta Thunberg. As unsupported by the findings of science as the previous mass religions, the environmentalist movement has like the others ignited storms and columns of revolutionary fire which have advanced upon and engulfed the structures of progress and civilization as they have shackled the psychological development of youth and prevented them from achieving intellectual and emotional maturity. Thunberg is the epitome and embodiment of the environmentalist movement and presents a case study for psychologists on what happens to a mind which embraces the tenets of a pseudoscience, an antisience, a politicized science and a nonscience. Thunberg's dogma is that greenhouse gases emitted by human activity are causing catastrophic global warming and this can only be halted and reversed by the destruction of modern industry and technology. Thunberg's anthropocentric global warming theory does not stand the test of empirical examination. Official United States weather station records of temperatures taken at the same times of day show no significant atmospheric warming since 1943. The Scripps Institution of Oceanography has found that the ocean temperature has increased by an insignificant 0.1 degree Celsius in the last fifty years, a period which has seen vast increases in atmospheric carbon emissions. Researchers measured the values of the gases krypton and xenon in air bubbles inside ice cores in Antarctica. As the ocean warms, these gases are released into the atmosphere. If the ocean was warming in response to man made carbon emissions, these gases would be present in the ocean in much lower quantities, and be present in the atmosphere in much higher quantities, than presently measured. The lack of causal connection between man made carbon emissions and the temperature of the ocean is described by Chris White in New Study Shows Past Research On Rising Ocean Temps Built On Faulty Science, the Daily Caller): "The ratio of these gases allows for a much more effective and exact calculation of average global ocean temperature, according to Jim Severinghaus and his team of researchers at Scripps. They discovered that xenon and krypton are well preserved in ice cores and can, therefore, provide temperature information that scientists can use to study many other aspects of the earth's oceans. 'Our precision is about 0.2 °C now, and the warming of the past 50 years is only about 0.1 °C,' he said, adding that advanced equipment can provide more precise measurements, allowing scientists to make better calculations going forward. His fellow researcher made similar remarks." The nonexistence of man made global warming is described by Roy Spencer in A New Analysis of US Temperature Trends Since 1943: "Here I will show US temperature trends since 1943 based upon 4 times per day observations, always made at the same synoptic times: 00, 06, 12, and 18 UTC. This ends up including only about 50 stations, roughly evenly distributed throughout the US, but I thought it would be a worthwhile exercise nonetheless. Years before 1943 simply did not have enough stations reporting, and it wasn't until World War II when routine weather observations started being made on a more regular and widespread basis. [The temperature graph] shows monthly departures from the 70 year (1943-2012) average, along with a 4th order polynomial fit to the data, and it supports the view that the 1960s and 1970s were unusually cool, with warmer conditions existing in the 1940s and 1950s." Greta Thunberg is the face of the environmental movement and a study of her character and personality is a study of the character and personality of each and every member of the movement. She is a radical left prophet who worships at the altar of a cult of anticivilization. She is a climate activist and alarmist who wants humanity wiped out on the grounds that it is the preeminent polluter of the planet. She is a permanent truant from the school of dispassionate analysis and rational investigation. She is mute, autistic, obsessive, compulsive, hysterical, socially impaired, emotionally restricted, and unable to engage in rational dialogue or discussion. She confronts her critics who rely on empirical climate data with racist and sexist ad hominem attacks. She has condemned industrial civilization as a regime of mass extinction and global apocalypse due to its carbon burning and alleged global warming and called for its total destruction. She has been venerated as the high priest of the church of environmental justice, as the new messiah of the twenty first century, and as the red successor of Jesus Christ. She reads from scripts prepared by her radical left handlers and from these scripts denounces all those who oppose the dogma of anthropogenic global warming as haters of women, nonwhites and the poor. She has proclaimed that empirical science is a product of Western Enlightenment prejudice and must be replaced by the politically motivated science of man made climate change and its agenda of destruction of civilization. She has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which organizes round the clock climate marches protesting carbon emitting industries and demands the rollback of every form of technological progress achieved over the last two hundred years. She has proclaimed that the materials, resources, space and energy utilized by mankind to advance industrial growth are missiles and bombs in Satan's arsenal against earth and nature and must be obliterated in a revolution of the people to eradicate every last trace of modernity. She has proclaimed that evidence based climate policies are illegitimate because they prevent the higher, religious, earth enlightened multitudes from doing what almighty God has commanded them to do: take violent actions against the achievements of industry and the world of technological innovation. She has proclaimed that the only serious carbon emissions reductions measures are those which are based upon the recognition that modern human existence is to blame for the burning up of the planet and that the alarm bells have to be sounded to grind this world built up since the Enlightenment into dust and ashes. She has proclaimed that science is not a rational, knowledge seeking process as traditionally conceived, but is a social and ideological process marked by systematic bias, fabricated models, rigged statistical proofs, global cabals and conspiracies, and accusations of denialism hurled against voices of dissent, the aim and purpose of which is to instill a dogma into the minds of the masses that climate change is a human caused global disaster which can only be halted and turned back by the eradication of rational, world improving, innovative, research oriented, technological man. Fanatic, demagogue and denizen of disturbed regions of thought, Greta Thunberg is an emblem and poster girl for the late modern age. Compounded out of an indigenous Western romanticism which worships all things mystical, irrational, instinctual and bestial, and a general senescence and world weariness which has afflicted all cultures everywhere in a state of decline and fall, the environmentalist movement has plunged the West into a screaming abyss. Proclaiming that man is the mortal enemy of the environment and that the Industrial Revolution was the greatest catastrophe ever to befall the planet in its 4.5 billion year history, Greta Thunberg's crusade has swept up the children, the Marxists, the national socialists, the rebels and the malcontents breeding in the basements and sewers of society. Proclaiming a program of zero human growth and human existential regression, and exultant that their religious and emotional convictions completely dominate and determine their ways of thinking, Thunberg and her flock have lowered the curtain on the progress and well being of the human mind.

THE END OF THE CLASSICAL WORLD

In an earlier age, in an age which esteemed academic integrity and exalted truth in scholarship, an account of the decline and fall of the Classical world focused upon two fundamental causes. This honest and honorable age was the Age of Enlightenment, the Age of Reason, and un beholden to the dictates of political correctness set forth nowadays by the totalitarian left and the Christian right, it understood the true causes of the most tragic and calamitous event ever to befall mankind. Like the pagan Roman intelligentsia itself, the thinkers of the Enlightenment understood that the Classical world ended when in its fatigue and its senility it embraced two alien cultures: the culture of the Christians and the culture of the Germans. Fastening upon the facts and nothing but the facts, the Enlightenment thinkers identified the Middle Ages as a Dark Age, as an age dominated by the priests of irrationalism, superstition, and opposition to the progress and advancement of the human mind. These thinkers recognized that the Classical soul expired with the triumph of Christianity and Germanism. The Roman intelligentsia had the complete picture: a new force in history, a force streaming in from the North, a force which worshiped an anticocosmos of the formless, the indefinite, the indeterminate, pure, infinite space and the omnipotent will, joined in an alliance with another force streaming in from the East, a force which worshiped a similar anticocosmos but called it the realm of God, Christ and the brotherhood of true believers, and this alliance of Northern and Eastern ideologies overwhelmed a spiritually dead and exhausted Classical world, which in its heyday had championed the values of reason and the intellect. Implacably opposed to Classical reason, the world of the Christians was a world which devalued natural existence and was centered upon a future life beyond the grave. It was a world whose clergy preached the doctrines of cowardice, timidity, surrender and fear. It was a world which buried reason and the senses in the monk's cloister and prayed to the spirits beyond place, matter and the movement of time. It was a world which condemned the pursuit of rational self interest and ordered the squandering of wealth upon charity and devotion. It was a world which incinerated reason and science in the fires of faith, zeal and theological discord. It was a world ruled by churches, church states, ranting assemblies of the clergy and laity, and violent religious factions. It was a world which brought a new form of tyranny onto the stage of history: the persecution of dissident sects through the enforcement of a party spirit and a party line. It was a world whose bishops from their pulpits inculcated a morality of passive, unconditional obedience to the imperatives of God's law and church canon. It was a world in which Jesus was the Son of God, Jesus who suffered and died on a cross for the sinners of the world, and Jesus who rose from the dead for the salvation of mankind. It was a world in which God created the world out of absolute nothingness, out of an arbitrary void, and can change any fact in existence, and make A non A and a thing possess contradictory states at one and the same time. It was a world in which God annointed Jesus as the messiah of humanity and through belief in the death and resurrection of Jesus, sinful human beings will achieve eternal life in Heaven. It was a world in which Jesus ascended to Heaven, sits at the right hand of God the Father, and will return to earth on Judgment Day, and establish the kingdom of God. It was a world in which individuals must reject the intellect and reject drawing rational conclusions, and must live solely in accordance with faith, and trust God, accept the teachings of Scripture without regard to whether they are logical, reasonable or make any kind of sense. It was a world in which the highest reality is that which is hoped for, wished for and prayed for but can never be known or perceived. It was a world in which knowledge is subordinated to blind faith and to belief without objective warrant. It was a world in which the highest reality is not known through wisdom but through revelation and God only reveals himself to those who have simple, child like faith. It was a world in which individuals must think with religious assent and in which the intellect is determined completely by the will. It was a world in which the highest authority for the intellect and the final arbiter of all truth is the church and words and texts mean whatever the church has decreed that they mean. Rampaging from the North, the world of the Germans was a world of infinite voids, spaces, movement, striving and power, a world without beginning, end, mass or weight. It was a world of Asgard, the vast hall of the gods. It was a world of Valhalla, the vast hall of slain heroes. It was a world of Bifrost, the overarching rainbow sky bridge. It was a world of Yggdrasil, the great tree of the world, whose roots and branches extend through the universe, through the heavens, the earth and the underworld. It was a world of giants, monsters and demons, embodying the forces of evil, darkness, chaos, destruction and unreason. It was a world of Ragnarok, doomsday, fierce, biting winters and the destruction of civilization. The Germanic world of crime, violence, human sacrifice, all that is secret, hidden and unperceivable, all that is without form, place, presence, substance, representation, likeness or dimension, forests and groves worshiped as sacred, holy and as the highest deities, this world of terrifying weeds luxuriating in gardens of irrationality, is described by Tacitus in Germania: "Above all other gods they worship Mercury, and count it no sin, on certain feast days, to include human victims in the sacrifices offered to him. Hercules and Mars they appease by offerings of animals, in accordance with ordinary civilized custom. Some of the Suebi sacrifice also to Isis. I do not know the origin or explanation of this foreign cult; but the goddess's emblem, being made in the form of a light warship, itself proves that her worship came in from abroad. The Germans do not think it in keeping with the divine majesty to confine gods within walls or to portray them in the likeness of any human countenance. Their holy places are woods and groves, and they apply the names of deities to that hidden presence which is seen only by the eye of reverence." The Germanic world of the limitless, the indefinite, the unfriendly, the unbenevolent, landscapes engulfed in oceans of melancholy, gloom and endless evening and dusk, unvisited and unvisitable by decent, civilized people, not lands or locations as normally conceived, but geographies of the unknown, the wild, the barren, the untillable, the unknowable, the insane and the revolting, is described by Tacitus in Germania: "As to the Germans themselves, I think it probable that they are indigenous and that very little foreign blood has been introduced either by invasians or by friendly dealings with neighboring peoples. For in former times it was not by land but on shipboard that would be immigrants arrived; and the limitless ocean that lies beyond the coasts of Germany, and as it were defies intruders, is seldom visited by ships from our part of the world. And to say nothing of the perils of that wild and unknown sea, who would have been likely to leave Asia Minor, North Africa, or Italy, to go to Germany with its forbidding landscapes and unpleasant climate--a country that is thankless to till and dismal to behold for anyone who was not born and bred there?" Emerging from the this ancient world of Germanic religion was a prefigurement of the coming of an alchemist, astrologer and magician named Faust in the fifteenth century. Forming a pact with the Devil at a crossroads in Germany, he exchanged his soul, his reason and his moral integrity for the achievement of unlimited power and mastery, and symbolized the essence of the West, and highlighted the opposition between Classical culture and the West, as no other figure had ever done before or after. The spirit of Faust was present at the birth of the West in 1000 AD when Germanic stirrings from the Rhine, the Danube, the Alps and the Black Forest, scenes and topographies of the formless will, brought forth a radically new world in Northern Europe. The hand of Faust guided the West through every stage of its development. With a deep seated affinity for every irrational religion and ideology under the sun, Faust plucked the most egregious, plucked Christianity from the East, gave it to the Germans, and made it their very own. As the centuries rolled by, Catholicism and Protestantism would develop as special, Western, Faustian forms of Christianity. The Germanic religion and the Christian religion: two religions exalting space, arbitrariness, indetermination, unbounded power and the total rejection of reason. Two religions exalting the will as the fundamental and dominant factor in the life of man and the universe. Two religions brought together by the hand of Faust and forged into a mighty unity called the culture of the West. In the fourth century AD, Faust's armies of Germans and Christians invaded a decadent and deceased Classical world. Then came a deluge of barbarism from the North and barbarism from the East. Then came an age of delirium, disorder and disturbance. Then came a nightfall of burned books, smashed statues, razed academies, vandalized temples, ransacked cities and smoldering ruins. Then came the permanent sunset of the life of the mind.

THE MEDIA ON TRIAL

The time: the indeterminate future. The place: an underground courtroom hidden away from the mob and presided over by the last remnants of a vanished species: by people devoted to the preservation of truth, objectivity and accuracy in the media. The defendant: the global leftist media establishment which ruled the West right up to the time of its collapse and disintegration. The charge: the dissemination of false and malicious news and commentary designed to deafen the airwaves, jam the cables, defile the print pages, degrade the social media pages and sully the silver screen with volleys and vitriol of red propaganda. Such is a scene which exists only in the dreams of civilized people who have beheld with shock and horror the decline and fall of the media into the fever swamps of leftist hate politics, and longed for the day when the scales and the sword of justice will come down without mercy upon the accused, and eliminate the red media menace from the face of the earth. Assaulted from every direction, on every side, and by every channel of mass communication, civilized people have seen these channels issue a series of fearsome and terrifying proclamations which have sounded the death knell of a free and independent media. They have proclaimed that Marxism, a doctrine of hate, an architecture of genocide, an ideology of starving, and a killing machine which has claimed the lives of 100 million people, represents the culmination of progressive political thought and its statues and monuments must be venerated as holy sites and be protected against vandalism and desecration. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a labor society, a communist society, a collectivist society, an antiliberal society, a democratic socialist society, a national socialist society, a male hating feminist society, a black racist society, a homosexual society, a transgender society, a censorship society, a politically correct society, an antiWestern, Islamist society, an antiIsrael society, and a society governed by a living constitution under which words mean whatever the mob wants them to mean, at the time the mob wants them to mean it, and can legalize any state action taken against the individual, and can grind his freedom into the dust. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a reign of terror ranged against the values of the Enlightenment, a rampage of the people which worships the God and Church of the State, the Tribe and the commissars of gender, race and class. They have seen the media proclaim that a progressive society is a temple of antireason whose canons and calendars celebrate the transformation of free people into sheep and goats for slaughterhouses marked Social Justice. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a people's Book of Revelation in which Jesus Christ has been replaced by the gods of gender, race and class who have eradicated personhood and transfigured the individual into a beautiful, elevated, vassal of the tribe. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has wiped out the bourgeois traditions of rational virtue and moral excellence and fallen under the domination of the lowest strata of proletarian anticulture. They have proclaimed that the annihilation of civilization, the reduction of human achievements to heaps of rubble, is the source and foundation of all true life and spirit. They have proclaimed that the system of private property and private profit is an iron heel of oppression and exploitation of the working class and must be swept aside by a regime of state control over transportation, communication, basic industries, and the processes of the human mind itself, and the restructuring of society along the lines of a red totalitarian dictatorship. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a cooperative commonwealth in which all are sacrificed to all, the sins of one are the sins of all, the poverty of one is the poverty of all, the ignorance of one is the ignorance of all, the misery of one is the misery of all, the crises of one are the crises of all, the slavery of one is the slavery of all, and every aspect of the individual's life, actions, emotions and thought has been nationalized by the people's commissars of social equity and social rights. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which individuals have become wards and children of the government and the latter has assumed the role of omnipotent protector against poverty, sickness, old age, and the risks and hazards of everyday life. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system of perpetual, continuous boom and bust cycles and must be replaced by a regime ruled by bureaucratic commissars and economic planning boards which will police every aspect of production, prices, distribution, financing, advertising, profits and wages. They have proclaimed that a free society is a mortal threat to the rights of the working class and must be replaced by a regime of planned capitalism enforced by government bureaus armed with the people's totalitarian truncheons. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a regime ruled by red shirts and brown shirts: it is a Mussolini regime, a Stalinist regime, Hitler regime, a fascist regime, a national socialist regime, an absolute government regime, a confiscatory tax regime, and an all embracing, all encompassing, totalitarian welfare state which has outlawed human liberty forever. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which the power of the government has become stronger and stronger, and the power of the people has become weaker and weaker, until the government has reduced the people to a state of abject servitude and emancipated them from the tyranny of freedom. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has restored to the state the powers of primitive tribal kings from the jungles of Africa, the steppes of Asia and the plains of the Mayans, and reduced the people to the level of chattel slaves and public property in the name of social wealth, social distribution and a New Deal. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is an all powerful state, stripped of the bourgeois constraints of reason and law, and dedicated to the extirpation of liberal democracy. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is an ideologically based society, one which has rejected the world of reason and reality, instituted a regime of pervasive thought control and leftist bias, and stamped out the expression of politically incorrect views, such as that the theory of man made climate is unproven, or that gender is not fluid or changeable but is based upon biological determinants, or that there is no right of an individual to receive health care subsidized by confiscated tax money. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is an international communist movement, a Marxist fever swamp, and a red coercive power dedicated to the hegemony of a gender, race and class based subjectivism which has thrown sanity and common sense to the winds, ignored and denied personal merit, worth, dignity and moral character, and reduced individuals to their biological and socioeconomic backgrounds. They have proclaimed that successful, white, heterosexual, gender adjusted males represent the essence of evil and oppression and must be harassed, persecuted, discriminated against and drummed out of the human race in the name of diversity, equity and inclusion. After listening to the foregoing proclamations, the jury has retired to deliberate. It has returned a verdict: guilty as charged. It has handed down a sentence: the hanging of the red media in the public square glistening with paving stones marked Professionalism In Journalism and Ethics In The Media. Such is the glorious dream of civilized people. But the dream has vanished like the morning mist and the civilized have been plunged back into the nightmare reality of an alien, seditious, scandalous, lying media polluting every public, private, physical and mental space on the planet. Devoid of an opposition press devoted to the exposure of error and the dissemination of truth, today's media establishment has stoked the engines of agitation and propaganda and made true thought, true inquiry, true analysis, true discussion, true education, true science, true enlightenment, and a true exchange of ideas and opinions impossible to achieve. The rational, liberal definition of the media designates a means of mass transmission of information involving broadcasting, publishing, telecommunications and the Internet. Under the relentless pressure of the red main streets and the radical majorities in control of contemporary society, this definition has been rendered obsolete. The liberal age of facts and information has been supplanted by a new age of proselytizing, indoctrination and demagoguery and the mass media have blasted out its program and manifesto.

THE FREE SPEECH CRISIS

During the Age of Enlightenment, the right of the individual to enjoy life, liberty and property was enshrined as the clear and unambiguous law of the land in the nations of the West. It was enshrined because the masses supported, demanded and agitated for its enshrinement. As the decades rolled by, as the basest emotions known to man, reproducing and luxuriating in the sewers of society, achieved dominance, the political coloration of the masses degenerated into the brightest shades of red radicalism. Hatred, envy, resentment, frustration, dissatisfaction, disgruntlement, and perpetual feelings of being oppressed, exploited, marginalized and victimized: such are the deepest lying, most natural and most instinctive states of mind of the masses, emotions and attitudes which have branded the masses with the mark of Cain since time immemorial, since mankind first trod upon the soil of the earth. After a century of suppression during the Age of Enlightenment, these emotions came to the fore, they became strengthened, intensified and augmented, and they launched an attack against human liberty unsurpassed and without equal in the history of mankind. Blackening their psychology until it is blacker than black, the masses hate the freedom which allows their betters and superiors to achieve great wealth and success and to express opinions in support of the cause of freedom, and ever seek to stamp out and suppress the forms of thought which challenge the orthodoxies set forth by the people's party line. Freedom of thought, speech, the press and assembly, the freedom to criticize and condemn the red enemies ranged against freedom and liberty: this is one of the cornerstones of a free, reasonable, civilized society and this is one of the primary targets for total destruction by the totalitarian sledgehammers wielded by the masses. The two centuries succeeding the fall of the Enlightenment have witnessed a crescendo of attacks launched against freedom of speech, a progressive increase whose loudest, most deafening and most ear splitting point presently resounds across the nations of the world and has brought forth a crisis never before witnessed in the history of mankind. The twentieth century saw a great leap forward in the leftist campaign against liberal democracy with the advent of the communist and fascist totalitarian systems and the red totalitarian cult of political correctness in nation after nation across Europe and America. The twentieth century saw an acceleration of cultural decline before the final free fall of the twenty first century which is traveling faster than the speed of light. The heirs and successors of the twentieth century masses who swept way and kept away the world of the Enlightenment, the masses of the twenty first century have issued a series of proclamations which have composed the program and manifesto of a final, fearsome and terrifying age of world wide totalitarian government. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has outlawed freedom of speech on the grounds that allowing a rational, dispassionate, nonhysterical discussion of the leading issues of the day may inflict grievous social, political, legal and economic harm upon women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders and the poor. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which affirms that no one should be allowed to speak the truth, to speak plainly or to call a spade a spade, because doing so invariably offends the sensibilities of national socialist feminists, psychotic transgenders, nihilistic environmentalists, white hating black activists, hate charged proletarians, welfare state demagogues, administrative state fascists, and primitive, drum beating, snake charming diversity and inclusion officers. They have proclaimed that freedom is not absolute and constitutional guarantees of free speech should never serve as shields for politically incorrect speech, such as that which exposes the theory of anthropogenic climate change as empirically baseless, or that which affirms that advantaging women and nonwhites over white males in education and employment is sexist and racist. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which prohibits all discussion and debate which allows criticism of white hating black culture, male hating feminist culture and freedom hating proletarian culture on the grounds that such criticism is racist, sexist and classist. They have proclaimed that those who stand up for liberal democracy and challenge the dogmas of black supremacy, female supremacy, Islamist supremacy, or the supremacy of the miscreants and the maladjusted people of the world deserve to be shouted down, physically attacked, expelled from the human race and imprisoned in the hinterlands of the universe. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is one under the domination of red activists who have placed students and professors who defend America, Israel and Western liberal democratic values under a cloud of fear, uncertainty and imminent violence. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is one which excludes white students, seeks to validate and inculcate a religion of black supremacy, and works for the day when every nation and community on earth will be able to celebrate the absence of white people and declare itself Frei Von Weissen. They have proclaimed that criticisms of the people's red dogmas of social justice for women, nonwhites and the poor are not protected by freedom of speech guarantees, and those who engage in such criticism must be confronted, threatened and mercilessly beaten up. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a national socialist society which incites nonwhites to kill whites and enjoys itself noisily in its culture of vice, viciousness and unremitting violence. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has brought red activist fringe groups into the centers of power, abolished all Western, bourgeois protections of freedom of speech, and established a duty incumbent upon every citizen to inflict as much harm as possible against those who make offensive, hurtful statements about the reds and their creed of social justice slavery and gender, race and class hatred. They have proclaimed that the liberal system of universal reason, universal humanity and a universal republic of free citizens is an antisocial, antiequity lash of bourgeois oppression and must be swept away by a system of popular dictatorship, a dictatorship of red culture, tribal culture, gender culture, race culture and class culture in which no one enjoys freedom and the slightest unapproved, politically incorrect remark will result in the loss of one's friends, family, job, career, occupation or place in school. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is a legally mandated radical order whose attacks on free speech are equaled only by its physical assaults on students, professors and outside speakers who have dared to speak truth to the reds and to march under the flags of liberal dissent. They have proclaimed that any deviation in speech or thought from the tenets of the patriotic, puritan, red community, from the people's axiom that the individual has no right to live or work for himself and must and enslave and sacrifice himself for the sake of a gender, race or class tribe, is a deviation into the rocky shoals of monstrous error and must bring down the hand of the people's censor upon its perpetrators and result in the total deprivation of their political liberty. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one under the domination of red cultural values which have empowered a class of red slaveholders whose rightless chattel are reason, truth, moral consciousness, fundamental decency, and every man, woman and child on the planet. The movement of history into the twentieth century was not an ordinary succession of temporal events, but a temporal explosion which shattered the progress of mankind and sent time and history racing backward. Receding at full speed into the mists of the past, the world of the Enlightenment, the world which affirmed that freedom of speech is a natural, infeasible, inalienable right which can never be canceled, abridged, restrained or modified by the state, plunged and sunk into seas of oblivion and was no longer to be found on the pages of textbooks or the pages of dictionaries in the twenty first century. Legitimized and emboldened by the radical masses who define and control the present day, anti free speech fanatics, black masked hoodlums, stage storming activists and professors deafening classrooms with the bullhorns of red propaganda terrorize the homes, neighborhoods, streets, squares, offices and college campuses of every nation in the world. Proclaiming that charters, amendments, constitutions and bills of rights protecting freedom of speech protect the freedom of speech of Marxists, Gramscites, communists, MeToo male haters, Black Lives Matter white haters, Israel haters, environmentalist Luddites, welfare statists, and antimale, antiwhite, antiheterosexual, anticapitalist and protransgender gauleiters marching under swastika flags embroidered with the slogans Diversity, Equity and Inclusion, and protect the freedom of speech of nobody else, the masses and intellectuals in charge of the twenty first century have embarked upon a death march. They, the West, the world, the present age have executed themselves on the cross of speech suppression, mind suppression and the destruction of civilization.

SEPTEMBER 2, 1945: THE VICTORY OF WORLD COMMUNISM

The standard narrative of the Second World War tells us that this global conflict ended with the victory of freedom over the forces of totalitarian tyranny. According to the standard narrative, the defeat of the Axis Powers made the world safe for free nations by smashing the essence and embodiment of all evil: the fascist menace. Taught in school textbooks and proclaimed to the masses throughout the world in the seven decades since the end of the war, this standard narrative is in point of fact a narrative written by the reds and bears no resemblance whatever to the actual facts of history. From the earliest days of the war, the Soviet Union embarked upon a path of victory which ten short years later would see the enslavement of one half of the world to the greatest force of tyranny ever conceived and established in the history of mankind: the international communist movement and conspiracy. The timeline of the Second World War and its aftermath was a timeline of shame which saw the victory of communism enabled, encouraged, supported and promoted by the masses and intellectuals of the West. It saw the refusal of the West to declare war on the Soviets after their invasion of Poland seventeen days after the German invasion. It saw the the Soviet annexation of Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, Finland, and Romania. It saw the persecution and murder of millions of people living in these countries and in Poland. It saw the acceptance of the Soviets as part of the Allied Powers. It saw Soviet tank campaigns moving into Berlin and subjugating the eastern half of Germany. It saw the Soviet subjugation of Eastern Europe by the establishment of communist puppet regimes across the region. It saw the expropriation, deportation, enslavement and murder of millions of people from Germany to Korea under the banners of red liberation. It saw Soviet offensives in China and Korea and the establishment of communist regimes in these countries. It saw the inclusion of the Soviet Union as a member of the United Nations with a permanent seat on the Security Council wielding full veto power, thus making a mockery of the organization's professed aims of promoting international peace and security, protecting human rights, and upholding international law. It saw the transformation of private humanitarian organizations throughout Eastern Europe into political, ideological weapons of the Communist Party in its campaign to extinguish the consciousness of freedom and reconstruct free societies into socialist totalitarian dictatorships. This was a campaign of red educators, red shapers, red indoctrinators, red organizers and red social activists on a mission assigned by Satan himself: the destruction of civilization: "We must deepen our organizational work and mobilize a broad group of active women, educating and shaping them into conscious social activists. Every day we must raise the level of women's social consciousness and join the grand assignment of the social reconstruction of People's Poland into Socialist Poland." (Izolda Kowalska-Kirykuk, quoted in Iron Curtain: The Crushing of Eastern Europe, 1944-1956 by Anne Applebaum). The timeline of the Second World War and its aftermath saw a movement of absorption and collectivization across Eastern Europe which swept away every trace of normal, decent, civilized, human existence built up over the span of one thousand years. Countries, cities, towns, villages, communities, languages, dialects, traditions, institutions, farms, factories, industries, laws and governments dedicated to the protection of freedom, liberty and democratic processes vanished like the morning mist, vanished in one fell swoop, before the onslaught of a red empire whose king was the Prince of Darkness himself. Across Eastern Europe, a red autocracy, a red feudal state, a red monarchy, a red fascist state and a communist bloc was implanted by the tanks and legions of Soviet power, aided and abetted by reds throughout the world and by the voices of treason which ruled the West: "The new territories included formerly democratic Czechoslovakia, formerly fascist Germany, as well as monarchies, autocracies and semifeudal states. The inhabitants of the region were Catholic, Orthodox, Protestant, Jewish and Muslim. They spoke Slavic languages, Romance languages, Finno-Ugric languages and German. They included Russophiles and Russophobes; industrialized Bohemia and rural Albania; cosmopolitan Berlin and tiny wooden villages in the Carpathian mountains. Among them were former subjects of the Austro-Hungarian, Prussian and Ottoman empires, as well as the Russian empire. Nevertheless, Americans and West Europeans in this period came to see the nations of communist dominated but nonSoviet Europe--Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, eastern Germany, Romania, Bulgaria, Albania and Yugoslavia--as a bloc, which eventually became known as Eastern Europe." (Iron Curtain: The Crushing of Eastern Europe, 1944-1956 by Anne Applebaum). The timeline of the Second World War and its aftermath saw the construction across Eastern Europe of a political and ideological cesspool called communism. In the ancient states of the region, venerating in their customs, traditions, governments and religions the institutions of civilization, the importance of virtue, the precepts of benevolence, and the freedom, dignity and worth of the individual, Satan's grim, sullen, unsmiling reapers of death and destruction seized control over the reins of power. These were the personifications of evil as evil had never before been known, the inventors of a darkness which had never before been seen, and around this land they built a wall, a barbed wire fence, an iron curtain, and a ring of watchtowers with orders to shoot to kill. In this land they built a prison and threw one thousand years of culture, civilization, progress and humanity into it. Locked behind bars and spikes, the candle of freedom stared outward and beheld a nightmare spreading out from the depths of hell. It beheld a cyclone of horror swirling with red policemen, red class wars, red propaganda posters, red agitation campaigns, red party leaders, red constitutions, red Hitlers, red Mussolinis, red allies, red fascists, red marches, red parades, red celebrations, red power, red capital cities, and red architects of pervasive, round the clock fear. Consistently, homogeneously, unwaveringly and unremittingly red, these postwar lands of the East were sealed off from the West for over a half a century by a barrier of state violence and mass indoctrination. Presided over by clothed skeletons of the cult of Stalin, these shocking, spine chilling symbols of the victory of communism sent the clock of history racing backward faster than the speed of light and crashing into the charnel houses of primitive man: "Very briefly, between 1945 and 1953 , it did seem as if the USSR would succeed in turning the widely varying nations of Eastern Europe into an ideologically and politically homogeneous region. From Hitler's enemies and Hitler's allies they did, during this period, create a clutch of apparently identical polities. By the early 1950s, all the gray, war damaged capitals of the ancient states of the region, to use Churchill's phrase, were patrolled by the same kinds of unsmiling policemen, designed by the same socialist realist architects and draped with the same kinds of propaganda posters. The cult of Stalin, whose very name was venerated in the USSR as a symbol of the coming victory of communism, was observed across the region, along with very similar cults of local party leaders. Millions of people took part in state orchestrated parades and celebrations of communist power. At the time, the phrase Iron Curtain seemed much more than a metaphor: walls, fences and barbed wire literally separated Eastern Europe from the West. By 1961, the year in which the Berlin Wall was built, it seemed as if these barriers could last for ever." (Iron Curtain: The Crushing Of Eastern Europe, 1944-1956 by Anne Applebaum). On September 2, 1945, in Tokyo Bay, on the deck of the USS Missouri, the Second World War came to an end with the surrender of Japan. But this world renowned event came and went without a trace of meaning or significance. For at this time, in capital cities across Asia and Eastern Europe, from Warsaw to Berlin to Prague to Vienna to Budapest to Belgrade to Bucharest to Sofia to Peking to Pyongyang, the reds were feeding their armies and conspiracies of relentless terror, stoking the engines of totalitarian control, and casting a shadow of doom over the lives of tens of millions of people living on one half of the Earth's surface. In ten years the guillotine would fall and seal the fate of the free world. For the past seven decades, the people of the West have applauded a picture taken at the Yalta Conference in 1945. It is a picture of the leaders of the Big Three: Franklin Roosevelt, Winston Churchill and Joseph Stalin. It is a picture of an alliance of good with evil, and the transformation of good into evil, without precedent in the history of mankind. It is a picture of the victory of the reds, the surrender of free peoples, the radicalization of the West, the expansion and entrenchment of communistic welfare states across Europe and America, and the moral collapse of civilization.

RED COMBATANTS ATTACK THE WEST

Scrawled out in graffiti and screamed out in headlines across the West are reports of a round the clock campaign of terror conducted by an organization called Antifa. Originating in Germany in the 1920s as the combat branch of the Communist Party, the Antifaschistische Aktion commenced a campaign of violence against the opponents of communism and placed homes, schools, offices throughout Germany under a state of siege. These early years of the twentieth century saw the commencement of an age of disorder which has intensified over the decades and brought the West into an abyss of irreversible downfall and decline. Because Marxism is a principle, a theory, an ideology and a religion of mass destruction, a religion without equal in the history of mankind, this age has been personified by Marxists of various forms, stripes, banners and guises. It has been personified by Lenin's Marxists who made revolution in Russia in 1917; by Mussolini's fascist Marxists who marched on Rome; by Hitler's national socialist Marxists who established the Third Reich; by the Soviet and Chinese Marxist states which between them murdered eighty five million people; by the Khmer Rouge whose Marxist holocaust eradicated one quarter of the population of Cambodia; and in the present day, by black hooded, black clad protesters marching under the banners of Antifa and carrying the message of Marx into every corner and recess of society. Carrying its original name in Germany today, Antifa has established branches in every country in the West and has issued a program and manifesto for the overthrow of the liberal order and the dissolution of civilization throughout the world. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a collectivist, state planned society which has compiled the bloodiest record imaginable of atrocities and genocide in the name of egalitarian justice and the people's economy. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is governed by an extreme leftist ideology which has launched a war to roll back one thousand years of human social and cultural development in the name of the fight against the capitalist system. It has proclaimed that the notions of universal reason, truth, justice and morality are bourgeois constructs which must be replaced by a people's revolutionary dictionary of war slogans, battle concepts and political vocabulary scorched on the pages of hatred, envy, rage and revenge. It has proclaimed that civilization and its representatives, the authorities of law and order, are the running dogs of capitalist oppression and must be shot down in cold blood. It has proclaimed that the achievement of social justice requires an armed insurrection against the liberal order and its antipopulist institutions which protect the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a united front of socialists of all stripes and varieties, from red shirts to brownshirts to blackshirts to greenshirts, who are arrayed against the liberal enemies of ruthless authoritarianism, blind obedience, and demagoguery in the name of gender, race and class. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a soviet society, a communist society, a society which has liquidated every class except the class of lice and parasites whose mouthparts have pierced the engines of work and production and drawn off their life and soul. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a Stalinist party, a coalition of red factions, a socialist democratic republic, and an international communist movement and conspiracy whose commander in chief is the people's centralized, dictatorial monster of expropriation. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a communist apparatus and ministry of state security which has encircled and snuffed out the candle of liberty with the spikes and barbed wire fences of fear and control. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has given violence a free pass if committed in the name of the working class and ordered the forces of law and order to stand down and disappear. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose city councils are controlled by communist mobs who have torn up streets, squares, neighborhoods and campuses and elected mayors blazing with the flames of red anarchy. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a far left extremist organization which enforces the equalization of wealth and the collectivization of the personality by all means necessary and worships at the altar of mass murder. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is an extremist society whose Trotskyites, Maoists, Red Guards, communists and democratic socialists serve as launching pads for global terror attacks and plan to kill the world's population in the name of the people's social, cultural and political revolution. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a hate filled fever swamp which has targeted successful, white, heterosexual males for total destruction and uses force and violence to silence those who defend the rights of all. It has proclaimed that the highest embodiment of moral perfection is a black cloaked hoodlum whose program is property destruction, bloody street fights, and "defensive violence", or cold blooded murder, perpetrated against the liberal opponents of the reds. It has proclaimed that communism is a religion which is not amenable to rational analysis and cannot be rationally debated and thus the reds have no choice but to use force and violence to beat down and suppress all those who oppose them. It has proclaimed that those who support liberal democracy and any system which does not privilege women, nonwhites and the poor do not deserve to enjoy free speech; they are not entitled to utilize platforms of any kind anywhere in society; and they have to be shut down and killed as soon as possible. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a movement of supremacy, proletarian supremacy, female supremacy, black supremacy, homosexual supremacy, transgender supremacy, and the supremacy of the scum and refuse reproducing in the sewers and streets, and is opposed to the liberal system of government which protects the equal rights of all without regard to gender, race, class or sexual orientation, and protects the free speech rights of those who speak truth to political correctness and call transgenders what they are, gender psychotics, and homeless people what they are, the essence of indolence and subhumanity. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a fascist society focused upon the strength of a master race, the race of women, nonwhites and the poor, and wields the truncheons of violence and intimidation to put down the decent, civilized, antiracist, liberal minded citizens who stand in their way. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a foreign and domestic terrorist organization which has taken the thugs and hoodlums from the sewers and fringes of the planet and placed them into the centers of power, and galvanized the voices of anticivilization, antiliberalism and the voices of the reds from around the world, and led a crusade to burn and smash the calendars and clocks of human progress and enlightenment. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which sanctions the use of bloody violence, militancy in the streets, and fighting with fists and not with rational arguments, in the name of community service, community activism, community development and community solidarity. From Los Angeles to Portland to Paris to Geneva, latter day brownshirts, rioting under the black and red flags of Antifa, have engulfed the world in flames, bombs, smashed windows and a level of violence not seen in decades. Exalting the killing of innocent people as the highest form of kinetic beauty, the social activists of Antifa have raised the curtain on the final Marxist dispensation of nihilistic world destruction. Red fascists, red national socialists, red antisemites, red Islamists, red supremacists, red separatists, red environmentalists and red gender, race and class trinitarians: such are the factions which have united beneath the black hoods of Antifa in its war of resistance against everything right minded, morally correct, unimpeachable, irreproachable and rationally flourishing in the world. Opposing capitalist freedom, liberal democratic norms and the rule of law, Antifa has attracted mainstream support throughout the West. Advocating in their actions and beliefs a philosophy of intimidation, attack, violence and mass murder in the name of progressive politics and social justice, the street gangs of Antifa have shut down neighborhoods, campuses, offices, cities and the exercise of free speech. Aided and abetted by the masses, totalitarians patrol the streets today, spreading fear and disorder. They triumphed in Russia in 1917, in Germany in 1933, in China in 1949, in Cambodia in 1975, and they have triumphed today. This is the age of red terror and the destruction of civilization: the age of Antifa.

THE FOURTH REICH

Among the hallmarks of a great historian is the ability to discern parallels. A great historian is one who can identify, out of a mass of dissimilar data and nonessential details, corresponding, comparable, and analogous periods of time and make the case to his colleagues and give warning to the world. Decent, civilized historians in the present day have reacted with feelings of anxiety, dismay, outrage and horror at the parallels which they have observed between the society of Soviet Russia which endured for seven decades up to 1989, the national socialist Third Reich which ruled Germany between 1933 and 1945, and the feminist dispensation which rules the West today. They have observed in all three periods the descent of a hate universe whose wellsprings were Marxism and whose virulence was without parallel in the history of mankind. They have observed in these periods the successive unfolding of a tribalist philosophy of life which the forces of the left brought into the world in the nineteenth century as a high temperature expression of Faustian romanticism and in conscious opposition to the philosophy of Classicism and the Enlightenment. The rejection of realism and empiricism; the social construction of truth and reality; and the social character of morality and politics: these are the tenets of the religion of the left which commenced with Marxism, a religion whose successive stages of development over the decades have been marked by the enthronement of different tribes as the proclaimed creators of the universe. From the Marxist dogma of the class character of all truth, reality, morality and politics has come the national socialist dogma of their racial character, and the present day feminist dogma of their gender character, and in all three instances, the hatred, the rage, the revenge, the delusions of persecution, the manufacturing of oppression, the fantasies of victimhood, and the implacable, unappeasable, ruthlessly advancing will to power have remained the same, while only the specific objects and targets have changed. The latest incarnation of Marxist inspired tribalism has seen the class of the bourgeois targeted by the communists and the race of the Jews targeted by the national socialists transmuted into the male population targeted by feminists, and seen the commencement of a war between the sexes which has swept away the safeguards of the liberal system of jurisprudence built up over the course of a thousand years. Following in the footsteps of their communist and national socialist predecessors, today's feminists have weaponized sexual assault laws in a campaign to deprive their designated hate objects of every last trace of rights, freedoms, dignity and humanity. Following in the footsteps of their predecessors, they have conducted a campaign to overthrow rational jurisprudence on two fronts: on the front of substance and on the front of process. Just as in Soviet Russia, bourgeois men could be thrown into jail for the mere act of sexually touching a proletarian woman, without the use of violence and on the word of the accuser or accusers alone without evidence of any kind, and in national socialist Germany, the same rules were applied to Jewish men, so in the present day, the feminist movement has subjected the entire male population to this regime and cast a cloud of fear and uncertainty over every man alive, who lives every moment of his days not knowing when the guillotine of a false or frivolous accusation will descend upon him and cut short his career, his liberty and his life. Conviction and punishment on the basis of an uncorroborated or inconsequential sexual assault allegation: such is the essence of the new feminist jurisprudence in its war of annihilation against men. Its program and manifesto have come unexpurgated out of the playbook of the communists and the national socialists, and is as revolutionary and rejectionist in its implications for a free society, and as fearsome and terrifying in its tactics and methods, as its predecessors. Sane, reasonable, civilized people have known for thousands of years that A is always A and that sexual touching, as a category of touching, can never be held to be a criminal offense. They have known for thousands of years that the most fundamental right which a criminal defendant possesses is the right not to be convicted of a crime without evidence. They have known that an accusation or series of accusations do not in any way, shape or form constitute evidence but must be proven or established on the basis of evidence. They have known that if an accusation or series of accusations carried any form of probative weight, then a zero or series of zeroes would magically add up to the number one, and acts of libel, slander, defamation, character assassination and witchhunt hysteria would pave a royal road to the achievement of truth. They have known, as clearly and evidently as they know the noonday sun, that rape is an act of forcible sexual penetration in the face of resistance, and that women who have not resisted or attempted to resist an act of penetration, and who were not under objective duress, have not been raped. They have known that sexual penetration without consent is not necessarily rape and that women who have been penetrated while asleep or otherwise unconscious have not been raped. Whatever it is that has happened to them, it has not been rape. They have known that women who have chosen to wait years and years before making a rape accusation have not been actionably raped. They have known that women who have continued social or sexual relationships with men they have accused of rape have not been actionably raped. They have known what today's feminists have refused to know and have turned their back on in their program to convict as many men as possible of sexual assault, and to place as many men as possible behind bars, by criminalizing acts of sexual touching, by expanding the definition of rape to include acts committed without violence, and by making nonactionable cases of rape to be fully and completely actionable. The feminist weaponization of the legal system and campaign of hate has been on full display in the case against Harvey Weinstein. Uncorroborated accusations of sexual assault. Frivolous accusations of sexual harassment. Women waiting decades to make accusations and excused for waiting. Sexual relationships between the accuser and the accused after the alleged incidents deemed to be irrelevant facts. Mass accusations held to be evidence of guilt and the strength of the evidence held to increase with the number of accusations. Police investigations and courtroom proceedings biased against the accused, manufacturing false evidence, fabricating criminal cases, engaging in brazen misconduct, depriving the accused of a right to a fair trial, and ready to send him to jail after a predetermined verdict of guilty. The preservation of feminist stories and feminist justifications given primacy over the achievement of objective justice and an examination of the facts of the case. Such are the truncheons of mob justice, political prosecution, red public opinion, white hot misandry, and the latest derivative of Marxism known as the MeToo movement which have smashed the institutions of liberal jurisprudence and installed feminist imperatives and the feminist will to power in their place. The methods and tactics employed against Weinstein are a synopsis of the feminist religion of gender tribalism and have paved the way for the onset of totalitarian tyranny: "The Harvey Weinstein story broke more than two years ago, everything about it has been outsize: the scope of the allegations of sexual harassment and assault, stretching back decades; the number of his accusers, who total more than 80; and the global scale of the reckoning their stories have inspired. The prosecutors' path to the courthouse has been difficult. For months, the police considered the most promising victim in the criminal case to be Lucia Evans, who had gone on the record in The New Yorker with an allegation of sexual assault against Mr. Weinstein. But cracks appeared in the case. In October 2018, the charge based on Ms. Evans collapsed when contradictory accounts and alleged police misconduct came to light. Ms. Illuzzi said the lead detective on the case, Nicholas DiGaudio, had failed to inform prosecutors that a friend of the young woman claimed that Ms. Evans had agreed to perform oral sex on Mr. Weinstein after he promised her acting jobs in return. Ms. Evans insisted she had never consented, and Mr. DiGaudio denied withholding information from the prosecutors, but he was removed from the case. Since then, Sgt. Keri Thompson, who oversaw the inquiry, has come under internal investigation for allegations of misconduct unrelated to the Weinstein case. Mr. Weinstein has released warm emails that he and the alleged 2013 rape victim exchanged for years after the purported attack. In one, they discussed meeting the woman's mother. In another, she wrote, 'I love you, always do. But I hate feeling like a booty call. :).'

' He also produced a text message that Ms. Haley sent him months after her alleged attack: 'Hi! Just wondering if u have any news on whether Harvey will have time to see me before he leaves? X Miriam.' Donna Rotunno, Mr. Weinstein's lawyer, said of the messages from the women in the criminal case: 'These are women who spent time with him over periods of time and I think we have evidence to show that the time was nothing but positive and favorable.' In a CBS interview, Ms. Rotunno said the #MeToo movement 'allows the court of public opinion to take over the narrative' and 'puts you in a position where you're stripped of your rights.' (All Bets Are Off As Harvey Weinstein's Sexual Assault Trial Opens Today by Megan Twohey, Jodi Kantor and Jan Ransom, The New York Times, January 7, 2020). Envy is the parent of hatred. When evil, incompetent, frustrated people see those who have led successful, meaningful, achieving lives, they envy them, feel hatred toward them, and seek to tear them down and grind them into the dust. So it was with the communists against the bourgeois, with the national socialists against the Jews, and so it is with the feminists against men. Feminists have seen the traditional male attributes of intelligence and purpose, and the achievements of men in every field of endeavor reaching across five thousand years of human culture, and are filled with rancor, bitterness, madness and maniacal frenzy, and have planned a holocaust against men. With the advent of Marxism, the horsemen of the apocalypse commenced their journey through the corridors of history. In the present age, these are the horsemen of Gender, Race, Class and Sexual Orientation. Today Satan's bells have tolled and announced the opening of his Book of Revelation. Terrified historians have looked inside the pages and seen their worst nightmares come true. They have seen the reality of the parallels they have identified between the Third Reich and the present day. They have seen the face of the future: the triumph of feminist representations, feminist narratives, feminist fictions, and seen the feminist destruction of the world.

TWO MILLION DEAD, ONE QUARTER OF A NATION

Among the many exhibits on display at the Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum in Phnom Penh are a cabinet filled with human skulls and a map of Cambodia made of human skulls. The eye sockets stare vacantly out into space, showing no interest whatever in the world around them, but scream out in horror, shock, outrage and utter belief at the evil they have suffered. Between the hours of 9 AM and 5 PM, Monday through Friday, thousands of people pass these exhibits and see a story unfolded in the deep spaces of the sockets, a story which the global red establishment has for decades sought either to censor, suppress, downplay or defend. It is the story of Marxism enacted in its purest form in the interrogation rooms, the torture cells, the extermination camps and the killing fields of Cambodia. But the eye sockets which follow every spectator from the moment he walks into the museum until the moment he leaves, and which haunt him for the rest of his days, tell a story which can no longer be hidden away from public view and which no sane, civilized, reasonable individual can ever justify or excuse, in any way, shape or form. Conceived and shouted out on the pages of Marx, planned and carried out by his loyal red Cambodian henchmen, and played out in the lives of every man, woman and child in the Cambodian nation, this is a story of the red power and red peril which have sullied the history of the past one hundred years, underlain the establishment of the communist states, fascist states, welfare states and mixed economy states which have ruled the late modern age, and composed a bill of indictment of the West and its radicalism, its romanticism and its Faustian philosophy as nothing else in history of the West has. In the Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum, frozen death looks fixedly at the nation and at the world and tells a story of red criminality which beggars belief, beggars description and has defied the imagination of those devoted to the cause of human social and cultural development. Under the leadership of Pol Pot, the authors of this Cambodian tragedy have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has radically pushed the people into communism and wiped out every professional and occupational class. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a Maoist republic, a socialist agrarian republic, and a cultural revolution whose aim and destination is mass chaos, nationwide destruction, social regression, breakdown in homes, panic in neighborhoods, violence in the streets, occupational leveling, and a headlong plunge into the primeval waters of tribal warfare. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a Marxist necropolis which has emptied the schools, cities, offices and professional occupations, deported the population into slave labor camps, and abused them, starved them, blackened them with disease, and executed them in one fell swoop. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a great leap forward into the swamplands of collectivism and into a round the clock death house called Famine. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a Marxist mass grave haunted by the wraiths of abduction, indoctrination, starvation, exhaustion, sickness and blood stained pick axes. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a primitive Marxist pasture grazed by the proletariat and free from all foreign, bourgeois influences of intellect, industry, technology, human flourishing and human civilization. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a Marxist-Leninist Society, a Stalinist society, a Maoist society, and a new people's democracy which has brought back the noble past when savage proletarian tribes ruled the land and rational advancement was nowhere in sight. They have proclaimed that a utopian society is a backward rural commune and whose populace has been isolated from the West and purified of the bourgeois poisons of human intelligence applied to scientific, technological, economic and industrial goals. They have proclaimed that the mass killing of people who perform high level knowledge work in skilled professions is a necessity to purify the world of the bourgeois exploiters and parasites of the people. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a regime of forced labor, forced resettlement, forced collectivization, nationwide expropriation, state terror and unmitigated inhumanity defended in the name of social mobilization and social justice. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has nationalized the land, the offices, the factories, and the human soul and personality and kept the population in line with the sounds of gunfire and the drumbeats of red propaganda. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a totalitarian regime created in the image of the Soviet Union, Maoist China and national socialist Germany, a regime which has enacted violence and terror as the supreme law of the land, swept up the population in a crusade of envy and hatred, smashed the engines of progress and civilization, and laid waste to the factories of success, wealth, innovation and production. They have proclaimed that a progressive statesmen is one who is mentored by the Devil, who operates in accordance with a Maoist plan, recruits the waste and debris swirling in the sewers of society, calls them the people's social justice cadres, and instructs them on how to employ the harshest and most brutal methods of killing imaginable, how to destroy the buildings and monuments of civilization as completely and thoroughly as possible, how to purge and execute the voices of liberal dissent as rigorously as possible, and how to cleanse society of the bourgeois corruption of human intelligence, rational flourishing and entrepreneurial labor, in the construction of a pure socialist society. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is based upon Marx's animal reductionist theory of labor and has rounded up and arrested anyone bearing the slightest trace of intellectual qualities, banned the existence of those who work with their minds, skills and professional training, placed the Jewish Badge upon students, teachers, journalists, scientists, inventors, doctors, lawyers, entrepreneurs and business leaders, and committed an act of pure Marxist genocide which will guide and inspire the oppressed and victimized classes for all eternity. Genocide, holocaust, proletarian racism, proletarian ethnicism, proletarian nationalism, proletarian classism, proletarian expansion, proletarian lebensraum and a worldwide proletarian empire: such are the words and phrases which have framed the recent history of Cambodia and stained its soil for all time to come. Cambodia today is dotted with monuments to Marxism. But these are not the usual adulatory monuments constructed across the West from Boston to Barcelona to Brussels to Berlin. These are icons of atrocities committed in the name of Marxism, crimes against humanity which have sprung directly from the pages of this fearsome and terrifying creed. The faces of Marxism are the skulls of two million people, one quarter of the Cambodian nation, who were massacred by psychopathic individuals who correctly saw in Marxism a green light to act out their impulses. Every man, woman and child who is a knowledge worker, or the son of a knowledge worker, or the daughter of a knowledge worker, or the husband of a knowledge worker, or the wife of a knowledge worker, or who has descended in the most distant bloodlines from a knowledge worker, has to die because he is either himself an exploiter of the proletariat and does no work, or is related by blood or marriage to those who were exploiters of the proletariat and did no work. So proclaims the racist religion of Marx which has signaled to the psychopaths of the world that they have a moral sanction and permission, and a moral right and duty, to do what they secretly desire to do because it gives them pleasure to do it and releases their aggressive energies and tensions when they do it: to kill as many innocent people as possible throughout the world, in every department, sector, corner and recess of society, whenever and wherever they can see them and find them. Marxist killing is the mass murderer's ultimate dream and the red Cambodians under the leadership of the Khmer Rouge put this dream into reality from 1975 to 1979 when they liquidated the Cambodian nation. Buddhist monks across Cambodia pray for the souls of those slaughtered by the students and followers of Marx. But across the West, the victims of this holocaust have been forgotten, the chronicles erased, the documentation expunged, the reports deleted, the denunciations censored, the facts denied, the crimes mitigated, the cruelty justified, as the cult of political correctness marches on to its finale in a global bloodbath of political, religious, ethnic and private killing, guided and inspired by the reds.

FREAKS

Phineas Taylor Barnum was an American showman who founded the Barnum and Bailey Circus in 1871. An essential part of his circus was the freak show, an exhibition of human oddities intended to shock the spectators. At this time, the disintegration of the West under the hammer blows of subjectivism was not yet in full swing, and there was a semblance of commitment to objective reality, and freaks were regarded as just that and were not granted any form of respectability or legitimacy. One hundred years later, the romanticist rejection of reality which forms the basis of Western Culture, and distinguishes it from Classical Culture as night distinguishes itself from day, was approaching the height of its activity and a new movement was born: the transgender movement. According to this movement, a person's gender is not biologically determined by genes sequenced in chromosomes but can be changed at will by chemicals, surgery or by one's own feelings. A half a century later, Western romanticism has ascended to the height of its activity, elevated transgenderism to the status of a global church, religion and orthodoxy, and composed the fearsome, terrifying and imminent downfall of the West. Writing this tragic play called the West a thousand years ago, the sorcerer Faust, the father of romanticism, placed the philosophers and activists of the transgender religion on center stage in the twenty first century, wrote the script for them, predetermined their words and actions, and had them blast out a program and manifesto for the moral, spiritual and intellectual destruction of the world. These twenty first century avatars of Western romanticism have proclaimed that gender identity and gender expression override the gender assigned at birth and can create new realities. They have proclaimed that there is no such thing as being masculine or feminine because the laws of logic are fantasies produced by the Age of Enlightenment and nothing really is as it is, and people are rather nonbinary, bigender, pangender, genderfluid or agender in character. They have proclaimed that there are not two genders but an infinite number of genders, each of which is created in accordance with one's wishes, whims and arbitrary impulses. They have proclaimed that those whose gender identity matches their biological identity are repressed cisgenders and need to be broadened, liberated and enlightened by the smiling, sky arched, rainbow vistas of transgenderism. They have proclaimed that hormone replacement therapy and sex reassignment surgery are the only means of eliminating gender dysphoria and should be funded by taxpayers as a universal human right. They have proclaimed that in reality A is never A and individuals move between male and female, or are both male and female simultaneously, or are beyond genders, or are between genders, or are multiply gendered, and to believe that individuals who perceive themselves to be members of the opposite are in need of psychotherapy is to promote bigotry and intolerance and peddle the false idols of reason, science and objective reality. They have proclaimed that boys who identify as girls are girls trapped in boys' bodies and should be considered as girls and treated like girls. They have proclaimed that transgender people are an innocent sexual minority victimized by the cultural prejudice and oppression of rational analysis and must be liberated from this and considered to be as normal and wholesome as gender adjusted individuals. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which affirms that individuals have the power to remake themselves and invent and reinvent their gender and that males must be addressed with female pronouns if they choose to become female, and females must be addressed with male pronouns if they choose to become male, and the human person is a product of the human will and can be transformed by means of masculine or effeminate behavior, artificial male or female appearances, or surgical mutilation of body parts. They have proclaimed that though a person's sex is male, if he identifies as female, then he is female, and should be treated and addressed as a female. They have proclaimed that the idea that people have a gender, which is either male or female, and cannot be chosen or changed, rests upon the bourgeois superstition that natural realities exist independently of the human will and can be altered to conform to one's own feelings or preferences. They have proclaimed that people should adopt the gender they desire to adopt and be unconcerned with such things as gender identities running contrary to reality, because only the regressive and the reactionary believe that there exists such a thing as an objective, determinate, natural reality. They have proclaimed that if individuals believe that they are a member of the opposite sex, and if they identify as a member of the opposite sex, and if they undergo surgery and hormonal treatment to make them appear like a member of the opposite sex, then in fact and in reality they are a member of the opposite sex and should be granted legal recognition as such. They have proclaimed that gender reassignment surgery is a legitimate medical procedure because it is an indisputable fact that contradictions exist and that what is called reality is not absolute but is subject to our yearnings and desires, and individuals who identify as males but were born female, or who identify as female but were born male, require the ministrations of medicine to cure them of their suffering and affliction. They have proclaimed that the intentional damaging and disfigurement of well functioning bodily parts is morally acceptable because gender categories are determined by our emotions and have nothing whatever to do with what people really are and people really are nothing definite, specific or naturally determined. They have proclaimed that it is not a symptom of mental illness to believe that one is a sex which one is not because nothing is given in nature, nothing is truly male or female, nothing is metaphysically real, and to believe otherwise is to wield the lash of bigoted psychiatrists and reactionary mental health professionals who stubbornly cling to the superstitions inherited from the Age of Reason. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has criminalized gender identity disorder therapy on the grounds that the notion of a false belief about one's gender is meaningless and absurd and mental faculties exist to create reality and not to objectively grasp it. They have proclaimed that the belief that transgender individuals suffer from a cognitive or psychological defect and are incapable of achieving a true self perception rests upon the fallacy of assuming that reality is something which is not plastic or indeterminate and not a product of our own mental states, and exists out there independently of our spiritual, psychical or emotional needs. They have proclaimed that because the human person is undetermined by biological facts and can be transformed by human beings, transgender women are just as truly women as biological women, transgender men are just as truly men as biological men, and state and private businesses must cover gender reassignment surgery, transgender women must be granted access to women's bathrooms, transgender men must be able to play on men's sports teams, and parents must be prohibited from referring to their infants as male or female to avoid the risk of imposing a gender upon them with which they may not later identify. After a thousand years of Western cultural development, the play has concluded, the last act has finished, the curtain has lowered, and monsters have leaped off the stage and scared, shocked, horrified and terrified civilized people throughout the world. These are the activists, the professors and the monsters of transgenderism and as ordained by the author and director of the West, Faust the Prince of Darkness, they have launched a crusade. This is a crusade of ontological rebellion. This is a crusade to blank out and render dysfunctional man's mental faculties, suppress the apprehension of truth, halt the achievement of knowledge, deny the immutable nature of man, repudiate the recognition that what exists are noncontradictory, either/or, binary absolutes, and to reclassify a psychological disorder as grounds to declare war against reality. Rejecting the self evident fact, available to all individuals who possess normal, sound, sane mental equipment, that the definition of male and female is biological in character and not man made, today's doctors of subjectivism are the riders of an apocalypse. They have launched a war to remove, assault, destroy, amputate and mutilate the facts of reality, to smash the forms of nature and turn them into something else, to transform false beliefs about gender identity into true beliefs, and to make their feelings and whims factories of world shaping and world construction. In their insane visions they have succeeded, and logic and reality have been rendered completely malleable, and these horsemen riding for a thousand years and riding since the West began, have plunged the world into a permanent winter time of spiritual corruption.

CLASSICIDE: THE CRIME OF THE CENTURY

Black is the darkest of all colors due to the complete absence and absorption of light. Among decent, civilized people, black is used as a metaphor to describe a certain form of hatred which includes, contains and subsumes all other hatreds and is marked by the total absence and exclusion of all virtue and goodness. This hatred is the supreme hatred, the hatred of all hatreds, and forms the very definition of the Prince of Darkness himself. This is the hatred of a class: the class all those who are intelligent, purposeful, successful, well doing and rationally flourishing in life, and it has defined the political developments which have taken place over the past one hundred years as nothing else has. Born of the parents Envy, Jealousy and Covetousness, the lowest and basest emotions ever to sully the human soul, this hatred is primordial; it is as old as mankind itself; it constitutes the essential expression of the character and psychology of the masses; it spreads and multiplies like a cancer whenever and wherever the masses congregate and are granted political power; and it has been the engine of expropriation, equalization, nationalization, collectivization and cold blooded murder of millions of innocent people throughout the world. The philosophers Socrates, Plato and Aristotle warned their countrymen of the kind of world produced when envy and hatred and their embodiments in the masses are placed in control. It is a world of violence, lawlessness, mob rule, the empowerment of the dregs of society, and the execution of those who are great, wise, knowledgeable, noble, able and virtuous. The preeminent philosopher of class hatred was Marx. In the nineteenth century, the earth convulsed, a cloud of black and yellow smoke shot upward from the bottomless depths, and a mighty roar filled all of space and shook the foundations of the heavens. Satan entered the company of men in the garb of a red agitator and propagandist. Evicted from Germany as a plague bacillus and allowed to proselytize in Britain under the shelter of free speech, Marx set forth his religion of class hatred in the form of a reductionist, materialist theory of human history and society. According to Marx, the mind does not exist and what is called mind is nothing more than a form of matter. Thus man has no rational, spiritual essence but a purely material, animal essence. Thus the material means of production determine all our so-called thinking and ideas and individuals are but helpless marionettes of the rule of machines. Thus mindless, unskilled, muscular labor is the source of all wealth and those who are able, intelligent, professional, entrepreneurial, innovative and managerial perform no work, produce nothing of value, and only exploit those who do, and steal the profits which rightfully belong to the workers. This class of exploiters and parasites, called the bourgeois, must accordingly be plundered, dispossessed, enslaved and exterminated by the true class of workers, called the proletariat, and the most just and progressive type of society is one in which the brute violence of the proletariat has become the supreme law of the land and those who live and work by the use of reason and knowledge have been sacrificed and immolated upon the altars of proletarian social justice. The ascendancy of mass ideologies and mass movements in the twentieth century resulted in the formal, academic acceptance of Marx's animal labor theory of wealth creation and the pervasive spread of the politics of envy and hatred. The Marxists who gained power in the last century and who rule the present day have set forth a program and manifesto for the destruction of every trace and semblance of progress and civilization through the commencement of a regime of discrimination, genocide and holocaust against the members of a social and economic class. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which the entrepreneurial producers of wealth and creators of businesses are not allowed to die of natural causes but are systematically shot down because of their class background. They have proclaimed that individuals exhibiting enterprise and initiative do not found businesses but society founds businesses, the shiftless, the indolent and the unambitious found enterprises, and it is to this class that businesses and all the wealth which they produce belong. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has deprived knowledge workers and skilled craftsmen of all their rights and freedoms. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has undermined the freedom of the individual and launched a campaign of extermination against the exploiting classes of entrepreneurs, industrialists, intellectuals and all those who live by the use of the mind. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has demonized, persecuted and beaten to death those who are successful, wealthy and intellectually trained and skilled, eliminated all private social and economic classes, taken possession of all land, capital, property and income, and absorbed villages, towns, cities and states into a forced labor prison system ruled by the bureaucrats, officials and secret police officers of the communist party. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which socioeconomic status determines political status, and since the class of uneducated, unskilled, muscular laborers alone possesses a work ethic and alone produces wealth, this class has been granted absolute political power and the classes of skilled knowledge workers have been reduced to their rightless vassals and serfs. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a political movement dedicated to waging the people's class struggle until every last vestige of human freedom and liberty has been eliminated and a proletarian socialist state has been established upon the ruins of civilization. They have proclaimed that those who champion the freedom, dignity and worth of the individual are rightist, bourgeois, counterrevolutionaries who must be suppressed by a movement of social regression, cultural degeneration and mob violence planned and organized by the ministers and agitators of the people's liberation state. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a racist society in which the children of intellectuals, business people and entrepreneurs are condemned as historical counterrevolutionaries and are made to suffer the same fate as their parents: segregation, discrimination, persecution and execution. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a regime ruled by the people's red guards who incite social envy, social rancor, social violence and social chaos, a regime which condemns as rightist, Western imperialists and class enemies all those who fight against socialism, statism and state sponsored fear, and targets them for total destruction. Nowhere has the sickness of our times, the sickness of class hatred, been illustrated with more tragic and melancholy clarity than in America, where it donned the garb of the president of the nation and threw its raw flesh into the ravenous jaws of the masses. Listen to the words of the leader of a nation which once was the world's soaring statue of justice and opportunity and its impregnable arsenal of freedom and liberty. Listen to the words of a twenty first century fuhrer assembled, programmed, and set into motion in the dark, satanic mills of Marx. Those who are intelligent, knowledgeable, enterprising, dynamic, industrious and hardworking, those who thrive and flourish by dint of their energy, initiative, ambition, risk taking and investment, and those who have started businesses and made them expand across the nation and reach the four corners of the earth, are the mortal enemies of the state and society. They are the mortal enemies because muscles and not minds are the source of all wealth and there is no such thing as individual action or creation but only group action and group creation, and whenever we think and work we do so together, as one, as a single, mystical organism, and nothing belongs to anyone and true morality demands the immolation of the individual and the sacrifice of all to all: "There are a lot of wealthy, successful Americans who agree with me--because they want to give something back. They know they didn't--look, if you've been successful, you didn't get there on your own. You didn't get there on your own. I'm always struck by people who think, well, it must be because I was just so smart. There are a lot of smart people out there. It must be because I worked harder than everybody else. Let me tell you something--there are a whole bunch of hardworking people out there. If you were successful, somebody along the line gave you some help. There was a great teacher somewhere in your life. Somebody helped to create this unbelievable American system that we have that allowed you to thrive. Somebody invested in roads and bridges--if you've got a business, you didn't build that. Somebody else made that happen. The Internet didn't get invented on its own. Government research created the Internet so that all the companies could make money off the Internet. The point is, is that when we succeed, we succeed not because of our individual initiative, but also because we do things together." (Remarks By The President At A Campaign Event in Roanoke, Virginia, July 13, 2012). Composed in the nightstands, closets, basements, alleyways and sewers of society are sheets and tracts of political pornography. Over the past one hundred years, these effluvia from the conduits of Satan have poured out into mainstream politics, formed the basis of the cultural and intellectual establishment, and been consumed by every man, woman and child. The dawn of the last century was announced with a thunderclap and the explosion of a volcano. This was the thunderclap and the volcano of mass politics and the fragments of civilization, blackened beyond black by Satan's sewer grease of class hatred, have buried the planet. Whirlwinds, hurricanes, shocks and inundations of class hatred: such is the cataclysm of the twenty first century in the final act of the West.

CODE NAME: CRITICAL THEORY

In 1923, less than a decade after the Russian Revolution and five years after the failed Marxist revolution in Germany, the red virus expanding across the world found its first academic home in the West at the Goethe University in Frankfurt. Founded by Marxist patron Felix Weil, this first Marxist think tank operated under two code names in order to avoid association with Marxism and to conceal its true subversive aims and character. The first code name was that of the organization itself, the Institute for Social Research, and the second code name, critical theory, served to conceal the institute's Marxist ideology. The institute's official, innocuous sounding Journal of Social Research was an organ of the German Communist Party and a faithful voice of support for the Soviet Union. The Marxist intellectuals, academics and political dissidents who filled the ranks of the institute hated the liberal democracy of the Weimar Republic, hated the Western world around them, and sought to sweep away the institutions of the Enlightenment with a movement of brute violence and totalitarian dictatorship dressed up as a people's crusade of social emancipation. Soon teaching in universities and research centers throughout the world, the professors of critical theory dispensed with dispassionate analyses and neutral assessments and offered vilifications and calumniations of the capitalist system and songs from the sewers in praise of class envy, class hatred, class revolution, and the class overthrow of progress and civilization. Incubated in the hothouses of Frankfurt and Weimar, the new barbarians have raised the specter of Marx across the world and set forth a program and manifesto for the enactment of a red agenda and the repeal of liberal modernity. They have proclaimed that the idea of an objective world is a bourgeois fiction and has no place in a progressive people's philosophy. Scientific theories are not subject to empirical confirmation and are not mirrors of reality. Logic and language are not pictures of anything beyond themselves and it is meaningless to assert that a statement is either true or false. The naive notion of knowledge impartiality must be replaced by a recognition of the relative, social and embedded nature of all knowledge. All knowledge is relative to the ever moving currents of history, culture, machines and technological conditions. The subjective character of perception and the impossibility of perceiving such a thing as physical reality is proclaimed by Max Horkheimer: "The facts which our senses present to us are socially preformed in two ways: through the historical character of the object perceived and through the historical character of the perceiving organ". (Traditional and Critical Theory by Max Horkheimer). The new barbarians have proclaimed that truth is purely pragmatic in character and statements which are true are those which advance the people's revolutionary actions and transform reality in accordance with the needs and interests of the proletariat. They have proclaimed that reliance upon rationality and the rule of law is a part of bourgeois philosophy and has no place in a progressive society which subordinates truth and law to class struggle, class revolution and the class will to power. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has brought about the political and economic empowerment of the proletariat at the expense of the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual. They have proclaimed that the notion of an absolute reality is a product of capitalist society and must be replaced by Marx's theory of the social construction of reality and the class relativity of all truth. They have proclaimed that a progressive philosophy is one which has subjected the metaphysics of objective reality to social criticism and class criticism and replaced it with the recognition that what is called reality is a political and ideological construct and an open, indeterminate system. They have proclaimed that mind and consciousness are figments of the bourgeois imagination; everything in society is reducible to matter and economics; people's systems of production produce their systems of belief; people's machines create their ideas and thinking; and only the deluded bourgeois believe the opposite, that ideas and thinking create machines. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system of exploitation because it grants rights and freedoms to those who earn their wealth by their intelligence and initiative and must be replaced by collective form of ownership and collective means of production, by a system of socialism, which reserves rights and freedoms to the true sources of all wealth: to the masses of muscles dressed up as human beings and to masses of human appearing debris, detritus, dross and waste matter. They have proclaimed that scientific theories, being established by empirical data and being objectively true, have no social or political legitimacy and must be replaced by a philosophy of class consciousness, class reflection, class logic and class subjectivity. They have proclaimed that the notion of an absolute factual reality is an instrument of bourgeois social domination and must be replaced by the recognition that our conceptual schemes and categories must serve the cause of proletarian justice and purport to prove that muscular laborers are superior to intellectual laborers, regardless of whether such schemes and proofs are true or false. They have proclaimed that the only reality is social reality, class reality and politically shaped and transformed reality. They have proclaimed that there are no truths which exist outside the state or society, and what our social and political interests are, determine what we should hold to be real and true. They have proclaimed that morality has nothing whatever to do with natural facts and involves a total rejection of reality in favor of a constructivism based upon social needs and interests: "Human interests derive both from nature and from the cultural break with nature." (Knowledge And Human Interests by Jurgen Habermas). They have proclaimed that there is no such thing as a neutral, detached, objectively independent reality, as bourgeois empiricists claim there is, and reality is instead that which is implanted in consciousness and is subjective, intersubjective and social in character, being determined by majority vote and the consensus of the mob. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is an instinctual society, a gratification society, a sadistic society and a violent society upon those mighty throne sits a ferocious, remorseless, unconscious animal king called the Proletariat. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system of culture industries and cultural commodities and must be replaced by a regime of social, economic, political, moral and spiritual regression in which there is no culture, no money, no exchange, no refinement and no intellectual achievement but only endless plundering and clarion calls for class war in the savage jungles of the proletariat. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a biologically organized society which exalts animal energy, the repression of reason, the beauty of violence, the fulfillment of the proletarian will to power, and the collapse of civilization to the pounding rhythms of red propaganda and the crashing waves of the people's fascist tribes. The worship of irrationality as liberation from the shackles of the bourgeois Enlightenment; the promotion of disturbed psychological states focused upon the mass murder of millions targeted as the bourgeois; and the condemnation of constitutional rights, the right of free speech, the right of free dissent, the right of untrammelled debate and the right to transgress the bounds of political correctness, as the running jackals of capitalist ideology: such were the fearsome and terrifying programs and policies authored by Marx and transmitted around the world by his front professors and front institutes clothed in respectable academic garb. Masquerading as critical theory, Marxism entered the minds of students across the West and made them deny that science is an empirical enterprise and that knowledge is a mirror of nature, and made them view reason as a handmaiden of ideology and worship violence as an expression of social liberation. Founded with the aim of promoting Marxism in Germany, the Institute for Social Research was shut down in 1933 by a brother movement of national socialists, who retained the framework, methods and polylogism of Marxism but substituted race for class. After its closure in Germany, the institute moved to New York City, where it was greeted with open arms by Columbia University and laid the basis for the establishment of the New School for Social Research, America's premier academic Marxist front organization. Max Horkheimer, Theodor Adorno, Herbert Marcuse, Walter Benjamin, Friedrich Pollock, Leo Lowenthal, Eric Fromm, Jurgen Habermas and Richard Bernstein: such were carriers of a red plague inoffensively named critical theory to maintain its secrecy, a plague which traveled express, traveled nonstop, traveled faster than the speed of light, and established staging areas in capital cities and prestigious ivory towers throughout the world. It traveled en route to a fearsome and terrifying destination: the destruction of a rational, liberal, capitalist, humanly flourishing way of life.

GENOCIDE IN RUSSIA

On May 19, 1849, the final issue of Karl Marx's journal, Neue Rheinische Zeitung, appeared, printed in red ink. This color has symbolized not only the power and ideology of Marxism but the actual arc of blood and terror which emanated from Russia and reached all the way around the world. Marx's ideas, books, journals and newspaper ink found their first political home, sink and sewer in Russia, the ancient land of four beasts: the steppes, the Slavs, and the plundering warrior tribes of the Vikings and Mongols. Bordering eighteen nations and spanning eleven time zones but never touched for a moment in its one thousand year history by the noonday rays of reason and enlightenment, Russia was the world's first Marxist state, Marxist empire and perpetrator of Marxist mass murder. Traveling like a plague bacillus from Germany and implanting itself firmly in the darkest of darklands, in the coldest of coldlands, swirling with the Arctic, midnight satanic currents of mysticism and irrationalism, Marxism transformed Russia into a charnel house, necropolis and vault of living corpses without precedent in the history of mankind. In November 1917, a Western ideology born in the radical universities, lecture halls and student groups of Germany ascended to the throne of power in Russia and enacted a program and manifesto for the destruction of civilization. The voices of Marx in the Eastern "Land of the Rus" proclaimed that mind does not exist, that all that exists is purely material in character, and accordingly that the source of all wealth is brute, physical, muscular labor. They proclaimed that matter, economics, factories and production are the foundations of all so-called thought, which is but an unreal, spectral superstructure of matter, so that people's machines create and control their ideas, and not the other way around, as deluded bourgeois common sense maintains. The magic power of machines to create all the relations, institutions, structures and systems of society and to bring about revolution is proclaimed by Marx in A Contribution To The Critique of Political Economy: "At a certain stage of development, the material productive forces of society [machines] come into conflict with the existing relations of production or with the property relations within the framework of which they have operated hitherto. From forms of development of the productive forces these relations turn into their fetters. Then begins an era of social revolution." The Marxists proclaimed that since the source of all wealth is brute muscular labor, the class of muscular laborers, called the proletariat, is the rightful owner of all the profits produced by business and industry and has a right to seize these profits from the parasites and exploiters who have stolen them: the class of entrepreneurs, risk takers, knowledge workers, inventors and innovators, called the bourgeois, and to enslave and exterminate this class. The animalistic nature of man, without admixture of human reason or human dignity, and the consequent class character of all truth, morality, politics and history, is proclaimed by Marx and Engels in The Communist Manifesto: "The history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggles. Freeman and slave, patrician and plebeian, lord and serf, guild master and journeyman, in a word, oppressor and oppressed, stood in constant opposition to one another, carried on uninterrupted, now hidden, now open fight, a fight that each time ended, either in a revolutionary reconstitution of society at large, or in the common ruin of the contending classes". The Marxists who took control of Russia proclaimed that capitalists do no work while workers who earn their money can never be capitalists, the profits retained by capitalists after paying the workers their wages represent unearned surplus value which belongs wholly to the workers, and the two classes of capitalists and workers face each other as oppressors and the oppressed, plunderers and the plundered, and peaceful coexistence between the two is a moral absurdity and can never be tolerated. They proclaimed that under capitalism, the profits of production are unjustly placed into the hands of the employers, who do no work and do not deserve the profits, and this injustice results in the estrangement and alienation of the workers from their work and products, and this alienation can only be reversed by the onset of a class war to repatriate the illicit profits in the hands of the employers back into the hands of the proletariat. They proclaimed that the economic value of a commodity is determined by the total amount of muscular labor required to produce it, and therefore when it is sold, all the revenue belongs to the muscular laboring class of the proletariat. They proclaimed that society does not consist of discrete, autonomous individuals but of mystical relations, interrelations, collectivities and totalities, and all forms of consciousness are forms of social consciousness. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has converted private individuals, private relations, private businesses and private markets into the property of the state and society and made the bourgeois notions of human freedom and human dignity disappear from the face of the earth. They proclaimed that socialism is the wave of the future; its victory over capitalism is a historical necessity and inevitability; and the totalitarian lockstep which it imposes will result in a vast improvement in the productivity of labor and the freedom of the working class. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a Marxist society which legitimizes acts of violence and destruction without limiting principles, because all such principles rest upon bourgeois ethical norms which protect the illusory rights and dignity of the individual. They proclaimed that the commission of mass crimes is a necessity of the socialist system because entrepreneurs and knowledge workers are the trash of the world and deserve to be swept into the dung heap of history. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which practices revolutionary terror and the killing of innocent people because it understands that all true morality seeks to advance the proletarian will to power. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a workers' revolution which has absorbed, subsumed, engulfed and taken control of the voices of liberty and ground them into dust. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one one which makes an appeal to faith and not reason, whose religion and church is class hatred and class fanaticism, whose sacred texts are the works of Marx, Lenin, Stalin and Mao, whose high priests are the ministers and commissars of the communist party, and whose crusade is directed against the forces of nonbelief: the voices of truth, the soldiers of liberty, the producers of wealth and the institutions of civilization. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a regime of control, coercion, intimidation and destruction directed against the citizens of truth and reason, condemned as rightists and wreckers, and all that they represent: a free world working toward virtue, perfection and human flourishing. In 1917 a conflagration swept through the cities and steppes of Russia, ignited by the incendiaries of Marxism. Blazing to the point of white heat, this Marxist inferno of class hatred incinerated the world of mind, reason, truth, morality, justice, law, decency, benevolence and good will. The ashes, cinders, residue and dross remaining formed the fearsome and terrifying new world of Russia. This was the inhuman ruins composed of outcasts, criminals, vagabonds, beggars and idlers, together with their red agitators, propagandists, demagogues and commissars. Reductive materialism. Class reality. Class consciousness. Class envy. Class hatred. Class war. The muscular labor theory of value. The dictatorship of the proletariat. Collective ownership of the mind, the body, the person, the means of production, and every good and service produced in society. Such were the words and phrases searched for and collected at the bottom of a Marxist furnace called Russia. They were scavenged by psychopaths who found in them a formal, articulated political program to justify the killing of millions of innocent people and thereby gratify their deepest and most fundamental impulses. The preeminent equations championed by Marxism are the following: matter equals reality, class consciousness equals truth, collectivism equals the state, and muscular labor equals wealth and profits. These false identifications have been unmasked by none other than psychopaths themselves, who know the one true equation of Marxism and joyously exult in it. They are true faces of Marxism and the true face of Marx himself, and they know as Marx himself knew, that Marxism equals mass murder. This was the stark reality which decimated Russia and terrorized the world.

THE GREAT LEAP INTO TERROR

On October 1, 1949, at 3 PM in Tiananmen Square, in the new capital Beijing, three thousand years of Chinese culture and civilization came crashing to an end with the victory of communism in the new People's Republic of China. Sung out in a new national anthem, chanted in a new motto, unfurled in a new national flag, and blasted out in a twenty one gun salute, the religion of Marx became the law of the land and cast a shadow of doom across an ancient nation. This was the religion of reductive materialism, the religion which said that mind is an illusion and that nothing exists except matter and its movements and modifications, that there is no such thing as intellectual labor and there is only brute, unskilled muscular labor, that this muscular labor is the source of all wealth and profits, that the class of intellectual laborers, such as entrepreneurs and innovators, comprises a bourgeois, capitalist class of idlers, parasites, exploiters and oppressors of the true working class, and this working class of proletarians has the right and the duty to expropriate, enslave and liquidate the capitalists. In one terrifying line, in one terrifying sentence, and in ten terrifying words, mind does not exist and all that exists is matter, the subsequent history of China would be written and a philosophical justification of mass murder provided to advance the psychopathic impulses of the new red ruling class. The history of China after the victory of communism is the development and unfolding of the two satanic equations which civilized people saw composed upon every page of Marx's works, saw digging the graves of Eastern Europe, saw advancing like a hangman's shadow across face of Asia, saw infiltrating the West with treason and conspiracy, and saw written across the new skies of a once venerable Confucian land: reductive materialism equals the denial of human labor and human dignity and Marxism equals mass murder. With the works of Marx in their hands, the Chinese communists under the leadership of Mao Zedong proclaimed that they would "look to the East" and look to the Soviet Union and the communist bloc as guides, models, inspirations and allies in the construction of their own red totalitarian state. Purchasing Western ideological imports from German universities and British reading rooms, the alien reds who took over China issued a program and manifesto for the destruction of human freedom and human development in the home of the world's oldest civilization. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has rejected all liberal economic programs and prepared for a socialist transition into tyranny. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has instituted an antirightist campaign to eliminate the voices of capitalism who are opposed to the people's collectivization of the body, mind, spirit and soul of man. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has been built up with the aid of Soviet schools, education, training, industries, corporations, factories, agriculture and infrastructure and has surrendered its sovereignty and the rights of its citizens to a movement and conspiracy spanning the four corners of the earth. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a social and cultural drive toward collectivization, Stalinization and the people's totalitarian oppression. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a communist giant which wields a butcher's knife as long and wide as the heavens, as hot and blazing as the fire of the sun, and able to strike down the voices of capitalist freedom and liberal dissent wherever and whenever they are found and whatever their strength or numbers. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a radical Maoist regime and nonstop May Day celebration which is festooned with portraits of Marxist dictators and has renounced the bourgeois virtues of nonaggression, peaceful coexistence and mutual respect in the name of class war, class revolution and the class will to power. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a red government, a red military, a red army, a red fleet, a red guerrilla force, a red culture, a red economy, and a frozen red wasteland which has driven out the defenders of individual rights and the rule of law and in which no sane, civilized, self respecting individual would care to live. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a vast cooperative and people's commune in which people breathe, live, work and sacrifice together and have hurled their dignity and autonomy into the people's furnaces of social responsibility and emerged pressed and stamped as servants of the state. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a factory of industrial and agricultural production manned by underground dwelling workers ruled by red masters, red machines and a red temple of Moloch. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a public space without personal privacy of any kind, a regime of total militarization whose red pioneers and red guard formations have conscripted every man, woman and child on the planet. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a red propaganda machine propelling slogans of social equity and community organizing into the hearts and minds of spiritually dead workers and iterating the single, monotonous tones of class hatred across the moral catacombs where they live. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a radical political movement organized by the government which has planned violence against the people, organized famine against the people, engendered unending disasters to afflict the people, and worked the people beyond their strength and capacities in order to reduce them to starving, exhausted, shapeless, pulverized masses in abject service and submission to the state. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which everyone is equal, both the scum and the achievers, the shiftless and the purposeful, the plunderers and the honest toilers, and the people's liberation army has kicked and beaten the voices of virtue and integrity and promoted the man of the future as a social justice warrior colored the reddest of red: a psychopathic killer lacking sympathy, compassion, reason, conscience and physical sensation and able to kill anybody anywhere at the flash of an impulse. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose population centers have been turned upside down and reduced to wreckage by tidal waves of nationalization, social planning, state repression, and the mass murder of liberal intellectuals, journalists guided by the precepts of honesty and accuracy, and teachers and scholars who speak the language of truth and morality to the commissars of political correctness. People's owned homes, people's owned communes, people's own crops, people's owned resources, people's owned minds, people's owned bodies, people's own production, people's owned distribution and people's own exchanges: such was the picture of China which emerged after the communist revolution of 1949. It emerged painted in the colors and brushstrokes of arrests, beatings, torture, rampages, temples, treasures and books burned, the banishment and liquidation of all those condemned as enemies of the class, and a personality cult of magic and miracles surrounding the person of Mao Zedong. These were the colors and brushstrokes painted by extremists, delinquents and youths from indoctrination schools with nowhere to go but into a life of violence. These were the colors which cast a pall of sickness over China from which it will never recover or be rehabilitated. After three thousand years of shining intellectual achievement within the customs and institutions of free people, China lay ravaged and prostrate by invasion and war launched by the reds in the 1940s. Morally and spiritually, China came to an end with Mao's proclamation of victory in 1949 as communist urban communities, rural communities, agriculture and industry swallowed up the nation. Collectivization, state control over society, slave labor camps and killing centers set up in the name of land reform, people's liberation and social justice for the working class was the Marxist model of tyranny which Mao, his henchmen and his mobs purchased from the Soviets and imposed upon the voices of freedom in China. Chronic mental disorder, violent social behavior and a desire to kill for the sake and pleasure of killing itself: such was the psychology of the followers of Marxism and the founder of the doctrine himself as their spirits and persons marched into China, nourished the bacterial bloom swirling in the sewers of Chinese society, and lowered the curtain on the story of a nation and its civilization. In 1949, the soldier's of Mao's red army built a wall around China. Inside this wall, they would plant three banners, marked The Suppression Of Counterrevolutionaries, The Great Leap Forward and The Cultural Revolution. These were the slogans under which a nation was targeted for annihilation. These were the banners which dug the graves of forty million people in China's Marxist, materialist, proletarian descent into terror.

THE OPEN SEWER OF MULTICULTURALISM

A sewer is a subterranean tunnel for carrying off waste matter. It was created by the need of civilized societies to flush waste off the streets and move it underground. The twentieth century saw the intensification of an indigenous Western movement known as romanticism, which stood opposed in a fundamental way both to the Enlightenment and to Classical Culture. It stood opposed to these in its rejection of the common sense doctrine that there is a world of physical objects which exists outside the mind, a world whose properties the mind can come to grasp by a process of reasoning from experience. Produced and guided by the spirit of Faust, Western romanticism rejects this doctrine of mental soundness and sanity and promotes the philosophy of subjectivism. After one thousand years of development, this Western Faustian romanticist doctrine which says that physical objects do not exist and that there is no such thing as objective or external truth reached a culmination in the twentieth century and unleashed a moral and spiritual sewer known as multiculturalism. Whipped up and intoxicated to a blazing white fever by the mind altering, mind cracking, mind shrinking drugs of Faustian romanticism, the multiculturalists who emerged in the mid twentieth century proclaimed that since physical reality does not exist and all truth is subjective, there are as many different realities and truths as there are cultures, and no particular truth or reality may be held to be more valid or more correct than any other, and there must in consequence be established a state of maximum cultural pluralism and diversity within society. Multiculturalism in the West is a symptom of social breakdown in general and Western romanticism in particular, and the particularly virulent form it has assumed in the West, in consequence of romanticism, has composed a program, manifesto and case study of what happens to a mind when it abandons reason and reality and plunges headlong into the dark, swirling, burning currents of total derangement and disorder. The multiculturalists who have ruled the West for the past half century have proclaimed that since all truth is relative, the customs and traditions of native people possess equal validity with the customs and traditions of European settler populations, and there must in consequence be a policy of absolute legal tolerance shown toward ethnic gangs, ethnic riots and ethnic street violence. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has rejected the bourgeois notion of a shared, universal truth and established in its place a regime of racial culture, racial identity and racial values. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a racist, ethnicist, open immigration society which has marginalized and suppressed the voices of universal human reason, truth, essentialism and culture. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which promotes allegiance to one's own culture above allegiance to the truth and is a community devoted to separate development, separate rights, separate responsibilities, separate citizenship and separate governments. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which rejects the values of humanist essentialism, promotes a philosophy of rank subjectivism, and has established a national church of ethnic interest groups and social disintegration. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose political system and political parties have declared war on the liberal ideal of social cohesion on the grounds that there is no such thing as universal, culture independent truth and understanding. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a cluster of warring ethnic, racial and cultural tribes whose sole common denominator is a bitter, hostile attitude toward the voices of metaphysical realism who went to school at the Enlightenment. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a vast mosaic composed of the peoples, tribes, races, ethnicities and cultures of the world who are united by an abiding hatred of the West. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a divided society, a society composed of noninteracting, noncommunicating, racial and ethnic enclaves, a social cesspool overflowing with the currents of license and anarchy, and morally and intellectually bankrupt. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a homeland for primitive tribal factions whose credo is ethnic politics, ethnic preselection, ethnic segregation and ethnic chauvinism. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a nation of separation which has confined racial, ethnic and cultural groups to special geographic regions and staged daily festivals of hatred of Western liberal culture. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which tolerates any and all cultural practices, no matter how cruel or revolting, on the grounds that the forced integration of immigrant communities into Western liberal values violates the primacy of separate cultural identity and the principle of subjectivity of all truth. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which affirms the superiority of nonWestern cultures to Western cultures and grants official permission and approval to the torture and enslavement of the individual in the name of the tribe. They have proclaimed that Islamic values are as valid as Western values and it is an act of Western cultural imperialism to require Muslim immigrants to think and behave in a rational manner, to respect the precepts of sound mental health, to renounce the ways of frenzy and fanaticism, and to recognize the rights, freedoms, dignity and worth of every individual without regard to his religious beliefs. They have proclaimed that there is no such thing as a cultural anachronism because the notion of moral and cultural progress is a liberal fantasy and what is right and wrong can be anything they are judged to be without regard to when or where they were originally judged to be so. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is governed by a leftist ideological creed which has wiped out every last vestige of liberal universalism and unveiled a world of ethnic lobbies, racial identities, cultural activism, divisive tribalism and raised the curtain on a new dark age. The pipes have been upturned and burst and the human sewage of cultures has flooded into the homes, streets, schools and offices of the twenty first century. They have been upturned and burst by Faustian vandals who have sought to attack and destroy the intellectual heritage built up by mentally well people. The vandals carry a bible in one hand and an axe in the other. On the pages of their bible are written the following words: the concepts of truth, reality, objectivity and rationality are meaningless; knowledge has nothing whatever to do with any mind independent reality; language and propositions do not provide any pictures of reality; there is no such thing as disinterested inquiry on a quest for objective, universally valid knowledge; all so-called knowledge consists in subjective, apriori forms of perception and thought; all claims to knowledge are disguised forms of power seeking. With their axes, these Faustian vandals have let loose a moral stench and miasma which has fouled the thinking of every man, woman and child in the West. This oppressive, unpleasant, unhealthy vapor has made people think that all cultures are intellectually equal and therefore equally deserving of respect and deserving of being represented in a school curriculum. It has made them challenge the cultural and scientific institutions of reason. It has made them reject the traditionally conceived practices of teaching and research. It has made them tolerate and accept violations of individual rights and the rule of law, and all manner of barbaric practices, in the name of cultural relativism and political correctness. It has made them believe that culture shapes all written and spoken communication and debate and that what is called reality is nothing more than a product of intersubjective communication and agreement. It has made them believe that the notion of an independent, absolute physical reality is without meaningful content and must be replaced by the notion of the racial, ethnic, class and gender construction of reality. It has made them believe that the empirical method of reasoning and the correspondence theory of truth are delusions produced by the Western Enlightenment tradition and must be replaced by an internalist view of truth in which truth is that which is decreed and voted upon by cultural communities and not discovered in reality. It has made them believe that cultures manufacture truth and morality, that the ontology of individuals and the philosophy of human rights are nothing more than Western liberal conventions, and that cultures which discriminate on the basis of race or gender and convert people into the property of society must be allowed to settle in Western countries and be granted full legal recognition and constitutional protection. Spiritually dirtied and drugged by the new religion of multiculturalism flowing out of the open sewers of the twenty first century, the masses of the West have attacked the foundations of human progress and civilization.

THE RED ATTACK ON THE RULE OF LAW

Cultures and civilizations in their dying days become consumed in mass politics. In 49 BC, Julius Caesar and his army crossed the Rubicon, in violation of Roman law, forced the consuls and the senate to abandon Rome, and became a dictator leading the mob, a demagogue leading the rabble, upon the ruins of the Roman republic and the Roman constitution. The West entered upon its stage of decline and fall in the twentieth century and the new regime of mass politics proceeded to radicalize every aspect of the state and society, voted to reduce constitutions to dead letters if not outright repeal them, and consigned to the catacombs of legal and cultural meaninglessness the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual. Nowhere has this descent into mass politics and moral degeneration been more tragic and treasonous than in America, for decades the arsenal of the free world and global beacon of constitutional rights. In America the masses' attack on the constitutional system has reached a fever pitch in the twenty first century and presaged the imminent doom of the republic. Doing the masses' bidding, American politicians and public officials have launched an attack against the rule of law without equal in the history of the nation. They have transformed the FISA court, established under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act to enable the surveillance of those suspected of being agents of foreign powers, into a weapon of partisan politics. The court used the fabricated, opposition research Steele dossier as a basis for authorizing secret surveillance of affiliates of Donald Trump. The court granted warrants to spy on Trump advisor Carter Page which were unlawful, invalid and without probable cause, as mandated by the constitution. Former FBI Director James Comey revealed confidential White House meetings to the press and gave false and misleading information to the FISA court in applying for surveillance writs against Trump affiliates. Former Obama officials have revealed confidential telephone calls between President Trump and foreign officials to the press. They have distributed the Steele dossier to foreign agencies and cabinets. The Obama administration weaponized the IRS by denying nonprofit tax status to conservative organizations opposed to the administration. President Obama illegally nullified federal immigration law by executive order and granted amnesty to millions of illegal aliens. He illegally changed health care mandates by executive order. He failed to consult Congress, as legally required to do, on a prisoner exchange with the Taliban. The Obama administration illegally monitored the communications of American news reporters. President Obama unconstitutionally concluded a nuclear treaty with Iran without Senate approval. He decreed that the Affordable Care Act establishes what it does not in fact establish and authorizes tax credits for health insurance purchased in states without their own insurance exchanges; the law unequivocally states that tax credits are only available for insurance purchased in an exchange "established by the state". He unconstitutionally made recess appointments while the Senate was still in session. Obama's new imperial presidency, rule by executive usurpation, contempt for legislative authority and caesarist destruction of the American constitutional system, without parallel in the history of the nation, are described by Jonathan Turley: "President Obama's vow to rule by executive order is one of the greatest challenges to our constitutional system in the history of this country, and one that threatens a fundamental change in how our country is governed. The question represented by this lawsuit is whether we will live in a system of shared and equal powers, as required by our Constitution, or whether we will continue to see the rise of a dominant executive with sweeping unilateral powers. That is a question worthy of review and resolution in our federal courts. If balance is to be reestablished, it must begin before this president leaves office. And that will require every possible means to reassert legislative authority." The culmination of the masses' attack on the rule of law is the impeachment of President Trump. The House of Representatives voted to charge Trump with abuse of power and obstruction of Congress. The first allegation is that Trump withheld security aid to Ukraine in order to pressure it to commence investigations which would benefit him politically. The second allegation is that Trump obstructed Congress by challenging subpoenas for documents and subpoenas to administration officials to testify. These charges are baseless. There is no evidence that Trump demanded a favor in exchange for the disbursement of military aid to Ukraine. The transcript of the telephone conversation between Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky in July 2019 reveals no demand for a favor, and during the conversation, military aid to Ukraine was never mentioned. Zelensky states that no demand for a quid pro quo was ever at any time made to him by Trump. Military aid was never withheld for any substantial period of time and Ukraine received it in September 2019. At hearings held by the House Intelligence Committee, Trump advisor Timothy Morrison and Ambassador Kurt Volker were asked whether they had any evidence of Trump demanding a quid pro quo and they replied in the negative. Lt Col Alexander Vindman was asked if he had ever witnessed Trump demanding a quid pro quo and he replied, "Not that I can recall". United States Ambassador to the European Union, Gordon Sondland, testified that "He [Trump] said I want nothing. I want no quid pro quo." Undersecretary of State David Hale testified that "I had no direct knowledge of nefarious motivations to withhold aid to Ukraine." In the July conversation between Trump and Zelensky, Trump asked Zelensky to launch an investigation into Joe Biden's and his son Hunter's corrupt dealings with the Ukraine government and Burisma, a Ukrainian natural gas company, and to investigate whether Ukraine interfered in the 2016 presidential election. Both of these requests were legitimate. In 2016, Vice President Joseph Biden ordered the Ukraine government to dismiss Special Prosecutor Viktor Shokin, who was investigating corruption at Burisma, and threatened to withhold one billion dollars in loan guarantees from Ukraine if the Shokin was not dismissed and the investigation not ended. The reason for the order was to protect Biden's son who was sitting on the board of directors of Burisma, collecting between 50,000 and 80,000 dollars per month and performing no work. Burisma was paying Hunter in order to acquire influence in Washington. Shokin stated that he had been dismissed for investigating Hunter's role on the board. Hunter Biden amassed over three billion dollars from his position in Ukraine. In 2018, Joe Biden publicly admitted the threat he had made to Ukraine. With respect to Trump's request that Zelensky investigate possible Ukraine interference in the 2016 election, this was prompted by the fact that a private security company called CrowdStrike, which the Democratic National Committee had engaged to investigate the hacking of its emails and to which it had given exclusion possession of its server, was based in Ukraine. Trump's request that the Ukraine government investigate corruption involving American citizens was morally and legally justified as upholding his oath of office to ensure that the laws of the United States be faithfully executed and be obeyed by all citizens. He was legally allowed to hold congressionally appropriated funds for the promotion of the public interest. With respect to the charge of obstruction of Congress, Trump has a legal right to appeal to the courts to dismiss congressional subpoenas. The United States Supreme Court agreed to hear Trump's appeal of the subpoenas. The federal government consists of three separate and equal branches, the executive, legislative and judicial, and the judicial branch is constitutionally mandated to resolve disputes which arise between the other two branches. The president is not compelled to comply with a congressional subpoena unless he is ordered to do so by a court. Congress's abuse of power in seeking to criminalize Trump's right to have his day in court and challenge congressional subpoenas is described by Jonathan Turley: "If you impeach a president, if you make a high crime and misdemeanor out of going to the courts, it is an abuse of power. It's your abuse of power. You're doing precisely what you're criticizing the president for doing. We have a third branch that deals with conflicts of the other two branches." (It's Your Abuse Of Power: Impeachment Witness Rips Congress For Obstruction Of Justice Claim by Madison Dribble). In the twenty first century, the masses' war against America has reached new, unprecedented, anticonstitutional depths and pushed the nation into the abyss. Like Caesar two thousand years before, the masses have crossed the Rubicon. A red establishment and the red mobs which installed it into power have become fanatical, deranged and unbalanced beyond redemption and beyond repair. Before the onslaught of a red majority and its red caesars, the abuse of political power has become the new law of the land, and the customs and traditions of a virtuous, law abiding people, born in the first revolutionary battles of Lexington and Concord, have come to an end.

THE STATE OF THE ARTS

One thousand years ago, the keeper of the infernal world offered a magician, alchemist and doctor of philosophy and theology named Faust an exchange. If Faust agreed to surrender his reason and integrity to the prince of darkness, he would acquire an infinite will and infinite power in exchange and become unbound by nothing, by no standards, principles or precepts, existing in reality. Faust agreed and in the sudden onset of a tearing storm and a series of thunderclaps raining down upon the evening lands and gloom of Northern Europe, a new culture emerged into the world, the culture of the West, presided over by the spirit of Faust. The Devil wrote Faust a bible by which the latter proceeded to create the customs, traditions, attitudes and credo of the new culture. The Devil entitled this bible Romanticism and its words, sentences, verses and chapters formed the constitution of the West and with every page which Faust turned, a new era was born, and the romanticist doom and collapse of the culture drew nearer. For romanticism is a philosophy of rejection of rational order and restraint and exaltation of the animal idols of subjectivity, instinctual inspiration and the primacy of the will, and when it is accepted by a person, a society, a culture or a civilization, it produces a state of madness and death as surely as a spreading cancer, if left untreated, will consume and kill a physical organism. Nowhere has the romanticist corruption called the West been more dramatically and strikingly illustrated than in the case of the arts, which recreate in actual material media, employing colors, shapes, lines, words, marks, sounds and movements, the ideals and aspirations of a soul. At each stage in the history of the West, Faust has doffed his hat to the Devil as a token of greeting and respect and moved the culture closer to its culminating point in the annihilation of the human mind and every last vestige of human sanity and spiritual health. This culminating point was reached in the twentieth century and in the arts it saw the birth of Modern Art. Two centuries earlier, Faust had planted the seeds of this final degradation of the arts on the pages of his favorite philosopher, one whose books serve as the preeminent, canonical and most influential expressions of Western subjectivism. This philosopher was Immanuel Kant. Called the father of Modern Art, Kant stated that beauty is not a property of the natural world but is the pleasure which is produced by the free play of the imagination. The judgment of beauty is thus not a rational, cognitive judgment but is a purely subjective one. Transcribed by Kant from the spectral utterances of Faust, this seed would germinate through the centuries, bringing forth the Impressionists of the nineteenth century and the Impressionist world of the Monets, the Renoirs, the Cezannes, the Munches, the van Goghs and the Degases, and would blossom into the final, full, unmitigated horror of the pure formalism which rose to predominance in the twentieth century and governs the artistic productions of the present day. Hurling by armloads into a growing pyre the artistic works of centuries, with the aim of burning everything of beauty and value, the new formalists shouted out in maniacal frenzy their program and manifesto through the engulfing sheets of flames. They proclaimed that progressive painting is that which has thrown to the winds the traditions of realism and representation and descended into pure subjectivity in the name of experimentation. They proclaimed that progressive literature is that which has rejected plots, narratives and causal sequences and consists of random sentences and endless streams of consciousness. They proclaimed that progressive painting consists of wild, expressive, multicolored nonlandscapes and nonfigural forms. They proclaimed that progressive painting is primitive painting and hedonistic painting which has rejected objective content in the name of emotional liberation. They proclaimed that progressive painting is new, radical painting which consists in the presentation of cubes, spheres and cones without rhyme or reason or logical explanation of any kind. They proclaimed that progressive painting is analytic cubism and synthetic cubism whose shapes, planes, textures, surfaces and collages have broken free of all subject matter and all traditional modes of representation. They proclaimed that progressive painting is that which exhibits a sense of color and power independent of all objects. They proclaimed that progressive painting is one whose subject matter is not recognizable as anything existing in reality and is a psychotic's story of imaginary nonbeings living in impossible nonlands. They proclaimed that progressive painting is one which is arbitrary, indistinct, unclear and unwell. They proclaimed that progressive painting is a simultaneous vision, one which is devoid of all distance viewpoints and perspectives, and has reduced reality to a series of shattered fragments. They proclaimed that progressive music is that which is devoid of all melody and harmony and exalts the harshness and unpleasantness of pure noise. They proclaimed that progressive painting is a succession of points, circles, triangles and squares leading nowhere and meaning nothing. They proclaimed that progressive painting is an exercise in pure thought and pure spirituality without admixture of anything which is real, natural or observable. They proclaimed that art is anything which is made by someone who calls himself an artist; a painting is anything which is located in a frame and hung on a wall; literature is anything which is located on pages and bound in a book; music is any series of sounds produced by someone who calls himself a musician; a sculpture is any mass of material which has been shaped, molded or collected into anything or nothing by someone who calls himself a sculptor; and in place of fictitious objective standards and definitions of art, and the stultifying pursuit of objective artistic excellence and perfection, progressive art is that which affirms that what is called art and beauty exists only in the eye of the beholder, and that all judgments about what is splendid and what is worthless are purely subjective. Kandinsky, Picasso, Pollack, Joyce, Woolf, Stravinsky, Moore and Gropius: these are the vectors of a plague which attacked the West in the twentieth century and has devoured the art world of the contemporary age. This plague is a multiheaded monster breathing the fires of Faustian romanticism. Each head of the monster spells out a message of cultural downfall and degeneration: painting is that which is nonrepresentational; music is that which lacks melody, harmony, euphony and lyricism; literature is that which lacks purposeful action, causal relationships and a progression of events; sculpture is that which consists of material carved or cast but signifying nothing; and architecture is that which designs buildings as statements of pure form, pure space, pure weightlessness and pure consciousness, without functionality of any kind, without place, privacy, boundaries, comfort, proper insulation, proper roofs, proper windows, proper heating, proper cooling, proper air circulation and proper water run off. This plague consists of cells in whose genes is contained the final, fearsome, terrifying, end of the line destiny of romanticism, the destiny which has been enacted and celebrated in the art studios, art schools, art galleries, art museums, art textbooks and art commentaries of the present day: the psychosis and insanity of pure formalism. In the twenty first century, the sands of time have run out on the West. Coursing through the corridors of history and unfolding a panorama of mental disease, and racing past the mountains, promontories, cliffs and waterfalls of subjectivism, Faust's riders of romanticism have brought down the apocalypse of the present day. The father of Modern Art was Kant and the grandfather was Faust, and their children and grandchildren include the unbounded psychopaths of esthetic formalism who have celebrated their final victory over the arts and unveiled a spiritual necropolis in which the arts exist only in name. In 1480 in Germany, in the town of Knittlingen, Wurttemberg, the person of Faust was born. But Faust is the foremost analogue and embodiment of the West and his spirit and soul were present at the birth of the culture from the forests, the study chambers and the pools of darkness of the Devil. In the twenty first century, the most dreadful and virulent forces of Faust have convened. The Faustian war against reason has reached its climax. Man has been deprived of his rational faculties and the field of activity which once produced Leonardo, Michelangelo, Durer, Vermeer, Rembrandt and David has been consigned to a gutter, a sewer, an insane asylum and a vacant mind.

405 EAST 42ND STREET: WORLD HEADQUARTERS OF THE TOTALITARIANS

Moral relativism is the doctrine that no person can ever be objectively right or wrong and in consequence we ought to tolerate the behavior of those whose moralities are opposed to our own. Although this doctrine is unintelligible because it promotes a policy of tolerance as an absolute, universal, moral norm, it was the doctrine which guided the Allied Big Four, the United States, Britain, the Soviet Union and China, when on New Year's Day in 1942, they signed the United Nations Declaration, which became the basis for the establishment of the United Nations organization in 1945. Including among its charter members a totalitarian tyranny without precedent in the history of mankind, the United Nations was conceived in sin, was morally compromised from its inception, and its initial tolerance of Marxist genocide and terror cast a shadow of doom and abomination which would haunt it up to the present day and deprive it of all credibility. The United Nations' acceptance of Marxist states under the doctrine of moral relativism was a satanic quill which would compose a history of moral shame and disgrace whose every sentence and chapter would shock the conscience and defy the imagination of decent, civilized, law abiding people. Throughout its dark, sordid, tragic history, the United Nations has proclaimed that a nation need not be a free democracy to become a member with full voting rights but can be a regime dedicated to the destruction of liberal Western traditions and institutions, whether in the name of Marxism or Islam. While giving official sanction and support to Marxist and Islamist regimes, and giving the Soviet Union a permanent seat on the Security Council with full veto powers, the organization has singled out Israel for special, harsh treatment, condemning its liberal democracy as Zionist racism, its settlements of freedom as Western imperialism, giving Palestinians their own agency within the organization, establishing an International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People dedicated to the promotion of Palestinian terror and to the destruction of the only free society in the Middle East, and excluding Israel from the organization's offices in Geneva, Nairobi, Rome and Vienna which deal with issues of human rights and arms control. The red domination of the United Nations since its inception is illustrated in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, unanimously adopted by the General Assembly in 1948 and entering into force in 1951. Article Two of the Convention defines genocide in such a manner as to exclude as a crime the destruction of a nonnational, nonracial, nonethnic, nonreligious social group, or the destruction of a political group or a socioeconomic class. It thus gives carte blanche to Marxist states and allows them to commit crimes against humanity with impunity. Under the definition of genocide set forth in the Convention, the political genocide or class genocide committed by the Soviet Union, Maoist China and the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia could never be properly prosecuted:

"Genocide is any of the following acts committed with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group, as such:

- (a) Killing members of the group;
- (b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
- (c) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;
- (d) Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;
- (e) Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group."

Throughout its seventy year history, the record of the organization's general secretaries has been an undeviating recital of radical politics blasted out by nine fronts for the reds. The first general secretary was Trygve Lie of Norway, who was a supporter of Stalin. When he was minister of justice, Lie threatened Leon Trotsky with imprisonment and expulsion if he criticized Stalin. On Stalin's orders, he did both and exiled Trotsky to Mexico where he was killed by one of Stalin's agents in 1940. When he was general secretary, he supported the Arabs in the 1948 Arab-Israeli War and supported the communists in the Korean War. The second general secretary general was Dag Hammarskjold of Sweden, who launched effusions of praise for the leaders of communist China and the Soviet Union and deployed UN troops in 1961 to suppress the uprising of the Katanga province of Zaire when it sought to gain independence from the Marxist government. The third general secretary was U Thant of Burma, a faithful follower of Marx, Lenin and Stalin. While serving in the cabinet of Burmese Prime Minister U Nu, he appointed a former KGB officer as his personal assistant and helped to abolish private property in the country. While general secretary, he expressed admiration for Soviet Premier Nikita Krushchev, supported the Soviet side during the Cuban Missile Crisis, and supported the Arab side during the Arab-Israeli Six Day War. The fourth general secretary was Kurt Waldheim of Austria, who supported leftist causes of all stripes and varieties, from national socialism to Marxism. He promoted a plan of world socialist government presided over by the UN. Defending mass murder in the name of social justice, he supported the killing fields of the Khmer Rouge and sent the regime UNICEF aid via Hanoi. The fifth general secretary was Javier Perez de Queller of Peru, who supported and protected the Khmer Rouge and supported Iran during the Iran-Iraq War. When he reentered Peruvian politics in 1995 and ran for president, he supported the Communist Party and the Maoist insurgency. The sixth general secretary was Boutros Boutros-Ghali of Egypt, who was the former vice president of the Socialist International and a former member of the Arab Socialist League. While he was general secretary, Boutros-Ghali supported the Hutu's extermination of the Tutsis during the Rwandan Civil War. He refused to allow Canadian General Romeo Dallaire to seize Hutu weapons and ordered UN troops to withdraw from a school which held Tutsi refugees, which brought about their massacre at the hands of the Hutus. The seventh general secretary was Kofi Annan of Ghana, who promoted socialist globalization and the abolition of liberal states. In his opening address to the fifty third annual Department of Public Information/Nongovernmental Organization Conference held in 2006, he extolled world socialism as the ineluctable wave of the future and an unalterable moral imperative: "It has been said that arguing against globalization is like arguing against the laws of gravity." The eighth general secretary was Ban Ki Moon of South Korea, who condemned the critics of Islamic fanaticism and terror as agents of Western imperialism and promoted the UN Agenda 21, which seeks to eliminate all human carbon emissions, turn back the clock on industrial progress and civilization, and abolish all forms of private property. The ninth and current general secretary, Antonio Guterras of Portugal, was the former president of the Socialist International and the former general secretary of the Portuguese Socialist Party. While general secretary, he has supported the admission of refugees from the Syrian Civil War into Europe, fugitives who are committed soldiers for the cause of terror, fanaticism and the Islamic State. On October 24 of every year, people throughout the world celebrate United Nations Day, the anniversary of the founding of the organization on October 24, 1945. The small, vanishing minority of liberal, freedom loving, Enlightenment inspired individuals hold a diametrically opposed view of this day and condemn it as a day of shame. They condemn it as a day on which the cause of red totalitarianism and radical politics was granted, for the first time in the history of mankind, a global, intergovernmental platform and voice. The regimentation of the planet under the iron heel of an antiliberal, anticapitalist ideology; a global regime of political control over every aspect of human society; an agenda of red lockstep affecting every person on earth and encompassing the fields of art, folklore, spirituality, nature, science, industry, technology, labor, handicrafts, literature, the arts, tourism, energy, finance, sickness, health, pollution, peace, war, conflicts, disputes, the eradication of armaments, the conduct of nuclear research, the preservation of species, and the aspirations of the East, West, North, South, blacks and whites, the rich and the poor: such is the fearsome and terrifying scheme, plan and series of measures which October 24, the organization which was founded on this day, and the building and address which it occupies have come to symbolize, and have symbolized for seventy years, in all their stark, unvarnished reality. Encapsulating its intrinsic, entrenched, virulent opposition to international law, international security, international human rights and the economic development of free people, the United Nations voted to hold a moment of silence in honor of North Korean dictator Kim Jong Il following his death in 2011. This moment of silence was a deafening roar of worship and support for the leftist, socialist, communist and radical environmentalist ideals which had animated and defined the organization for decades. For civilized people, it was a moment of remembrance of the dead, the voices of capitalist freedom, liberal enlightenment and moral absolutism, killed off by a global leftist establishment and its intergovernmental organization of the reds located on the east side of Manhattan.

THE DEATH RATTLE OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

The primary symptom of the decline and fall of a civilization is the rise of irrationalism. When a civilization abandons reason, it embraces religion and mysticism and opens the door to the violation of individual rights and the extinguishment of the human soul. The tidal wave of irrationalism which swept over Classical civilization brought with it the worship of the mystical mob and its mystical emperors, the surrender to barbarian invasions, the settlement of barbarian tribes, and the promotion of the Christian God, salvation and the life to come, all of which conspired to destroy the rationalist traditions of Roman jurisprudence and constitutionalism. Swept by the currents of irrationalism, the West entered upon its own path of decline and fall in the twentieth century, and in the present day, the tide has risen to engulf the planet and submerge all of civilization. In the case of the West, the trend of irrationalism has been strengthened and intensified by a native Western movement not found in Classical culture: by the movement of romanticism, which projects the nature of man as that of pure will, volition, inspiration and subjectivity, devoid of all rational order, restraint, intelligence and consciousness. Accelerated by romanticism, the decline and fall of the West has brought forth a reign of tribalist ideologies which have overwhelmed liberal traditions and institutions and reduced liberal charters and constitutions to a dead letter. Kicking open the door of unreason, today's avatars of cultural disintegration have installed upon the throne of absolute power the modern wellspring of all tribalisms: Marxism. The story of the late modern age, the dying hours of the West, is the story of the struggle for power between Marxism and its various nationalist offshoots and derivatives, and nowhere has this struggle been illustrated with greater clarity, drama, significance and portentousness than in the withdrawal of Britain from the European Union. On February 1, 2020, Britain became independent of the EU and nationalist collectivism triumphed on this island over the Marxist collectivism which the EU had come to represent, and this victory presaged the eventual break up of the EU itself upon the rocky shoals of nationalism. The independence movement which prevailed in the 2016 referendum and led to the country's withdrawal from the EU is no more devoted to liberal capitalist ideals than the Marxist reds who preside over the EU, and their program and aims are a statement of ethnic tribalism which will dig the grave and bury the enlightenment of civilized people in the present final century of the West. The triumphant British nationalists have set forth a program and manifesto for the dissolution of Anglo-Saxon liberty and the free movement of people which for centuries had been the inspiration of the world and the defining theme of the United Kingdom. The nationalists have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is ruled by common people united by the same race and ethnicity who have outlawed immigration by members of different races and ethnicities. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is founded upon national identity and enforces a religion of ethnic nationalism as its highest priority. They have proclaimed that a progressive British society is one which seeks to restore essential Britishness and counteract the existential crisis caused by the liberal Enlightenment principles of racial and ethnic equality. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is unashamedly uniraical, uniethnic and exclusive in character. They have proclaimed that a progressive British society is a British rebellion against the liberal dogma of equal opportunity and equality of all before the law and is a society which views racism and ethnicism as the highest forms of patriotism and civic virtue. They have proclaimed that a progressive British society is an Anglocentric society, a culturally nationalist society, and an empire founded upon race and blood. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has mobilized racist, nationalist and ethnicist mob sentiment against liberal constitutionalism which grants liberty and justice to all. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is openly prejudiced against people from other countries and has enacted a permanent ban on all immigration. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is an antiglobalist society which has rejected the free movement of labor and capital in favor of national, social and racial protectionism. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has sacrificed individual freedom upon the altars of national sovereignty and national values. They have proclaimed that race and blood and not socioeconomic class is the primary determinant of human history and thus social democracy must be replaced by racial democracy and race hatred must be democratically enacted as the supreme law of the land. They have proclaimed that the liberal system of open immigration for those who want to work and free movement of law abiding people is the voice of antiEnglishness and antiBritishness and must be replaced by a regime of nationalist borders and race based selection of immigrants and workers. They have proclaimed that racism is a matter of simple, straight talking common sense and ever defeats the academic, intellectual claptrap espoused by liberal equalitarians and must be enshrined by the people as the constitution of their state. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which rejects all liberal and neoliberal economic systems, and rejects the capitalist market economy, and champions the nationalist shielding of its domestic industries and the closing of its borders to workers throughout the world. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which enforces segregation and discrimination on the basis of race, ethnicity, language and culture and throws up walls of separation festooned with the banners of identity politics. Tribalism is the defining spirit, mood and ideology of today. It is the logical consequence of the abandonment of reason and it has defeated the liberal norms and institutions established during the Enlightenment. Race politics, ethnic politics, secessionist politics, separatist politics, blood and soil politics: such were the forces which impelled British voters in 2016 to vote to leave the European Union and such are the forces which will break up the union, carve up the continent, and compose the final, tragic chapter of the West. Europe is at present a battleground hosting two tribalist armies: the armies of class war and the armies of ethnonationalist war. Fighting under the banners of the Marxist reds and their religion of class, the EU government is being overwhelmed by the opposing banners of the ethnonationalists and its days are numbered. The Marxists are in control of the EU governmental structures, while their brother ideologues, the national socialists, are advancing on the ground, and it is a matter of time when the ground forces celebrate their victory over the reds. The Fidesz Party in Hungary, the Freedom Party in Austria, the People's Party in Denmark, the New Flemish Alliance in Belgium, the Conservative People's Party in Estonia, the Finns Party, the Sweden Democrats, the League in Italy, the Vox in Spain, the National Rally in France, the Freedom Party in Netherlands, the Alternative for Germany, the Freedom And Direct Democracy Party in Czech Republic, the United Patriots in Bulgaria, the Our Slovakia Party, the Confederation in Poland, the Greek Solution Party, and the ELAM in Cyprus. These are the brownshirts marching across today's Europe, active and popular in the places where real, practical work is done, fighting the red shirts in control in a separate universe called Brussels, and turning back the clock of history faster than the speed of light. They are frightening their fellow Marxist tribalists, whose votes dominate the European Parliament, the European Commission, the Council of the European Union, the Court of Justice of the European Union, the European Central Bank, the European Economic and Social Committee, and the European Committee of the Regions, Marxists who have imposed a regime of regulations, interventions, diversity quotas, hate speech codes, product directives, wealth transfers and the settlement of alien populations in the name of statism, social justice and social responsibility. Together with the reds in Brussels, they are fighting the traditions and institutions of liberal universalism, founded during the Age of Reason, which mandated that governments be strictly limited in their scope and functions and obey strict neutrality with respect to race, class and gender in all their laws and policies and in their treatment of individuals. In the current European conflict between the swastika bearers on the march and on the streets, and the hammer and sickle bearers ensconced in their offices, committees, courts and parliaments, the liberal order has been the first casualty. Next the totalitarian reds have been forced into retreat. The future belongs to their heirs and successors, the Hitlerites of today.

THE GERMAN-ARAB NEXUS

From September 1939 to March 1945, twenty four hours per day, seven days per week, radio towers in the Third Reich sent waves and pulses of radicalism and revolution halfway across the world and rained them down upon the Arab lands in North Africa and the Middle East. Broadcasting the national socialist version of red propaganda, these shortwave antennas served as beacons of black light uniting haters of civilization separated by continents and forged bonds of friendship between totalitarian powers bent on subverting the liberal order of the West. The language of the broadcasts was Arabic but the message transcended languages and nations and was a story of how a common cause and a common front can be established between religions and ideologies whose common enemy is reason. Proclaiming that reason is a veil of illusion which serves to conceal the ultimate reality of race and blood, the national socialists joined hands with the Islamists who proclaimed that reason is a veil of illusion which serves to conceal the ultimate reality of God and his life to come, and together they constructed an axis of antientlightenment and antiliberalism which sought to turn back the clock to the year zero when blind faith ruled the soul of man and brute power was the law of the land. Sharing the same political passions, interests, cultures, traditions and dogmas, the national socialists and Islamists who listened to these broadcasts listened to the same Satan who ruled their hearts; they heard the same communication from the same prophet and preacher; this was the Satan, the voice, the prophet and the preacher who condemned the natural world of physical objects as a lifeless, stultifying, blasphemous construction and exalted the true nobility of a higher dimension located in the celestial clouds beyond the prison house of logic and the senses. Racing through the barriers of time and space without surcease, crossing oceans and mountains without respect to night or day, the Arabic programs of the Third Reich broadcast a manifesto for the destruction of one thousand years of liberal order and the rule of law, and transmitted a public declaration of the aims and policies of latter day barbarians who would compose the final chapter of the West. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is united in opposing British and French liberal imperialism and the Zionist movement which embodies liberal ideals.

They proclaimed that a progressive society is an antisemitic society because the Jews symbolize the ideals of rationalism, science, capitalism and constitutionalism which are alien to the true life of man. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is disciplined, regimented, militaristic and authoritarian, rejects the freedom and dignity of the individual, is focused upon the commission of mass murder and other crimes against humanity, and is embodied to the highest degree in the national socialist and Islamist mass movements. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which national socialists work together with Islamists to foment Arab revolts in Iraq and Palestine and drive out the agents of an alien, antiracial, antireligious Western liberal democracy: the British and the Jews. The national socialist support for an Arab freedom movement against the British is described by Hitler in War Directive Number 32, June 11, 1941. German military operations, armed forces, special staff, agents, experts, commanders, chiefs and propagandists were deployed by Hitler in a coordinated effort to incite disturbances and insurrections across the Middle East, uproot the liberal order implanted by the British, render the rule of law unstable and insecure, and achieve the plans and actions of totalitarian dictatorship: "Exploitation of the Arab Freedom Movement. The situation of the English in the Middle East will be rendered more precarious, in the event of major German operations, if more British forces are tied down at the right moment by civil commotion or revolt. All military, political, and propaganda measures to this end must be closely coordinated during the preparatory period. As central agency abroad I nominate Special Staff F, which is to take part in all plans and actions in the Arab area, whose headquarters are to be in the area of the Commander Armed Forces Southeast. The most competent available experts and agents will be made available to it. The Chief of the High Command of the Armed Forces will specify the duties of Special Staff F, in agreement with the Foreign Minister where political questions are involved." The Arab programs broadcast by the Third Reich proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has been liberated from the shackles imposed by liberal colonial powers, such as Britain and France, and chants throughout its streets hymns of praise to the people's totalitarian saviors, Hitler and Allah: "No more Monsieur, no more Mister, Allah's in Heaven and Hitler's on earth. In heaven God is your ruler, on earth Hitler." The Arab affinity to national socialism is described by Syrian Baathist politician, Sami Al Jundi. On the pages of Hitler's Mein Kampf, the Arabs looked into a window and beheld a universe fashioned in accordance with the principles which animated them. They beheld an image and reflection of their own universe and a fearsome and terrifying likeness of their own hatreds and prejudices. In the universe of the Germans were the chords and harmonies which resonated in their hearts and listening to the Nietzscheans, the Hegelians, the Fichteans and the Chamberlains, they shouted out odes of joy and exultation and joined in the satanic symphony of destruction of civilization: "We were racialists, admiring nazism, reading its books and the source of its thought, particularly Nietzsche's Thus Spake Zarathustra, Fichte's Addresses to the German Nation, and H. S. Chamberlain's Foundations of the Nineteenth Century, which revolves around race. We were the first to think of translating Mein Kampf. Whoever has lived during this period in Damascus will appreciate the inclination of the Arab people to nazism, for nazism was the power which could serve as its champion, and he who is defeated will by nature love the victor. But our religion was rather different." (Arabic Political Memoirs And Other Studies by Elie Kedourie). The Arab programs hurtling across the sky from the towers of Berlin proclaimed that a progressive society is one which promotes all the frightful flows and tides of irrationalism in their ruthless, directional movements to sweep away the ideals and institutions of Western liberalism. It is a society which is totalitarian, racist, fascist, communist, leftist, far leftist, fundamentalist, antisemitic, antiIsrael, Marxist, neoMarxist and Islamist in character and has collaborated with the Prince of Darkness himself in an extraordinary, imagination defying campaign of nihilistic world destruction. Over the past century, the Western liberal order has been confronted by two enemies, one internal to the West and one external. The internal enemy has been the Western ideologies of collectivism, inspired preeminently by Marx, and comprised of two main branches, communism and national socialism. The external enemy has been Islam. The first Western system to reach out to and make common cause with Islam was national socialist Germany. Separated by a chasmic land mass but intimately connected by signals of electrically charged space, two fearsome and terrifying totalitarian powers faced each other for twelve years as transmitter and receiver and joined hands in a common mission. The swastika and the red crescent, the Hakenkreuz and the Halbmond, national socialist revolution and Islamic revolution, the voices of the German Fuhrer Adolf Hitler and the voices of the Jerusalem Grand Mufti Hajj Amin al-Husseini: such were the parties in a pact with the Devil to overthrow the modern liberal capitalist world order. All that represented this order they hated and targeted for total destruction: America, Britain, Israel, Zionism and the Jews. The foreign policy of the German-Arab axis would be replicated in the foreign policy of Germany's successors against the liberal order: the international communist movement and conspiracy. The communist bloc's opposition to Israel and the Jews was the mirror image of the opposition voiced by Germany and the Arabs. For these three totalitarian powers, Germany, the reds and the Muslims, Jew hatred was synonymous with what they at bottom hated the most and sought to eradicate from the face of the earth: the world of reason, progress, liberalism, the protection of human rights and the exaltation of the Enlightenment. Ascending to power in the twentieth century on waves of popular support, these powers are social, political and ideological sledgehammers which have broken up and pulverized the citadels of civilization.

WORLD WAR I: WORLD IDEOLOGICAL CONFLICT

Western Culture is a Faustian culture predicated upon the philosophy of romanticism. Present in no other culture in history but the West, and diametrically opposed to the Classical Culture of reason and order, romanticism proclaims the primacy of the will, emotion, force, energy and antienlightenment. Its preeminent symbol is the figure of Faust, the German sorcerer, necromancer and practitioner of black magic who sold his soul, his faculty of reason and sense of order, to the Devil in exchange for heightened will, experience, pleasure and power. Intoxicated, stimulated, inspired and transported by the will, Faust is unique to the West and confined to the West and every Western system bears the indelible and unmistakable imprint of Faust and his romanticism. In the history of the West, the Faustian will to power has assumed two forms, the English and the German, the Viking and the Gothic, the individual and collective, and these two forms have given rise to the systems of capitalism and socialism. Exalting in true Faustian fashion a morality of liberty defined as arbitrary, untrammled and disordered license, these brother systems differ only with respect to the agent and bearer which they project of this license, whether the private individual, in capitalism, or the public totality, in socialism, and the social, political and economic history of the West has been a history of the struggle for mastery of these opposed Faustian systems. From the birth of the West one thousand years ago in the gloom of Northern Europe far removed from the noonday locus of the Classical world, England and

Germany, representing the capitalist and socialist will to power, were destined to collide, compete and become locked in mortal combat for the domination of the world. Fought across the plains of Europe between 1914 and 1918 and leaving seventeen million deaths in its wake, the First World War was the first ideological struggle between two Western major powers and the victory of the English over the Germans ensured the success and survival of liberty throughout the world. After 1917, the Allied Powers were led by Britain, France and America, all committed to liberal democratic values and the global operations of liberal imperialism, while the Axis Powers were led by Germany, whose ideals were centered upon militarism and autocracy. Britain and France were led by David Lloyd George and Georges Clemenceau, democratically elected liberal leaders, while Germany was under the governance of a monarchy and military dictatorship led by Kaiser Wilhelm II and his generals. When Germany was poised to achieve victory over the Allies in the spring of 1918, the Kaiser expressed exhilaration at the apparent imminent destruction of the rule of law and the world victory of Germanic statism over English individualism. The Allies' commitment to achieving the triumph of liberal democracy throughout the world was exemplified in the Fourteen Points program issued by President Woodrow Wilson before a joint session of Congress in 1918. Confronted by a German ideology which denied the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual and invested the state, the community and the government with absolute power, Wilson sought to make the world a tolerable and congenial place to inhabit by civilized, law abiding people. The institutions of peace, justice and honest conduct must be rendered safe and secure against the armies of force and aggression. The traditions of equitable treatment and natural law based constitutionalism must be protected against alien invasions and violations. The sovereignty of free nations must be secured against the forces of conspiracy, subterfuge, hidden protocols and secret diplomacy. There must be established freedom of trade, freedom from economic barriers, freedom of navigation in extraterritorial waters, and respect for the independence of free nations throughout the world. The military forces of nations must be reduced to a level necessary to secure the right of self defense and all forms of aggressive war must be outlawed. A fair, just, equitable, liberal imperialism must be protected in the interests of protecting the prerogatives of superior nations and emancipating savage lands. A league of mutual security for free nations must be established which will guarantee their independence and integrity and repel foreign invaders. A system of fair and impartial resolution of disputes arising among free nations must be established which will enforce the international rule of law. In summary, a world order must be established which will consign the regime of tyranny and lawlessness which Germany represents to the dustbin of history: "We entered this war because violations of right had occurred which touched us to the quick and made the life of our own people impossible unless they were corrected and the world secure once for all against their recurrence. What we demand in this war, therefore, is nothing peculiar to ourselves. It is that the world be made fit and safe to live in; and particularly that it be made safe for every peace loving nation which, like our own, wishes to live its own life, determine its own institutions, be assured of justice and fair dealing by the other peoples of the world as against force and selfish aggression. All the peoples of the world are in effect partners in this interest, and for our own part we see very clearly that unless justice be done to others it will not be done to us. The program of the world's peace, therefore, is our program; and that program, the only possible program, as we see it, is this: I. Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view. II. Absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas, outside territorial waters, alike in peace and in war, except as the seas may be closed in whole or in part by international action for the enforcement of international covenants. III. The removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance. IV. Adequate guarantees given and taken that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety. V. A free, open minded, and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims, based upon a strict observance of the principle that in determining all such questions of sovereignty the interests of the populations concerned must have equal weight with the equitable claims of the government whose title is to be determined. XIV. A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small states alike." Two Faustian ideologies confronted each other during World War I. A victory of the German version of Faust would have meant the victory of aggressive nationalism, rank restrictions on freedom of thought and behavior, and the enforcement of obedience to the state at the expense of the dignity and worth of the individual. Faust wears two uniforms with two insignias. On his German insignia, during World War I, were embossed the slogans Kaiserreich and Mitteleuropa. These stood for the German darkness of authoritarianism, militarism and illiberalism. These betokened a German anticocosmos in which violence was in control of events and directed the lives of the people: "The British historian Niall Ferguson once suggested that if Britain and the US had stayed out of World War I, a Mitteleuropa established by the Kaiserreich might have evolved into something like today's European Union. Nonsense. Within Imperial Germany, victory would have strengthened the authoritarian militarists and weakened the forces of liberalism and democracy. The political culture would have been not that of today's bourgeois Germany but that of a Latin American banana republic or today's Thailand or Egypt, illiberal regimes in which generals and colonels pull the strings." (Germany's Superpower Quest Caused World War I by Michael Lind). When the Allied Powers entered World War I, they did so in defense of Western liberal values: in defense of the rights of the individual, the rights of free nations, and the rule of moral and constitutional law. Bypassing France's eastern defenses, Germany advanced north, invaded Belgium, commenced the war, and threatened the peace and security of the free world. Proclaimed to be the war which would end all wars, the war which would end all acts of aggression by nations, the war which would preserve, protect and defend the cause of human freedom throughout the world, World War I was unable to accomplish these noble ends. A rooted, embedded, fundamental Faustian power which worshiped the license of the state in opposition to the liberal worship of the license of the individual, Germany still possessed the force and strength of spirit and soul to rise again and make war. The world's arsenals and financiers of freedom and democracy, the Allies gave the world two decades of peace and security in one of the deadliest and most destructive wars fought in history. They established a two decade respite from attack by an enemy within the West before the German Faust would launch another crusade on behalf of socialism from its headquarters in Berlin.

THE LEFTIST AND LIBERTARIAN ASSAULT ON REASON

Reason is the faculty which draws conclusions from premises. If the premises are observations, then the form of reasoning is called inductive. In inductive reasoning, observed attributes or instances are mentally separated or abstracted from the objects in which they occur and universals are formed. Inductive reasoning is the primary form of reasoning because the notion of apriori knowledge, or knowledge which is acquired independently of the senses, is a contradiction in terms. If knowledge were acquired by a process of pure deduction from the contents of consciousness independently of the senses, then the forms deduced would be what is known in place of physical objects and all knowledge would be subjective. Knowledge which was subjective would be knowledge of nothing and could not exist. Science proceeds primarily by the method of induction and science which has abandoned induction and become political, ideological or exclusively deductive in character has abandoned sane cognition and the apprehension of reality, and is science in name only and is a form of religion. The method of induction was championed in Classical Culture and in the West during the Age of Enlightenment. Aristotle and Francis Bacon were among the preeminent philosophers of induction in their respective cultures, Classical and Western, but this method, which is synonymous with science itself, has not found an agreeable or congenial home in other periods of the West. This is because the West, in diametrical opposition to Classical Culture, is a romanticist culture, a subjective culture, an ideological culture, a culture which is symbolized by the figure of Faust, doctor of theology, alchemy and black magic, who made a pact with the Devil and betrayed his rational values and principles to achieve infinite will and power. The world of empirical reasoning and true science, which crowned Classical Culture and defined the single, glorious century of the West known as the Enlightenment, has come under sustained bombardment and attack in the hyperromanticist period which commenced in the twentieth century, and in the present day it has been pulverized into unrecognizable pieces and there is not a civilized person alive to pick them up. It has come under attack from the two main Faustian ideologies of liberalism and socialism, which have rightly seen in it the face of their irreconcilable enemy. Developed by John Locke, Adam Smith, John Stuart Mill, and the statesmen and thinkers of the American Revolutionary War, liberalism proclaims that individual liberty should form the basis of all morality and politics. Its argument rests upon an attack on reason and science. For reason and science have established that everything which exists is something, possesses an essence or definition, and that an existence which was nothing or had no essence would be a contradiction in terms. If to be was not to be something but was to be nothing, then nothingness would exist. Because to be is to be something, man is an entity which has a specific function and perfection, an activity which distinguishes him from the animals and enables him to survive and flourish in a uniquely human manner. Man possesses two faculties which distinguish him from the animals, reason and volition, but only one faculty which enables him to survive and flourish in a nonanimalistic manner: reason. Because the nature and definition of man is that of a rational animal, individuals who have chosen not to rationally flourish cannot morally speaking be regarded as human beings and are not morally speaking entitled to enjoy liberty. The moral ground of liberty is its employment to achieve a life of rational flourishing and if it is not employed to achieve this purpose, then it is morally indefensible and must be taken away. Liberalism defends its morality and politics of liberty by declaring war against reason and science and proclaiming that man is not a rational animal but is an indeterminate nonsomething and is pure nothingness. A rational, scientific system of morality and politics is one which is based upon the achievement of virtue and not liberty and views liberty merely as an instrument to achieve virtue and as possessing no ground or justification beyond this. The liberal principle of nonaggression rests upon the doctrine of moral subjectivism and rejection of the findings of reason and science and violates the principle of justice by allowing human appearing animals to live and be free. A rational, scientific system of morality and politics sanctions the mass killing of irrational nonflourishers as an act of moral justice, moral disinfection and moral purification. The liberal assault on reason was joined in the nineteenth century by an assault by the left. The leader of the assault was Karl Marx, whose metaphysics of materialism charged the ideological ammunition magazines for a multibarreled explosion. Rejecting the findings of reason and science, Marx proclaimed that only matter exists; it is a base, irreducible reality; and that what is called mind is merely an unreal superstructure without causative power of any kind. This matter which is the sole reality in the universe develops in accordance with a special, higher, dialectical process which transcends the strictures of ordinary, bourgeois logic. It engages in somersaults and acrobatics in which things are simultaneously their opposites, contradictions are synthesized, A is non A, nothing is anything, and the universe both exists and does not exist at one and the same time. The nature of man is that of a brute animal without reason, volition or any form of higher intelligence. The source of all economic wealth is brute muscular labor without admixture of intellectual skills or abilities and those who possess such skills and abilities do no work of any kind. If they are employers or entrepreneurs, they steal the profits which rightfully belong to the class of muscular laborers, called the proletariat. Since muscular labor is the source of all wealth, all the revenue earned by a business enterprise belongs in the hands of the proletariat and the enterprise's owners and entrepreneurs must be expropriated, collectivized, nationalized and put to death as parasites, bandits and exploiters of the people. Because matter is the sole reality, matter creates the means of production, matter creates factories and machines, and factories and machines in turn create people's ideas, and it is only the deluded bourgeois who still believe the opposite, that people's minds and ideas actually create factories and machines. Because matter is the sole reality, and the means of production, and not consciousness and will, determine the course of human history, socioeconomic classes are the fundamental classes in society, and the history of man is the history of class war and class struggle. All of society and every field of human endeavor bear the indelible imprint of class and it is a bourgeois delusion to suppose that there are such things as an absolute reality, an absolute truth, an absolute logic or an absolute science; there are in fact as many realities, truths, sciences and systems of logic as there are economic classes, no one of which may be held to be more valid or more correct than any other. Never before in the history of mankind has an attack against reason and science been staged as virulently, zealously, systematically and as charged with raw hatred as in Marxism, and the history of intellectual insanity and antiscience over the succeeding decades has been driven preeminently by Marxism and its offshoots and derivatives. The rejection of genetics on the grounds that Marxist dialectical materialism demands that there exist no fixed, inherent natures or essences of things and that reality be a plastic, malleable, indeterminate flux in which anything can be changed instantaneously into anything else. The rejection of cybernetics on the grounds that it obviates muscular proletarian labor by the installation of high level, automatic control and communications systems. The rejection of an objective historiography on the grounds that reality is that which is created by the party line and all historical accounts must serve the people's political and ideological agenda and be denialist, revisionist, fabricated and untruthful. The rejection of an objective study of words, meanings and grammatical structures on the grounds that objects, essences, meanings and relations are subjective class constructions which are determined by the current, reigning modes of production. The rejection of an objective sociology on the grounds that any study of the development, structure and functioning of human society must serve political ends and assume the class character of all culture. The rejection of the fact that global temperatures have varied wildly throughout human history independently of human activity and that such periods as the Ice Age and the Great Medieval Warming Period occurred centuries before the use of carbon emitting fossil fuels. The rejection of these facts on the grounds that they do not serve the Marxist ideological agenda to sweep away advanced, automated, mechanized, skill demanding, knowledge intensive, antiproletarian civilization. The tragic history of Doctor Faustus is the tragic history of the West itself. It is the story of the corruption of the human soul by a religion of romanticism and the ensuing war on reason, science and fundamental sanity, and it has reached its final act in the present day.

A PICTURE GALLERY OF HIGH CULTURES

The history of mankind does not comprise a mere record of customs, traditions, institutions, religions, arts, sciences, nations or societies unordered by anything. For those who have eyes to see and minds to understand, and are devoted to the principle of empirical research, the manifestations of human intellectual achievement which have appeared throughout history have been unified and organized in accordance with special principles. A proper study of the history of mankind reveals the existence of spiritual organisms, called cultures, which have served to compartmentalize, classify and separate out human achievements which rest upon different and opposed world views. If cultures are not defined as special unifying principles but as random collections of artistic and scientific achievements united only by population or geography, then contradictory philosophies would coexist in one and the same culture and the term culture would become synonymous with population and geography, which it manifestly and self evidently is not. Empirical historiography reveals the existence of something over and above the mere existence of populations or geographical locations; it reveals a series of patterns and commonalities which prevent culture from becoming a meaningless and incoherent term; and it demonstrates that the arts and sciences produced by nations and societies throughout history can be taxonomized as expression forms of different religions, attitudes and frameworks of beliefs. In five thousand years of written, recorded history, seven preeminent cultures have appeared which have conferred a world of achievements good and evil, majestic and ignoble, glorious and horrific, upon the life and career of mankind. These are the Egyptian, Indian, Chinese, Mexican, Arabian, Classical and Western cultures. Born in a setting dominated by endless sand intersected by the longest river in the world, Egyptian culture projected reality as a resolute, inexorable march down the path of death and a march into the life to come. The pyramids were pathways to death enclosed by mighty masonry. The Nile, the Great Sphinx, the Pyramid Texts, the Coffin Texts, the Great Book Of The Dead, magic spells to assist the dead in their journey through the underworld and the afterlife, and mummies, tombs and their monsters and curses, all were symbols of the great cult and determined stride into death which defined the gloomy world of the ancient Egyptians. Born in a setting plagued by crushing humidity, impenetrable fog, and storm bearing monsoon clouds, Indian culture projected the perceived world as an illusion, proclaimed that true existence is a zero, and counseled that we must escape from the phantom show of matter and time, birth and rebirth, called samsara and moksa, by achieving nirvana or self extinguishment. Expressed equally in Hinduism, Buddhism and Jainism, the Indian worship of nothingness was manifested in the morality of asceticism, nonresistance, meditation on the forms of consciousness, concentrated mental navel gazing, the abandonment of the self, the cessation of activity, unconditional giving and sharing, sacrifice to everything and everyone, and in a mathematics predicated upon the number zero. Born in a setting submerged in lakes, rivers, tributaries, basins, depressions and plains brimming with waves and pools of water, Chinese culture worshiped a life of nonaction, noneffort, nonwill, spontaneity, humility, self denial, self sacrifice, and aimless, directionless, disorganized wandering. The essence of reality consists in Tao or The Way, which is process without goal, movement without plan, and journeying without destination. Expressed equally in the schools of Taoism and Confucianism, Chinese culture projected human moral perfection as a life inundated by the unplanned rhythms of the universe, as a life of action without intention in the name of naturalness, distribution without justice in the name of compassion, impoverishment and emaciation in the name of frugality, and disappearance within clouds of drug induced delirium, euphoria, stupor, passivity, exhaustion, nonfunctioning, noncognition, spiritual coma and psychological death. Born in a setting veiled by a rainforest and greenhouse, by a blanket of oppressive humidity, and by a graveyard of constant decomposition, Mayan culture projected ultimate reality as a supernatural realm ruled by evil gods who needed to be placated with endless offerings, practices, ceremonies and rituals. This supernatural reality pervades and controls every aspect of life, from the simplest and most mundane, day to day activities to the world of tribal trade, war and governmental affairs. This reality is reached by the services of a shaman and medicine man and by the use of hallucinogenic drugs, whose destruction of perception, thought, will and consciousness is the gateway to true enlightenment. The gods are nourished by blood and demand human sacrifice as the supreme offering by their devoted followers. The killing must be performed with maximum violence and be preceded by maximum pain. The victim must be decapitated after he is tortured, beaten, scalped, burned and disembowelled. Born in a setting scorched by unending aridity and desolation upon which the sadistic heat of the sun conjures up illusions of oases, Arabian culture projected reality as a vast chamber pervaded by mystical light and mystical darkness. The mystical light is God, the mystical darkness is the Devil, and the righteous who have faith and obey the commands of God shall live for an eternity in the realm of heaven, while the infidels shall suffer eternal damnation in the fiery pit of hell. The nonfinality of death and the supernatural character of life, held by Jews, Christians and Muslims alike, the children of Arabian culture, is described by Oswald Spengler in The Decline Of The West: "Even death, for the author of the John Gospel as for the strict Muslim, is not the end of life, but a Something, a death force that contends with the life force for the possession of man." The Jewish, Christian and Muslim God is beyond all form and comprehension. The universe was created out of absolute nothingness by the command of God: "Be, and it is" (Koran, 2:117). The sole purpose of man's life is to know and worship God. The mystical conception of reality lying at the basis of Arabian culture is expressed in mathematics in the reduction of algebra to a system of numerical magic, alchemy, incantations and transmutation. It is expressed in the architecture of the mosque, a cavern sealed off from the world of natural light, a dome in which the forces of mystical light and mystical darkness contend for mastery. It is expressed in mosaic and arabesque designs with their flowing, intertwined lines and variegated patterns, signifying the primacy of pure space and movement over natural, bodily existence. Born in a setting blessed by the pure noonday light which threw the islands and headlands of the Aegean Sea into high relief, Classical Greco-Roman culture was unique in the history of high cultures: it exalted the primacy of physical reality and the power of reason and the senses to grasp this reality. It was embodied in the figure of Apollo, the preeminent Classical god, the god of sun and light, the symbol of reason, order, essence, perfection, ideality, beauty and health. The philosophy of Apollo, the philosophy of realism, common sense and ordinary experience, was written down in complete form by Aristotle, the premier philosopher of the Classical world. It was expressed in the ontology which accords primacy to the individual object in space and time. It was expressed in the distinction drawn between the act and object of consciousness, in the view that consciousness is primarily the consciousness of something beyond itself, and is not primarily the consciousness of its own contents. It was expressed in a system of logic which accorded primacy to induction. It was expressed in a system of physics which was the physics of real bodies and acknowledged the existence of nonmathematical properties such as colors. It was expressed in a system of mathematics which was the mathematics of real bodies and accorded primacy to three dimensional, Euclidean geometry and to an algebra in which letters stood for real, nonzero, nonnegative, counting numbers. It was expressed in a system of morality in which man's perfection was held to reside in a life of rational intelligence, rational conduct, rational effort, rational purposiveness and rational self actualization, for only through such a life can man survive and succeed in a distinctly human, nonbestial manner. It was expressed in a system of politics which affirmed the existence of individual rights but affirmed that rights are not absolute but are conditional upon their employment to achieve rational flourishing, and affirmed that no individual has a right to enjoy liberty for the sake of liberty, but only liberty for the sake of virtue. It was expressed in esthetics in the affirmation that beauty is a property of reality and is not a subjective mental state and is the condition of rational order, harmony and proportion of things, and that the highest form of art consists in the depiction of objective beauty in a physical medium, in the media of music, painting, sculpture or dance, and in a literature of sequential plots and rational heroes. Born in a setting engulfed in the darkness and gloom of soaring forests in the lands of Franconia, Burgundy and Saxony, Western culture is the latest culture to develop in the history of mankind and is the most fearsome and terrifying. It is the most fearsome and terrifying by virtue of its rejection of reason and sanity and its embrace of the philosophy of romanticism. What Apollo was to Classical culture, the figure of Faust is to Western culture: the preeminent symbol and embodiment of the culture's defining values and ideals. Bored, dissatisfied and depressed with his life as a scholar, Johann Faust, magician, alchemist, doctor of divinity and doctor of medicine, calls on the Devil and makes a pact with him. In this pact, he agrees to surrender his soul, his moral soundness and intellectual integrity, in order to receive infinite will, power, pleasure and experience in return. He agrees to bid farewell to physical reality in order to acquire a heightened state of consciousness. This Faustian worship of the will and exaltation of consciousness over the external world forms the essence and ethos of the West and has made the West the first romanticist culture in the history of mankind. It is expressed in ontology in the denial of the existence or perceivability of physical objects. It is expressed in theories of knowledge which project knowledge as purely apriori and deductive in character and acquired without the aid of man's sense organs. It is expressed in a mathematics of pure space, in a system of nonbodily, infinite dimensional, nonEuclidean geometry, and a system of algebra in which the letters stand for nonnumbers, such as zero and negatives. It is expressed in a system of morality based upon the categorical imperative in which goodness is defined as obedience to one's own feelings, intuitions and will without regard to objects, interests or consequences, and as obedience for the sake of obedience and duty for the sake of duty. It is expressed in a system of politics in which liberty is defined as license, as capitalist license or communist license, and is held to be the freedom to act unbound by the precepts of reason, order or limitation. In esthetics it is expressed in the view that beauty lies in the eye of the beholder, and consists in the free play and arrangement of pure forms, and that artistic creation is an exercise in formalist psychosis without content, reference or reality of any kind. It is expressed in an architecture which subordinates function to form, exemplified in the Gothic and Modern styles, which are ideological statements of pure space and volume without place, privacy, practicality, human comfort or human workability of any kind. The spirit of Faust has guided and directed the West from its inception in 1000 AD. It has been present at every stage of the culture and what is called the Renaissance was a mere surface countercurrent which never touched the soul and essence of the culture; this period saw the influence of Da Vinci and Michelangelo, with their pure Faustian, spatial, bodiless, infinite perspectives in drawing, painting, sculpture, architecture, engineering and technical inventions. If culture is not defined as a fundamental bond which unites all branches of human achievement into a pervasive whole, and is defined instead in terms of mere population or geography, then Classical culture would be a part of the history of the West, inasmuch as both cultures arose on the same continent and were inhabited by the same European ethnic groups. This linkage of Classical and Western cultures is the reductio ad absurdum of the view of culture as determined by mere geography or population. No two cultures could be more opposed to each other than the realist culture expressed by an Aristotle and the subjectivist culture expressed by a Kant. Proclaiming the primacy of consciousness over matter and will over reason, and exalting a will to reach and expand into the infinite, Western culture has been a profound blessing and a lethal curse upon the story of mankind. Bringing forth the wonders of mathematical physics and high technology, and the horrors of moral and political disorder, the West has constructed scientific algorithms which can make predictions down to the range of nanoseconds, launched global satellites and intergalactic space vehicles, and performed these feats in a moral and political age whose chapters are entitled Marx, Manson and mass murder. What is called Islamist terror is in reality Faustian terror, Kantian terror, Nietzschean terror, existentialist terror, and it has consumed and incinerated the world.

REDS TAKE OVER THE NATION

The advent of the twentieth century was the most fateful and ominous moment of time in the history of America for the cause of freedom and liberty. For this was the century in which the moral and political climate of the nation seeded storm clouds of tyranny and rained down destruction upon the nation's founding traditions and ideals. As Roman constitutionalism and jurisprudence were consumed in the maw of Caesar and his mobs in the dying hours of the Roman republic, so the mobs and caesars of America in the twentieth century targeted the nation's two most fundamental documents, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, for incineration and presaged the imminent doom of the republic. The story is the same and has remained unchanged throughout annals of human history and only the names, dates, places, actors and cultures have changed. It is the story of viruses, bacteria, layers of dirt and currents of sewage water dressed up as human beings, motivated by a hatred born of envy toward the intelligent, the talented, the ambitious, the purposeful, the flourishing and the successful, empowering the government to expropriate, nationalize, collectivize and exterminate this class, and hoisting upon the ruins of civilization banners bearing a message of progressive politics, social justice, welfare rights and communal responsibility. The story of the decline and fall of America is the story of the radicalization and rise to power of the masses in the twentieth century and the masses' repeal of Article IV, Section 4 of the Constitution, which establishes in "every state in this union a republican form of government." It is the story of the masses' repeal of republicanism through their abdicating courts, passive legislatures and caesarist executives, which one and all have given an automatic stamp of approval to the establishment of a red social democracy in place of the constitutionally bound and delimited republic envisioned and demanded by the nation's founders. The collapse of freedom and constitutionalism in America has been a century long development and its final chapters are being composed in the present day. The past one hundred years have seen the reds placed in charge of the nation's cultural, political and academic establishment, and in obedience to their masters, to the masses, majority, multitudes and mobs, the establishment has issued a program and manifesto for the annihilation of America in all but name and geographical location. The establishment has proclaimed that America's constitutional liberties produce economic inequality and must therefore be rendered null and void. It has proclaimed that communist countries provide a political and economic model for America to emulate because of their religious basis in a church of equality. It has proclaimed that fairness and justice for the individual are old fashioned bourgeois norms which must be swept aside in order to make the country a more equal environment. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a populist movement which has taxed and regulated industry out of existence in the name of the rights of the working class. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a union for social justice which has activated the spigots of easy credit, opened the bank vaults to the people, and nationalized every sector of society. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a share the wealth society which has confiscated all private fortunes and made every person a millionaire from the proceeds. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one with communist controlled labor unions, national, round the clock strikes, and guaranteed luxury wages for all without regard to work, merit or productivity. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a social security society which guarantees cradle to grave welfare support to every worthless, contemptible, unemployable specimen of subhumanity who has ever crawled across the face of the earth. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has packed its courts with leftist judges who have fed the meaning, text, language and logic of the Constitution into the pitiless shredding machines of popular decree and majoritarian tyranny. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose social justice warriors stage riots, firebomb buildings and burn down buildings in the name of power and privileges for people of color and hatred and discrimination against whites. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has breached the constitutionally guaranteed right to private enterprise and private property in the name of civil liberties and public lunch counters for blacks. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has mandated hiring, promotions, admissions and board membership set asides for women and nonwhites in the name of diversity, equity and inclusion. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has mandated discrimination on the basis of race and gender and the exclusion of white males from schools and offices in the name of social justice and equality of opportunity. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is an extreme radical movement which foments round the clock revolution and deprives successful, white males of equal protection under the law in the name of empowerment for the lords and masters of the earth: women, nonwhites and the poor. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is an affirmative action society which has rejected the principle of meritocratic advancement and unashamedly placed unqualified women and nonwhites in positions of power and responsibility. It has proclaimed that when considering candidates for positions or placements of any kind, race matters and gender matters, and nothing else matters, not skills, abilities, individuating characteristics, or the content or color of the candidate's character. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has suppressed rational argumentation, silenced the free and open exchange of ideas and opinions, and promoted hate speech against successful white males and against the supporters of Israel, America, industrial civilization, race neutral and gender neutral laws, and the modern liberal capitalist order, all in the name of upholding standards of politically correct thought and behavior. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which the executive controls the judiciary, the legislature and the constitution and leads a militant left mass movement to smash the institutions of liberal civilization, untrammled by the norms of reason or law. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a New Deal society, a Fair Deal society, a New Frontier society, a Great Society, a Compassionate Conservative society and a Hope and Change society which has sacrificed the rights of the individual upon the altars of gender, race and class politics, violated the constitution in order to protect social welfare programs, and empowered a class of misfits, malcontents, psychopaths and the mentally unstable who possess nothing whatever of value and seek only to disturb, agitate, riot, rebel and vandalize the infrastructure of civilization. Democracy in its final stages degenerates into government by executive fiat of the mob, for the mob and by the mob. Drowned out by the din of mass movements dissolving public order and constitutional government are the voices of America's distant past. Listen to their voices. "In a pure democracy, there is nothing to check the inducement to sacrifice the weaker party or the obnoxious individual." (James Madison, Federalist Paper Number Ten). "We are now forming a republican government. Liberty is found not in the extremes of democracy but in moderate governments. If we incline too much to democracy, we shall soon shoot into a monarchy." (Alexander Hamilton, Constitutional Convention, 1787). "Remember, democracy never lasts long. It soon wastes, exhausts and murders itself. There was never a democracy yet that did not commit suicide." (John Adams). "Between a balanced republic and a democracy, the difference is like that between order and chaos." (John Marshall). "A democracy is the vilest form of government there is." (Thomas Paine). These voices can still be heard by the special minds possessed by a fast vanishing minority of decent, righteous, civilized, law abiding Americans. These are minds which understand that true law does not represent the exercise of mere power but is an application of the rule of reason, and that true law is not simply what the majority, through its courts and legislatures, determines it to be, but is what the principles of morality determine it to be, the principles which affirm the rights, freedoms, dignity and worth of the individual as a rational being. These are minds which tremble in fear and horror at the final, irrevocable ascendancy of radicalism, lawlessness, mob rule and public violence throughout a land which the eyes of the free world were once set fixedly upon. They were set upon it because it was a beacon of hope to those crushed beneath the iron heel of socialist organization. It was a tall, proud, shining, exceptional city on a hill built upon the everlasting rock of the human spirit.

HIGH TREASON AT FORT MONMOUTH

A dissection of the mass mind provides a case study of moral perversion. It is all there, a mortal fear of freedom and independence, feelings of bitterness and rage over one's inability to achieve progress, success or anything of value, the hatred born of envy toward one's betters and superiors, chronic discontent with the world around one, and an unquenchable, unappeasable desire to uproot and burn down the foundations of civilization, all there to fill volumes and shelves of gloomy psychopathology, and all there to make decent, righteous people pray against prayer and hope against hope that this mass mind will never be allowed to ascend through the rungs of power and never be granted the right to rule over society. It is an eternally vain hope and an eternally unanswered prayer because all human cultures degenerate into mass rule, and socialism, the foremost symptom of the degeneration of a culture, is a system made by, for and of the masses. Socialism is mass rule, mass rule is socialism, and its appeal to the masses, to the haters and malcontents of the world who reproduce in the sewers of society, is perennial, unwavering, unequivocal and ineradicable. In the twentieth century, America fell under the domination of the masses, as it was destined to do after a century of history, and its new reigning monarchs seized the nation's constitution, shredded it, voided it, reinterpreted it beyond all recognition, declared inoperative its language, laws, logic and text, incinerated it into black earth, and voted to transform the nation in accordance with a blueprint of socialist totalitarian dictatorship. Decade by decade after turn of the twentieth century, the red penetration of America increased in severity and extent, and by mid century, it had reached critical mass and sparked a chain reaction which reduced the nation's constitutional heritage to volcanic dust and ash. Nowhere was this cancerous spread illustrated with more evil, sinister starkness and clarity than in a virus house called Fort Monmouth and in the career of its most notorious infected agent: Julius Rosenberg. Bitter and hostile toward the capitalist system and the freedom and opportunity it provides to those who are industrious and intelligent, Rosenberg lived a life which encapsulated the life of America's reds, pursued a profession which reflected the rise of domestic radicalism and revolution, and undertook an occupation which was an image and likeness of the nation's own descent into the arms of perfidy and treason. Rosenberg commenced his life, career, profession and occupation against America while a student at the City College of New York, when he became a member of the Young Communist League USA. In 1940, he joined the Army Signal Corps' Engineering Laboratories at Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, where he worked as an engineer-inspector. During this time, Fort Monmouth undertook fundamental research in electronics, communications, radar and guided missile controls. In 1942, Rosenberg was recruited by Semyon Semyonov to spy for the Soviet Ministry of the Interior or the NKVD. Rosenberg had been introduced to Semyonov by Bernard Schuster, a senior member of the Communist Party USA and the NKVD liaison for Communist Party leader Earl Browder. In 1944, Semyonov was recalled to Moscow and his duties were assumed by Alexander Feklisov. Rosenberg gave the Soviets volumes of top secret reports from the Emerson Radio Corporation, including a design for a proximity fuse, which detonates a bomb automatically when the distance to the target becomes smaller than a predetermined value. He recruited communists into spying for the NKVD, including William Perl and Morton Sobell. Directed by Rosenberg, Perl supplied Feklisov with volumes of classified documents from National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, including the design and production drawings for the P-80 Shooting Star, the nation's first operational jet fighter. Rosenberg informed Feklisov that his wife Ethel's brother, David Greenglass, was working on the Manhattan Project at the Los Alamos National Laboratory, and Feklisov ordered Rosenberg to recruit Greenglass. In 1944, Rosenberg recruited another spy at the Manhattan Project, Russell McNutt, who was working at the project's Oak Ridge National Laboratory. McNutt gave the Soviet's classified information about methods for manufacturing weapons grade uranium. Considered by Soviet intelligence officers to be a loyal and trustworthy communist, Ethel Rosenberg recruited her brother David Greenglass to steal nuclear secrets for the Soviets. She provided organization and planning support for Julius's espionage. She typed up notes of nuclear secrets for Julius given to her by David Greenglass. Convicted in 1951 of spying for the Soviets, providing them with classified information concerning radar, sonar, jet propulsion and nuclear weapons designs, the Rosenbergs were executed in 1953. The Rosenbergs' treason on behalf of communist criminality, communist aggression, communist terror and communist mass murder sent the course of history accelerating on an irreversible downward spiral. It was a spiral into the bombs, mushroom clouds and a holocaust against the rule of reason and the liberal order, a global war whose innocent victims and casualties were every man, woman and child on the planet: "Citizens of this country who betray their fellow countrymen can be under none of the delusions about the benignity of Soviet power that they might have been prior to World War II. The nature of Russian terrorism is now self evident. Idealism as a rational motive dissolves. I consider your crime worse than murder. Plain deliberate contemplated murder is dwarfed in magnitude by comparison with the crime you have committed. In committing the act of murder, the criminal kills only his victim. The immediate family is brought to grief and when justice is meted out the chapter is closed. But in your case, I believe your conduct in putting into the hands of the Russians the A bomb years before our best scientists predicted Russia would perfect the bomb has already caused, in my opinion, the communist aggression in Korea, with the resultant casualties exceeding 50,000 and who knows but that millions more of innocent people may pay the price of your treason. Indeed, by your betrayal you undoubtedly have altered the course of history to the disadvantage of our country." (Judge Irving Kaufman's Statement Upon Sentencing The Rosenbergs, 1951). A mass of documentation available to the public has painted a fearsome and terrifying portrait, a portrait immersed in the blackest of black lugubrious tones and a portrait almost too fantastic to be believed, of the most damaging espionage operation conducted in the history of America. Volumes of FBI files; volumes of cables sent from Moscow to KGB agents in America decrypted in a counterintelligence program known as Project Venona; volumes of KGB notebooks; volumes of Czechoslovakian intelligence files; and statements made by members of the Rosenberg spy ring, including the admission by Morton Sobell that Julius Rosenberg was involved in an espionage conspiracy which provided secret military and industrial information on nuclear weaponry to the Soviets. These items one and all have told a story of an espionage career which commenced before the German invasion of the Soviet Union and continued after the end of World War II. They have told a story of a Soviet agent who kept his gang of spies together, gave them generous financial support, and stockpiled massive quantities of top secret information for the KGB. Fort Monmouth today is a former United States Army installation, surrounded by the communities of Eatontown, Tinton Falls and Oceanport. In the 1940s, it was surrounded, engulfed and consumed by an international communist movement, conspiracy and espionage ring organized and directed at the fort by Julius Rosenberg. On the day of the Rosenbergs' execution, thousands of their supporters demonstrated in New York City, at the White House, at American embassies and in capital cities throughout the world. They offered impassioned prayers for the red traitors and chanted slogans of death and destruction to America and the free world. The leaders of the West, Jean Paul Sartre, Jean Cocteau, Albert Einstein, Harold Urey, Nelson Algren, Dashiell Hammett, Frida Kahlo, Diego Rivera, Fritz Lang, Pablo Picasso and Pope Pius XII, came out in fervent support for the Rosenbergs. These partisans for the Rosenbergs, these masses, multitudes, majorities and their establishment voices, were cascading particles of sand in an hourglass, racing hands on the clock of history, beats and pulses signaling that time had run out on the West. Civilization had become mortally sick from socialism and like the spies who would die that day, was ten paces away from its doom.

THE FACE OF THE NATION

Psychiatry is the study of mental illness, emotional disturbance and abnormal behavior. Reason based psychiatrists understand that the treatment of mental illness does not involve altering the biochemistry of the human brain but healing the corruptions of the human soul. Reason based psychiatrists have looked back upon the last one hundred years as a time of soul sickness without precedent in the annals of the West, as a period of moral degeneration and decline whose last parallel occurred during the fall of the Classical world and for the same reasons. They have seen a disease of the soul called envy spread and produce offspring in sewers dressed up as people, in sewers known as the masses, and have watched in fear and trembling at the generations spawned: envy spawning hatred spawning violence spawning revolution spawning the destruction of human civilization. Abject fear of being free, sovereign, independent and self sufficient. Envy toward one's betters and superiors and toward those who know more, do more, have more, and exhibit purpose and achievement throughout the course of their lives. Unappeasable and implacable hatred toward these people, producing a desire to collectivize them, expropriate them, plunder them, enslave them, silence them, level them down and blast them off the face of the earth. As the Classical world degenerated into the amphitheatres of mass politics led by Caesar donning the purple of populism and demagoguery and storming with his mobs the ramparts of Roman constitutionalism and jurisprudence, so the West since the turn of the twentieth century has degenerated into the parliaments and courthouses of mass politics taken over by imperial executives donning the mantle of progressivism, equality and social reform, and shredding with their voters the meaning and texts of liberal constitutions. Psychiatrists have seen the same sickness of envy infect both cultures, Classical and Western, seen the same sickness drag them both down into the waste bins of human history, and utilized their mental microscopes and cultural telescopes to make their diagnosis and their predictions. With their mental microscopes, they have been able to inspect in detail and investigate thoroughly the pathological condition of an uncultured, unenlightened, brutish mind. With their cultural telescopes, they have been able to condense the history of the twentieth century and shorten the timeline of the present day into a single, solitary point. In this point they have beheld the shameless preambles of the past and the fearsome and terrifying face of the future: the ascendancy of the masses, the ascendancy of socialism, the ascendancy of totalitarianism, the ascendancy of social mysticism, the ascendancy of social slavery, the collapse of the liberal order, and the crashing, ignominious halt of human progress and development. This point is a man and his career, a man whose story is the story of a tragedy reaching all the way around the world, a tragedy almost too evil and too disastrous to be believed: the story of the decline and fall of the West. It is a story which is all the more distressing and deplorable because it is a story scripted in America, the traditional beacon of hope to those oppressed by the claims of statism, the historical City on a Hill which those downtrodden beneath the advance of Leviathan looked up to as a shining example of the perfection of human liberty. The man is Bernie Sanders and psychiatrists have implored civilized people across America and across the world to look at his life, listen to his story, examine his career, investigate his beliefs, judge his character, and go out and fight to save any remnants they can of a dying world. Sanders has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which stirs up the failures, the frustrated and the incompetent with round the clock volleys of class war hate speech. He has proclaimed that a progressive society is an extremist society in which "there is no middle ground" and socialist mass murder is the law of the land. He has proclaimed that it is just and beneficial that people be forced to line up in the streets for food because this ensures that the worthless, contemptible dregs of society have enough to eat. He has proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which the poor rise up against the rich, the unsuccessful against the successful, the uneducated against the educated and the shiftless against the achievers and lead a revolution to stamp out every last vestige of human freedom human flourishing and human opportunity. He has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is exhilarated by the sight of communist leaders such as Fidel Castro pointing missiles at the West and is sickened by the sight of statesmen such as John Kennedy defying the red peril which threatened to engulf civilization. He has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is governed by democratically elected Marxist and communist dictators. He has proclaimed that a communist totalitarian dictatorship is a beacon of social and political enlightenment, a palace of culture which promotes character development in young people and trains them in the ways of responsible citizenship, and an infrastructural showcase whose buildings, roads and power supplies are the indispensable engines and pathways to a better and more beautiful tomorrow. He has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has politicized all aspects of life, deprived people of their private, personal existence, and compelled every man, woman and child on the planet to live, think and work for the sake of the state. He has proclaimed that communist dictators are the greatest statesmen in the history of mankind because they alone provide education and healthcare to the masses and have transformed liberty loving, self interested, antisocial, bourgeois individuals into dutiful, conscientious, obedient vassals of the people's liberation army. He has proclaimed that socialism should not frighten people because socialism means freedom from the injustice inflicted by the capitalist system which rewards those who possess talent, ability and dynamism and who succeed when the stagnant pools of filth around them fail. He has proclaimed that communism has killed hundreds of millions of people throughout the world but these people deserved to die because, fighting for their fundamental freedoms, for their right to live as nonsacrificial citizens, and for their right to live in dignity, honor and self respect, they were sworn enemies of the people's church of the lambs of God, the God who is the state, society, the community, and the masses and mobs of human appearing debris. He has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has abolished the liberal capitalist system and ended the people's subservience to the market, to the rule of law, to constitutional government, and to anything and everything which is remotely connected to or supports the cause of human freedom. A study of the pathological condition of a culture is a study of pornography. The ascendancy of socialism is the supreme symptom of pornography. Socialism is the pornography of brute violence, mass destruction, mob power and the ruthless stampeding of the individual. Released from the darkest corners, the lowest book shelves, the most concealed closets, the most secret basements, the most obscure academic recesses, and the deepest buried sewers of society, a rolling wave of socialism, a surging tide of pornography, has swept across America. Socialist political candidates have captured over fifty state and municipal elections, including five on the Chicago city council. The majority of young people supports socialism. The majority of the Democratic Party supports socialism. Half the population supports socialism. The membership of the Democratic Socialists of America has increased by tens of thousands and two members of Congress, Alexandra Ocasio-Cortez and Rashid Tlaib, are among them. The preeminent symbol and embodiment of this wave is Bernie Sanders, senator from Vermont, candidate for president, and chief proselytizer and popularizer of a satanic religion embraced by the haters, malcontents, misfits, deviants and pornography consumers ranged against America. Psychiatrists, psychologists, and all those devoted to the proper functioning of a mind, a soul, a culture and a civilization have beheld in a single figure the coming of an apocalypse. They have seen in Bernie Sanders a criminal knight riding out from the depths of hell and leading a nationwide movement under banners sprayed with obscenities. Totalitarian politics, communist politics, fascist politics, swastika politics, egalitarian politics, environmentalist politics, green party politics, community organizing politics, neighborhood activism politics, campus shutdown politics, hammer and sickle politics, gender, race and class politics. All the symbols and slogans of all the moral filth on full display on these banners held aloft by Sanders voters in the final midnight ride of America.

A LEAGUE OF GENTLEMEN

People and cultures diagnosed as degenerate have lost the mental and moral qualities which civilized people have deemed to be normal and desirable and are caught in a spiral of irreversible decline. Cultural degeneracy is a universal phenomenon. Classical Culture became degenerate when it abandoned its rationalist values and accepted the world of the Christians and Germans and planted the flags of victory of religion and barbarism. Degeneration commenced in the West in the twentieth century when the Enlightenment values of reason and capitalism were placed under sustained bombardment and attack by a mass movement of socialism led by commissars, fuhrers, party bosses, pundits, commentators, editorialists, imperial presidents, and agitprop partisans masquerading as professors and scholars. Hatred of reason, science, freedom, individualism, independent thinking, critical analysis, the rule of law, and constitutionally bound and delimited government, and a fervent desire to escape from the demands of reality and find refuge and sanctuary within the fever swamps of mysticism and collectivism: such are the symptoms of the degeneration which has afflicted the West and sullied its soul from top to bottom, in every department of human affairs, and throughout every educational, occupational and socioeconomic class. Cultural degeneration is a cancer which respects neither background nor profession as it moves relentlessly on its way and consumes the entirety of the social organism. The universal, pandemic, class blind character of cultural degeneration was exemplified in the careers of five scions of wealth and privilege who chose to betray the world in which they had been raised and plunge headlong into the foul waters of high treason. They comprised the Cambridge Spy Ring, a gang of spies in Britain whose members transmitted classified information to the Soviet Union from the early 1930s through to the early 1950s. Senior ranking members of an establishment which had itself become degenerate and had a rapport with communism, they were never prosecuted by the establishment and never served a day in jail. They were Donald McLean and Guy Burgess, who defected to the Soviet Union in 1951, Kim Philby, who defected in 1963, and Anthony Blunt and John Cairncross, who confessed their crimes to British intelligence in the 1960s, but were allowed to continue working, writing and traveling abroad. Recruited by Soviet intelligence while a Cambridge undergraduate in 1934, Donald Mclean gained entry into the civil service by claiming to have renounced Marxism. In 1938, he became third secretary in the British Embassy in Paris, where he passed on information to the Soviets concerning Anglo-German diplomacy. From 1944 to 1948, he served in the British Embassy in Washington, was promoted to first secretary, and passed on volumes of classified information to the Soviets, including a copy of the cables exchanged between Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and Lord Halifax, British ambassador to the United States. He became secretary of the Combined Policy Committee of America, Britain and Canada, and British representative of the US/UK/Canada Council on Nuclear Secrets. He provided the Soviets with information on the progress and development of the US/UK/Canada nuclear weapons program, told the Soviets the amount of uranium and plutonium used in America's nuclear bombs, and enabled the Soviets to calculate the number of nuclear bombs America was able to build. Recruited by Soviet intelligence while a Cambridge undergraduate in 1935, Guy Burgess worked as a Soviet spy while a BBC producer, an MI6 intelligence officer and a member of the Foreign Office. While at the Foreign Office, he transmitted thousands of classified documents to the Soviets. The scale of Burgess's treason is described by Andrew Lownie in Stalin's Englishman: The Lives of Guy Burgess: "Burgess saw almost all material produced by the Foreign Office, including telegraphic communications both decoded and encoded, with keys for decryption, which would have been valuable to his Soviet handlers". While working at the Far Eastern Department of the Foreign Office, Burgess was a vociferous, uncompromising advocate of the recognition of the communist forces as the legal, official legal government of China. Recruited by Soviet intelligence while a Cambridge undergraduate in 1934, Kim Philby joined MI6 in 1940. He gave the Soviets advance warning of Operation Barbarossa and Japanese plans to attack southeast Asia instead of the Soviet Union; the latter intelligence allowed the Soviets to transfer troops from the southeast into the Moscow area for a counteroffensive against the Germans. Philby informed the Soviets of an Anglo-American plan to overthrow the communist regime in Albania. He describes his secret work on behalf of the Soviets to eliminate anticommunist operations in Eastern Europe: "The agents we [British intelligence] sent into Albania were armed men intent on murder, sabotage and assassination. They knew the risks they were running. I was serving the interests of the Soviet Union and those interests required that these men be defeated. To the extent that I helped defeat them, even if it caused their deaths, I have no regrets." (A Spy Among Friends: Philby And The Great Betrayal by Ben MacIntyre). In 1951, Philby told two other members of the Cambridge Spy Ring, Donald Mclean and Guy Burgess, that they were under suspicion by British authorities, and in consequence they immediately defected to the Soviet Union. When Philby defected to the Soviet Union in 1963, he had provided the KGB with over 1,000 classified documents from British intelligence. The career of Kim Philby was a trajectory of professional deceit hurtling into the turbid waters of moral disgrace and sinking into the sinister depths of high treason. Kim Philby, high ranking member of British intelligence, head of its counterespionage operations, recipient of the Red Banner of Honor, KGB general, Soviet soldier spy in a war against the free world, and preeminent voice and embodiment of the degeneration of the West: "Mr. Burgess and especially Mr. Maclean, who served in high posts in the British Embassy in Washington during and after World War II, provided the Soviet Union a wealth of detail on American and British policy at the height of the Cold War. But Mr. Philby's treachery was the most serious. He rose to very high rank in the British Secret Intelligence Service, known as MI6, and some thought he might become its chief; he ran its entire counterespionage operation and set up the section that spied on the Soviet Union. After his defection in 1965, the Russians awarded him the Red Banner of Honor for his services to the KGB; Mr. Philby later received the privileges of a KGB general. In 1968, he published his memoirs, My Secret War." Recruited by Soviet intelligence in 1935 while a don at Cambridge University, Anthony Blunt became a Soviet talent spotter and recommended Guy Burgess, Kim Philby, Donald Maclean, John Cairncross and Michael Straight as potential spies. During and after World War II, while working as an agent of MI5, he provided to the Soviets the names of dozens of British intelligence agents. Blunt went to his death a loyal, dedicated, dyed in the wool red, unrepentant over his betrayal of his nation and proud of the suffering he had caused: "The memoir's tone of regret for the price Blunt paid personally for betraying his country, coupled with the absence of any apology to those who suffered as a result of his actions, including secret agents working for Britain whose identities he passed to the Russians during World War II, contributed to harsh criticism of the document on Thursday from British historians and commentators." (Memoirs of British Spy Offer No Apology by John Burns, The New York Times, July 23, 2009). Anthony Blunt is buried in hell and on his gravestone reads the epitaph: Anthony Blunt, Professor of Art History, Director of the Courtland Institute of Art, Surveyor of the Queen's Pictures, celebrated art writer, communist spy. Recruited by Soviet intelligence in 1936 while working in the Cabinet Office of the British government, John Cairncross went to work for British intelligence in 1941. Between 1941 and 1945, he provided 6,000 classified documents to the Soviets, including information on the West's nuclear weapons program, the Manhattan Project. Cairncross' life's mission was the defense of communism from invasion by the free world: "I am delighted that our friends found my help worthy of attention, and I am proud that I contributed something to the victory, which led to the almost complete cleansing of the Soviet land from the invaders" (John Cairncross, The Most Effective Scientist In Second World War. Why Stalin Did Not Trust Churchill. German Encryption Was Read Not Only In London, But Also In Moscow. Soviet Archives). Graduates of elite secondary schools, sons of knighted cabinet ministers, recipients of knighthood, distinguished students and dons at Cambridge University, acclaimed academic writers and scholars, and senior ranking members of the British political establishment, the Cambridge Five exemplified as no others had the plague and scourge of cultural degeneration. It looms over the soul of every man, woman and child alive. Patricians and mandarins at the apex of British society, bearers of the highest titles, rank and status, and located at the center of the British Foreign Office were a ring of traitors and double agents in the service of the Soviets. Penetrating the corridors of power and intelligence, and esteemed by the Soviets as the Magnificent Five, they were the most successful foreign agents in Soviet history. At an early age their souls went missing and were never to return, as the noose tightened around the West.

ON THE WATERFRONT

For thousands of years, philosophers have known and understood a fearsome and terrifying truth: that mass politics equals socialist politics, that the mass mind hates freedom and liberty, and embraces like a deity the swamplands of collectivist sacrifice and tyranny. Born in a morbid matrix of envy and jealousy toward their betters and superiors, the masses' perennial and inveterate hatred of capitalism, the system which rewards those who are talented, intelligent, industrious and innovative, achieved ascendancy throughout the West soon after the turn of the twentieth century and brought communist domination of labor unions. Finding the system of socialist equality compellingly attractive and a soothing restorative to their troubled souls blazing white hot at the sight of people allowed by dint of superior work and energy to succeed and flourish in a free society, the masses placed communists in control of the industrial union movement in the early decades of the twentieth century and voted red union bosses into power in the automotive, electronics, mining, machinery, maritime, and public transportation sectors. The political system developed by Karl Marx, which advocates class war and the collective ownership of the individual, has had an iron grip on the minds of the masses throughout the twentieth century and up to the present day. Mocking the power of reason, law, morality, and nationalist, patriotic soldiers marching in support of liberal democracy, the theology of the reds promoted by the high priests of gender, race and class politics has composed the final chapter of the West in an age of cultural degeneration: "The power of nationalism and patriotism is great and their hold on American citizens has been a potent fact in our history. Yet many thousands of American citizens have supported communists as their union leaders, and even today continue to vote for those leaders in secret elections under government supervision." (Communist Party vs. the CIO by Max Kampelman). In the ideologically blackened vision of the masses, capitalism is a system of unending misery, poverty and exploitation. Blinded by passion, prejudice, envy and hatred, the masses view free societies as gritty, unswept plains of worker abuse and maltreatment, while the fast vanishing minority of citizens, those who are guided by the precepts of reason and reality, them as immaculate gardens of opportunity and sanctuaries of righteousness raised above the surrounding desolation of red totalitarian cruelty: "I was beginning to see the poverty of people no matter where you went, no matter what port. I was only used to the poverty of Hell's Kitchen, or my own poverty in Hoboken or Jersey City. You didn't think the whole world was full of that until you got to visit it and found it no matter where you went. So then you figure, what the hell is going on here? And these are the type of things you wonder about, and you start asking yourself questions." (Bill Bailey, quoted in Reds or Rackets? by Howard Kimeldorf). Dominated by the most uneducated, unskilled, untalented and unqualified scum streaming in like sewage water from the four corners of the earth, controlled by a shiftless rank and file devoted not to the advancement of work but to the abolition of work, the longshoremen's unions epitomized labor union hostility toward capitalism and the masses' yearnings to achieve a socialist transformation of society. Founded in 1937, the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union was the most communist labor union in America and a hotbed of an implacable hatred and militancy which threatened the existence of the nation's liberal democratic order. The ILWU was an uncompromising opponent of the Cold War, supported the presidential candidacy of Henry Wallace, running in the communist front Progressive Party, and fought to increase communist participation in labor unions across the nation. Thousands of its dockworkers were dues paying members of the Communist Party, fellow travelers, and loyal subscribers to the party's newspaper, The Daily Worker. Marching under the banners of Marx and Lenin, the base of ILWU was the base of the Communist Party and the base of America and it led the struggle of the masses to overthrow a free society: "The ILWU was one of the great successes of the Communist Party in establishing a native working class base approximating the Leninist image." (The Social Basis of American Communism by Nathan Glazer). In 1950, the Congress of Industrial Organizations expelled the ILWU for promoting the Communist Party line. Leading the ILWU from its founding in 1937 to his retirement in 1977, Harry Bridges personified the character of the union and its socialist attack against America. A member of the communist front Industrial Workers of the World and a friend and ally of the American Communist Party, Bridges was the veritable face of the American masses. Supported and admired by any man, by every man and by the people next door, Bridges was a byword for cultural degeneration. He was America's general secretary in charge of revolution, hate politics, class war, red danger in the streets, and the destruction of Western civilization: "Bridges was far to the left of any other American labor leader ever to attain equal prominence. Bridges epitomizes labor revolt and extremism. He is a symbol within our country of revolutionary tendencies and dangerous ideas. His name, far more than that of Earl Browder, the General Secretary of the Communist Party of the United States, is practically synonymous with radicalism." (Labor's Overlords by Richard Neuberger, American Magazine, March 1938). Known throughout the nation as Red Harry, Bridges was an apostle of class struggle whose single, overriding aim and mission was to drive entrepreneurs, innovators, dynamos, risk takers, the employing class, and the wealth producing class out of business and out of existence and place absolute power into the hands of the masses. He sought passionately, with every fiber of his being, to raise the curtain on an age of violence: "We take the stand that we as workers have nothing in common with the employers. We are in a class struggle, and we subscribe to the belief that if the employer is not in business his products will still be necessary and we still will be providing them when there is no employing class. We frankly believe that day is coming." (Bad Man Bridges by Richard Neuberger, Forum, April 1939). Bridges was a direct, outspoken, honest, straightforward red. Before the courts, before the media, before his union, before the nation and before the world, he held aloft the banner of socialism and never wavered in his denunciation of individual freedom, his promotion of class war, and his belief that communist totalitarian dictatorship is the highest, noblest social system known to man. Painting himself in the reddest shades of red, Bridges was the Pied Piper of the American masses and led the rats in control of the nation into the fiery abyss of cultural self destruction: "He's the most radical labor leader in the country. Yet those longshoremen would follow him into a fiery furnace." (Labor's Overlords by Richard Neuberger, American Magazine, March 1938). In the filthy, unhealthy, topsy turvy, upside down universe of Harry Bridges, the system of colonialism, oppression and dictatorship known as communism was exalted as a beacon of freedom and hope for the people, while liberal democracy was condemned as a system of foulness, unpleasantness and repugnance to the mind. Disordered, confused, upended and upturned by whirling sandstorms of unmitigated hatred, Bridges saw freedom as slavery, dictatorship as liberation, collectivism as justice and capitalism as a slum. Civilized people bombarded by Bridges' diatribes saw that while there was nothing morally wrong with capitalism, there was something very wrong with the state of Bridges' soul: "I took a trip that gave me a look at India and another at Suez, and what I saw there didn't line up with what my father had told me about the dear old British. Then I got home and saw London. was the filthiest, most unhealthy place I ever had seen. And the people in the slums were worse than the natives in India and Port Said—dirty, nasty, no good. So this, I say, is British democracy. So I kept traveling around, and the more I saw the more I knew that there was something wrong with the system." (Harry Bridges by Charles Larrowe, quoting Bridges). The route from the seas of envy and hatred to the shores of revolution and destruction is a route well traveled by the masses. They have been traveling this route from time immemorial. Roiling and churning with a sickness of the soul which makes them seek vengeance against their moral and intellectual superiors, the masses docked and went ashore in the twentieth century. Riding on ships emblazoned with slogans shouting "social justice" and "workers' control", the masses commenced their war against society on the waterfront.

BLACK COMMUNISM, BLACK NATIONALISM

The twentieth century marked the advent of the late modern age, the advent of the kingship of a god called socialism. Emerging in the closing hours of the West, this god begot two sons, communism and fascism, and this unholy trinity proceeded to smash the temples of reason and the hallways of the liberal democratic order and construct upon its ruins and desolation sacrificial altars dedicated to a totalitarian state. No field of social or political activity was left untouched by the new religious dispensation and in America, for decades the lighthouse, arsenal and City upon a Hill of the free world, the revolution assumed particularly tragic proportions as the nation's black civil rights movement was hijacked by the reds. What had commenced in the late nineteenth century as a movement to repeal Jim Crow laws, to abolish state supported discrimination, disenfranchisement and segregation of blacks, and to secure equal protection for all under the law, was transformed in the 1960s into a movement to abolish the capitalist system and lay the foundations for an order of statism and dictatorship colored red and colored black. The protagonists in this movement comprised a gallery of the nation's social, political and religious leaders and they stood united in their hatred of free societies and the liberal values enshrined in the nation's founding documents. From the Martin Luther Kings to the Malcolm Xs to the Stokely Carmichaels to the Louis Farrakhans to the Jesse Jacksons to the Al Sharptons of the present day, the leaders of the black civil rights movement have marched under the same banner, the same program and the same manifesto: the elimination of individual rights and the establishment of an omnipotent government. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a multiracial proletarian movement which has overcome the failings of capitalism by the totalitarian regimentation of every man, woman and child. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has outlawed race hatred and racial discrimination and organized blacks and whites in a people's coalition to enact class hatred and class discrimination as the supreme laws of the land and target entrepreneurs and business leaders for total destruction. They have proclaimed that capitalism has brought down upon mankind the crisis of poverty and the stench of injustice and these can only be addressed by a redistribution of the wealth. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has established economic equality as a corollary to racial equality and expropriated the producers and the achievers and leveled down the people. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has obliterated the distinction between public property and private property, between a public lunch counter and a private lunch counter, between a state owned hotel and a privately owned hotel, and decreed that all businesses are government owned businesses and that the government has the right to order private business owners to open their premises to anybody and everybody the government decrees they must. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which people are hired, promoted and admitted to school on the basis of their race and not their merit and black candidates are given preferential treatment in the name of civil rights and racial equality. They have proclaimed that capitalism has outlived its usefulness and must be swept away by a system of red totalitarian tyranny in which black man and white man will sit down together at the table of brotherhood and join hands in a community of the enslaved. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system which takes necessities from the mass of muscular laborers who do all the work and produce all the wealth and gives luxuries to the classes of the talented and the successful who do no work and produce no wealth. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a socialist community which has swept away capitalist chaos and saved the people from abject poverty by stealing from the few and giving the proceeds to the many. They have proclaimed that the system in which people are allowed to live and work for themselves, the system which grants legal recognition to the profit motive and the right to own and dispose of private property, is a system of capitalist racism, capitalist materialism and capitalist militarism and must be overthrown by the people's conquering armies of red totalitarian dictatorship. The politics of class hatred, class struggle, class slavery and the reduction of the individual to a cog in the machinery of a state subjugation mechanism was advocated by Martin Luther King: "In a sense, you could say we are engaged in the class struggle. Something is wrong with capitalism. There must be a better distribution of wealth. Maybe America must move toward a democratic socialism." (The Forgotten Socialist History of Martin Luther King Jr by Matthew Miles Goodrich, quoting King). Black civil rights leaders have proclaimed that a progressive society is a top to bottom socialist society which has withdrawn all moral and legal recognition of the rights, freedom and dignity of the individual. It is a society which has lashed the individual to the chariot of the state and in the name of emancipation and equality for blacks and the poor has established a duty incumbent upon every individual to provide housing to all, clothing to all, education to all, jobs to all, medical care to all, old age pensions to all, and cradle to grave welfare and security to all. Black civil rights leaders have proclaimed that a progressive society is a black society, a Muslim society, and a black nation of Islam which affirms that the Koran is the glorious Mein Kampf of blacks, that Allah is the exclusive god of blacks, that black pride, black nationalism, black culture, black ideology, black supremacy, black religion and black violence are the supreme laws of the land, and has recruited armies of blacks to build prisons to throw white people into, and dig mass graves to bury white people in, and ignited a striking, splendorous pyre to burn the body, the soul and the corpse of Western civilization. Multiplying in the underground conduits, septic tanks and sewage canals of society are the soul particles of black fascism and the black power movement. The hatred which breeds here is a hatred whose virulence and intensity cannot be observed except in communist circles. It is same category of hate as communist hate, only the hate object has changed, from the class of the bourgeois to the race of whites. The Marxist roots of this black fascist hatred of whites is thus clear and unmistakable and civilized people tremble convulsively in fear and horror when they listen to the sounds of this neoMarxist attack on human decency and the human conscience. Preach the haters: white people are the greatest liars, degenerates, drunkards, drug addicts, idlers, robbers, looters, exploiters, oppressors, mischief makers, war makers and mass murderers ever to sully the pages of human history. They must be accused, charged, indicted and placed on trial before a righteous black jury for their inveterate, intrinsic, ineradicable sins, for their fundamental crime of existing, and they must be found guilty as charged, and be sentenced to death, and be executed a thousand times and a thousand times more, and only when every last white person has been eradicated a thousand times over from the face of the earth will the throne of justice preside once again over the affairs of mankind and order return to the course of the universe. The sickness of the soul which spawns such hatred, the sickness of Marxism which has infected the West, can be seen and heard in every home, office, town, city, street corner, college campus and government department in the land. Undesired, discredited and unequivocally condemned in the rapidly vanishing circles of rational, fair minded, liberal guided citizens, the savage gossellers and hate merchants of black fascism have lowered the curtain on the modern age: "While city officials, state agencies, white liberals, and sober minded negroes stand idly by, a group of negro dissenters is taking to street corner step ladders, church pulpits, sports arenas, and ballroom platforms across the United States, to preach a gospel of hate that would set off a federal investigation if it were preached by Southern whites: 'I charge the white man with being the greatest liar on earth! I charge the white man with being the greatest drunkard on earth. I charge the white man with being the greatest gambler on earth. I charge the white man, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, with being the greatest murderer on earth. I charge the white man with being the greatest peace breaker on earth. I charge the white man with being the greatest robber on earth. I charge the white man with being the greatest deceiver on earth. I charge the white man with being the greatest troublemaker on earth. So therefore, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I ask you, bring back a verdict of guilty as charged!' [Malcolm X] The indictment you've just heard is being delivered over and over again in most of the major cities across the country. This charge comes at the climax of a morality play called The Trial. The plot, indeed the message of the play, is that the white man has been put on trial for his sins against the black man. He has been found guilty. The sentence is death. The play is sponsored, produced, by a negro religious group who call themselves The Muslims". (The Hate That Hate Produced, television documentary, WNTA-TV, New York, 1959). In 1964, at the United States Capital, Martin Luther King met Malcolm X. They shook hands and were on good terms in their face to face meeting. Behind them, behind the Capital, behind the seat of American liberty, loomed the red god of the twentieth century. It was the god which had decreed death and destruction to the individual, with all his rights, freedoms, dignity, merit, achievements, qualities and worth. It was the god of the collective and its two sons, the god of communism and the god of fascism, presided over the black civil rights movement. Martin Luther King and Malcolm X, the hammer and sickle and the swastika factions of the movement, joining hands in the closing hours of liberal civilization.

NOT GUILTY

A synecdoche is a figure of speech in which a part is made to represent a whole, as the word hands represents sailors in the sentence All hands on deck. In the trial of Harvey Weinstein, synecdoches presented themselves by the thousands as symbols and embodiments of a fifty year old hate movement called feminism. But one part of the trial stands out as the preeminent symbol and figure of the movement, for it symbolized, like nothing else during the proceedings and like nothing else during the half century of feminist hate agitation, the movement's essential playbook and modus operandi in its quest to destroy the lives, subvert the careers and take away the liberty of the male population. It is the testimony of Jessica Mann, whom Weinstein was convicted of raping. The feminist tactics are all there, all on display, all exhibited to the world in all their sinister reality: the conflation of accusations with evidence and mass accusations with mass evidence; the principle that the state need not prove accusations of sexual assault beyond a reasonable doubt and need not prove them at all; the rule that sexual assault verdicts need not be either factual or fair, and that it is acceptable to convict a defendant of sexual assault whether or not the assault actually took place, and whether or not the accuser had consensual sexual relations with the accused after the alleged assault, and whether or not the accuser had chosen to wait for a substantial period of time before filing the complaint; and the precept that juries have no right of nullification, no right to disregard a sexual assault law which does not specify that sexual assault is not actionable, on grounds of fundamental fairness, if the accuser had consensual sexual relations with the accused after a complaint was made or if the accuser had waited for a substantial period of time before filing the complaint. After three days of cross examination, Mann's claim that she had been a victim of Weinstein's alleged sexual violence was completely refuted. She stated that she had met Weinstein at a film industry party in Los Angeles where she was pursuing an acting career. She stated that Weinstein had befriended her, given her a film script and invited her to the Academy Awards. She stated that she had sent Weinstein dozens of messages expressing love and affection after the alleged attack in 2013. She stated that she had met Weinstein twice after the alleged attack. She stated that she had changed her flight in order to see Weinstein a day after the attack, which was his birthday. She stated that she had asked Weinstein's company to arrange transportation to New York and back to her home in Los Angeles. She stated that she had engaged in a voluminous email correspondence with Weinstein in the months and years following the alleged rape, sending him such messages as: "I feel so fabulous and beautiful, thank you for everything", "Rough day. When are you back in LA, my friend?", "I appreciate all you do for me, it shows", "I am always happy to see your smile and I hope to see you sooner than later. I hope some of your genius rubs off on me", "I got a new number. Just wanted you to have it. Hope you are well and call me anytime, always good to hear your voice", "You're the one who makes it look good with your smile and beautiful eyes!! But thank you that makes me so happy to hear". She stated that in 2015, two years after the alleged rape, she had asked Weinstein to sponsor her for membership in the Soho Club in Los Angeles. She stated that in 2016, three years after the alleged rape, she had spent four hours with Weinstein in a hotel room having sex with him, and had sent him an email afterward: "I feel so fabulous and beautiful. Thanks for everything". She stated that in 2017, four years after the alleged rape, she had sent Weinstein an email: "I love you, I always do. but I hate feeling like a booty call." She stated that in 2014 she had sent an email to her boyfriend, Edi Gathegi describing her relationship with Weinstein: "My secret and my fear is knowing that a part of the dynamic I had with Harvey would mean you'd never talk to me again. I was close enough to him to tell you that he no longer has a working penis. On the lower half of his body he had some type of surgery or burn and he's lucky to even have his parts. Sometimes I felt hopeless and should just be with an old man because I'm a lost cause. I accepted that my father was that older man who dated younger than me and I would in turn become that kind of woman. I tried to make Harvey a pseudofather. Harvey validated me. He always offered to help me in ways that my parents didn't. I felt approval to pursue the industry because he was encouraging. Harvey was my father's age and he gave me all the validation that I needed." She stated that she had sent her friends emails extolling Weinstein as a good friend and recommending him professionally. She stated that she was one of many accusers who had established a pattern of criminal sexual behavior on the part of Weinstein. In the nineteenth century, a hate movement known as Marxism emerged which condemned capitalists, entrepreneurs and knowledge workers as bourgeois enemies of the proletariat. This movement spawned two children which continued the hatred in different directions. The national socialists constructed a Third Reich of race hatred in the 1930s and targeted the Jews for total destruction. The feminist movement emerged in the 1960s on mission of destruction of men. Over the past century, this Marxist trinity has exploded a bomb called identity politics, and in mushroom clouds raining down gender, race and class hatred, it has laid waste to the modern liberal order. Devoid of decency, fairness, impartiality, concern for due process of law, and basic, rational intelligence, today's feminists have transformed juries into lynch mobs, politicized courtrooms beyond recognition, and ordered directed verdicts in accordance with the cries of public opinion and not the demands of justice. They are the riders of an apocalypse, the impresarios of cultural degradation and the authors of a horror story about an endless journey into the night.

LABOR DOESN'T WORK

Envy has been classified by psychologists as an emotional disorder in which a person who lacks another's superior qualities, achievements or possessions desires them and wishes that the other person lacked them. Envy is a malicious, criminal, negative emotion which leads those who are afflicted with it to commit acts of violence. Envy, Satan's curse, the capital scourge on the scum of mankind, a severe malfunction of the soul which produce feelings of extreme pain at the sight of one's spiritual betters and superiors coupled with a desire to inflict maximum misfortune upon them, is the key to understanding the mind of the masses and is the driving force behind the masses' preeminent social and political system: socialism. An organized association of the masses designed to advance their power over employers and entrepreneurs, labor unions have sought throughout their history to undermine and sabotage the capitalist system and expropriate the employers and entrepreneurs who create all wealth and tax and regulate them out of existence. The program and manifesto of the labor movement is a public declaration of the aims and policies of those whose spirits s have been pierced, wounded and killed by the venom of envy, whose minds flow with the sewage water of malice and bitterness toward their betters and superiors, who seek to abolish the world of freedom, work, production and achievement, and seek to flood the plains of justice and opportunity with the fever swamps of red totalitarian tyranny and collectivization. The red, radical, revolutionary gangs known as labor unions have proclaimed that the right to unionize means the right to initiate violence against those who do not wish to strike or join a union and the right to compel employers to deal only with unions and not with any workers outside them. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has outlawed freedom of association and compelled every employee at the workplace to join a union. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is in which scabs, those who cross picket lines and report to work, are routinely beaten up and employers who fire strikers and hire replacement workers are thrown into jail. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which public sector unions have shut down schools, idled buses and trains, let undelivered mail accumulate by the sackful, and let garbage foul the streets in a quest to extort unmerited, stratospheric wages from the taxpayers. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which unions are allowed and encouraged to threaten workers with grievous bodily harm unless they join it and pay dues to it. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has shattered the foundations of modern civilization by placing all wealth and industry into the hands of unskilled muscular laborers and their union thugs. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which protects employees from employers' demands that they earn their wages through conscientious, productive work and effort. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a collectivist solidarity society in which the working class has united in bonds of justice, righteousness and social self defense, swept away the system of capitalism, competition, liberty and the profit motive, and constructed upon their ruins the watchtowers and barbed wire fences of the people's red totalitarian dictatorship. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a socialist labor union, a socialist political party and an all embracing socialist government which in the name of workers' rights has repealed the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has radicalized and militarized employees, forged an unshakeable union-socialism bond, and led this new socialist people's liberation army on a mighty campaign to storm the ramparts of the Western liberal democratic order. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which the working class has commenced a two front war, a war against private businesses and a war against constitutional government, in a campaign to obliterate every last trace and expression of human freedom, human dynamism and human flourishing under the rule of law. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which a communist working class has commenced a wide ranging, multifaceted struggle, a cultural struggle, a political struggle, an economic struggle, an educational struggle and a union struggle, to expand red power into every aspect of human affairs and every faculty of human consciousness and wipe out the rational humanity and powers of man. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a common red front, a communist and fascist labor union, a gender, race and class coalition, and a blood stained dagger in the hands of the mob which has organized women, nonwhites and the poor in the campaign to exterminate the global enemies of social justice: the class of successful, white, European descended males. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which affirms that mind does not exist and only matter exists, that the source of all wealth is the activity of mindless, muscular labor, and that the class of mindless muscular laborers has the right to receive all the profits produced by industry and to expropriate the capitalist idlers, exploiters and parasites who work with their minds and take risks, show initiative, start businesses, and manage and sustain them. Labor unions have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which affirms that in any business enterprise, the fair share for the employees of the revenue, profits and assets of the business is one hundred percent, because the management and founders of the business, by their very nature as intellectual laborers and knowledge workers, perform no work. Labor unions have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which muscular laborers, who are the true, original sources of all wealth, have seized control over all investors, shareholders, managers, executives, entrepreneurs, innovators, industrialists and financiers, harnessed them to the chariots of the state and government, and made them toil night and day for the people without wage and without compensation, but with the solace that they are alive and unbloodied and will remain so as long as they continue to serve as dutiful slaves for the people. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is an anticapitalist workforce which owns all profits, corporations, yields, returns and capital investments and has reduced its output to zero, and increased its income to stratospheric levels, as it supports itself on the wealth looted from private risk takers and entrepreneurs. They have proclaimed that capitalism is an endlessly faltering, endlessly recessionary system which the immiserates the workers until the day they die and must be swept away by a popular leviathan and red totalitarian sea monster whose tentacles and have seized control over all revenues, wages, gains, benefits, income, wealth, hours, jobs and transformed autonomous people, who are miserable in their freedom and autonomy, into joyful, sacrificial lambs singing on their march to the altar tables of social justice. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose unions are organizations of socialism which have smashed the organizations of capitalism, smashed constitutional governments, liberal legislatures and independent judiciaries, and replaced them with the presidiums, politburos, supreme soviets and councils of commissars of the red mobs who are driven by one passion and one passion alone: by envy toward those who by dint of superior intellect and moral character have advanced the course of human civilization. The spread of labor unions in America serves as a tragic reminder that even the freest of societies is prey to the depredations of the masses and that every free society is inevitably doomed before the looming shadow of mass politics. The character of labor unions is the character of the masses; the history of labor unions is the history of the masses; it is a history of politics in America; and a history of socialist agitation, anarchy in the streets, violence at the workplace, and opposition to all forms of productive employment. In the 1880, the International Working People's Association declared war against capitalist society and its leaders. The Homestead Strike in Pittsburgh in 1892 saw a dozen guards and spectators killed. The Pullman Railroad Strike in Chicago in 1894 saw an arson attack against the World Columbian Exposition, the burning and looting of railroad cars, and street fights with the police. In 1973, voicing the radical currents of public opinion, the United States Supreme Court ruled in United States v. Enmons that labor union violence cannot be prosecuted under federal law. A United Mine Workers strike in West Virginia in 1993 saw the killing of a mineworker who crossed the picket line. A Teamsters strike in Miami in 1997 saw the beating and stabbing of driver who crossed the picket line. A longshoreman's strike in the state of Washington in 2011 saw 500 longshoremen wielding baseball bats smashing windows and railway cars. Unions representing public school teachers, community college instructors, city government workers and University of California, Berkeley teaching assistants supported Occupy Oakland's riots, general strike and shutdown of the Port of Oakland in 2011. One hundred years of labor union activity in America has composed a story of victory and defeat: the victory of the reds and the decline and fall of the liberal order. \

THE GOLDEN AGE OF THE AIRWAYS: BROUGHT TO YOU BY THE REDS

Hysteria is defined by social psychologists as an uncontrollable emotion which has spread throughout society. Hysteria is a mass emotion and when the masses ascend to power, the dark clouds of hysteria sweep into every aspect of human affairs and pervert them beyond rational recognition. A cursory look at the rise of socialism, statism and the welfare state in civilizations in decline throughout history, and in the twentieth century in the West, has demonstrated beyond doubt the emotional constitution of the masses: envy toward those who are more intelligent, more competent, more talented and more successful than they; a fervent, implacable, white hot hatred toward this superior achieving class; and a rage and excitement to overthrow the capitalist system which rewards the achievers and to establish in its place a system of equality, redistribution and regulation which grinds the achievers into dust and places the moral scum of the earth upon the thrones of economic, political, social and cultural power. Where the masses are allowed to rule, there hysteria against capitalism rules, and the favorite media of the masses have been disgraced, discredited, defiled and distorted by rolling waves of anticapitalist hysteria. The anticapitalist coloration of the mass media has no where been more tragically illustrated than in America, because in America, the system of capitalism reached the pinnacle of its development and granted unprecedented freedom, opportunity and the rewards of success to millions of people of every race, class and creed, and the nation became a beacon and arsenal of human liberty the likes of which history had never before witnessed and from which the eyes of the oppressed and the downtrodden would never turn. No nation was immune, not even America, from the onrushing tides of mass politics and its deafening, hate filled rounds of red propaganda. In the 1940s, realizing that the American masses enthusiastically embraced the new media of radio and television and relegated the print medium to a secondary, lower level role in their entertainment and information universe, the communists took to the airways and commenced a campaign of infiltration and control. The communists viewed radio and television channels as their primary transmission belts for the dissemination of proSoviet, antiAmerican, antiliberal and anticapitalist misinformation. They provided extensive financial support to radio and television stations which served as such conduits. They made glamorous, alluring radio and television personalities sponsors of communist front organizations and speakers and performers at communist front gatherings, rallies, benefits, conferences and committees. The communist front Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace, held in New York City in 1949, was sponsored by a cross section of the nation's radio and television personalities. At these venues, the nation's red celebrities promoted communism in the name of combating antisemitism, the Franco government and Jim Crow laws. The communists sought to achieve domination of the broadcasting industry to prepare the way for civil war, a second American revolution, and the destruction of the nation's free institutions. They sought to indoctrinate the masses with communist ideology and Soviet interpretations of current affairs through the efforts of party members, fellow travelers, and members of supplementary red organizations. They proclaimed and could prove that for every Communist Party member in America, there were ten citizens who were not members of the party but were eager and willing to serve as fronts for the party. They proclaimed and could prove that the nation's intelligentsia, its artists, writers, scientists and academics, was controlled by communists and furnished an endless supply of traitors ready to betray their country. The communists' understanding of the power of the mass media to shape and mold the minds of the masses and to scorch them with satanically charged particles of hatred and rage is described by Joseph Stalin in Problems Of Leninism: "The dictatorship of the proletariat cannot be effectively realized without belts to transmit power from the vanguard, the Communist Party, to the mass of the advanced class, progressive writers, actors, directors and producers, and from this to the mass of those who labor, the public." The communists utilized radio and television series as indirect organs of communist propaganda, promoting communism in the name of civil rights, academic freedom, the control of nuclear weapons and the achievement of world peace. They utilized television documentaries to parrot the Communist Party line. They convinced advertisers to sponsor programs which were veiled appeals of support for collectivist ideals. The obligatory payments which communist radio and television writers, directors and entertainers made to the party are described in Secrets Of The Communist Party Exposed: The Secret Communist Party Manual On Organization by J. Peters: "Members receiving over 50 dollars per week must pay, in addition to their one dollar per week dues, additional dues (a special tax), at the rate of 50 cents for each five dollars (or fraction) of their earnings above 50 dollars." In addition to these dues, communist sympathizers in the radio and television industry contributed thousands of dollars per year to communist front organizations. The money raised by these front organizations was used to finance all manner of party work, such as trips abroad by senior party members and bringing foreign communists into the country. The use of this money to secretly finance the party is described by Louis Budenz, editor of the Daily Worker, in testimony before a United States Senate committee, reported in Communist Activities Among Alien And National Groups: "The Joint AntiFascist Refugee Committee, from which Eisler [Gerhart Eisler, Comintern representative to the Communist Party] functioned while here, was created by the secret fund committee in order to have a wider field for raising money." The communists operated an escalator system in the radio and television industry. Involving writers, directors, producers, station executives, network executives, advertising executives and newspaper reviewers, this system boosted the careers of communist entertainers, from work in nightclubs to minor programs to major programs to national stardom. These entertainers walked in fear of communist newspaper reviewers; when they were ordered by reviewers to entertain for or sponsor a communist front a communist front meeting, they had to comply or face the loss of their career. Communist activists permeated every aspect of the American radio and television industry and engaged in a relentless, round the clock campaign, without rules or restrictions of any kind, to stir up the masses and subvert the house of American liberty: "What American businessmen and the American public do not seem to realize is that these people are playing for keep, with no holds barred. They don't lose time just making resolutions or having meetings. They're activists! Until we Americans learn to take prompt, effective action, too, they'll win every round." (Red Channels, quoting the head of a Soviet espionage ring). During the golden age of American radio and television, the nation's cameras and microphones broadcast the sights and sounds of an advancing red menace. Licensed by stations, by networks and by the government itself, the Lord Haw Haws, Axis Sallys and Tokyo Roses of an international movement and conspiracy marching under the banners of Marx sprayed out the burning fuel of class politics and world revolution across the airways. Aided and abetted by the American people, by their government, and by network management and executives, this communist fire sent up columns of smoke and ash which spelled out a fearsome and terrifying message. It was a message of high treason reaching up from the man on the street, through to the creative and artistic professions, through to mass media personnel, through to the highest levels of government. It was a message of the implosion and suicide of the West: "Where there's red smoke, there's usually communist fire. That applies to the creative and artistic end of radio as it does to the other arts and professions. Therefore, efforts to gloss over talk of possible communist infiltration of radio is dangerous. Communists and communist sympathizers have no place on our air. It is the duty of the station licensee (and the network to which a portion of that responsibility is necessarily delegated) to ascertain that those who harbor views contrary to our for of government be denied access to our microphones. Radio memories would be short indeed to forget the performances of the Lord Haw Haws, the Axis Sallys and the Tokyo Roses." (Broadcasting, August 15, 1949). The presence of communists in America's most popular mass media, radio and television, in the 1940s and 1950s was as numerous and wide ranging as their agitations and propagandizing were intense and unremitting. Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Orson Welles, Lillian Hellman, Arthur Miller, Dorothy Parker, Lena Horne, Pete Seeger, Artie Shaw, Larry Adler, Burl Ives, Alan Lomax and Olin Downes were among the leading faces of this red onslaught against the nation. Applauded by the masses watching from their living rooms, their restaurants, their taverns, their offices, their classrooms and their public squares, this onslaught doomed all efforts at counterattack to abject failure. Fail they did, in the closing decades of America and the West.

RED MOBS MAUL THE CONSTITUTION

Mob rule is defined as the control of a political situation by the majority outside constitutional means. Its preeminent synonym is mass politics and it is an essential feature of all civilizations in a state of moral and spiritual decline. Mob rule among the ancient Romans brought the destruction of constitutionally bound and delimited government and the right to private property, and their replacement by the rule of emperors, welfare statism, excessive taxation, overreaching regulation, and tolerance toward the Christians and Germans, all voices and expressions of a risen and ascendant mob. In the twentieth century, the West entered upon its own age of moral decline and descended into the rule of the mob. In no nation has this decline been illustrated with more tragic and distressing clarity than in America, once the world's beacon, citadel and shining City Upon A Hill, exemplifying a world of hope, freedom, liberal order and constitutional rights. The history of constitutionalism in America is a history organized into two chapters, Up To The Early Decades Of The Twentieth Century and After The Early Decades Of The Twentieth Century, a history in which the latter chapter nullified the achievements of the first chapter with the broad, sweeping brush of mob rule. In the twentieth century, the Supreme Court ceased to enforce the Constitution and became a weathervane stationed atop the houses of the people, a mouthpiece and rubber stamp for the ideological preferences of the mob. Mocking the black robes of constitutional legality which they have donned, and scornful of the scales of constitutional justice and impartiality which they have sworn to uphold, the judges on the Supreme Court over the past one hundred years have issued a program and manifesto for the establishment of a majoritarian tyranny without precedent in the history of the nation. The Supreme Court proclaimed, in Home Building & Loan Association v. Blaisdell (1934), that the states have the power to interfere in private contracts and suspend creditors' remedies. In point of fact, Article 1, Section 10 of the Constitution forbids the states from passing laws "impairing the obligation of contracts." The Supreme Court proclaimed, in West Coast Hotel versus Parrish (1937), that the government can enact minimum wage laws because the age old doctrine of substantive due process, championed by early English law, by the Magna Carta, by English jurists such as Edward Coke, and by the Supreme Court itself in Lochner versus New York (1905) and in Adkins v. Children's Hospital (1923), no longer applies to economic activity. The doctrine of substantive due process recognizes that the mention of life, liberty and property in the Fifth Amendment in the clause "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law" substantively guarantees the existence of these rights, even if procedural protections are present, and protects them in and of themselves from governmental encroachment. Prior to the West Coast ruling, the Court had held, under the doctrine of substantive due process, that the Fifth Amendment substantively protects economic liberty, including liberty of contract, as a fundamental component of the amendment's substantive protection of general liberty. The Supreme Court proclaimed, in Helvering v. Davis (1937), that the Social Security Act is a constitutional exercise of governmental power because the federal government has the right to spend money for the general welfare. In point of fact, the Social Security Act is unconstitutional because the federal government is prohibited from establishing old age pensions under the Tenth Amendment, which states that the only powers the federal government possesses are those which are clearly, specifically and unequivocally enumerated in the Constitution. The Supreme Court proclaimed, in Wickard v. Filburn (1942), that under the Commerce Clause of the Constitution, the federal government has the right to regulate production which is consumed intrastate because such consumption has an effect on interstate commerce. In point of fact, the Commerce Clause permits the government to regulate commerce "among the several states" and not activities which have an effect on interstate commerce. Activities which have an effect on interstate commerce are not themselves activities of interstate commerce and are beyond the reach of federal regulatory power. The Supreme Court proclaimed, in Shelley v. Kramer (1948), that the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits the states from enforcing restrictive covenants which prohibit people from owning or occupying property based on race. In point of fact, the state enforcement of a private contract does not constitute state endorsement of the terms or provisions of the contract but merely state protection of the freedom to establish a contract. The Fourteenth Amendment is violated only when discrimination on the basis of race is the result of state action and not private action. The Supreme Court proclaimed, in Heart Of Atlanta Motel v. United States (1964), that Congress did not exceed its powers under the Commerce Clause by enacting Title II of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, which prohibits racial discrimination in all private business establishments. In point of fact, business establishments do not engage in interstate commerce merely by virtue of the fact that they affect interstate commerce. To affect interstate commerce is not on that account to engage in interstate commerce. The Supreme Court's conflation of public spaces and private spaces, public property and private property, public accommodations and private accommodations, public establishments and private establishments, and its conferral of a constitutional seal of approval upon the totalitarian society demanded by the mob is described by Walter Williams in The Right To Discriminate: "The Nation of Islam discriminates against white members. The Aryan Brotherhood discriminates against having black members. The Ku Klux Klan discriminates against having Catholic and Jewish members. The NFL discriminates against hiring female quarterbacks. The NAACP National Board of Directors, at least according to the photo on their Web page, has no white members. You say, Williams, that's different. It's not like public transportation, restaurants and hotel service in which Title II of the 1964 Civil Rights Act "prohibits discrimination because of race, color, religion, or national origin in certain places of public accommodation, such as hotels, restaurants, and places of entertainment. While there are many places that serve the public, it doesn't change the fact that they are privately owned, and who is admitted, under what conditions, should be up to the owner." The Supreme Court proclaimed, in Meritor Savings Bank v. Vinson (1986), that Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 grants to the federal government the right, under the Commerce Clause, to forbid sexual harassment in private business establishments. In point of fact, private businesses which do not engage in interstate commerce, notwithstanding the fact that they may affect it, have the right to permit sexual harassment or sex discrimination unless such acts are prohibited by individual employment contracts. The Supreme Court proclaimed, in Grutter v. Bollinger (2003), that public universities which grant preferential treatment to student applicants on the basis of race do not violate the Fourteenth Amendment. In point of fact, the Fourteenth Amendment establishes the Constitution as a race blind document which prohibits state bodies from engaging in any form of racial discrimination for any reason or from including race for any reason as a factor in admissions. The Supreme Court proclaimed, in National Federation of Independent Business v. Sebelius (2012), that the individual health insurance mandate provision of the Affordable Care Act is a tax and not a penalty and is therefore a constitutionally permissible exercise of Congress's taxing power. In point of fact, a mandate is by its nature enforced by a penalty and is not enforced by a tax. A penalty seeks to deter an illegal act or omission, such as not purchasing health insurance under the ACA, while a tax is a levy imposed upon legal activity. Over the past one hundred years, the voices of the mob have swept away objective constitutional analysis, interpretation and jurisprudence. Listen to their impassioned words. The Constitution is a flexible, malleable, living document which must accommodate the people's changing social and economic needs. The task of a judge is not to enforce the law but to stand up for social and economic justice. The Constitution does not say what it says but is a blank, indeterminate slate upon which the people's judges issue rulings to advance the interests of women, nonwhites, the poor, the disabled, homosexuals and transgenders. Judicial decisions must reflect, not the actual meaning and text of the Constitution, but the felt social and political necessities of the times. A popular movement against the rule of law has swept across America and installed a totalitarian monolith into power.

ANTISEMITISM: A LEFTIST DISEASE

In the mid nineteenth century, Karl Marx ignited a firestorm which spread across the world. It was the firestorm of class hatred and envy which targeted the producers, the achievers, the innovators, the talented, the successful, the purposeful and the intelligent for expropriation, collectivization and extermination. This class of knowledge workers and human flourishers Marx called the bourgeois and the capitalists and he set his raging mobs against them. In this feverish, white hot hate universe created by Marx, antisemitism has figured prominently, because the Jews have been disproportionately represented in the achieving classes of the modern world; the number of scientists, philosophers, statesmen, scholars, musicians, writers, artists and businessmen in modern times who were Jews has comprised a substantial percentage of the small Jewish populations in Europe and America; thus for the left, Jews are the very incarnations of the liberal capitalist system and must be destroyed along with the system itself. Over the past century and a half since the advent of Marxism, attacks against Jews have emanated preeminently from the left and antisemitism has become an integral part of leftist attitudes, behavior and points of view, so that in the present day, to be a leftist is to be an antisemite and to be an antisemite is to be a leftist. The origin of modern day antisemitism lies in the tirades and vitriol launched by the left and the first round was launched by Marx himself. In On The Jewish Question, Marx identifies Judaism with freedom and capitalism. He condemns freedom and capitalism as a system awash with money, degradation, commodification, bills of exchange, and mercenary rule which seeks to make a profit out of everything and anything. The system must be swept away by a people's religion of red totalitarian dictatorship which will emancipate the working class from its capitalist predators by the extermination of the Jews: "What is the worldly religion of the Jew? Huckstering. What is his worldly God? Money. Money is the jealous god of Israel, in face of which no other god may exist. Money degrades all the gods of man—and turns them into commodities. The bill of exchange is the real god of the Jew. His god is only an illusory bill of exchange. The chimerical nationality of the Jew is the nationality of the merchant, of the man of money in general. In the final analysis, the emancipation of the Jews is the emancipation of mankind from Judaism." In The Russian Loan, Marx opens up the manhole covers of political pornography and lets the sewage water flow across the page and down into dark, winding, rat infested streets marked Proletarian Hatred And Envy. For Marx, freedom means war, tyranny, bigotry, oppression, loan sharking, unprincipled trading, crass commercialism, the relentless quest for capital, the ruthless plundering of the people, and the amassing of vast fortunes on the backs of the working class. For Marx, the language of freedom is the language of the money changers, the language of securities peddlers, the language of street barterers, the language of aristocrats of cash, the language of usurers, extortionists, monopolists and profiteers on horseback who hold up the working class with the guns of slave wages and private property. For Marx, these capitalist parasites and exploiters of the proletariat, these robber barons who invest and take risks on behalf of themselves and not the people, these high priests of the machinery of private production and exchange, these popes and Jesuits of ruthless, predatory greed, these organizers of economic danger, death and destruction, these makers of laws against the the people's collectivity, these rulers of governments which protect liberal, bourgeois individual rights, these curses, plagues and bringers of ruination upon toiling humanity, are the children of Judah and they must be exposed, discredited, disgraced, made to wear the Yellow Badge, and, as Christ tried unsuccessfully to do, driven out of their homes and offices and eradicated from the face of the earth. "Thus we find every tyrant backed by a Jew, as is every pope by a Jesuit. In truth, the cravings of oppressors would be hopeless, and the practicability of war out of the question, if there were not an army of Jesuits to smother thought and a handful of Jews to ransack pockets. The real work is done by the Jews, and can only be done by them, as they monopolize the machinery of the loan mongering mysteries by concentrating their energies upon the barter trade in securities. Here and there and everywhere that a little capital courts investment, there is ever one of these little Jews ready to make a little suggestion or place a little bit of a loan. The smartest highwayman in the Abruzzi is not better posted up about the locale of the hard cash in a traveler's valise or pocket than those Jews about any loose capital in the hands of a trader. The language spoken smells strongly of Babel, and the perfume which otherwise pervades the place is by no means of a choice kind. Thus do these loans, which are a curse to the people, a ruin to the holders, and a danger to the governments, become a blessing to the houses of the children of Judah. This Jew organization of loan mongers is as dangerous to the people as the aristocratic organization of landowners. The fortunes amassed by these loan mongers are immense, but the wrongs and sufferings thus entailed on the people and the encouragement thus afforded to their oppressors still remain to be told. The fact that 1855 years ago Christ drove the Jewish money changers out of the temple, and that the money changers of our age enlisted on the side of tyranny happen again chiefly to be Jews, is perhaps no more than a historical coincidence. The loan mongering Jews of Europe do only on a larger and more obnoxious scale what many others do on one smaller and less significant. But it is only because the Jews are so strong that it is timely and expedient to expose and stigmatize their organization." (New-York Daily Tribune, January 4, 1856). Marx's anticapitalist antisemitism formed the basis of Adolf Hitler's antisemitism, which reprises Marx's explicit descriptions of the filth of a diseased soul down to the commas and periods. For Hitler, the rule of international freedom and capitalism equals the rule of an international conspiracy and regime of oppression and death which are ranged the working class, and equals the rule of international Jewry. For Hitler, this liberal, capitalist Jewish war against the people must be defeated by the establishment of a people's, murderous, criminal, red Aryan dictatorship which will place at the top of its agenda the overthrow of global finance and global capitalism and the liquidation of the the Jews: "Three days before the outbreak of the German-Polish war I again proposed to the British ambassador in Berlin a solution to the German-Polish problem—similar to that in the case of the Saar district, under international control. This offer also cannot be denied. It was only rejected because the leading circles in English politics wanted the war, partly on account of the business hoped for and partly under influence of propaganda organized by international Jewry. I have also made it quite plain that, if the nations of Europe are again to be regarded as mere shares to be bought and sold by these international conspirators in money and finance, then that race, Jewry, which is the real criminal of this murderous struggle, will be saddled with the responsibility. I further left no one in doubt that this time the millions of children of Europe's Aryan peoples will not die of hunger, that millions of grown men will not suffer death, and that hundreds of thousands of women and children will not be burned and bombed to death in the towns, without the real criminal not having to atone for this guilt, although by more humane means." (My Political Testament by Adolf Hitler, April 29, 1945). Marx was the father of antisemitism in modern times. Translating Marx's diatribes into horrific reality, Hitler was Marx's son. The antisemites who have emerged since the fall of the Third Reich have faithfully followed the passions and prejudices of their grandfather and father. Listen to their voices. The confluence and identity of Marxist antisemitism and national socialist antisemitism is described by Paul Johnson: "The Soviets assembled materials from virtually every archaeological layer of antisemitic history, from classical antiquity to Hitlerism." The Marxist historian J. A. Hobson ascribed the Boar War to the Jews: "A small group international financiers who were devoid of social morality". One of the founding members of the Marxist Red Army Faction, Ulrike Meinhof proclaimed that the Holocaust was a moral necessity because it liquidated a capitalist class and that antisemitism is the proper hatred of the international order of finance capitalism and individual freedom which is an engine of war and imperialism against the proletariat: "Auschwitz means that six million Jews were murdered and carted onto the rubbish dumps of Europe for being that which was correctly aintained of them—Money Jews. Finance capital and the banks, the hard core of the system of imperialism and capitalism, had properly turned the hatred of humanity against money, exploitation and the Jews." Meinhof proclaimed that the murder of the Israeli team at the 1972 Munich Olympics was praiseworthy because it eliminated representatives of the capitalist classes. Marxists throughout the world today have declared war against capitalism in the name of defeating Zionist money power. They support Islamist antisemitism and terror attacks against the Israel and the West. They support the Palestinian/international solidarity movement against Israel. They denounce capitalists as Jewish lobbyists and financiers and denounce Jewish lobbyists and financiers as capitalists. They have launched a Boycott, Disinvestment and Sanctions campaign against Israel, capitalism and the free world. The disease of antisemitism will never be eradicated because its root cause will never be eradicated. Its root cause will never be eradicated because the Marxist politics of class hatred and envy has captured the hearts, minds and imagination of the masses as nothing else has in the history of mankind. The noose around the free world is tightening. Within its loop are Israel, the Jews, the ideals of the Enlightenment and the free world. On the last day of the West, the trap door will spring open and they will plunge to their doom.

MISSION TO MOSCOW

A nation's celebrities are the voices of its people. Celebrities become famous not only for what they do but how they think. Their political colorations are the colorations of the people. If the people embrace socialist ideologies, it is reasonable to predict that the people's celebrities will be fervent agitators and propagandists for the cause. Soon after the turn of the twentieth century, the West entered upon a stage of moral and spiritual decline when the people of Europe and America rejected the liberal heritage of the Enlightenment and held aloft the banners of a red totalitarian creed. As day follows night, the people's celebrities in every field of entertainment and the arts took hold of this banner and commenced a relay run at full speed around the world and violated their codes of professional conduct by transforming the seven arts into shameless political channels for the promotion of world revolution. In no nation was this transformation illustrated more tragically, more ominously and more alarmingly than in America, for when mass politics gripped the nation, it was transformed from a City Upon A Hill, a nation shining with the light of human liberty, a model of human flourishing, a beacon of hope to the world, into a battleground of class politics, race politics, gender politics and the socialist enslavement of man. This politicization of the arts scene in America chartered an airplane to Washington in 1947. On board were the leading faces of the American film industry, a gallery of stars including Humphrey Bogart, Lauren Bacall, Danny Kaye, Gene Kelly, John Huston and Ira Gershwin, and they hurtled through the air in a red virus house, called themselves the Committee for the First Amendment, and prepared to land in Washington and promote from the capital of freedom a religion of socialism to the world. They and their Hollywood successors up to the present day have issued a program and manifesto for the obliteration of decency and wholesomeness from the silver screen and the production of pornography, the pornography of hatred and violence against the free citizens of the capitalist system, in its place. They and their successors have repudiated the making of motion pictures as traditionally conceived, as visual stories recorded by cameras which promote mental well being and spiritual improvement, with the production of visual material characterized by celebrations of souls immersed in the sewage water of gutter politics, souls blooming with the algae of excitement derived from hurting, damaging and killing other people, and souls aroused by dirty books glorifying psychopathic destruction in the name of Marxism and its offshoots. Masquerading as actors, writers, directors, producers and studio executives, the red partisans of the screen have proclaimed that in the name of honesty, fairness and the rights of all Americans, communism must be preached in every classroom of the nation and declaimed in every corner cinema. They have proclaimed that Hollywood must fight back against those who expose communist influence in the film industry by blacklisting them, boycotting them, and consigning them to the black void of professional nonexistence. They have proclaimed that the citizens of America have a constitutional right to carry out the communist overthrow of the government and the mass murder of the opposition and those who refuse to do this are disloyal Americans who must be placed on trial for treason. They have proclaimed that true Americans are Captain Reds who are rabidly socialist, fervently opposed to private property, and embark upon sustained periods of unrestrained looting of stores to celebrate their anticapitalist attitudes and beliefs. They have proclaimed that progressive films are those which exhibit an undying passion for radicalism, express the deepest devotion to socialism, and repudiate the strictures imposed by bourgeois morality by excusing and defending the murder of millions in the name of social justice and the people's liberation. They have proclaimed that progressive films are those which are scripted by communist screenwriters and portray communist intellectuals who advocate political genocide, class extermination and the depopulation of nations as superheroes who belong in the front ranks of humanity. They have proclaimed that progressive films are those which are made by red screenwriters' guilds, red directors' guilds and red producers' guilds and rain down proSoviet advertising upon the audience. They have proclaimed that progressive films are those which front for the international communist movement and conspiracy and exalt Soviet, Stalinist, red Hitlerite dictatorships as the saviors and liberators of the world. They have proclaimed that progressive films are songs of Russia which unabashedly promote the Soviet Union, communist ideals, red action, red marines and red invaders in their quest to raise the red star across the north, south, east and west and establish a world totalitarian state. They have proclaimed that progressive films are those which portray the red totalitarian nightmare of razor topped fences and mobile firing squads as a happy, peaceful, perfect and picturesque society devoted untiringly to the freedom and welfare of the working class. They have proclaimed that progressive films are photographs of Marxist propaganda advocating revolutionary communist government, show trials for anticommunist dissidents, witch hunts to crush the voices of freedom and dissent, the campaigns of red dictators to eliminate their rivals and enemies, and a ruthless military, political and ideological effort to eliminate, in the name of justice for the poor, the exploited and the downtrodden, everything decent, benign, civilized and righteous in the world. They have proclaimed that progressive films are those which portray communist slave labor as a system in which the workers are free, affluent, safe and secure for the duration of their lives. They have proclaimed that progressive films are those which exalt the communist system of work camps, police agents, passport controls and loyal defenders of Stalin as a model of liberation of those who toil exploited and oppressed in free, democratic societies. They have proclaimed that progressive films are those which exalt Marxist revolutionaries, class murderers and police state commissars as Spartacus type leaders of those enslaved by the liberal system of constitutional rights. They have proclaimed that progressive films are those which are produced in consultation with communist sympathizers and communist party members who are prepared to downplay, defend and excuse communist crimes against humanity and the red's savage abuse of the people. A matinee is the exhibition of a film during the daytime. From the advent of the Golden Age of Hollywood in the 1930s right up to the present day, there have been no film matinees in a moral sense because the past eighty years have brought down moral evening and darkness upon the people, places, studios and theaters of the American film industry. For the past eighty years, Hollywood has greeted with silence the genocidal campaigns undertaken by Marxist leaders such as Stalin and Mao. Hollywood has ignored the crimes committed by the Marxist governments in Cuba and North Korea. Hollywood has refused to expose Marxist mass executions, Gulag wastelands and prosecutions for political crimes. Hollywood's procommunist box office successes beginning in the 1940s serve as horrifying testaments to the moral turpitude of the masses and the decline and fall of the West. Song Of Russia portrays a world of beautiful, happy, satisfied Soviet citizens. The North Star idealizes collective farms in Soviet Ukraine. Mission to Moscow defends the Moscow Show Trials as just condemnations of plotters and fifth columnists working against the people's Soviet state. The main character of the film, Joseph Davies, American ambassador to the Soviet Union whose book formed the basis of the film, praises Soviet leaders as benevolent servants of the cause of world peace: "No leaders of a nation have been so misrepresented and misunderstood as those in the Soviet government during those critical years between the two world wars." Hollywood's glorification of Marxist terror states as idylls of romance and love is described by Ayn Rand in testimony before the House Committee on UnAmerican Activities in 1947: "That was our complete terror—afraid to look at one another, afraid to say anything for fear of who is listening and would report us—and where to get the next meal. They [Soviet citizens] have no idea of any pleasant romances or love--nothing but food and fear. That is not what the picture [Song of Russia] shows." Bankrolled, written and directed by the agents of the masses, and starring the masses' favorite actors and actresses, Hollywood's contribution to the Marxist universe of hatred and fanaticism is a story too chilling to be told and too fantastic to be believed. It is the story of betrayal committed in the arsenal of liberty during the final act of the West.

THE FAUSTIAN DESTRUCTION OF ARCHITECTURE

Architecture is both a process and a product and involves the planning, designing and constructing of buildings. The fundamental principle of architecture is the principle demanded by reason and sanity that the form or design of a building must proceed from its function. The function of a building is to serve as a house, school, store, factory or sanctuary for people and a building which does not serve this purpose cannot in truth or in reality be described as a building and the architecture which designed and constructed it is in truth and reality a false architecture and is not a legitimate profession or occupation. Buildings which are devoid of functionality and serve as pure forms or pure ideological statements have no legitimate role to play in an architecture founded upon reason and reality, and yet such nonfunctional buildings have enjoyed pride of place in Western architecture and have served as symbols and embodiments of the profession. To understand why, we must understand the unique soul and character of the West and the fundamental perversity of its values and ideals. There is a five hundred year old legend in the West about an alchemist, sorcerer, necromancer and practitioner of black magic, a legend based on the life of a scholar who lived in Germany in the early sixteenth century, a legend commemorated by Marlowe and Goethe and in pamphlets mass printed and peddled across Europe in the late sixteenth century, a legend about a figure name Faust. This Faust made a pact with the Devil in which he agreed to sell his mind and soul, his rational judgment, commitment to reality, moral consciousness and sense of decency and righteousness, in exchange for the achievement of infinite power, will, pleasure, experience, adventure and excitement. Intoxicated, stimulated, inspired and transported upon currents of pure subjectivity, Faust is the metaphor of metaphors for the values and ideals of the West and the West's descent into rank mental illness. No cultural space in the West has been left unsullied and unmangled by the hand of Faust, and in the field of architecture this hand has brought forth two main styles which have stood out from all other styles produced by all other cultures in the world by their total rejection of functionality. These two styles are Gothic and Modern and a study of these is a study of a culture out of control, a culture located a universe apart from the supremely rational and reality based culture of the ancient Greeks and Romans, a culture which decent, wholesome, civilized people who inhabit the culture have scarcely recognized as human. Flourishing in Europe between 1000 and 1500 AD, Gothic architecture was the first fully developed style in the West and created an antiworld which repudiated the perceptions and philosophies of those in possession of sound minds. The world of Gothic architecture is a world constructed to block out the real world of masses, bodies, weight, gravity, location, determination and natural light. Its lineaments are the ribbed vault, the pointed vault, the flying buttress and stained glass windows. The ribs, points and buttresses serve to channel the weight of the roof across the ceiling and then vertically downward, enabling the construction of vast, high interior spaces and thin walls, and producing the illusion of a floating roof without wall support. The stained glass windows fill the interior with colored, unnatural light. Gothic architecture is paradigmatically Faustian architecture; it is quintessentially Western architecture; and in its projection of boundless depth, dynamism, soaring, vastness and vaulting, it is diametrically opposed to Classical architecture. The difference between Classical and Western architecture is the difference between the philosophies of reason and the will, between body and space, between existence and consciousness, between objectivity and subjectivity, between the comprehensible and the incomprehensible, and between the adjustment to reality and acute schizophrenic derangement. It is described by Oswald Spengler in The Decline Of The West, Chapter VI, Volume I: "The extreme of this disembodiment of the world in the service of space is impressionism. Given this world feeling, the Faustian soul in the springtime necessarily arrived at an architectural problem which had its center of gravity in the spatial vaulting over of vast, and from the porch to choir dynamically deep, cathedrals. This last expressed its depth experience. But with it was associated, in opposition to the cavernous Magian [Arabian] expression space, the element of a soaring into the broad universe. Magian roofing, whether it be a cupola or barrel vault or even the horizontal beam of the basilica, covers in. Strzygowski has very aptly described the architectural idea of the Hagia Sophia as an introverted Gothic striving under a closed outer casing. On the other hand, in the cathedral of Florence, the cupola crowns the long Gothic body of 1367, and the same tendency arose in Bramante's scheme for St Peter's to a veritable towering up, a magnificent Excelsior, that Michelangelo carried to completion with the dome that floats high and bright over the vast vaulting. To this sense of space the Classical opposes the symbol of the Doric peripteros, wholly corporeal and comprehensible in one glance." In the early twentieth century, Faust created a new architectural style as the heir and successor to Gothicism. The same subjectivism as in the Gothic style, the same unreality, the same nonfunctionality, the same exaltation of space above matter and consciousness above the physical world, appeared now in a new Modern style in structures made of steel, glass and reinforced concrete. A neoGothic world of pure space fashioned by the will unrestrained by the strictures imposed by nature engulfed the West as it entered upon its stage of decline and fall. Spread by thousands of architects throughout the world and appearing under a thousand different names, the Modernist style was Gothicism in secular garb and pushed architecture into the abyss. The International Style, Bauhaus, the Werkbund, Expressionism, Constructivism, the Art Deco Style, the Skyscraper Style and the Postmodern Style; Le Corbusier, Frank Lloyd Wright, Walter Gropius, Peter Behrens, Marcel Breuer, Bruno Taut, Ludwig Mies Van Der Rohe, Richard Neutra, Skidmore, Owings and Merrill, Philip Johnson, Eero Saarinen, Louis Kahn, I. M. Pei, Robert Ventura and Peter Eisenman; the Glasgow School Of Art, the Austrian Postal Savings Bank, the AEG Turbine Factory, the Fagus Factory, the Glass Pavilion, the Larkin Administration Building, the Robie House, the Unity Temple, Fallingwater, the Woolworth Building, the Empire State Building, the Episcopal Academy Chapel, the Guild House and the Wexner Center For The Arts. Such are the symptoms of a Faustian fever of the soul which has caused architecture to abandon all concern with constructing buildings for actual human use and caused it to descend into a netherworld churning with the free play of pure forms. Buildings as statements of capitalism, buildings as statements of socialism, buildings as statements of egalitarianism, buildings with too much light, buildings with too little light, buildings with too much heat, buildings with insufficient heat, buildings with too much space, buildings with no private spaces, buildings with doorless open plans, buildings with too many windows, buildings with windows which pop out and crash to the ground, buildings which groan, squeak and sway in the wind, and buildings whose flat roofs form pools of water and leak after rainfall. Such is the nightmare world created by Modern architecture, a world which, in true Faustian fashion, is supremely unconcerned with designing buildings to allow people to live and work inside them, and is concerned only with designing buildings as symbols and expressions of religious or ideological yearnings and aspirations. The world had never seen anything like this before, not the Classical, Egyptian, Chinese, Indian, Mayan or Arabian cultures: the systematic, explicit, overt, philosophically justified design of buildings not as buildings but as subjective, psychological statements which have no relation to reality. The fundamental law of reality is that to be is to be something, that existence is determination, that everything which is has a specific and defining nature, essence, purpose, function and activity which serves to differentiate it from all other types of things in the universe. A building is an enclosed structure for the purpose of providing human beings with a venue for occupancy, residence and the exertion of mental and physical effort. Grippled by a world unique sickness of subjectivity and will worship, the Western Faustian soul brought forth styles of architecture which on principle denied or rejected the existence of buildings as buildings. The actual Johann Faust, upon which the legend is based, was a student at Heidelberg University who performed magic tricks and died in an explosion during one of his performances. His life and death serve as a metaphor of the disturbed character of Western architecture and its explosion into Gothic and Modern nonfunctionality and unreality.

THE REIGN OF ANTISYSTEMS

A system is a set of things or ideas which work together as parts of a unified network. The fundamental requirement of a system is that it contain no elements which negate or oppose each other and that the elements comprise a harmonious, noncontradictory whole. A collection of ideas or statements which contradict each other is not a system but an antisystem and represents in error in thinking. Sane people understand that contradictions are impossible, that they cannot be achieved on paper, in thought or in reality, and that the attempt to think or formulate systems in terms of contradictions results in cognitive destruction and the end of all thought. They understand that the notion of a consistent system is redundant, while the notion of an inconsistent system is a contradiction in terms. The paramount symptom of a culture in a state of decline is a pervasive, spreading disintegration of man's rational faculties and the ascendancy of faiths, religions, dogmas and antisystems. The last stage of decline is reached when collections of ideas are promoted which not only do not correspond to reality but are internally incoherent and contradictory. This last stage has been reached in the present day as every field of human endeavor has been dissolved in the acid of antisystems and no longer functions in a sound or legitimate manner. The apostles of antisystems have issued a program and manifesto for the destruction of all thought content and the pulverization of perception into delusional, disorganized fragments. They have proclaimed that it is impossible to establish or discover a consistent set of mathematical axioms. They have proclaimed that a consistent set of mathematical axioms is necessarily incomplete, while a true, bona fide, complete set of mathematical axioms is necessarily inconsistent and can never be proved to be consistent. They have proclaimed that in any complete logical system, a true statement can never be proved on the basis of the system. They have proclaimed that no statement within a complete logical system can be clearly and unequivocally affirmed to be true or deducible from the axioms. They have proclaimed that a complete logical or mathematical system can never prove its freedom from contradiction because it is inherently unstable, incomprehensible and contradictory. They have proclaimed that subsets and subsystems of reality are free of contradictions but not the whole of reality, the total system, the absolute and the all itself, whose essence is pure opposition, negation, contradiction and disharmony. They have proclaimed that the law of contradiction and the unity of opposites is the supreme law of reality and controls all man's thoughts and actions. They have proclaimed that the hallmark of wisdom and enlightenment resides in the recognition of the universality of contradiction, antagonism and war. They have proclaimed that the common sense, bourgeois conception of change, according to which change is the change of something, from something, to something else and never at any time involves a thing possessing opposite attributes at one and the same time or acting in contradiction to its nature or essence, must be swept aside by the people's progressive, dialectical conception. In this conception, change involves the unity and relation of mutually exclusive opposites, the recognition that anything can change into anything else, and the affirmation that the universe is a system of contradictions in which A is both A and non A at one and the same time. They have proclaimed that a progressive science is one which is based upon the dialectical world outlook which teaches us how to transcend the channels of ordinary perception and observe the movement of opposites and the unity of contradictions. They have proclaimed that a progressive science is one which recognizes that all change exhibits contradiction and that opposite, mutually exclusive attributes coexist at one and the same time in all phenomena in the universe, including mind and society. They have proclaimed that the existence of differential and integral calculus, action and reaction, positive and negative electricity, the combination and dissociation of atoms, the class struggle, offense and defense, and advance and retreat all demonstrate beyond the shadow of a doubt that contradiction and incoherence are the basic features of the universe, and that everything both is and is not, at one and the same time. The apostles of antisystems are the high priests of a new orthodoxy whose cardinal principle is absurdity, preposterousness and total insanity. Rejecting the noontday world of mental health and well being, the world of common sense, rationality and Aristotelian philosophy, they have proclaimed that contradictions are true, that inconsistencies exist, that statements can both true and not true at one and the same time, that things can be both black all over and white all over at one and the same time, and they have peddled their attack on reason and reality and their cancerous invasion of logical spaces as a form of progressive, sophisticated, enlightened thinking. Rejecting the fundamental principle of reality, the principle of noncontradiction, the principle that to be is to be something, that existence is determination, and that a thing cannot both be and not be something at one and the same time, the apostles of antisystems have plunged human cognition into a white hot fever swamp of psychotic breakdown and ignited the funeral pyres of philosophy, the arts and the sciences: "The thought that contradictions cannot be rationally accepted has been high orthodoxy in Western philosophy. Aristotle succeeded in persuading philosophers, by means of arguments that can only be described as both convoluted and lame, that the Principle of Non Contradiction (PNC) was not only true but obviously so. (What this says about philosophers' rationality, I leave the reader to contemplate.) True, there have been some who have balked against the orthodoxy. The obvious example is Hegel. But such exceptions serve to underline the orthodoxy of the view, not to undermine it particularly since most Hegel commentators since have tried to interpret Hegel as a friend of consistency. It is a striking fact that in Western philosophy every aspect of Aristotle's philosophy has been rejected, or at least seriously problematised, since his death with one exception: the PNC. In the first part of the 20th century, some progressive thinkers did start to challenge the orthodoxy, however. The most systematic was Lukasiewicz. But one also finds thoughts which challenge the idea in Meinong and Wittgenstien (after the period of the Tractatus). However, I think it fair to say that philosophy crossed the bridge to contemplating the possibility of holding that some contradictions might be true only with the contemporary dialetheic movement. I do not intend to imply by this that a rejection of the PNC is now orthodox; it most certainly is not. Rather, the point is this. In the 1970s and 1980s, dialetheism was viewed by most philosophers as so absurd as to be entirely ignorable. This, I think, is no longer the case. As people have come to see how hard it is to defend the PNC, and as the possibilities of plausible applications of dialetheism to a number of different areas have grown, most philosophers have at least been forced to recognise that it is an option in logical space that has to be at least acknowledged." (Crossing Boundaries by Graham Priest). Psychosis is a severe mental disorder characterized by cognitive impairment, false beliefs, seeing or hearing things which do not exist, incoherent speech and behavior, and withdrawal from reality. It was first described by Hippocrates in the fourth century BC and was a rare condition in the reason based, Apollonian culture of the Greeks and Romans. In the will based, Faustian culture of the West, by contrast, psychosis has been the defining attitude and outlook since the birth of the culture and has consumed every field of human thought and rendered it unrecognizable and unintelligible. The belief that systems need not be free from contradictions to qualify as systems, that reality need not be free from contradictions to qualify as real, that a statement and its negation can both be true at one and the same time, and that it is possible for an object to be both spherical and triangular and both freezing and not freezing at one and the same time, is a sickness of the soul, the most serious sickness imaginable, and has rendered late modern man a babbling, raving, delirious monstrosity. An integral component of the intellectual, philosophic, scientific and academic establishment of the West, this sickness marches under many banners and travels under many labels. Many valued logic, intuitionist logic, paraconsistent logic, quantum logic, fuzzy logic, dialectical logic and dialetheist logic. They all spell the same corruption, the same degeneracy, and the same cultural and psychiatric disorder. Reaching from Faust through to the romanticists, the Hegelians, the Marxists, the impressionists, the expressionists, the formalists, the Goedelians and the dialetheists of the present day, this is a thousand year old disorder which has led to the disappearance of thought, communication, sanity and civilization.

NONCONTRADICTION

The most fundamental principle of reality is the principle of noncontradiction, the principle which states that a thing cannot possess contradictory properties at one and the same time. This principle means that a thing cannot be both black all over and white all over at one and the same time, and that in any process of change, the thing which changes can never exhibit mutually exclusive properties, such as being human and being nonhuman at one and the same time, and that a thing cannot act in a manner which contradicts what it is or contradicts its nature or essence. The principle of noncontradiction means that to be is to be something, that to exist is to possess a specific nature or essence, for if to be was to be nothing at all or if a thing could exist which was totally indeterminate, then nothing would prevent it from exhibiting contradictory properties, and from being both black all over and white all over at one and the same time. The principle of noncontradiction is learned and proved on the basis of experience. It is learned whenever one looks at an object and sees that it cannot be both triangular and square at one and same time, or when one perceives on a piece of paper such symbols and notations as $A \text{ is } A$ and $A=A$, or when reads such sentences as a rational animal is a rational animal. In the latter example, one simply has to know the meaning of the word is and no other words, and one can perceive the principle of noncontradiction in the alphabetic identity which arises between the right and left clauses of the sentence which are separated by the verb. Any attempt to deny the truth of the principle of noncontradiction inevitably assumes its validity, inasmuch as the denial is held to be meaningful, to consist in words which mean what they mean and mean nothing other than what they mean, and is held to be absolutely and unequivocally true, and not both true and false at one and the same time. Any attempt to deny the truth of the principle of noncontradiction automatically evicts oneself from the realm of sanity and represents the rock bottom point in the process of mental disease and disintegration, beyond which there is no further place to go. The very hallmark and definition of psychosis lies precisely in the rejection of the principle of noncontradiction and the total withdrawal from the realm of existence. The principle of noncontradiction means the following: that there is no such thing as chance behavior in nature and that all natural behavior is determined by the natures of the things which act; that all process ontologies must be rejected because they project the existence of contradictions, when a thing is held to be both something and something else, to be both one type of thing and another type of thing, at one and the same time during the process of change; and it means that Darwin's theory of the origin of species has to be modified. While rejecting supernatural explanations of life's origins and retaining the principle of secularism and natural change, the theory must be modified to exclude the temporal, developmental change of one species into another. A modified Darwinian theory would be one which affirms that species are created by natural processes, that they evolve over time in nonessential ways in the response to the environment, and that they do indeed change into one another; but it would deny that they evolve into one another over time; and it would affirm that, by the principle of noncontradiction, species change into one another instantaneously, so that at no time are there any such contradictions in nature as man-apes or man headed oxen. Aristotle describes the principle of noncontradiction as the principle held by anyone who knows and perceives anything whatever of reality and who is in possession of a sound mind. He describes the principle as comprising the essence of all thought, reality, and mental health and well being: "These truths hold good for everything that is, and not for some special genus apart from others. And all people use them, because they are true of being as being. For a principle which everyone must have who understands anything that is is not a mere hypothesis. Evidently then such a principle is the most certain of all, which principle this is, let us proceed to say. It is that the same attribute cannot at the same time both belong and not belong to the same subject in the same respect." (Metaphysics, Book IV). Because contradictions cannot exist in reality, they cannot be conceived, thought of or imagined, and myths, religions, faiths and dogmas which are not derived from reality do not involve concepts in any serious, substantive sense of the term, but involve arbitrary, nonconceptual, preconceptual mental drawings, projections and shapings of a malleable pottery called fantasy. The definition of an acute, intense malady of the soul is the rejection of the principle of contradiction. Those who honestly and sincerely believe that a statement and its negation can both be true, that a thing can be both black all over and white all over at one and the same time, that a thing can be both a man and not a man at one and the same time, that change is the synthesis of contradictory states, and that a thing can act in contradiction to its nature, have descended into a raging maelstrom of total psychosis, into an impressionist starry night painted from the padded cells of severe mental derangement, and are nonfunctioning, nonoperating, morally disgraceful human beings. Yet it is precisely this rejection which forms the recurrent theme of the present age as it races downward into its final act. The path to this final act was a thousand years in the making and commenced with the emergence of the West. The West emerged in Northern Europe among the ancient Germans from a fearsome and terrifying matrix of Faustian assertion, will power, subjectivity and romanticism, and immediately stood a universe apart from another culture which had arisen on the same continent, but at this time, 1000 AD, had long since vanished: the Classical Apollonian culture of the Greeks and Romans. After a thousand years of development, the Faustian rejection of reason and reality has reached a wild, mad, feverish climax in the present day the likes of which mankind has never witnessed before. It has descended into an inverted apex pointing downward into the most serious form of mental impairment possible or imaginable: an impairment so serious that all thought has been dissociated from physical objects, all contact with external reality has been lost, and the soul floats aimlessly in voids and spaces without morning stars, without sunrises, without noonday light, without sunshine filled days, and forever rained down upon and made overcast by the all pervading gloom of schizophrenic disintegration. Listen to the voices of the peddlers of contradiction. Listen to the Hegelians. They proclaim that reality is pure, ceaseless change and activity in which at any given moment in time a thing can be both itself and another type of thing. The universe is a unity, a wholeness and an organism exhibiting contradiction and unintelligibility, one whose buds, blossoms, flowers and fruits have covered the earth in the deepest, darkest shades of mental breakdown: "The bud disappears when the blossom breaks through, and we might say that the former is refuted by the latter; in the same way when the fruit comes, the blossom may be explained to be a false form of the plant's existence, for the fruit appears as its true nature in place of the blossom. The ceaseless activity of their own inherent nature makes these stages moments of an organic unity, where they not merely do not contradict one another, but where one is as necessary as the other; and constitutes thereby the life of the whole." (The Phenomenology Of Spirit by G. W. F. Hegel). Listen to the Marxists, who proclaim that matter equals a state of contradiction and is the synthesis of class contradictions. Listen to the Whiteheadians, who proclaim that the belief in the existence of physical objects which are as they are is the result of the "fallacy of misplaced concreteness" and must be replaced by the recognition that the essence of reality is pure change, which produces both A and non A at the same moment in time, and is the relation and linkage of mutually exclusive states. Listen to the Goedelians, who proclaim that a consistent logical system represents a mere subset or partial view of reality, while a complete logical system which represents the whole of reality is necessarily inconsistent. This law that contradictions comprise the essence of all complete thought and reality is known as the axiom or theorem of incompleteness. Listen to the philosophers of paraconsistent logic. They proclaim that contradictions are all true and that the best theory in any field of human thought, from ontology to logic to mathematics to physics to biology to the social sciences, is one which is completely inconsistent. They proclaim that the hallmark of philosophic wisdom and enlightenment consists in the affirmation of the following points: contradictions are not errors; the Classical logic of noncontradiction is wrong in principle; and all true theories are inconsistent. It is an axiom of common sense that the denial of certainty and logical consistency is a symptom of and entails all embracing mental confusion and disruption. Listen to the voices of the Hegelians, the Marxists, the Whiteheadians, the Goedelians and the dialetheists. Rejecting the principle that all mentally secure, fit, balanced, wholesome and adjusted people have affirmed without question or discussion, the philosophers of logical contradiction have rendered themselves incoherent as they have pushed civilization into the abyss.

HEIDEGGER, WITTGENSTEIN AND THE DEATH OF PHILOSOPHY

An autopsy is the examination of a corpse by dissection to determine the cause, manner and mode of death. The world's first recorded autopsy was performed when Julius Caesar's body was examined after his assassination to determine which of the twenty three stab wounds caused his death. An autopsy performed on the West, involving the dissection of its soul, has revealed the cause of death of the culture as residing in the philosophies which came into prominence during its final stages of development. But these causes themselves have a story, a background and a context which point to a wider ranging illness of the West, an illness which goes back to the origins and foundations of the culture, and points inescapably to the terrifying diagnosis that the West was born in a state of death. In the plains and forests of Northern Germany around 1000 AD, a spirit emerged the likes of which mankind had never before witnessed. It was the spirit of an absolute, unbounded will to power and mastery, a will which brooked no opposition from the remonstrances of reason or reality and tolerated no dissent from the voices of conscience. This spirit of will and subjectivity spells the spiritual death of any person or culture which embraces it. Embodied in the figure of a German sorcerer, alchemist, necromancer and student of the diabolical arts from the University of Heidelberg, a figure named Faust, the West embraced subjectivity from the very moment of its birth, embraced it as its basic, underlying theme and essence, and thereby removed itself from the ranks of rational cultures at the forefront of which stood the Apollonian culture of the ancient Greeks and Romans. Sitting in his gloomy study chamber before his bible of black magic, Faust set forth the governing principle of the West, a principle which would give rise to all manner of pathologies and malignancies and ultimately bring about the collapse of the culture. This principle is the following: what are called experience, perception, knowledge and reality are in fact bound and shaped by the conditions of consciousness and have no objective ground or justification. Faust lit a fuse whose length reached across the centuries. The flame moved through Descartes, Kant, Hume, Hegel, Nietzsche and Marx, until it finally exploded in the twentieth century and brought forth a holocaust against the human mind and the final act of a benighted culture, a culture overtaken by darkness from the very first moment of its existence. The explosion which commenced in the twentieth century was marked Heidegger and Wittgenstein and its radioactive particles were carried around the world and poisoned every man, woman and child on the planet. The philosophies of Heidegger and Wittgenstein are the grave diggers of Western civilization, after ten centuries of doomed, unwholesome, psychotic existence predicated upon the denial of the existence or perceivability of physical objects. The Heideggerian aspect of the explosion proclaimed that what is common to all entities, which makes them all entities, is that they lack distinct, independent, physical existence and are one and all manifestations of Dasein or human consciousness. It proclaimed that existence means human existence, which means pure thinking and willing without hindrance from natural laws or objects. It proclaimed that human consciousness constitutes what the deluded call matter and is the essence of all that exists. It proclaimed that the method of philosophy has nothing whatever to do with empiricism and is instead phenomenology, which is an analysis of the contents of consciousness independently of the external world. It proclaimed that in his study of reality the philosopher must utilize the method of phenomenological reduction and contract and diminish the existence of physical objects down to absolute nothingness. It proclaimed that the hallmark of philosophic wisdom and enlightenment resides in the recognition that the world is transcendently constituted, or constituted by the subjective, apriori forms of human consciousness, and that there are no such things as natural, empirical sciences which purport to study physical objects, and there are no such things as physical descriptions of events but only mental descriptions. It proclaimed that consciousness is detached from all objects, is aware only of itself, manufactures the illusion of physical existence, and its subjective forms and categories provide the only means of access to being. It proclaimed that the task of philosophy is to describe the contents of consciousness without any presuppositions about whether they exist or not, or represent anything real or outside themselves. It proclaimed that the essence of reality is being and time, which stand for human consciousness and the human will. It proclaimed that reason is an illusion because things have no fixed natures or essences but are pure flux and activity, and the essence of consciousness is the will, which is characterized by a state of "thrownness" and "fallenness" into a cockpit of blind, bloody, reckless, irresponsible fighting and killing. It proclaimed that existence is not a thing or entity, and has no form or definition; it is not graspable by means of the everyday logic of noncontradiction; and is pure, infinite, indeterminate freedom, willing, warring and slaughtering. It proclaimed that the highest expression of morality is to obey the legislation of the will and to act on the whims and impulses of the moment, and to act for the sake of acting and destroy for the sake of destroying, without concern for consequences, care for the future or respect for the rights of others. Listen to Heidegger as he proclaims that existence is darkness, nothingness, pure consciousness, and the looming shadow of total madness: "Why are there beings at all instead of nothing? That is the question. Presumably it is not arbitrary question, 'Why are there beings at all instead of nothing?' This is obviously the first of all questions. Of course it is not the first question in the chronological sense. And yet, we are each touched once, maybe even every now and then, by the concealed power of this question, without properly grasping what is happening to us. In great despair, for example, when all weight tends to dwindle away from things and the sense of things grows dark, the question looms." (Being And Time). The Wittgensteinian aspect of the explosion which shook the twentieth century proclaimed that the task of philosophy is not to grasp the nature of reality but to logically analyse and clarify the forms of thought independently of all experience. It proclaimed that philosophy is not a science of reality but a science of language and is focused exclusively upon examining the rules of grammar. It proclaimed that philosophy is a form of linguistic or conceptual analysis and is not concerned with discovering any facts. It proclaimed that words name nothing in reality and the meaning of a word is simply its use within a language game or form of life. It proclaimed that language is the ultimate reality, that the laws of physics are only laws of language, and are only the arbitrary rules of a language game called physics. It proclaimed that the meaning of a word is a function of our needs, interests, desires, emotions and capacities and what is called reality can be anything we choose, wish or want it to be. It proclaimed that the meaning of a word is not an objective image, picture or property but is a product of culture and context and there as many different realities as there are cultures and contexts, no one of which may be held to be more real or more true than any other. It has proclaimed that what is true is whatever a linguistic community has voted or decreed to be true, and has nothing whatever to do with the facts or features of reality, so that the fact that two and three equal five is not the result of any objective, extralinguistic rules of addition, and could be otherwise and different if so decreed. It proclaimed that what is true or right is whatever the community of language users asserts to be true or right or has got away with saying what is true or right, and has no relation whatever to what really is so, because the notion of what really is so is meaningless and incoherent. It proclaimed that there is no such thing as objectivity but only intersubjectivity or social, tribal, community or cultural agreement. It proclaimed that the everyday belief that language and thought can be compared with reality and found to agree with it is absurd and nonsensical and must be replaced by the recognition that language and thought create their own objects. Listen to Wittgenstein who proclaims that philosophical investigations are nothing more than grammatical investigations which have no bearing upon or relevance whatever to an extramental reality: "Our investigation is a grammatical one. Such an investigation sheds light on our problem by clearing misunderstandings away. Misunderstandings concerning the use of words, caused, among other things, by certain analogies between the forms of expression in different regions of language." (Philosophical Investigations, Section 90). The perceived world of physical objects is an illusion and the world is my world, my existence, my consciousness, my will, my freedom, my phenomenological reduction, my language game and my forms of life. Such are the messages sent forth by the Heideggarians and the Wittgensteinians in the final, fearsome, terrifying bomb blast of the Faustian fuse of subjectivism. It has consumed the present day in a raging firestorm of insanity, chaos, terror and violence. Report of a cultural pathologist: such is the final attack, the final stab wound, which has brought about the death of philosophy.

COVID 19: A LESSON

Western imperialism was a political undertaking in which European nations explored, conquered and settled the savage regions of the world. Actuated by a Faustian expansionary impulse and by the fires of moral idealism, Western imperialists commenced their campaigns around 1500 AD and spread the liberal culture of reason, law, capitalism, science and progress to indigenous nations north, east, south and west. As they advanced through their land and sea routes in camps and ships laden with new ideas, with ideas about human freedom and human dignity, they moved into dark storms, strong winds and the thunder of instant ruination. These were the storms, the winds and the thunder of deadly diseases, a whirlwind of unceasing, unmitigated horror which they had never before encountered in their European homelands. Sailing and marching under the banners of a liberal utopian program and manifesto, they journeyed undeterred and brought their sacred missions to glorious completion. But they did so at a price. They did so in the face of a violent fact and reality which would decimate their numbers and maim them for life. This was the reality that nonWestern lands are the sources of the most serious structural and functional disorders which have afflicted mankind. This is due to the fact that in backward lands, animals and humans live together, work together, eat together, sleep together, copulate together, and are morally speaking, one and same kinds of entities. This is due to the fact that among these human-animal ruled nations, there is not one which is not buried in mountains of filth, waste and unsanitary detritus. The European settlers described the natives they encountered and sought to civilize as naked or seminaked. From a moral perspective, these natives were fully clothed. They were clothed in ignorance, superstition, tyranny and fear and with these satanic robes, they shrouded five thousand years of human history in the darkness of inactivity, zero growth, nondevelopment and total stagnation. The record of the contagions and blights visited upon civilized mankind is a litany of animal-human relations and roaming animal people deteriorating in plains of dirt and squalor in kingdoms unsettled by the West. Measles, tuberculosis and small pox originated from cows in indigenous lands. Bird flu originated from Asia. Swine flu originated from Mexico. General influenza and whooping cough originated from pigs and dogs in indigenous lands. Malaria originated from chickens and ducks in indigenous lands. Cholera originated from the consumption of cow manure in indigenous lands. The bubonic and pneumonic plagues originated from rats in indigenous lands. The human immunodeficiency virus originated from African monkeys and apes when its nonhuman version, simian immunodeficiency virus, crossed the species barrier. Christopher Columbus and his crew were ensnared in a syphilitic ring of fire in the New World and caused an outbreak of this disease upon their return to Europe; prior to this outbreak, syphilis had been unknown in the Old World. This fact has been established by the study by paleopathologists of thousands of skeletons from Europe from the period before the return of Columbus, none of which have exhibited any bone lesions consistent with syphilis. The disease had originated from aboriginal copulation with cattle and sheep. The latest addition to this melancholy catalogue is COVID 19, a severe acute respiratory syndrome, SARS, disease caused by a new coronavirus. This new virus is called SARS COV2 and the first infections occurred in December 2019 in the Hubei province of China. Like the earlier SARS COV virus which originated from the Guangdong province of China in 2003, COVID 19 was transferred to humans from bats and civet cats which the Chinese regularly consume. The nations worst affected by the COVID 19 pandemic are the nations which have had the greatest exposure to the Chinese. Through China's One Belt One Road infrastructure investment program, Italy and Iran have received tens of thousands of Chinese workers. The Lombardy region in Italy became the epicenter in Italy because it has the highest concentration of Chinese. In Iran, the COVID 19 outbreak occurred in the city of Qom, which received thousands of Chinese workers employed by the China Railway Engineering Corporation. Mahan Air, the airline used by the Iranian Revolutionary Guard, carried out flights between Tehran and China, and in consequence senior Iranian governmental officials, including the first vice president and a presidential advisor, and over twenty members of parliament, contracted the disease. New York is the epicenter of the American outbreak of COVID 19, and is home to over five percent of COVID 19 cases worldwide, because it is the most visited destination in America by the Chinese, with over 1.2 million Chinese tourists and workers in 2019. The city's official policy of diversity, inclusion and multiculturalism has been the fearsome and terrifying key which has unlocked the door to the Grim Reaper. In consequence of COVID 19, the West has plunged into a state of lockdown, isolation, confinement, restriction, siege and high security without precedent in its history. Suffering and deprived in a sealed vault marked emergency, in a prison house slammed shut in the wake of epidemics, pandemics, mass contamination and mass death brought from a foreign land, the West, mesmerized by the subversive forces of Marxism, Islam and multiculturalism, has refused to take heed. It has refused to learn the lesson learned by Western imperialists centuries before in their expeditions of liberation around the world. It is the lesson that the campaign of liberal globalization is fraught with danger; it imperils the health, safety, and well being of the human flourishers who promote and conduct it as they come into contact with the human appearing masses who inhabit nonWestern lands; and it must be accompanied by the resolute determination to use force and violence against these masses as the only way to make the world safe for civilization. Blinded by the creeds of the reds and their friends and allies, the West has refused to learn the lessons of the past and awaits its doom.

REDS UPEND THE MELTING POT

E pluribus unum: "Out of Many, One". Such is the motto of America, appearing on the Great Seal of the nation, and placed there by an act of Congress in 1782. This motto signified the creation of a new national identity predicated upon the acceptance of liberal democratic values and ideals and the rejection of all forms of racism and ethnicism. The point and purpose of the new nation was not to preserve racial and ethnic identities but to produce a new liberal culture in which people would be judged as individuals possessing a common, rational, human essence, and would be afforded equal opportunity to prosper and flourish, and equal protection before the law. The American War of Independence, the Declaration of Independence of 1776 and the Constitution of 1787 all gave voice to a new national creed which rejected all forms of racial and ethnic identity politics and recognized as sacred, inviolate and infeasible the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual. The advent of the twentieth century plunged the West into the mass politics of radical, red thinking in which liberal universalist ideals were swept away by the revolutionary tides of collectivism and tribalism which sought to reconstruct truth and reality along the lines of gender, race, ethnicity and class. Reflecting this new global, antiliberal dispensation, America became a hotbed of racial and ethnic militancy and Americans disavowed their liberal heritage and roots, rejected the goal of liberal assimilation, denounced the liberal notion of one people, and commenced a movement to protect, promote and perpetuate racial and ethnic communities. The new radical masses in control of the nation issued a program and manifesto for the dissolution of the City Upon A Hill, which America had meant to the world since its founding, a model of liberal benevolence and a beacon of liberal hope, and the transformation of the nation into a savage jungle flowing with the raw sewage of race and ethnicity politics. This program and manifesto has expressed the ideological and political orthodoxy of the twenty first century and composed the final chapter in the history of the nation. It has proclaimed that there are no such people as Americans, because race and ethnicity alone matter while spirit, soul, character and personhood do not, and there are only African Americans, Asian Americans, Mexican Americans, Russian Americans, Chinese Americans and other such ethnically designated citizens. It has proclaimed that a progressive America is one governed by a cult of mystical collectivism which recognizes that America is not a nation composed of concrete individuals but a nation composed of abstract groups possessed of a racial or ethnic character. It has proclaimed that a progressive America is one in which ethnicity is held to be the defining experience of the people, ethnic bonds are worshiped as ineradicable and everlasting, and ethnic tribes constitute the essential structure of society. It has proclaimed that a progressive America is one in which the nation's history is studied through the lens of ethnicity and is held to constitute a chapter in the global history of ethnic war and struggle. It has proclaimed that the purpose of America is not to defend individual rights and choices but to preserve diverse racial and ethnic identities. It has proclaimed that a progressive America is a people's church presided over by the dogma of multiethnicism and its constitution of ethnic fragmentation and separatism. It has proclaimed that a progressive America is one whose schools teach students the primacy of racial and cultural perspectives and train them to enter offices and neighborhoods and tear them apart. It has proclaimed that a progressive America is a fundamentalist congregation which carries torches spelling out Ethnicity First and chants hymns in honor of ethnic factionalism and the destruction of society. Look at the racists active in America today and see how they have declared war on the nation. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has injected antiwhite hatred into its veins, vessels, arteries and mainstream and condemned the white man as persona non grata. They have proclaimed that the notion of racial equality is a bourgeois superstition and only black lives matter and no other lives matter. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose masses, intellectuals, functionaries and leaders have joined together to sing the same song and preach the same religion: the song and religion of unremitting antipathy toward whites, males, entrepreneurs, heterosexuals, nontransgenders, those who condemn Islamic extremism, and those who demand the assimilation of immigrants to liberal values and ideals. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose editorial boards, universities, graduate schools and law centers have abandoned the goal of liberal education and become raging cesspools swimming with pornography, vulgarity, profanity, crudity, indecency, slogans of racial extremism, and calls for a holocaust against white people. Such is the sickness afflicting American culture in the present day. Such are the guns of a hate filled mob exploding like magazines against the liberal order. Such are the violent, cruel, disgraceful ideas which have infected the American soul, spread like a cancer throughout American society, and wiped out the institutions of liberal reason, order and peace: "This is the new racism, much of it learned and taught at our nation's colleges. George Orwell said, 'Some ideas are so stupid that only intellectuals believe them.' The stupid ideas about inclusion and diversity originate with academics on college campuses. If their ideas didn't infect the rest of society, they might be a source of entertainment. But these cancerous ideas have infected society. Statements such as 'I'm over white men running the country,' or 'If we have two old white guys at the top of this ticket, we will lose' are examples of that cancer. Last year, Philip Carl Salzman wrote The War Against White People in Minding the Campus. He declared: 'Antiwhite hate is now mainstream American culture. Not just by racial extremists such as Black Lives Matter, for whom statements such as 'all lives matter' or 'blue lives matter' are racist. Our highest leaders sing the same song.' When Barack Obama was campaigning for the presidency in 2008, he said of working class white voters, 'They get bitter, they cling to guns or religion or antipathy to people who aren't like them or antiimmigrant sentiment or antitrade sentiment as a way to explain their frustrations.' During the 2016 presidential campaign, candidate Hillary Clinton claimed that half of Donald Trump's supporters were 'a basket of deplorables' who were 'racist, sexist, homophobic, xenophobic, Islamophobic—you name it.' Do you think Clinton was talking about Trump's black, Asian and hispanic supporters? No, she was talking about millions of Trump's white supporters. Then there's Sarah Jeong, a member of The New York Times editorial board and graduate of the University of California, Berkeley, and Harvard Law School. She expressed publicly many antiwhite opinions. Among them are: 'The world could get by just fine with zero white people.' 'Dumbass fucking white people marking up the internet with their opinions like dogs pissing on fire hydrants.' It's 'kind of sick how much joy I get out of being cruel to old white men.' I guarantee you that The New York Times would have fired any employee making similar statements about black, hispanic or homosexual people. The bottom line is that the new racism, born in academia, is just as ugly as the old racism." (The New Racism By Walter Williams). Under the incessant hammer blows inflicted by the radical left, the American melting pot has been turned over and emptied and the slag and sediments have washed across the nation. This is the slag of differentiation, disintegration, heterogeneity and war and the protagonists are racial and ethnic factions. These are the sediments of race canons, race curriculums, race separatists, ethnocentrist banners, ethnic enclaves, race activism, race intellectuals, the suppression of free speech in the name of political correctness, and volleys of hate speech directed against the class of successful white males. In an ancient legend, the burning of the temple at Corinth resulted in the melting and intermixing of metals and produced a new metal called Corinthian brass, which was more precious than every other metal in the world. Such expresses the liberal idea which had animated America prior to the twentieth century. It was the idea that all nations, all peoples, all tribes, all clans and all ethnicities would come to America and adopt a new creed and speak a new language. This was the creed and language of free individuals liberated from the shackles of race and blood, guided by nothing but their reason and sense of morality, conscious of nothing but their common humanity, and determined to prosper and succeed in a liberal cosmopolis which guaranteed equals rights and opportunities to all. The turn of the twentieth century was not a mere passage or sequence in the continuum of time. It was an eruption, an explosion, a breaking forth of a volcano called identity politics and its lava, ash and gases have buried the twenty first century. The greatest liberal assimilationist melting pot after the British Empire, America is the most prominent mummy in the necropolis of liberal nations. Its lifeless form, devoid of a liberal soul and stuffed with the paper and mash of race politics, ethnic politics and national socialism, is among the gloomiest and most melancholy reminders of the red masses' inveterate hatred of liberalism and their assassination of a free nation.

ORDERED LIBERTY VERSUS MAMMON AND THE REDS

Capitalism is a political and economic system in which a nation's trade and industry are controlled by private owners for private profit. In the history of mankind, there have been two main versions of capitalism: the Classical version and the Western version. Under the aegis of Apollo, the supreme, quintessentially Classical god, capitalism was regulated by the rules of reason and was condemned when it operated outside these constraints. Under the aegis of Faust, the supreme, quintessentially Western figure, the doctor of the diabolical arts who sold his commitment to reason to the Devil at a crossroads in return for infinite will, power, adventure and experience, capitalism operates under no such rational constraints and is a disordered and unbounded quest to expand wealth and profits. Socialism is a political and economic system in which trade and industry are owned by the state and community and private profit is prohibited. Socialism becomes ascendant whenever a culture enters into a state of decline and fall and the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual are deemed to be hindrances to human flourishing, are no longer protected, and are actively violated by the state. The stock market crash of 1929 and the ensuing imposition of socialism upon America serve as striking and dramatic illustrations of the immoral character of both Faustian capitalism and the system of socialist control, and the vital, existential need of civilized societies to enacted and be governed under a system of Apollonian capitalism or rationally ordered individual liberty. During the Roaring Twenties, prior to the crash, America had been taken on a satanic ride by a soaring, overheated, Faustian economy. Its forms and lineaments were the following: easily acquired loans, endless bank credit; people without financial means, who would not normally be involved in stock market investments, purchasing stocks on margin, paying a small percentage of the value of the stock and borrowing the rest from a bank or broker; rapid, significant increases in asset prices as a result of mindless enthusiasm and irresponsible speculation; reckless consumer spending, overconfidence and dismissing of debt; massive overproduction leading to a glut of iron, steel, durable goods and farm crops; record breaking expansion of stock trading without point, plan, need or purpose; the Dow Jones Industrial Average increasing by a factor of six between August 1921 and September 1929; the stock market expanding by twenty percent each year; on September 3, 1929, the Dow Jones peaking at 381; economists predicting a permanent state of endless expansion: "Stock prices have reached what looks like a permanently high plateau." (Irving Fisher). Then reality loomed over the horizon; it reared its pitiless, merciless visage; what was destined to happen, happened; a panic induced selling wave inundated the nation; and economic collapse and ruination ensued. The date was October 29, 1929 and it takes its place in the annals of infamy as Black Tuesday. After the stock market crash: nationwide bank runs as frenzied hordes rushed to the banks to withdraw their funds; investors unable to return money because banks had invested it in the fallen market; massive bank failures and commercial bankruptcies; bankrupt investors selling their luxury goods for cash on the streets; ordinary people losing their entire life savings; and the onset of the Great Depression. Commencing in 1929 and concluding in 1939 soon after the start of World War II, the Great Depression was the longest, deepest and most widespread depression of the twentieth century, the grim, devastating wages of sin of the system of Faustian capitalism and its ethic of greed, rapacity recklessness and irresponsibility. Between 1929 and 1932, the worldwide Gross Domestic Product fell by fifteen percent. In America, unemployment had reached twenty five percent by 1933. Businesses and families defaulted on record numbers of loans and thousands of banks failed. Hundreds of thousands of Americans became homeless and set up shantytowns. The construction, shipping, mining, logging, agriculture, automobile and appliance industries plunged into a dust bowl of zero growth and into a heartland of precipitous decline. Reduced spending, reduced confidence and reduced production pushed the nation into free fall until the economy hit bottom and ceased to exist. Brought into being by the demons of Faustian capitalism, a nightmare world of unreal expansions, stock market crashes, ruinous depressions, high unemployment, high poverty, low profits, low incomes and lost opportunities placed a ghastly death shroud over the future of the people. After the debacle of Faustian capitalism, the red mobs of the nation took over, threw the constitution to the winds, and made the nation's liberal heritage, which had been proudly constructed by the Founding Fathers and become the beacon and envy of the free world, rapidly recede into the mists of history. In the new post capitalist dispensation, a man on horseback appeared at the gates of society and smashed his way through with a message as antiliberal, unliberal, antiAmerican and unAmerican as could be, and whipped up his raging mobs and turbulent multitudes to a fever pitch, and fashioned a new totalitarian order. Proclaiming a New Deal for the working class which would serve as the highest expression of social and political progressivism, President Franklin Roosevelt plunged a century old constitutional republic, venerated by the downtrodden and oppressed people of the world as a shining City Upon A Hill, into a communist and fascist tyranny the likes of which the nation had never seen before. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one which concentrates all power into the hands of an executive who will run roughshod over the courts and legislatures in his quest to fashion a Marxist Russia, a fascist Germany and enforce a political philosophy in which the power of the commonweal ranks above the rights and freedoms of the individual. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one under the control of a benevolent dictator and a resolute man of action who will overcome the inefficiencies and corruptions brought by constitutional government and make people thank the Lord for the coming millennium of socialism. Listen to the voice of an American president as he seeks to transform a community of free people into a trained, loyal, disciplined army of zealots and fanatics ready to trample over the Constitution and shut down the halls of Congress. In 1933, America was invaded by a foreign enemy whom the masses welcomed as their hero and savior. One hundred years earlier, he would have been expelled by the people as an interloper and intruder whose radical ideas had no place in a land of liberty. Now, in the third decade of the twentieth century, this American president, promoting a creed of universal enslavement and sacrifice for the common good, was blindly worshiped and followed as he proclaimed the crisis of capitalism, declared a national emergency due to a disease called freedom, and demanded and received untrammelled executive power to wage war against human civilization and sweep the lives, liberty and property of people into the dustbin of history: "If we are to go forward, we must move as a trained and loyal army willing to sacrifice for the good of a common discipline, because without such discipline no progress can be made, no leadership becomes effective. We are, I know, ready and willing to submit our lives and our property to such discipline, because it makes possible a leadership which aims at the larger good. I assume unhesitatingly the leadership of this great army of our people. In the event that the Congress shall fail, I shall ask the Congress for the one remaining instrument to meet the crisis--broad executive power to wage a war against the emergency, as great as the power that would be given to me if we were in fact invaded by a foreign foe." Over the past one hundred years, civilized people across America have been experiencing recurring nightmares. In the first of these nightmares, a vertiginous roller coaster ride marked Boom And Bust transports the people into stratospheric heights of preternatural prosperity and faster than light economic growth, then sends them crashing down into an abyss of total ruination and collapse. The cycle repeats itself for all eternity as peaks of drugged euphoria followed by valleys of unbearable withdrawal torture become the defining images and representations of the universe. In the second nightmare, the president of the United States becomes a dictator, revokes the Constitution, and employs red shirts, brown shirts and black shirts to enforce martial law, dissolve Congress, rip up the Constitution, create an army of fighters for the new totalitarian faith, and place the enemies of the people, the voices of liberal freedom and dissent, before a firing squad and blast them off the face of the earth. These nightmares are the reality of modern day America. They are the reality of Faustian capitalism, or capitalism devoid of rational restraints and objective valuations and allowed to run wild and sully the economy with unfair prices, unfair wages and unfair profits. They are the reality of socialist tyranny established in every city and state in the nation, headquartered in Washington, and voted into public law by the raised fists of the mob. In the culture of the West, born one thousand years ago in the darkness and gloom of Northern Europe, the bright, noonday, Classical world of Apollonian capitalism and ordered liberty has been placed in a museum case and buried forever in the ocean of cultural nonexistence.

A NEW DISEASE, AN OLD REFRAIN

Joseph Mengele was the most notorious doctor in history. Known as the Angel of Death, he performed amputations, sterilizations, shock treatments and serum injections in order to kill a maximum number of his patients and in the most painful manner possible. In the minds of civilized people, his career serves as a symbol and metaphor for the doctors of red totalitarian rule who exploit public crises and emergencies, promote panic and fear among the people, and foment mass hysteria in their campaign to take away the people's freedom and liberty and pulverize society beneath the crushing weight of a state leviathan. The latest crisis which the red doctors have exploited is the covid-19 pandemic, as their goal remains ever the same: to carry out their fearsome and terrifying political agenda. A wave of fear has gripped the world, a fear without rational ground or justification, a fear which is being fueled, fanned and stirred up by the forces of the left, bent upon undermining and subverting the free institutions and the way of life enjoyed by the West. An examination of the facts and a willingness to confront the mobs who do not hear them and to face down the red doctors who have deceived the people is the only way to protect and preserve a free and flourishing society from its mortal enemies. Fact: the fatality rate for covid-19 is under two percent, while the fatality rate for the coronavirus Sars-CoV-2 was ten percent, and the fatality rate for the influenza pandemic which commenced in 2009 was one percent. Fact: the average age of those who have died of covid-19 is eighty one and all the victims suffered from comorbidities and serious underlying health conditions. Fact: according to the World Health Organization, seasonal influenza kills between 290,000 and 650,000 people each year due to respiratory disease, while 8,000 people have died from Covid-19 out of a total of 220,000 cases. Fact: the vast majority of covid-19 sufferers exhibit mild symptoms and recover completely within days. The risk of death is minimal. This is described by the Hudson Alpha Institute of Biotechnology: "As with other respiratory conditions, the severity of covid-19 varies among patients. An analysis of early 45,000 confirmed patients in China found that 81% had mild symptoms, with 14% were classified as severe (involving serious pneumonia and shortness of breath). The remaining 5% of patients were critically ill, having developed respiratory failure, septic shock and/or multiorgan failure. Although recovery times vary, the vast majority of people who get sick with covid-19 will recover. People with mild cases recover within a few days, while those with more serious cases may take weeks or even months, depending on the severity of their symptoms. We don't have a clear understanding of the risk of death from covid-19. Initial information from China suggested death occurred in approximately 3% of infected individuals. That figure is likely too high, as many people with mild cases of the disease were not counted in the overall numbers. A separate analysis of nearly 1,100 patients with lab confirmed covid 19_determined a 1.4% death rate." Fear and tyranny have become the greatest contagions in the covid-19 pandemic. Look at the symptoms, the indications of mass hysteria and state invasion which defy the imagination and shock the conscience. Dry goods, toilet paper and face masks stockpiled. Stock exchanges plunging by thousands of points. Arts festivals, sporting events and community gatherings canceled. The hospitality industry collapsing. Mass transit systems deserted. States, regions, provinces and cities placed on lockdown. People veiled and shrouded in inefficacious face masks. People ordered not to converse with strangers and to keep a distance from them. Passengers on cruise lines quarantined. Airports shut down and flights canceled. Offices closed and employees ordered to work from home. Public schools and universities shut down and examinations canceled. Professional doom peddlers proclaiming that covid 19 will kill tens of millions of people, fill every hospital bed in the world, and inflict a loss of 2.4 trillion dollars on the global Gross Domestic Product. Rahm Emanuel, White House chief of staff under President Obama, describes the red doctors' tried and tested tactic to harness political agendas onto national crises and ride them into power: "You never let a serious crisis go to waste. And what I mean by that is it's an opportunity to do things you think you could not do before." The covid 19 pandemic can only be halted by individuals who have acquired immunity to the disease, either through infection or through vaccination. It cannot be halted by taking people's freedom away from them and placing them under lockdown, surveillance, shelter in place orders, stay at home orders and social distancing orders. Even if it could, civilized people would find the price too high to pay and the burden too heavy to bear. The covid-19 pandemic is the latest crisis exploited by the left to establish totalitarian rule and bring the world economy crashing to a halt. Over the decades, the songs and verses have changed but not the lines repeated at the end. This is the preachment to surrender one's freedom and liberty and seek shelter in the state. Dismissing common sense precautions to fight the disease as insufficient, rejecting the need for people to continue to live their daily lives because the virus will eventually stop spreading as those afflicted recover and acquire immunity, and seeking to recreate covid-19 into a latter day version of the Black Plague, today's totalitarians are on the march. They have assumed control over the airwaves and over the academic, political and public health establishment. The mobs have prayed to them for security, salvation and intercession. The mob's prayers have been answered in the final chapter of the West, entitled: The End of Reason and Liberty.

SUMMER CAMP

As day follows night and conclusions follow from their premises, the establishment of mass society establishes a sweeping politicization of all aspects of life and the total destruction of human freedom. This juggernaut of totalitarian rule, sanctioned, supported and brought into being by a horde and multitude whose single, overriding passion is for equality at the expense of liberty, has claimed the lives and souls of innocent children among its most tragic victims. Summer camp has traditionally been a recreational institution for young people, providing them with facilities for outdoor activities, sports and crafts, and with nothing more than this in the way of politics or ideology. Under the lengthening shadow of mass politics and its totalitarian ideology, summer camps have been transformed into indoctrination centers which have produced, mechanically, relentlessly and in vast numbers, children reciting the slogans of the radical left and parroting the tenets of the socialist party line. Children coming home from summer camps serve as remote hook ups to propaganda towers pulsating with the electricity of anticapitalist hatred and the children, cheered on and applauded by their parents, fill their homes with the messages pounded into them by camp counselors and directors. These child recreationists across the world, these impressionable adolescents and youth of today, these grown up leaders and shapers of tomorrow, have issued a program and manifesto dictated to them by their camp supervisors which has comprised a fearsome campfire song of revolution and destruction. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system of racism, environmental devastation and denial of rights to women. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system of homophobia, social bullying and denial of rights to animals. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system of homelessness, police brutality and gunfire in the streets. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which provides a safe space for socialists and only for socialists and does not tolerate the voices of liberty to exist anywhere in its midst. They have proclaimed that the most significant issue of our time is the advancement of social justice and every citizen must be imbued with the passion to remake the world into a people's progressive red totalitarian tyranny. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system of sexism and of hurting members of minorities and those who are different. They have proclaimed that a progressive camp is a caring, kind and compassionate camp which trains its campers on how to become activists, how to run school clubs and school projects, how to engage in fund raising and grassroots outreach, how to develop strategies and action plans, and how to write songs, paint murals and perform dances, the sole aim of all of which is to gain converts to the cause of the people's collectivist dictatorship and the denial of the dignity and worth of the individual. They have proclaimed that a progressive camp is one which inspires its campers with a shining hope for the future of humanity, a hope that someday soon people will no longer aspire to live as free individuals concerned with achieving their own flourishing and success and will learn the values and virtues of a life of sacrifice and enslavement, and it celebrates with its campers this spirit of brotherhood and community by organizing night hikes and night treks through national socialist mountains and forests. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which provides a free, safe, encouraging space for high minded citizens with authoritarian impulses who seek to take away the rights and freedoms of others for the realization of social aims and purposes. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has placed all power and decision making into the hands of the collective and abolished human dignity in the name of social democracy and a democratic education. They have proclaimed that a progressive camp is one which teaches children how to agitate the mobs against capitalism in the name of community building and how to hold social justice workshops and discussion groups on techniques of spreading hatred and discrimination against successful, white males. They have proclaimed that a progressive camp is one which collaborates with local red activists and communist organizations in a campaign of resistance, sabotage and underground conspiracies and terror attacks directed against modern civilization. They have proclaimed that a progressive camp is one which teaches campers the fundamental unreality of separate, individual existence and teaches them, in films, arts, games and interactive workshops, how to view people through the higher, mystical, transformative lenses of gender, race and class. Listen to the voices of the parents, children and directors of today's camp world as they launch encomiums of effusion to the red empire of human enslavement and totalitarian political correctness. Listen to the parents who plunged their children into heated ideological buildings rearing the plants of red activism and community organizing. Into political echo chambers in which like minded young zealots listen to each other, applaud each other, befriend each other, foment each other, incite each other, affirm the sterling worth of each other and flourish as algae flourish in the sewers as they shout slogans together of class struggle, race struggle, gender struggle, environmental struggle, planetary war and the forcible overthrow of liberal democratic government. Into a platform, pulpit and summer of hate in which budding young agitators and mini child fuhrers step up and preach a gospel of socialist autocracy and state suppression of human freedom and calumniate everything pure, decent, kind, righteous, compassionate, likeable and endearing in the world: "My sweet, young daughter Sarah attended YEA Camp when she was just 14. Since she was a young child she had always been so full of compassion for all living things and concerned about the future of our planet. I would worry that she would not find friends who were like minded at that age. Sarah flourished at YEA Camp. All the young kids shared the same concerns and were so full of love. These youths validated one another and YEA Camp offered them that platform. Sarah was a changed child. Her worry about the world turned to activism and the camp and her new friends were the catalyst. Your YEA Camp expedited my daughter's path in life towards kindness and compassion. I am so proud of Sarah and so thankful for that summer that she learned that she wasn't alone and that she could make a difference." (Youth Empowered Action Camp, testimonial of Penny). Listen to children who graduated from the camps with a sense of socialist community and an unquenchable hatred of the liberal order. With an ability, acquired in camp workshops and camp training sessions, to organize the malcontents of society in a crusade to sweep away individual rights and equal protection of all before the law. With fire in their eyes, the fire of revolution, radicalism and alliances of offense and attack, which will not rest until individual freedom under the rule of law has been vanquished and a regime of collectivism and tribalism under the banners of homosexual rights, transgender rights, and the rights of women, nonwhites and the poor has been unfurled in its place: "The sense of community at YEA Camp just sort of transcends everything. I really value it even today, staying in touch and building those relationships. If it hadn't been for YEA Camp, I would not have been as effective or as organized of a leader for my Gay Straight Alliance. I was the president that year, and I definitely took a lot of skills from the YEA Camp trainings and workshops we did." (Youth Empowered Action, testimonial of Shelby). Listen to the voices of the camp directors who have established a general theme and course of study rejecting decades of traditional summer camp programs and instruction. In the new curriculum, politics is the subject of indoctrination, red politics, race politics, class politics, gender politics, transgender politics, sexual politics, environmentalist politics, social justice politics, primitive politics, blood and soil politics, the politics of disruption, the politics of the stewards of the sacred earth and countryside, and the politics of everything and everyone except the politics of free, rational, flourishing people: "Our summer camp program remains rooted in the Duveneck family legacy of social justice and environmental stewardship, bringing together a diverse group of campers and staff, unplugged from the busyness of everyday life, and giving them the unique opportunity to build a better community through shared experience. We achieve this through focusing on the following core themes as the foundation of our curriculum, sharing them in ways that are relevant and age appropriate to each program: Environmental Stewardship, Race & Class: Farm & Food: LGBTQ+." (Hidden Villa Camp). Such are the voices of the parents, campers and camp counsellors of cultural decline and degeneration. In the dying hours of the West, a battle is in progress to take over the liberal soul of the culture. In today's summer camps, the campaigners are recruiting ever younger comrades to the front lines. Rooted in hatred of individual freedom and capitalist democracy, a universe of radical politics has descended upon today's summer camps. It is a universe which was unknown during the Age of Enlightenment; it reverberates with the drumbeats of tribal turbulence, community agitation and world revolution; and its stars and galaxies have spun and expanded out of control and shattered the foundations of everyday life and human civilization.

LIKE PARENT, LIKE CHILD

The masses are like animals. Choosing not to think or exercise their volition, they have allowed their behavioral responses to be programmed. But different from animals, these responses are not programmed at birth but are programmed by the political views of their parents. In the life of the masses, the seeds of a radical home environment flower into children dedicated to continuing the holy cause and storming the ramparts of civilization. The homes of the masses are ideological hothouses in which independent thinking has been stifled, moral integrity has been uprooted, and the weeds of intellectual lockstep and blind assent have been allowed to grow and develop and flourish unchecked. A catalogue of radical children raised by radical parents is a cross section of society which reaches across the political and intellectual establishments, descends through the lowest rungs of socioeconomic dregs and debris, and serves as a fearsome and terrifying sample and representation of the decline and fall of the West. Politically indoctrinated and mentally abused by their parents, these children hold Western liberal values in contempt; they agitate for socialism and reject capitalism; they condemn white people as racist, men as sexist, successful people as robber barons, and condemn the class of successful, white males as the essence and embodiment of evil; they believe that the categories of male and female have no fixed, biological determinants; they support the suppression of free speech on grounds of enforcing political correctness and condemn speech which supports liberal democratic rights, nonpartisan science and the rule of law as forms of hate speech which must be criminalized; they regard the theory of man made climate change as an unchallengeable fact the denial of which is on par with the denial of the Holocaust; they regard women who support capitalism as female impersonators and blacks who support capitalism as traitors to the race; and they condemn Donald Trump and all those who support him as fascist, racist, sexist and irredeemably deplorable enemies of the people who must be expelled from the country and placed on trial for crimes against humanity. The catalogue of radical children raised by radical parents is without beginning, middle or end and expands by the hour, by the minute and by the second. Listen to the voices of parents who raised their son with red values peddled as progressive. Who took their son door to door shilling for red political candidates. Who took him to rallies staged by the reds in protest against the capitalist system and the right of free people to work without joining labor unions. Who promoted state confiscation of private wealth to their son in the name of advancing civil rights and economic fairness. Who told their son to bloody conservatives and libertarians with locks and chains in the name of community defense, to shut down the defenders of individual liberty in the name of opposition to hate speech, and to destroy private property in the name of social justice. Who taught their son the harmful, bourgeois character of a liberal education and the necessity of receiving a political education in its place. Who taught their son how to transform university campuses into theaters of war and inquisitions of censorship in the name of diversity, inclusion and opposition to fascism. Who looked with pride and exultation at the leftist, radicalized son they had fashioned, at the monster they reared in their home, the activist who went out into the world and committed acts of violence to make a political point and made fear stalk the streets: "My son grew up in Madison and learned progressive values from my husband and me. When he was in elementary school, we took him door to door to canvass for John Kerry and Barack Obama. When he was in middle school, we took him to rallies to protest Scott Walker's union busting Act 10. In high school, he learned to make sophisticated arguments for his liberal positions on civil rights and economic fairness. My husband and I were proud of his political stance until he went off to college at a small liberal arts school in the Northwest two years ago. Since then, my son has become increasingly radicalized. He's been involved in protests aimed at shutting down right wing speakers on campus. He defends the destruction of private property to make a political point (although I don't think he's actually done so himself, at least not yet). He also defends Antifa, the left wing group that violently confronts right wing groups. I'm worried that his next step will be joining up with them." (We've Lost Our Son To The Radical Left, Isthmus, October 2, 2017). Listen to the voice of a child raised by radical parents. A child raised to condemn the right of the individual to live, work, flourish, succeed and aspire for himself. A child raised to reject the rule of reason and the evidence of the senses and worship a mystical, supernatural totality and brotherhood of the proletarian failures, malcontents and scum of the earth. A child raised to reject the precepts of civilized morality and the code of ethics embraced by free people and to hold as sacred acts of crime and violence committed in the name of an international people's movement, conspiracy and revolutionary society. A child raised to hate and calumniate individual rights and to feed the voices of liberty into the maws of collective, totalitarian action. A child raised to be an aggressive, unpleasant fighter and brawler for the reds and to vandalize homes and neighborhoods in the name of social change. A child raised to be stridently antiintellectual in his rejection of entrepreneurial, innovative and managerial labor and his worship of muscular, animal labor as the source of all wealth and production. Dyed the reddest of red in a culture of class struggle, class war, class hatred and class revolution, this is a child who sought to make history by detonating agitprop bombs in schools, offices, cities and states throughout the world and blowing up the heart and soul of human progress and development: "We were raised in opposition to--at best, in ambivalence to--a central tenet of American society: accumulation for private profit and personal upward mobility. We were raised to support a somewhat mystical and vast international brotherhood in a society which said primary allegiance was to biological family and no more. We were raised to value diversity in a sacred and ethically bound society. We were raised to value ideas in a society that is antiintellectual. We were raised to value collective action in a society that is desperately individualistic. (We knew that our family had already made history by creating the first revolutionary socialist society. We had impact far beyond our small numbers if we acted together). We were raised as fighters in a passive society. (Born into a culture of struggle, our definition of being alive, adult, whole, is linked to fighting for social change)." (Taking Over The Family Business by Linn Shapiro, in Growing Up In The Communist Left by Judy Kaplan and Linn Shapiro). The childhood of the forty fifth president of the United States, Barack Obama, offers a case study of the impact of red child rearing upon the political commitments of adulthood. Under instructions from his parents, Obama when a boy attended Sunday school at the First Unitarian Church of Honolulu. This church had served as a refuge and sanctuary for the Students for a Democratic Society, a Marxist activist organization whose leader when Obama attended the church was Bill Ayers, who would later organize the Weathermen, a Marxist terror organization. Founded in 1959, the SDS sought to overthrow the United States government and American liberal democratic institutions, transform American society in the image of a red totalitarian tyranny, and bring about the victory of communism in Vietnam. The leadership of the SDS was comprised of red diaper babies, children of parents who had been members of the Communist Party or communist activists in the 1930s. The masses have no real mental life in the sense of having the capacity to acquire and develop knowledge and skills on the basis of rational study and experience. Instead, their minds are haunted by the apparitions of their parents and have been rendered bankrupt and impoverished in the unthinking stasis of mechanical repetition and automatic recitation. Fearful of rational disputation and suppressing the impulse to require proof for belief, the masses were socialized, instructed and acculturated from their earliest childhood days to reproduce the values and ideals of their parents and disseminate them throughout society. Celebrated as the highest and most effective form of education of the young, the process of red child rearing, the process of recruitment and induction into a world of social mysticism, religious proselytizing and blind subservience to the people's party line, has brought forth a generation of torch bearers igniting the pyres of the West.

A COMMITTEE INVESTIGATES AMERICA

The twentieth century saw the onset of an age of collectivism, an age which has endured up to the present day, and composed the final, fearsome, terrifying chapter in the story of Western civilization. All civilizations in a state of decline have endured a similar final age and seen their values and ideals cherishing freedom and liberty ignominiously swept by the masses into the dustbin of history. It happened during the decline of the Classical world when the Roman philosophy of law, which was a philosophy of reason and human rights, fell under attack by caesars and emperors leading their rampaging mobs of Christians,

Germans, dole seekers, welfare parasites, and addicts of hedonism scaling peaks of euphoria in roiling narcotic clouds of bread and circuses. The recognition of the rights, freedoms, dignity and worth of the individual as a rationally flourishing being, a recognition which formed the basis of the Age of Enlightenment, was consigned to the black hole of cultural nonexistence in the twentieth century as the politics of the masses came to the fore and the intrinsic, defining traits of the masses, the traits of hatred, envy, frustration, covetousness, indolence, purposelessness, nonfunctionality, insecurity and irrationality, were allowed for the first time in one thousand year history of the Germanic West to form the basis of states, societies, governments and political systems. In the twentieth century, mass movements finally seized the reins of power and established the dominance of totalitarian dictatorships and ideologies over the activities and the organizations of man. The greatest tragedy of all in the global spread of socialism occurred in America when the statue of liberty, standing at the entrance to New York Harbor, a statue whose draped figure carries a book of freedom's laws in her left hand and holds aloft a torch blazing with freedom's fire in her right hand, became submerged, to the horror and fright of civilized people throughout the world, in pools of totalitarian darkness and ceased to inspire and fill with hope those who were not free. In the late 1930s, a group of patriotic, loyal, law abiding Americans stood athwart the rising tide of red revolution sweeping the nation and launched an investigation, an inquiry, a probe and a counterattack. In the face of implacable opposition coming from the nation's political establishment, reaching up to the highest levels of government and voiced by President Franklin Roosevelt himself, this countermovement of concerned Americans created in 1938 the House Committee on UnAmerican Activities. Over the ensuing decades, this committee would issue reports on subversive activities engaged in by private citizens, public employees and organizations with totalitarian connections which revealed in clear, stark and unequivocal terms the moral rot and decay which had eaten away at the soul of the nation and left a gaping hole of conspiracy and criminality in its place. In 1947, the committee held hearings which exposed communist influence in the nation's motion picture industry. Its investigations revealed the existence of a Hollywood dominated from its rank and file to its power structure by those who sought to overthrow American constitutional government or who sympathized with those who did, and the figures it named comprised a veritable who's who of the actors, directors, screenwriters and radio commentators active in the industry. The list included Alvah Bessie, Herbert Biberman, Lester Cole, Edward Dmytryk, Ring Lardner, John Howard Lawson, Albert Maltz, Samuel Ornitz, Adrian Scott, Dalton Trumbo, Pete Seeger, Larry Parks, Sterling Hayden, Danny Kaye, Humphrey Bogart, Lauren Bacall, James Cagney, Katharine Hepburn, Melvyn Douglas, Frederic March, Jean Muir and Lionel Stander. The committee heard testimony from film studio executives that Hollywood was a factory of red propaganda and that proSoviet films such as Mission to Moscow, The North Star and Song Of Russia were produced at the request of President Franklin Roosevelt. Singing the songs of radical politics, class agitation, socialist sacrifice and totalitarian enslavement, Pete Seeger was connected to a plethora of red organizations throughout the nation. They were exposed by the committee as committed in word and deed to the destruction of the liberal democratic order and the establishment of a Soviet style dictatorship. Marching under the banners of youth, democracy, law, racial equality, freedom from discrimination, freedom of speech, constitutional government, the arts and sciences, and international peace, security and understanding, these organizations had one aim and one aim alone: the mobilization of the masses for class war, violence in the streets, and the communist domination and subversion of society. The parenthetical quotations are committee designations: "Seeger has been affiliated—as an entertainer, member, sponsor, instructor, or contributor—with the American Peace Mobilization ('subversive and communist'); American Youth Congress ('subversive and communist'); the Communist Party; American Youth for Democracy ('subversive and communist'); the Council on African Affairs ('subversive and communist'); the American Committee for Yugoslav Relief ('subversive and communist'); the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship ('subversive and communist'—'specializing in proSoviet propaganda'); the Civil Rights Congress ('subversive and Communist'); the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born Americans ('subversive and Communist'—'one of the oldest auxiliaries of the Communist Party in the United States'—under the 'complete domination' of the Communist Party); the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy ('communist'); the National Council of the Arts, Sciences and Professions ('a communist front used to appeal to special occupational groups'); the Nature Friends of America ('subversive and communist'); the Jefferson School of Social Science ('adjunct of the Communist Party"); the Metropolitan Music School ('controlled by communists'); Veterans Against Discrimination of Civil Rights Congress ('subversive and communist'); New Masses ('communist periodical'); Daily World ('communist publication'); the Labor Youth League ('communist organization'); California Labor School ('a subversive and communist organization'); the National Lawyers Guild ('the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions'); Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade ('subversive and communist'); the Committee for the First Amendment ('Communist front'); the American Peace Crusade ('communist front'); the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee ('communist front'—'subversive'); and, the National Committee to Abolish the House UnAmerican Activities Committee ('to lead and direct the Communist Party's Operation Abolition campaign'). " (Biographical Dictionary Of The Left by Francis Gannon). In 1948, the committee held hearings which established that Alger Hiss, a government lawyer and senior State Department official, was a communist espionage agent. Whittaker Chambers, a former Communist Party member, produced documents proving that both he and Hiss had committed espionage. Chambers provided the committee with five rolls of 35 mm microfilm which had been given to him by Hiss in 1938. These images included those of classified State Department documents which had been typed on Hiss' own typewriter. In testimony before the committee, Chambers denounced Hiss as a communist: "HISS. Did you ever go under the name of George Crosley? CHAMBERS. Not to my knowledge. HISS. Did you ever sublet an apartment on Twenty Ninth Street from me? CHAMBERS. No; I did not. HISS. You did not? CHAMBERS. No. HISS. Did you ever spend any time with your wife and child in an apartment on Twenty Ninth Street in Washington when I was not there because I and my family were living on P Street? CHAMBERS. I most certainly did. HISS. You did or did not? CHAMBERS. I did. HISS. Would you tell me how you reconcile your negative answers with this affirmative answer? CHAMBERS. Very easily, Alger. I was a communist and you were a communist." (Hearing of August 17, 1948). In 1995, the United States government made public the existence of the Venona Project, which had decrypted thousands of cables sent between 1940 to 1948 to the NKVD by its American operatives. Cable number 1822, sent March 1945 by the Soviets' Washington station chief to Moscow, mentions a Soviet spy code named Ales, who was working with a group of "neighbors" or members of other Soviet intelligence agencies. The cable states that Ales had attended the February 1945 Yalta conference and then traveled to Moscow. This is precisely what Hiss did. The FBI determined that Ales was in fact Hiss. The 1950s saw an accelerated decline of America's moral vigor and an accelerated radicalization of the nation's masses. The committee fell under sustained bombardment and attack by a rising tide of red activists. After exposing in the 1960s the influence of Marxist organizations such as the Progressive Labor Party and the Worker Student Alliance on college campuses and the antiwar movement, the committee was forced to run for cover by violent rioters and demonstrators waving Vietcong flags and carrying out Operation Abolition, the communist campaign to shut down the committee. In 1969, in a vain attempt to shield itself from the onslaught, it changed its name to the Internal Security Committee. But the attacks continued unabated, popular support for it vanished, and in 1975, it was finally run out of town. When it ceased operations, its files and staff, the documents and investigators of a nation guilty of treason, were buried in the basements of Congress and sent down the memory hole of a society which was no longer free.

THE RED PROPAGANDA TOWER ATOP THE WORLD

In the early part of the twentieth century, four film studios in Europe and America switched on the silver screen and raised the curtain on a new medium and a new age. America's Biograph Company, Germany's Universum Film Aktiengesellschaft, Sweden's Svensk Filmindustri and France's Pathe Brothers inaugurated the film production and exhibition industry but did much more than this. They inaugurated a mass media revolution, a global audiovisual communications industry, whose tentacles streaming out from the fields of radio, television, motion pictures and the Internet would one hundred years later, in the twenty first century, reach into every home, office, school, nook and cranny in society and establish the permanent influence and control of the masses' own brand of religion and ideology. This is the religion of the reds, the religion of social mysticism and the submergence of the self within the oceanic waves of a state leviathan, and transmitted from screens, sets, terminals and telephones, it would disseminate the words, images and digital pages telling a fearsome and terrifying story, a story of the decline and fall of the West. Since the early decades of the twentieth century, a nonstop barrage of red propaganda has flowed out like raw sewage from the channels of mass communication, a concentrated outpouring which has not abated for a moment, and has steadily increased in force and intensity, until reaching earsplitting decibels in the present day, pulverizing the institutions of freedom and liberty, and leaving nothing behind but the dust and powder of modernity's monuments to progress and civilization. Look at the reds at work in the film industry and see how they dirty the citadels of decent, law abiding, patriotic societies. How they infiltrate guilds, unions, and writers', directors' and producers' offices and pack them with subversives and sympathizers in the service of Marxism. How they sully the exhibitions of wholesome entertainment with the sinister currents of class politics and the dark streams of proSoviet advertising. How they peddle Stalinist propaganda as the supreme statement of progressive, emancipatory politics. How they transform legitimate film studios promoting moral health and well being into companies churning out celluloid strips flaming and combusting with hatred of liberty and of those who, by work and effort, succeed and flourish under it. How they unite in bonds of brotherhood with the haters of the West throughout the world and proclaim undying comradeship with Islam. How they aid and abet networks of fear and terror by depicting them as benign and benevolent. How they work together with councils of political correctness to ensure that the enemies of liberal democracy are never exposed, offended, challenged or criticized. In the 1940s, Hollywood's conspirators, plotters and propagandists against America were exposed like sewer rats by the probing lights of congressional committees dedicated to defending the cause of freedom. The investigations uncovered a war being conducted against the world of advanced human development by the supporters of a totalitarian movement. It is a war which has continued without respite or surcease by the gender, race, class and Islamist agitators of the present day: "The Ryskind book, Hollywood Traitors, documents how the much maligned House Committee on UnAmerican Activities, known as HUAC, uncovered dramatic communist infiltration of Hollywood and forced the studios to clean house. Ryskind calls HUAC's investigation of Hollywood in 1947 and 1950 'one of the most effective, albeit controversial, probes ever carried out by any committee of Congress.' He adds, 'HUAC had revealed that Hollywood was packed with communists and fellow travelers, that the guilds and the unions had been heavily penetrated, and that wartime films, at least, had been saturated with Stalinist propaganda. Red writers were an elite and powerful group in Hollywood—many of them working for major studios.' Another issue worth investigating is how Hollywood has also come under the influence of radical Islam. For example, the 2002 film, The Sum of All Fears, which was the movie version of the Tom Clancy book of the same name, replaced the Arab terrorist villains with neonazis so as not to offend the Council on American Islamic Relations (CAIR), a Muslim Brotherhood affiliate. The Fox network responded to complaints about its popular series 24 depicting Muslims in America secretly plotting terrorism by running public service announcements from CAIR portraying American Muslims as moderate and peaceful " (America's Enemies In Hollywood Then And Now by Cliff Kincaid). Look at the reds at work in the radio and television industry and see how they have filled a fever swamp swirling with collectivist lockstep and antiAmerican propaganda. How they have condemned the defenders of freedom, capitalism and the rule of law as racist, sexist, homophobic and a mortal threat to the working class. How they define intellectual balance and diversity in broadcasting as embracing the voices of the left and the far left and embracing nobody else. How they subject those who champion a world of rectitude, responsibility, respectability and sound moral character to unwavering volleys of mockery, scorn, disrespect and abuse. Peddling political pornography which advocates violence, harassment, maiming and revenge against conservatives, libertarians, and successful, white males, the editors, correspondents, journalists, presenters, anchors and analysts of the radio and television media establishment have set a new low in programming. From their public and private studios and transmitters, they have sent out what the masses clamor to see and hear. Sponsored by taxpayers and by advertisers, the public and private corporations of the radio and television industry have put on the air a frightening disease of the soul, a disease named hatred, bias, partisanship and prejudice, and this has signaled the collapse and implosion of the broadcasting industry: "This is a golden opportunity for President Donald Trump to drain the elitist media swamps and inject true intellectual diversity in the newsrooms of NPR and PBS. Liberal bias at these Beltway institutions is notorious—from NPR legal analyst Nina Totenberg wishing AIDS upon Senator Jesse Helms and his grandchildren as 'retributive justice,' to Sesame Street's Oscar the Grouch mocking Fox News on PBS, to top NPR executives slamming the Tea Party movement as 'scary' and 'racist' to the undercover journalists of Project Veritas. If pushover Republicans can't bring themselves to fully defund NPR and PBS, can't they at least step up and advocate for hosts and editors who keep their hands to themselves and refrain from insulting the people in flyover country who keep their rackets afloat? What better time, in the wake of liberal hypocrisy and sexual harassment self implosions, to bring real balance to government sponsored programming? So far, the moment is being squandered. The replacements announced for Charlie Rose on PBS are BBC correspondent Katty Kay and former CNN anchor Christiane Amanpour. That's right. Two liberal British female journalists. Come on, Corporation for Public Broadcasting. Do better, D.C. All things considered, we could use a little more America First and a little less globaloney and groupthink from NPR and PBS. I can think of a conservative female journalist or twelve up to the task." (It's Time For Trump To Rein In Leftist Bias At NPR and PBS by Michelle Malkin). Look at the reds at work in the Internet and see how they have silenced, censored, demonetized, filtered out and restricted access to the voices of nonpartisan truth and individual liberty. Commanded, organized and provided with its sole content by the totalitarians in control of the culture, the global digital network of networks, the global notional environment which has penetrated all matter and leaped over all space, is a negative, inverted, upside down antiuniverse. It is an intellectual netherworld of misinformation, miscommunication, slander and deceit placed in the service of those who are at war with and seek to murder and destroy the world of individual rights, civil liberties, constitutional democracy and free enterprise given to man by the Age of Enlightenment: "YouTube has demonetized videos from conservatives while leaving similar videos up for members of the left. Prager University has watched innocuous videos titled Why America Must Lead, The Ten Commandments: Do Not Murder, and Why Did America Fight The Korean War? demonetized (i.e. barred from accepting advertisements) at YouTube's hands. Prager's lawyer explains, 'Google and YouTube use restricted mode filtering not to protect younger or sensitive viewers from inappropriate video content, but as a political gag mechanism to silence PragerU.' " (Viewpoint Discrimination With Algorithms by Ben Shapiro). For the past one hundred years, a mass communications tower has sat atop the world and transmitted signals, waves and pulses of red propaganda. Put into place by the motion picture and telecommunications industries, it has transmitted the electricity of animus toward the institutions of free people, toward a world without gender, race or class distinctions, and toward a world which guarantees equal opportunity to all and preferential treatment to none. Joining hands with the enemies of freedom throughout the world, the totalitarians generating the audiovisual currents which have blanketed the earth have sent forth in wide screen, high definition, living color, from microphones broadcasting with crystal, noiseless clarity, and from Internet sites transmitting at the speed of light, the final message of a deceased culture, a message proclaiming the death of Western, liberal man.

THE FAUSTIAN PERVERSION OF PROPERTY

One thousand years ago, a ghostly black radiance streamed out from the forests of Northern Europe and a new culture was born. This was not a culture born of noonday light but a culture born of total darkness, the darkness of pure subjectivity and an unbridled will. Opposed as day is opposed to night to the Classical, Apollonian culture of the Greeks and Romans, the new culture of the West created a religion of romanticism and a legend of Faust as its defining symbols and expressions. Necromancer, sorcerer, soothsayer and student of diabolical studies, Doctor Faustus sold his soul to the Devil, his sense of reason and reality, in exchange for infinite consciousness and will power. Faust is the preeminent figure in which our Western, Germanic, romanticist culture recognizes its mind and soul, and this figure symbolizes the rule of a dynamic will which has placed the West in a class apart from every other culture in the history of mankind. Among the foremost expressions of subjectivity which our Faustian culture has brought forth is its conception of property. As objectively and rationally understood, and understood in Classical culture, property is a physical possession which belongs to somebody. Property is inherently tangible and the right to property is the right to the use, disposal and ownership of a physical, observable, actually existing something. From the infinite, indeterminate fields of pure subjectivity, the hand of Faust has conjured up a notion of intangible property which has forced sane people into mental contortions trying to understand it. In the Faustian antiuniverse of intellectual property, mental items which no civilized community in the history of mankind has ever deemed to be subject to property claims have been stamped with the marks of title deed. In the Western universe of phantom goods, words can be copyrighted, inventions can be patented, signs, designs and expressions which identify a product or company can be trademarked, and secret devices or techniques used by companies in manufacturing their products can be owned. While mentally sound and well adjusted people understand that what exists inside the mind cannot be owned or possessed because it lacks real, substantial, physical existence, the voices of the Faustian West have in mystical, voodoo, witch doctor fashion invested the creations of the mind with the status of existing things, and have placed tangible, physical objects and intangible, intellectual objects on the same level of ownability. Listen to the advocates of intellectual property rights and see how they have brought the world of Germanic mythology, the world of arbitrary, indeterminate, wraithlike entities, the world of kobolds, goblins, elves and sprites, into the precincts and law books of modern civilization. Only the names have changed; the supernaturalism has remained the same; and the new creatures travel through space under the names of books, articles, novels, poems, plays, newspapers, advertisements, computer programs, databases, films, musical compositions, choreography, paintings, drawings, photographs, sculpture, architecture, maps and technical drawings. There is no ontological difference between a goblin and a text; both are products of pure consciousness and consist in pure space and pure expanse without place or physicality of any kind; and both disappear into absolute unreality when considered next to that which alone is real: material property: "Copyright laws grant authors, artists and other creators protection for their literary and artistic creations. A closely associated field is related rights or rights related to copyright. The beneficiaries of related rights are: performers (such as actors and musicians) in their performances; producers of phonograms (for example, compact discs) in their sound recordings; and broadcasting organizations in their radio and television programs. Works covered by copyright include, but are not limited to: novels, poems, plays, reference works, newspapers, advertisements, computer programs, databases, films, musical compositions, choreography, paintings, drawings, photographs, sculpture, architecture, maps and technical drawings." (World Intellectual Property Organization). Listen to the advocates of intellectual property rights and see how they have created a spectral world of mental constructs and made its rights holders the lords and masters of this universe and of the real universe around us. See how they have granted to rights holders the power to prohibit or restrict the reproduction, recording, communication, performance, translation, distribution, dissemination and broadcasting of books, articles, films and songs. See how they have granted to rights holders the power to exact payment for every copy or performance of their work anywhere in the world. Totalitarian dictators in control of the flow of ideas, words and information whose highway tolls extend into every city, state, home, office and school in the world, and whose designated heirs and successors rule over mankind for all eternity: such are the monsters fashioned by the hand of Faust in the reason defying, reality rejecting, sanity spurning culture of the West: "What rights do copyright and related rights provide? The creators of works protected by copyright, and their heirs and successors, have certain basic rights under copyright law. They hold the exclusive right to use or authorize others to use the work on agreed terms. The right holder(s) of a work can authorize or prohibit: its reproduction in all forms, including print form and sound recording; its public performance and communication to the public; its broadcasting; its translation into other languages; and its adaptation, such as from a novel to a screenplay for a film. Similar rights of, among others, fixation (recording) and reproduction are granted under related rights. Many types of works protected under the laws of copyright and related rights require mass distribution, communication and financial investment for their successful dissemination (for example, publications, sound recordings and films). Hence, creators often transfer these rights to companies better able to develop and market the works, in return for compensation in the form of payments and/or royalties (compensation based on a percentage of revenues generated by the work). The economic rights relating to copyright are of limited duration—as provided for in the relevant WIPO treaties—beginning with the creation and fixation of the work, and lasting for not less than 50 years after the creator's death. National laws may establish longer terms of protection. This term of protection enables both creators and their heirs and successors to benefit financially for a reasonable period of time. Related rights enjoy shorter terms, normally fifty years after the performance, recording or broadcast has taken place. Copyright and the protection of performers also include moral rights, meaning the right to claim authorship of a work, and the right to oppose changes to the work that could harm the creator's reputation." (World Intellectual Property Organization). Listen to the advocates of intellectual property and see how they have brought forth a negative universe consisting of nonbodily forms called inventions, processes, innovations, methods, techniques and solutions. See how they have conferred upon inventors an authority, license, right and title which makes them owners of these ideas with the power to exclude others from building inventions based upon them. See how they have draped inventors in the imperial robes of masters and controllers of human creativity and arbiters and gatekeepers of the progress of mankind: "A patent is an exclusive right granted for an invention—a product or process that provides a new way of doing something, or that offers a new technical solution to a problem. A patent provides patent owners with protection for their inventions. Protection is granted for a limited period, generally twenty years." (World Intellectual Property Organization). The ancient Germanic religion projected a universe of irrational entities, a universe populated by the spirits of evil, formlessness, whim, caprice and darkness, and by plains, fields, rivers, waters, trees, halls and palaces unbounded by physical location and reaching and expanding into unfathomable vastness and into infinity. This was a universe fashioned by a will unrestrained by reason or common sense, by a will feeding at the deranged banquet of pure subjectivity, and by a will blazing with the fires of a disordered romanticism. This was a universe at which Faust gazed mesmerized and when he gazed, he saw himself. Centuries after the birth of this universe, its Ymirs, Wodens, Thors, Balders, Freyjas, Valkyries, Valhallas, Asgards and Yggdrasils were reincarnated, renamed and repackaged in a notional environment and called ideas, information, inventions, innovations, texts, programs, files, films, songs, techniques, processes, operations, images, designs, logos, emblems and marks. Like the Germanic gods and places of old in the battle of Ragnarok and Gotterdammerung, these shadowy abstractions christened intellectual property, these symptoms of an insane philosophy of pure consciousness, are doomed to extinction. In the final doom approaching in the present day, they will take the West and the world down with them.

REPORT FROM THE GRIM REAPER

In a land and dimension which know only darkness and night, a black cloaked figure has sat down to write a report on the state of the West in the twenty first century, before he comes to claim the culture and reduce it to dust and ash. In his report, he has described the ascendancy of a satanic, genocidal religion which has drawn into its ranks the monsters and psychopaths of the world and spread a wave of death and destruction without parallel in the history of mankind. This is the religion of Marxism and its race and gender offshoots and derivatives and it has found its guidance and inspiration in the forces of evil which rule the souls of those who are maladjusted, malcontented, and mentally unwell and unbalanced. This black cloaked figure has described the Marxist metaphysics of materialism, the metaphysics which states that mind and consciousness are bourgeois illusions which have no basis in reality, and that the source of all wealth and production resides in mindless, animal, muscular labor. He has described how this metaphysics has granted a license to those who harbor mass murder in their hearts. It has enabled them to go out and place bullseyes on the class of entrepreneurs, inventors, executives, industrialists, scientists, engineers, technologists, and all those who work with their mind and knowledge, and steal from them, kill them and destroy them as exploiters, oppressors and parasites of the muscular, laboring, proletarian working class. He has described the neoMarxist race haters who have proclaimed that the white race is the source of all the evils and ills which beset the world, being the originators and promoters of the system of freedom, capitalism and liberal democracy which spell racism against blacks, and the only way to abolish this racism is through the destruction of liberal democracy and the extermination of whites. He has described the neoMarxist feminists who have proclaimed that all sex with men constitutes rape, that men must be eradicated from the face of the earth after they are first sent to jail on the basis of false sexual assault charges supported by nothing more than an accusation or a series of accusations, and that the only way to abolish the system of patriarchy is through the extermination of men. He has described the neoMarxist environmentalists who have proclaimed that modern civilization is the source of greenhouse gas emissions which are incinerating the planet and the only way to avoid global catastrophe is to prohibit all forms of industry and technology and send the clock of history spinning backward into the primordial jungles and forests and make the human race disappear from the face of the earth. He has described the neoMarxist advocates of open borders, illegal alien invasion, multiculturalist policies and Islamist terror networks who have proclaimed that these are necessary in order to bring about the destruction of the preeminent enemy of downtrodden and the oppressed, Western liberal civilization, and the return of mankind to the Dark Ages of ignorance and fear. He has described the neoMarxist public health doctors who have proclaimed that global pandemics such as covid 19 are a boon to mankind because they increase government control over people's lives, take away people's freedoms and liberties from them, shut down the modern Western world, bring about global economic collapse, and destroy the progress, wealth, careers and lives of every man, woman and child. He has transcribed the voices of Marxist class haters who have advocated mass murder in the name of the struggle of the proletariat. Who have sought to foment a civil war in every nation in the world, a war between those who are righteous and virtuous who earn their living by dint of their efforts and skills, and the criminals and miscreants who seek to seize and plunder their wealth. The Marxists have taken the side of the criminals and unfurled the banners of violent overthrow, bloody revolution, and the destruction of human civilization: "Though not in substance, yet in form, the struggle of the proletariat with the bourgeoisie is at first a national struggle. The proletariat of each country must, of course, first of all settle matters with its own bourgeoisie. In depicting the most general phases of the development of the proletariat, we traced the more or less veiled civil war, raging within existing society, up to the point where that war breaks out into open revolution, and where the violent overthrow of the bourgeoisie lays the foundation for the sway of the proletariat." (The Communist Manifesto by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels). The black cloaked figure has transcribed the voices of the neoMarxist race haters who have set forth a program of genocide. Rejecting the cardinal liberal tenet that individuals must be treated as individuals and not as members of races, the new race haters have condemned whites as evil and bestial and advocated their immediate elimination, cancellation, eradication and expulsion from the human race: "A little more disturbing is what you might call eliminationist rhetoric—language that wishes an entire race could be wiped off the face of the earth: '#cancelwhitepeople.' Or: 'White people have stopped breeding. you'll all go extinct soon. that was my plan all along.' One simple rule I have about describing groups of human beings is that I try not to use a term that equates them with animals. Sarah Jeong apparently has no problem doing so. Speaking of animals, here's another gem: 'Dumbass fucking white people marking up the internet with their opinions like dogs pissing on fire hydrants.' " (When Racism Is Fit To Print by Andrew Sullivan). He has transcribed the voices of the neoMarxist misandrists who exalt the pleasure and excitement of killing and destroying men. Who condemn men as psychologically and emotionally deficient, as accidents, diseases, abortions, monsters and freaks of nature, and demand their immediate liquidation along with the modern, capitalist civilization they represent: "Life in this society being, at best, an utter bore and no aspect of society being at all relevant to women, there remains to civic minded, responsible, thrill seeking females only to overthrow the government, eliminate the money system, institute complete automation and destroy the male sex. It is now technically feasible to reproduce without the aid of males (or, for that matter, females) and to produce only females. We must begin immediately to do so. Retaining the male has not even the dubious purpose of reproduction. The male is a biological accident: the Y (male) gene is an incomplete X (female) gene, that is, it has an incomplete set of chromosomes. In other words, the male is an incomplete female, a walking abortion, aborted at the gene stage. To be male is to be deficient, emotionally limited; maleness is a deficiency disease and males are emotional cripples." (The SCUM Manifesto [Society For The Cutting Up Of Men] by Valerie Solanas). He has transcribed the voices of the neoMarxist environmentalists who have fabricated computer models predicting global doomsday at the hands of greenhouse gases. Who have written academic papers discussing calamitous feedbacks, vicious cycles, negative spirals, irrefutable forcing effects, and mankind's existential need to reduce carbon emissions to zero and destroy every form and lineament of modern industrial civilization: "For years the Warmists have been telling us that they're so sure of their computer models that they know, they just know, that CO2 has a forcing effect on global temperatures and that combined with positive feedbacks this is going to cause catastrophic warming. And now they're saying, without a blush, 'Well all right, some of those feedbacks might actually be negative and completely cancel out the terrifying thing we were telling you to worry about. But don't stop worrying, for God's sake. Whatever is happening is still worrying, very worrying. And if you give us a bit more time we'll come up with a paper explaining just why it's worrying.' " (There Has Been No Global Warming Since 1998 by James Delingpole). He has transcribed the voices of the neoMarxist multiculturalists who have rejected the fundamental liberal tenet that there exists a common, rational human essence uniting all people. Who have proclaimed that there exist as many different species of humanity as there exist races and ethnicities and that a progressive society is one which maintains a policy of open borders, unrestricted immigration and nonassimilation for the worthless, contemptible, layers of filth which have appeared at its gates: "As a political process, however, multiculturalism means something very different. It describes a set of policies, the aim of which is to manage diversity by putting people into ethnic boxes, defining individual needs and rights by virtue of the boxes into which people are put, and using those boxes to shape public policy. It is a case, not for open borders and minds, but for the policing of borders, whether physical, cultural or imaginative." (Multiculturalism Undermines Diversity by Kenan Malik). He has transcribed the voices of the neoMarxist public health doctors who have proclaimed that the global covid 19 pandemic offers a golden opportunity for spreading a new people's pandemic of state tyranny and totalitarian rule. Who have proclaimed that a progressive society is a communist society, a society in which the powers of a governmental oligarchy have increased to infinity, the sphere of individual liberty has contracted to zero, and the mobs have clamored on the streets, on the squares and on the front pages of newspapers for the permanent cessation of life as civilized people have known and cherished it for thousands of years: "Even the New York Times, in a front page story—above the fold—has recognized the obvious. Pandemic Tempts Leaders To Seize Sweeping Powers, reads the headline, raising the question of whether many of the increased powers of government, and the corresponding contraction of liberty, will emerge as permanent features of life around the globe. It would be difficult for, say, Communist China's totalitarian oligarchs to have more power than they have now, but there is an increased tolerance for turning such power over to governments around the world, even in nations that are historically freer, such as Great Britain and the United States." (Governments Increase Power During Pandemic; Will This Be Permanent? By Steve Byas). The black cloaked figure has completed his report on the decline and fall of the West. He stands at the sides of roads and highways, at the entrances to homes, schools and offices, and at the gates to neighborhoods, cities and states. The inhabitants will soon let him and let him ride them to their doom.

A PANDEMIC OF TYRANNY

A citizen on the street is stopped by the police and required to show his authorization to be outside his home. Every time he leaves his home, he has to complete a form stating his reason to be outside, and if the reason is not deemed to be a valid one, he will be fined or jailed or both. Police are on twenty four hour patrol in every street and neighborhood on the lookout for people who are outside in contravention of the national lockdown order. This is not a scene from Soviet Russia nor is it a disordered dream streaming out of the wild depths of an insane person. This is a scene from France in the year 2020 and it can be replicated in every city, state and region on the planet. After a century of development under the pressure and agitation of the masses, a development which has seen deprivations of economic liberty from wages and hours regulations to social charges on employers to antidiscrimination laws to health insurance mandates, and seen the abolition of due process rights in sexual assault cases leading to convictions on the basis of an accusation or series of accusations, the forces of statism have reached a culminating point in the current covid 19 crisis, and widened their net of governmental control to encompass every aspect of personal behavior. The masses in the present day have issued a program and manifesto for the establishment of totalitarian government under the banners of a national health emergency. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has granted to its executive the power to rule by decree and imprison people who speak out against the government's defensive measures to halt the spread of covid 19. They have proclaimed that a progressive government is one which recognizes that the end justifies the means and that individual rights are expendable for the sake of maintaining and securing public health. They have proclaimed that a progressive government is one which has placed a nation under lockdown, tracked people's mobile phones, and stamped people's hands with indelible ink as methods of monitoring violations of public health orders. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has authorized the police to beat up people who are outside their homes without official permission. They have proclaimed that the only way to control a global outbreak of disease is through the global curtailment of civil liberties and the establishment of a global police state under the command of public health ministers. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which represses human rights on a permanent basis as a public health measure to ensure that global pandemics never occur. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has banned all public gatherings, shut down all schools and offices, and quarantined fundamental freedoms in order to suppress the spread of contagious diseases. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which freedom of speech is not absolute but subject to regulations which protect the public from the expression of politically incorrect views which challenge the morality of depriving people of their civil liberties in the name of public health. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which recognizes the right and the duty of the state to place human rights under permanent lockdown in order to safeguard the people against viral enemies which lurk in every corner of the planet. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose powers over the individual are unlimited and unaccountable so that the present and future generations may be safely ferried across the treacherous rivers of health crises and disease contagions. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a communist dictatorship which has the power to force the closure of businesses whenever a viral disease attacks. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which justifies governmental overreach and tramples upon the rights of individuals in the name of combating the molecular universe of coronaviruses. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has smashed the foundations of a constitutional republic and ordered every individual into a state of isolation and restricted access in the name of a national health emergency. They have proclaimed that the rights of the individual to life, liberty and property are granted by the community and can be revoked by the community and never given back to the individual if universal enslavement conduces to public health, safety, welfare and security. They have proclaimed that governments are instituted among the people in order to protect their health and welfare and not their rights and freedoms, and derive their powers from the mystical religion of the collective good and not the rational metaphysics of separate individuals. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which every level of government has been mobilized to invade private spheres of existence in the name of medical exigencies and tolerates no pushback or resistance from the people. They have proclaimed that there is no such thing as an unconstitutional order given by the government to stop disease pandemics because in times of crisis and emergency, the rule of law vanishes into meaninglessness and irrelevance and the power of the mob reigns supreme. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a religious society whose shrines are woven from the fabric of collective rights, and has placed a death mask over the freedom and dignity of the individual and sent it before firing squads marked Public Health And Social Responsibility. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose authorities rule without checks, balances or constitutional restraints of any kind in their quest to ensure the health, hygiene and prevention of disease among the general population. Listen to the voices of the new totalitarians who have spread a new type of virus into the world. It is a virus of fear, control, prohibition, shut down and unconstitutional action. It is a virus which has prevented people from going about their daily business and living their lives in freedom and placed them into a special people's church. This is a church whose holy faith resides in the state and community, whose sacred services worship an idol called social responsibility, and whose high priests are public health commissioners who have reduced every member of the congregation to the level of a passive prisoner under permanent home confinement: "While New Jersey is now facing a lawsuit for violating the Second Amendment, New York City mayor Bill de Blasio appears bent on trampling the first one by threatening to shut down churches and other worship houses permanently. Speaking at his daily press briefing Friday, the Big Apple mayor says it can be a consequence of his government's current ban on gatherings of more than ten people, a measure designed to combat the Wuhan virus's spread. Yet de Blasio 'still hasn't shut down the public parks in New York City, despite multiple complaints from the health officials,' points out Hot Air. Note here that the free exercise (meaning, action) of religion is guaranteed by the Constitution; a right to recreate in public parks is not. De Blasio, who as recently as earlier this month was telling NYC dwellers to go about their business normally (and was echoed by his health commissioner), now has gone to the other extreme. Mentioning Friday that most worship houses have temporarily stopped holding services, the mayor said, 'No—no faith tradition endorses anything that endangers the members of that faith.' (Corona To Communism? NYC Mayor Threatens to PERMANENTLY Shut Down Churches by Selwyn Duke). Before the onrushing, enveloping, engulfing tides of darkness sweeping over a dying culture, a father sat down with his son in a basement shelter and told him a story about the progress of tyranny at the hands of the mob. "First they expanded government power in the name of Progressivism, and nobody spoke out. Then they expanded government power in the name of a New Deal, and nobody spoke out. Then they expanded government power in the name of a Fair Deal, and nobody spoke out. Then they expanded government power in the name of a New Frontier, and nobody spoke out. Then they expanded government power in the name of nondiscrimination, and nobody spoke out. Then they expanded government power in the name of identity politics, the politics of gender, race and class, and nobody spoke out. Then they expanded government power in the name of Compassionate Conservatism, and nobody spoke out. Then they expanded government power in the name of Hope and Change and something bigger and greater than the self, and nobody spoke out. Then they expanded government power in the name of diversity and inclusion, and nobody spoke out. Now they have expanded government power in the name of a global health emergency and have abolished freedom of speech, movement, association, work and enterprise, and nobody has spoken out, because there is nobody left to speak out." Thus spoke a father to his son as the lights of civilization die away.

SPARTACUS AND THE REDS IN ANCIENT ROME

Communism has been a plague on all civilizations throughout history and the response to it has served as a barometer of a civilization's state of health and well being. A civilization in the springtime of its existence resolutely beats back and defeats this movement of the morally inferior, the disordered, the frustrated and the failures, while a civilization in the wintertime of its existence, in a state of decline and fall, opens up its gates to communism and lets its rabble settle within its midst. In the springtime of the West, during the Age of Enlightenment in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, communism was seen as regressive, criminal ideology and was held in contempt by philosophers and statesmen, by the Lockes, Jeffersons, Gibbons and Diderots, who championed a world of reason and science and exalted the rights, freedoms, dignity and worth of the individual. In the twentieth century, the century which commenced the collapse of the West, communism was led onto victory by Marxists who glorified the faith, religion and communal bonds of the Dark Ages, condemned the Enlightenment as an age of soulless, freezing, egoistic, bourgeois rationalism, and stormed the ramparts of modern civilization with its mobs of hate filled miscreants and malefactors seeking vengeance. In the Classical world, three centuries before the victory of a communist movement called Christianity during the wintertime of the culture, a communist movement was repulsed during the culture's springtime and its leader put to death to the cheers of the people. The leader of the movement was Spartacus and his defeat serves as an object lesson for the friends of liberty throughout the world that the victory of cultural perils and menaces is never fated or preordained but can be thwarted and foiled, and the culture returned to its normal stage of development, by consistent, determined, unwavering action on the part of the public. In 73 BC, the people and senate of Rome fell under attack in a third slave war led by Spartacus. The first slave war led by Eunus, from 135 BC to 132 BC, had been easily put down, as had the second, from 104 BC to 100 BC, led by Athenion. The third war was the largest, the most dangerous, the most fearsome and the most famous of the slave wars because Spartacus was an articulate, oratorical, charismatic, communist gladiator, soldier, gang leader and mystic who had captured the minds and imaginations of the rabble, sounding the themes of liberty and equality for human appearing animals, as no other proletarian leader ever had. In the Classical world, the institution of slavery was based upon moral character and not race. The basis of Classical legal systems was natural law, which recognizes that although all human beings are born free, they can be enslaved if they do not lead lives which flourish in accordance with reason. Roman slaves were comprised of the class of those who, from a rational, moral point of view, were not human beings, the class of criminals and barbarians, and this was the class which Spartacus led in his march on Rome. Germans, Celts and convicts breaking out of prisons armed with cleavers and skewers filled up the ranks of his 100,000 man army, which comprised five percent of the slave population of Italy, in his campaign to overthrow Classical civilization. Communists throughout history have admired Spartacus. Marx, Lenin and Stalin exalted him as the supreme model of a proletarian revolutionary. German Marxists who sought to overthrow the Weimar Republic in 1919 called their party the Spartacus League. Soviet composer Aram Khachaturian received the Lenin Prize in 1959 for his ballet about Spartacus. The former Soviet satellite states of Eastern Europe held Spartakiad sports competitions to symbolize proletarian internationalism. Howard Fast's novel exalting Spartacus and communist ideology was made into a procommunist film by Stanley Kubrick in 1960. Listen to the voice of Karl Marx who exalts Spartacus as a fearless, noble defender of the ancient proletariat and its cult of mass, mindless criminality: "As a relaxation in the evenings I have been reading Appian on the Roman Civil Wars, in the original Greek text. A very valuable book. The chap is an Egyptian by birth. Schlosser says he has no soul, probably because he goes to the roots of the material basis for these civil wars. Spartacus is revealed as the most splendid fellow in the whole of ancient history. Great general (no Garibaldi), noble character, real representative of the ancient proletariat." (Letter from Marx to Friedrich Engels, February 27, 1861). Listen to the voices of Marxism who exalt the red bands, red gladiators and red revolutionaries under the leadership of Spartacus in their campaign to defeat the Roman army and the republic of free citizens which it protected. Who glorify a revolt staged by 100,000 specimens of hatred, envy, rage and mental corruption as they sought to crush the might of Rome which symbolized the might of the law. Who acclaim a flaming demagogue who appealed to the desires and prejudices of the lowest stratum of subhuman existence, the masses of idlers, shirkers, unemployables and delinquents, as the greatest leader and general of antiquity. Who condemn the Roman defenders of law, order, justice and peace as the mortal enemies and oppressors of the working class and extol Spartacus for his efforts to assassinate them. Who condemn as bourgeois enemies of the people's liberation all those who oppose the Spartacist worship of mob rule and brute force. Who sing the praises of a man whose sordid interests, unsound psychology, wild emotional state, perverse moral commitments, pornographic fascination with violence, and unabashed bias toward the rabble and refuse of Roman society were condemned by Roman philosophers, historians, and ordinary citizens concerned for the safety and security of freedom and civilization. This man, this beacon of inspiration for Marx, Lenin, Trotsky, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, the Russian Revolution, and the communist ruling classes throughout the centuries, this loud, dramatic tub thumper on behalf of barbarians, savages and proletarian psychopaths, this slanderer of those who are talented, ambitious, industrious and successful, this leader of the Third Servile War against the Classical system of virtue and rectitude, this front rank contributor to the world's annals and records of cesspool politics, this dangerous firebrand called Spartacus: "In the first century BC, a slave named Spartacus threatened the might of Rome. Spartacus (c. 109 BC-71 BC) was the leader (or possibly one of several leaders) of the massive slave uprising known as the Third Servile War. Under his leadership, a tiny band of rebel gladiators grew into a huge revolutionary army, numbering about 100,000. In the end the full force of the Roman army was needed to crush the revolt. Despite his well deserved fame as a great revolutionary leader and one of the most outstanding generals of antiquity, not much is known about Spartacus the man. It is always the victors who write history and the voice of the slaves throughout the centuries can be heard only through the accounts of the oppressors. What little information we have is from accounts written by his mortal enemies. The surviving historical records are all written by Roman historians and therefore hostile. They are often contradictory. There were other leaders of the revolt whose names have come down to us: Crixus, Castus, Gannicus and Oenomaus--gladiators from Gaul and Germania. But of these even less is known. History is always written by the victors, and they faithfully reflect the interests, psychology and class bias of the ruling class. Trying to understand Spartacus from these sources is like trying to understand Lenin and Trotsky from the slanderous writings of the bourgeois enemies of the Russian Revolution. (Spartacus: A Real Representative Of The Proletariat Of Ancient Times by Allan Woods). Spartacus kept the Roman superpower at bay for two years and caused it to suffer nine defeats before he himself went down to defeat. He was defeated because the people and senate of Rome had decided that for the sake of human progress and civilization he had to be defeated. So with a combination of mobile, fast moving cavalry units, conventional, heavily armed infantrymen, and lightly armed guerrilla fighters using hit and run tactics, all given maximum moral and financial support by the free citizens of the empire, the military forces of Rome put an end to the rebellion. Spartacus had lit a match and ignited a firestorm among the bitter malcontents who swam in the sewers of the empire. The conflagration was extinguished; peace and order were restored; and the civilized world breathed a collective sigh of relief. Rome's suppression of Spartacus has educated all those who wish to be educated that the enemies of civilization, the reds who have lurked and crouched in the darkest corners of society waiting to spring, can be defeated, and can only be defeated, by the will of good people to remain free.

CHRISTIANS AND MARXISTS AGAINST MAN

Two thousand years ago, on the eastern periphery of the Roman Empire, a movement was born which would shake the foundations of the earth and declare holy war against civilized people. This movement was communism. It appeared in the form of the Christian religion and its central figure commenced a mission of red preaching in Palestine in AD 30. Acclaimed by his followers as Christ, the Messiah and the Son of God, Jesus of Nazareth set forth the aims of his new movement in clear and unequivocal terms. He proclaimed that he would fill the coffers of the poor from the castles of the rich, level down the doers and achievers of the world, and make the morally deformed and misshapen the lords of the earth: "Prepare the way for the Lord, make his paths straight. Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low, and the crooked shall be made straight." (Luke 3:4-5). He proclaimed that a new age had arrived, an age in which the ignorant, the deluded, the criminals and the convicts would be granted unconditional liberty and absolute power, an age on whose banners would be emblazoned: the Years of the Lord: "He has anointed me to preach good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim release to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty those who are oppressed, to proclaim the acceptable Years of the Lord." (Luke 4:18-19). The communist character of Christianity is written on every page of the Bible. In Acts Of The Apostles, the ideal Christian community is described. It is a community of equal possession and equal distribution. It is a community in which freedom, justice, merit and private property have been abolished and the evangelists of red totalitarian rule have seized the wealth of all and given to each according to his need: "All who believed were together and had all things in common; they would sell their possessions and goods and distribute the proceeds to all, as any had need. Now the whole group of those who believed were of one heart and soul, and no one claimed private ownership of any possessions, but everything they owned was held in common. There was not a needy person among them, for as many as owned lands or houses sold them and brought the proceeds of what was sold. They laid it at the apostles' feet, and it was distributed to each as any had need." After he was baptized, after he fasted, after he returned from his meditation retreat in the desert, Jesus commenced his ministry on the Mount of Beatitudes, and preached the doctrine of communism. He proclaimed that the supreme embodiment of human righteousness and perfection is one who leads a life of nonthought, nonwill, nonresponsibility, nonambition, nonwork, noneffort, nonplanning, nonproduction and nonachievement. Like the birds of the air and the lilies of the field, he lives his life as a moral and spiritual zero among zeroes, without dignity, glory, spirit, soul or worth of any kind, fed, nourished, care for, watched over and superintended from cradle to grave in the kingdom of God, the heavenly father, the red totalitarian ruler of the universe: "Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what you shall eat, or what you shall drink; nor yet for your body, what you shall put on. Is not life more than meat, and the body more than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feeds them. Are you not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubic unto his stature? And why take you thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothes the grass of the field, which to day is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O you of little faith? Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, How shall we be clothed? (for after all these things do the Gentiles seek) for your heavenly Father knows that you have need of all these things. But seek you first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. It is sufficient to worry about the evils of today." (Sermon On The Mount). Soon after he commenced preaching, Jesus was executed by the Romans for the offense of seeking to subvert the Roman state and legal order which were founded upon natural law. Natural law states that human beings are born free and not born enchained in a web of obligations toward an external power, toward a deity or toward society. Jesus proclaimed that human beings are born enchained to the will of God and possess no inherent, intrinsic freedom or dignity. In the healthy, flourishing period of Classical culture, Jesus was put to death and Christianity was suppressed as mortal threats to a free society. In the declining stages of the culture three centuries later, the establishment of Christianity as the official religion of the Roman Empire by Constantine sealed the fate of its free citizens and the rational order in which they lived. The decline and fall of the West commenced in the twentieth century and saw the rise of communism and a replay of the collapse of Rome. The voices of communism this time, and active during these past one hundred years of cultural disintegration, have been the Marxists. Listen to the voice of a Christian and a Marxist who sings a carol of proletarian revolution. Who promotes mob rule and exalts the magnificence of violence in the name of a better world. Who preaches a law of hatred of the producers and achievers of the world and a gospel of class war to exterminate them. Who seeks to forge chains of social responsibility and make every man a slave. Who translates the commands of the Devil into English and tells his audience to hate and kill those who want to live their lives without the interference or involvement of the state or community and to live their lives in peace and freedom. Who condemns the soldiers of liberty as reactionaries and oppressors, condemns capitalism as a system of homelessness, poverty, racism and injustice, and seeks to transform liberal democratic nations into red totalitarian dictatorships in the name of social equity and the rights of the working class. Who calls vandals and brawlers his eternal brothers, agitates with them in a people's church of popular liberation, and fans the embers of envy and frustration into a global blaze of socialism, communism and the destruction of civilization: "And so, when you look at the Christmas story closely, you find a story of working class people living in difficult times, in circumstances not too different from those faced by millions of people today. These are people who are aware of their history of struggle. They draw strength from the lessons of the past and nourish hopes and dreams for a better world. Mary, the young mother in the Christmas story is supremely confident that the future will be better. Her song, known as the Magnificat, is nothing less than revolutionary. This revolutionary aspect of Christmas is also found in the popular Christmas carol O Holy Night (Cantique de Noel). The words were written by the French socialist Placide Cappeau de Roquemaure and it was translated into English by the American abolitionist John Sullivan Dwight. The music was written by Adolphe Charles Adam, a friend of Cappeau's. One verse of the carol states: 'Truly he taught us to love one another; his law is love and his gospel is peace. Chains shall he break, for the slave is our brother; and in his name all oppression shall cease!' The political ramifications of this carol were well understood by some reactionaries in our own country and it continues to be controversial. The song was banned for years in many conservative churches in the US and many radio stations in the South refused to play it. So, whenever you get weary of the holidays and all the claptrap that surrounds them, remember the young family of the Christmas story, how they hoped and dreamed for a revolutionary transformation of their country and how they persevered in the face of oppression. Whoever you are, have a merry and revolutionary Christmas. And let us then enter the new year resolved to wipe out homelessness, poverty, racism and injustice once and for all." (The Revolutionary Hope Of Christmas by Tim Yeager). In the heart of Christianity and Marxism, there burns a sinister flame. It is the flame of common living, common possession, common sacrifice, the empowerment of the failures, the damnation of the successful, the rejection of reason and the senses, the negation of individuality and personhood, and the destruction of human civilization. Promoting a mystical religion of universal enslavement, Christianity and Marxism differ with respect to the agent of enslavement. For Christianity it is God, while for Marxism, it is the proletariat. Commanded by God or commanded by the proletariat, communism is the flame of mental perversion, moral corruption, political injustice and mass criminality which has lit up these religions and consumed the world of today.

THE SHOT HEARD AROUND THE WORLD

Time lapse photography is a technique in which a sequence of frames is shot at far intervals to record changes which occur slowly over a long period of time. When the frames are then shown at normal or rapid speeds, the action appears faster. If one could shoot a series of photographic frames covering the past one hundred years, since the dawn of the twentieth century, and then speed up the succession of frames, the result would be a record in soul, spirit and essence of a seven month drama in Russia in 1917 which led up to and culminated in the communist revolution on November 8. This seventh month timeline encapsulates as nothing else does the descent of the West into an epoch of mob rule, collectivist politics, the rejection of reason and the exaltation of violence, an epoch which has plagued every civilization throughout history during the final stages of its existence. The story commences in April 1917 when a virus in human form traveling in a sealed train from Switzerland arrives in Petrograd. This virus is named Vladimir Lenin and it begins multiplying exponentially and soon fills the streets and squares with reds and their creed of sabotage and destruction. The communist leader Lenin delivers his April Theses to his growing mass of supporters. In it he advocates the abolition of liberal democracy, the rule of law, private property, and the principle of justice and merit. His is the voice of a socialist leviathan, manned by red soviets, red workers, red peasants, red deputies, red bureaucrats, red officials and the red poor, crushing the talented, successful and achieving classes of society, sweeping away the police and the army which protect free institutions, confiscating private wealth, production, goods, services, banks, industries, homes, lands and estates, collectivizing the minds and bodies of the people, herding the people into slave labor farms, camps, communes and gulags, and commanding a coalition of the misfits, the malcontents and the maladjusted scum of society in a campaign to storm the ramparts of civilization and turn back the clock of history: "Not a parliamentary republic—to return to a parliamentary republic from the Soviets of Workers' Deputies would be a retrograde step—but a republic of Soviets of Workers', Agricultural Laborers' and Peasants' Deputies throughout the country, from top to bottom. Abolition of the police, the army and the bureaucracy. The salaries of all officials, all of whom are elective and displaceable at any time, not to exceed the average wage of a competent worker. The weight of emphasis in the agrarian program to be shifted to the Soviets of Agricultural Laborers' Deputies. Confiscation of all landed estates. Nationalization of all lands in the country, the land to be disposed of by the local Soviets of Agricultural Laborers' and Peasants' Deputies. The organization of separate Soviets of Deputies of Poor Peasants. The setting up of a model farm on each of the large estates (ranging in size from 100 to 300 hectares, according to local and other conditions, and to the decisions of the local bodies) under the control of the Soviets of Agricultural Laborers' Deputies and for the public account. The immediate union of all banks in the country into a single national bank, and the institution of control over it by the Soviet of Workers' Deputies. It is not our immediate task to introduce socialism, but only to bring social production and the distribution of products at once under the control of the Soviets of Workers' Deputies." In July-August 1917, General Lavr Kornilov, commander of the Imperial Russian Army, advances his troops on Petrograd in support of the Provisional Government led by Alexander Kerensky. Communists seize control over the city's arsenal and arrest Kornilov. They spread leaflets throughout the streets with a message of revolution and train mobs on how to use weapons for the "last and decisive battle" to eliminate all forms, traces and vestiges of freedom in Russia. In August 1917, the Sixth Congress of the Russian Social Democratic Labor Party convenes in Petrograd and is directed by Lenin from the underground. The congress proclaims the necessity of establishing communist youth organizations and communist labor unions as part of the red militarization and red totalitarian transformation of society. It proclaims that the culmination of history will bring about a socialist revolution and the overthrow of bourgeois government, an armed uprising of the mob under the leadership of the Communist Party, which will abolish the freedom, dignity, privacy and right of neutrality of the individual, and gather and prepare every member of society for a war to destroy modern civilization in the name of the peasants, soldiers, youth and working class: "The congress resolution Youth Leagues said it was a pressing task to contribute to the formation of socialist class organizations of young workers, and obliged Party organizations to devote the greatest attention to this task. In discussing the item The Trade Union Movement, the congress criticized the theory of trade union neutrality and pointed out that the trade unions had a vital interest in carrying the revolution through to a victorious end and that they could accomplish the tasks facing Russia's working class provided they remained militant class organizations recognizing the political leadership of the Bolshevik Party. The congress made all its decisions subordinate to the chief objective, which was to train the working class and the peasant poor for an armed uprising to bring about the victory of the socialist revolution. In a manifesto addressed to all working people, all workers, soldiers and peasants of Russia, it called on them to gather strength and prepare, under the banners of the Bolshevik Party, for the decisive battle with the bourgeoisie." In October 1917, the Bolshevik Central Committee approves Lenin's plan to overthrow the Provisional Government. Lenin proclaims that a progressive society is one which has submerged the bourgeois institutions of peace, freedom and the rule of law by a rising tide of proletarian revolutionary power. He proclaims that a progressive government is a dictatorship in the hands of the Communist Party because such alone enjoys the unconditional and unwavering support of the failures, the incompetents, the vandals and the marauders of the world who comprise the true working class and are oppressed and exploited by liberal societies which protect the right of personal space, private property, and the right to keep the fruits of one's own labor. He proclaims that a progressive society is one which has transferred power from laws and constitutions into the hands of a raging, vengeful, uncontrollable mob and its councils and commissars. He proclaims that the highest form of political struggle is one which has repudiated the principles of rational disputation, public order, sound government, and respect for the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual and perfected the arts of armed uprising, insurrectionist violence, mass murder, and war conducted in every home, school, office and neighborhood in the land. Under the command of Lenin, an international movement and conspiracy swept like wildfire across Russia and trampled over the citadels of reason and civilization with red comrades bearing banners screaming out: No Power To The Individual! All Power To The State and Community!: "It is clear that all power must pass to the Soviets. It should be equally indisputable for every Bolshevik that proletarian revolutionary power (or Bolshevik power—which is now one and the same thing) is assured of the utmost sympathy and unreserved support of all the working and exploited people all over the world in general, in the belligerent countries in particular, and among the Russian peasants especially. There is no need to dwell on these all too well known and long established truths. What must be dealt with is something that is probably not quite clear to all comrades, namely, that in practice the transfer of power to the Soviets now means armed uprising. This would seem obvious, but not everyone has or is giving thought to the point. To repudiate armed uprising now would mean to repudiate the key slogan of Bolshevism (All Power To The Soviets!) and proletarian revolutionary internationalism in general. But armed uprising is a special form of political struggle, one subject to special laws to which attentive thought must be given. Karl Marx expressed this truth with remarkable clarity when he wrote that 'insurrection is an art quite as much as war.'" (Advice Of An Onlooker by Vladimir Lenin). The last act of this story takes place in the early days of November 1917. The cruiser Aurora, loaded with communists, sails into Petrograd as communists from across the city seize control over the roads and bridges. The communists hold a national congress and are voted into power by the mob. Provided with weapons by the Bolshevik Military Revolutionary Committee, communists march on the Winter Palace, infiltrate the palace through the cellars, and massacre the government forces. At the congress, the Mensheviks appeal for peace and an end to the violence, but are shouted down by the communists. On the Aurora, a shot is fired, a shot heard around the world, the signal for the communist onslaught against Russian society. Communists disembark from the ship and storm the palace en masse. They beat down the doors to the Provisional Government's chambers and arrest the members of the government. They declare the Provisional Government deposed. The new communist government commences the construction of a new state, passing decrees for the collectivization of land, homes, offices, factories and people and the onset of a war of class extermination. The clocks around the world mark the events and begin spinning backward into the year zero. Radiating in sinister waves from its epicenter in Russia, communism has emerged triumphant throughout the world. An epoch of chaos, terror and totalitarian politics has commenced. The West has embarked upon its final, dismal descent into extinction.

CHINA'S KRISTALLNACHT: 1966 TO 1976

Sound travels through air at a speed of 1200 kilometers per second. A different sort of sound travels at a much slower speed and takes years to reach its target. This is the sound of ideas, politics, ideology and revolution. On the night of November 9, 1938, the sounds of grassroots violence fomented by the German government against Jews and their property took a generation to reach their target, but reach it they did, and with a resounding crash, which in 1966 ushered in the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution in China. In radical leftist societies, the vengeful mob rules, and led onward by a party, wages war against the institutions of freedom, law, order and government, and wages war until nothing remains standing, and wages war until civilization is reduced to a smoldering ruins. The story of the Chinese Kristallnacht commences in 1966 with an editorial in the People's Daily commissioned by Communist Party leader Mao Zedong. The editorial calls upon the people to "Sweep Away All Cow Demons and Snake Spirits", to move against the enemies of the proletariat, to silence the voices of freedom and liberty, which included the following: the "five black categories of landlords, rich peasants, counterrevolutionaries, bad elements and rightists"; the "capitalist roaders in the party"; and "reactionary academics" who demanded an end to the red politicization of thought. Mao's Central Committee calls for a national conflagration of democratically committed, controlled and sanctioned violence: "Trust the masses, rely on them and respect their initiative." Soon the action commences and Mao incites university students against their professors, whereupon the students debase, humiliate and beat them, and incites ordinary people against antiMarxist elements within the Communist Party. Students put on uniforms with red armbands to signify that they are soldiers for the cause of Marxism and defenders of Mao Zedong thought. These Red Guards prohibit all public displays of the "old world" of capitalist freedom and Confucian culture. They vandalize shops and churches; tear down temples; overturn tombstones; burn books in spreading bonfires; turn over street signs; raid the homes of people who engage in antiMarxist activities such as playing the piano, reading literature on the Enlightenment, and discussing the merits of liberal democracy. In Shanghai and Beijing, the Red Guards raid the homes of 250,000 people, destroy the antiMarxist items they find, and attack, abuse and beat to death the inhabitants. The Red Guards attack all the antiMarxists they can find and torture them, tear out their hair, cane them to death, stone them to death, bury them alive, and pour gasoline on them and set them on fire. The book Quotations From Chairman Mao Zedong is printed by the billions and made compulsory reading, reciting, memorizing and quoting. The book proclaims that all those who oppose the metaphysics of reductive materialism and its corollary that human history is the history of economic classes and nothing more are mystics and supernaturalists who must be banished from the field of discussion and debate: "Classes struggle, some classes triumph, others are eliminated. Such is history, such is the history of civilization for thousands of years. To interpret history from this viewpoint is historical materialism; standing in opposition to this viewpoint is historical idealism." (Cast Away Illusions, Prepare For Struggle). The book proclaims that the notion of a universal, absolute, objective truth is a liberal, bourgeois prejudice and must be replaced by the people's doctrine of class relativity. By the recognition that there exists only class metaphysics, class logic, class science, class perception, class morality, class politics, class revolution and a class based society: "In a class society everyone lives as a member of a particular class, and every kind of thinking, without exception, is stamped with the brand of a class." (On Practice). The book proclaims that the principle of noncontradiction is a bourgeois superstition and must be replaced by the recognition of the contradictory, unintelligible character of all reality. By the recognition that reality is both A and nonA, both a thing and its negation, at one and the same time. By the recognition that war is the people's peace, enslavement is the people's freedom, and ignorance is the people's enlightenment. By the recognition that the march of human history is the march of class contradictions, class conflicts, class revolutions, and culminates in a campaign of class genocide and the murder of every person who lives, works and produces by the use of his mind and for the sake of himself: "Changes in society are due chiefly to the development of the internal contradictions in society, that is, the contradiction between the productive forces and the relations of production, the contradiction between classes, and the contradiction between the old and the new; it is the development of these contradictions that pushes society forward and gives the impetus for the supercession of the old society by the new." (On Contradiction). The book proclaims that liberal democracy is a system of political oppression and economic exploitation of the working class and must be swept away by a people's class struggle and popular revolution of the scum of the earth who will establish a red totalitarian dictatorship. Rejecting as a bourgeois delusion the natural law notion that human beings are born free, the new people's liberation regime will reduce every man, woman and child to the level of a rightless peasant and serf in the service of a ruthless, feudal, landlord class which will ensure that freedom never again has a chance to breathe or see the light of day: "The ruthless economic exploitation and political oppression of the peasants by the landlord class forced them into numerous uprisings against its rule. It was the class struggles of the peasants, the peasant uprisings and peasant wars that constituted the real motive force of historical development in Chinese feudal society." (The Chinese Revolution And The Chinese Communist Party). The book proclaims that a progressive society is a portrait of squalor without surcease and a picture of violence without restraint. Rejecting the bourgeois precepts of reason, wisdom, enlightenment, education, prudence, benevolence, generosity, refinement, sound judgment, and respect for the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual, it is a people's insurrection against civilization, a proletarian revolution against everything it means to be human: "Revolution is not a dinner party, or writing an essay, or painting a picture, or doing embroidery; it cannot be so refined, so leisurely and gentle, so temperate, kind, courteous, restrained and magnanimous. A revolution is an insurrection, an act of violence by which one class overthrows another." (Report On An Investigation Of The Peasant Movement In Hunan). During the Cultural Revolution, families, friendships and business associations are torn asunder as people denounce each other as antiMarxists, counterrevolutionaries and enemies of the state. Mobs take over factories, beat and kill the managers, and plunder and vandalize the premises. Mobs kill and eat those condemned as enemies of the class as cannibalism is justified as a symbol of the self sacrifice and immolation of the individual demanded by Marxism. To the wild applause of the masses, Mao sends students, scholars and professionals into the countryside to engage in muscular farm labor and to be reeducated, by the sweat of their brows, in the Marxist doctrine that muscular labor and not mind is the origin of all wealth, the wellspring of all profits and the engine of all production. They are sent to live in caves and pig sheds, are deprived of all food and hygiene, and they perish from starvation and disease. Proclaimed in the name of Marxist equity, equality and prosperity, the whirlwind of horror called the Cultural Revolution endured up to the moment Mao died in 1976. In the wake of the Cultural Revolution, the land once called the Great Kingdom lay littered with Mao statues, Mao badges and copies of Quotations From Chairman Mao Zedong, which served, one and all, as Marxist grave markers of two thousand years of glorious Chinese civilization. In the field of history, periods which are morally and politically analogous can be interchanged with respect to duration. Thus Germany's Kristallnacht lasted ten years, while China's Cultural Revolution last twenty four hours. During these twenty four hours, two million people were killed and a nation was razed to the ground in the name of combating bourgeois values and defeating the enemies of Marxism. Two million people and a nation destroyed in the greatest act of crime and violence committed by the masses in the history of mankind. Armed with fists, sticks, clubs, automatic weapons, anti-aircraft artillery and the support of the People's Liberation Army, the Marxist mobs under the command of Mao accelerated the world into free fall during the closing minutes of the West.

ADOLF HITLER, MARXIST

For the past one hundred years, an octopus has sat atop the world. This is the octopus of Marxism and its tentacles of red power and revolution have reached into every neighborhood, home, family, school, office and government, and made the principles of tribal war, hatred and extermination the foundations of all morality, politics and law. These tentacles stand for different schools of Marxism; only the names, dates, places, personages, accidents and details change; the form and essence remain the same, the deprivation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and emanate from a single, massive head whose jaws have devoured every last remnant of progress and civilization. The octopus of Marxism has brought forth from its tentacles three main schools of tribalism, class tribalism, racial tribalism and gender tribalism, and in the twenty first century these three tribalisms compete for the mastery and control of the world. The most influential expositor of racial socialism was Adolf Hitler, and the National Socialist Party and Third Reich he created, which terrorized the world for thirteen years alongside of Soviet Russia, were racial versions of a Marxist campaign to break down the structure of the world and pummel liberal democracy into the dust. Proclaiming that "I have learned a great deal from Marxism as I do not hesitate to admit" and that "the whole of national socialism is based upon Marxism", Hitler set forth a program and manifesto for a Marxist war to subvert the modern social and political order. He proclaimed that national socialism is a derivative of Marxism; it is nothing more than Marxism which replaces class with race; and that a national socialism which peddled class hatred and not race hatred "would really do nothing more than compete with Marxism on its own ground". He proclaimed that the highest form of socialism is national socialism and not international socialism; it is a "community of the volk" and not the proletariat of the world; and the task of the national socialist state is to establish volkish socialism, and by means of that eradicate that entrepreneurial class and the voices of individualism protected by liberalism. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one which plans, directs, regulates, guides and controls the economy in the name of the race and not the class and has mandated the racialization of all forms of work, enterprise, property and production. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is actuated by a dogma, vision and agenda of racial power and has for the sake of the future of mankind prohibited all doctrines and points of view which advocate judging individuals as individuals and not as members of races, and deny the centrality and importance of race in the course of human affairs and human history. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which races fight races and civil wars rage like wildfire to ensure the victory of master races over inferior races. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is guided and inspired by Marx, Lenin and Stalin, but instead of throwing the enemies of the class into gulags, it throws the enemies of the race. He proclaimed that a progressive society is an anonymous racial horde, a mass of undifferentiated, racial humanity, which has crushed both the liberal individual who lives, works and succeeds for himself, and the Marxist class proletarian, beneath the weight of the people's leviathan championing blood and soil. He proclaimed that a progressive society is an extremist society, a politically leftist society, a Marxist based national socialist society, which looks back to the remote past when clans and tribes ruled the people, and virtue was held to reside in selflessness and sacrifice, and individual rights were unknown, unheard of and enveloped in the darkness of communal power. He proclaimed that a progressive society is a fatherland of the nation, a citadel of the race, which has declared war against other races and other fatherlands and hurled liberal values into the dustbin of history. He proclaimed that a progressive society is a system of racial feudalism, racial capitalism and racial socialism which requires and demands a Final Solution of genocide against the trash of competing, alien races. He proclaimed that a progressive society is a racial struggle, a racial revolution and a racial workers' dictatorship which has recognized that the only true theory of history is a racial theory of history, and that both the liberal order of individual rights and the Marxist order of international proletarian socialism have to be repulsed and their defenders exterminated. He proclaimed that a progressive society is a mass movement which marches united under the flags of nationalism and socialism and seeks what all true socialists seek, the abolition of freedom, in a program which includes the following: government expropriation of land without compensation; nationalization of basic industries; abolition of bank lending for profit; and prohibition of interest income. He proclaimed that capitalism is a system of oppression and exploitation of the failures, misfits and incompetents of the world and must be replaced by a regime of social responsibility, social performance and stratospheric salaries for all. Mandating equal wealth and property for the skilled and the unskilled, the educated and the uneducated, and the virtuous and the vicious, a progressive society is a congregation of the faithful in which all chant together: We are socialists: "We are socialists. We are enemies of today's capitalist system for the exploitation of the economically weak, with its unfair salaries, with its unseemly evaluation of a human being according to wealth and property instead of responsibility and performance, and we are determined to destroy this system under all conditions." (Public speech by Hitler, Munich, May 1, 1927). Hitler proclaimed that a progressive society is a militant church and combat league of red totalitarians who seek to recreate man in the image of an abject slave of the state and community, without rights, freedom or dignity of any kind. Inspired by Marx, Lenin and Stalin, it is a society of miscreants, marauders and heroic bomb throwers who worship a God called Violence and have declared every day to be a national holiday commemorating the most notorious mass murderers and terrorists of the world. It is a society which, in true radical, socialist fashion, has beaten to death the liberal traditions of freedom and civilization, beaten to death the aristocracies of talent and ability which flourish in free societies protected by the rule of law, beaten them all to death with banners emblazoned with the symbols and slogans of swastikas and hammer and sickles, and made the mob, the class of sludge collecting in the moral hollows of the earth, the new rulers, masters and pillars of the world. It is a society whose present, future and single, overriding aim and mission is effecting a plan of universal destruction and hastening the doom of the West: "The nazis appealed to the socialist traditions of German labor, declaring the worker a pillar of the community, and the bourgeois—along with the traditional aristocracy—a doomed class. Hitler, who told associates that he was a socialist, had the party adopt the red flag and, on coming to power, declared May 1 a national holiday: Nazi Party members were ordered to address one another as comrades (Genossen). His conception of the party was, like Lenin's, that of a militant organization, a Kampfbund, or Combat League. His ultimate aim was a society in which traditional classes would be abolished, and status earned by personal heroism. In typically radical fashion, he envisaged man recreating himself: 'Man is becoming god. Man is god in the making' " (Russia Under The Bolshevik Regime by Richard Pipes). In April 1945, Germany lay buried in rubble and the Third Reich had come crashing down to a finish. But Hitler's program and manifesto had not been touched by the tidal waves of defeat and lived on to rule the world. Proclaiming that "basically, national socialism and Marxism are the same thing", Hitler was among the top tier graduates of the Marxist school of horrors. The Marxist philosophy of polylogism, according to which different socioeconomic classes reason in fundamentally different ways, was adopted by Hitler, who replaced class by race and promoted in place of a proletarian logic and an Aryan logic. The Marxist program of concentration camps and killing centers directed against the enemies of the class was adopted by Hitler, who redirected them against the enemies of the race. Two scenes serve to illustrate the sinister character of the present day and the inexorable process of the collapse of the West. In the first scene, cities are consumed in smoke and flames as race riots rage out of control, fomented by black power activists marching under the banners of BlackLivesMatter. In the second scene, Supreme Court Justice Sonia Sotomayor propounds a doctrine of race and gender polylogism and proclaims that a "wise Latina", a woman of Latin American descent, possesses a way of reasoning which is superior to that of a white male and must be deferred to at all times. Two scenes of tribalism, behind which stands a gray eminence. This is the figure of Hitler, father of the race and gender politics which have defined the twenty first century. Behind Hitler stands the power and influence of Marx, the ultimate source of the identity politics which have framed the history and developments of the past one hundred years. This Marx-Hitler axis has trampled liberal democracy underfoot and pushed civilization into the abyss. \

UNCHAINED

A child is playing a game in a school courtyard. At home, his mother has set the table for lunch and is waiting for him to arrive. He never does. He has been killed by a monster who is moved by the fires, the voices, the spirits and the storms raging within. These are the fires and storms of moral relativism and they have trampled down and scorched the institutions of free people and sounded the death knell of Western civilization. The story of the decline and fall of the West is the story of the rise and ascendancy of moral relativism and it is a story one thousand years in the making, a story reaching back to the creation of the culture, when the hand of Faust brought a fearsome and terrifying new world into being from the dark, gloomy, twilight forests of Northern Europe. Doctor of sorcery, necromancy, black magic, and studies theological, diabolical and blazing with the burning and combustion of hell, a reckless adventurer who sold his soul to the Devil in exchange for infinite and unbridled will power, consciousness and subjectivity, Faust introduced the world to romanticism and introduced romanticism to the world, and set into motion a wave of crime the likes of which the world had never before witnessed. The breakdown of morality which leads to rising levels of crime has afflicted every culture in a state of decline, but this trend has been exacerbated in the West by the philosophy which has undergird the West from its beginning and placed it a universe apart from the Classical Apollonian culture of the Greeks and Romans. Exalting subjective inspiration and the primacy of the will, this Western, Germanic Faustian philosophy is called romanticism and it has composed the grim statistics of crime and violence which have buried the West since the dawn of the twentieth century, and rained down ruin upon the present day with their dark, satanic, death dealing numbers. Proclaiming total liberation from the Classical, Apollonian world of reason, order and restraint, the unshackled Faustians in charge of the past one hundred years have issued a program and manifesto for a festival of blood and gore staged across cities and nations and smeared across the homes of the people. They have proclaimed that existence has no essence, that nothing is anything, and that man is radical freedom and can make any choices, enact any rules and exercise his will in any fashion he desires without fear of moral condemnation. They have proclaimed that what is called reality is a human construct and a product of human needs and interests and what is good or right cannot be decided on the basis of any universal, absolute standards. They have proclaimed that committing mass murder is morally good and permissible so long as the perpetrator revels in it, derives pleasure from it, and takes open and unabashed responsibility for it. They have proclaimed that truth and morality are relative to social frameworks and what is moral is whatever a gender, race or class has deemed to be moral. They have proclaimed that because people in different cultures dress differently, eat differently, speak different languages, and have created artistic expressions forms, all morality is relative to culture, and acts such as terror bombing are permissible if sanctioned by one's culture, and cannot be condemned by members of other cultures. They have proclaimed that each individual establishes the values and principles which lie at the basis of morality and these values and principles are irrefutable and unshakeable. They have proclaimed that the notion that there are moral standards which are binding upon all people in all places, at all times, in all periods, in all cultures, in all societies, and in all situations is an ancient superstition which must be swept away by the recognition that all morality is relative to the whims and caprice of individuals. They have proclaimed that the hallmark of wisdom and enlightenment consists in the realization that absolute moral principles do not exist, that there is no universally valid moral core existing at the foundation of civilized societies, that we must not pass moral judgments on other people or other cultures, and that we have the right to express ourselves and do whatever we feel like doing, including destroying the lives and property of others. They have proclaimed that morality consists in acting from good intentions rather than doing good deeds, and if one commits all manner of evil and injustice but does so in obedience to an order, issued either by oneself or by one's superiors, then one is absolved of all responsibility for one's acts and must be commended as a good person. They have proclaimed that moral laws are categorical imperatives which must be obeyed blindly, uncritically and regardless of consequences; they are discovered by means of feeling, intuition and the voice of conscience emanating from within; and they excuse the acts of psychopaths, schizophrenics and gulag executioners who act out of obedience to the commands they hear. They have proclaimed that no person should impose the moral rules he follows upon others because each person's has his own feelings, needs, desires and interests and "unless you walk a mile in another man's moccasins, you can not make a judgment concerning him". Listen to the voices of moral relativism which proclaim that morality has nothing whatever to do with producing good consequences and has everything to do with following orders, obeying commands, and adhering to the legislation of the human will. Who proclaim that individuals who send innocent people to die at the hands of mass murderers because they are obeying a categorical imperative never to lie, and soldiers who commit mass murder because they are obeying a categorical imperative to always obey orders issued by their superiors, are exemplars of human virtue and shine as a beacon of moral inspiration to all. Who proclaim that the motives and intentions behind an act and not the act itself are what is good or bad, and any action whatever, no matter how cruel, savage, barbaric or bestial, and no matter how many innocent lives it claims, can be justified if the agent commits them out of a sense of duty. Philosophers have called the morality of the categorical imperative a deontological morality, a duty based morality and a nonconsequentialist morality. Civilized, common sense oriented people have added to this description a final word as summation: it is the essence of evil: "Deontological (duty based) ethics are concerned with what people do, not with the consequences of their action. 1. Do the right thing. 2. Do it because it's the right thing to do. 2. Don't do wrong things. 3. Avoid them because they are wrong. Under this form of ethics you can't justify an action by showing that it produced good consequences, which is why it's sometimes called nonconsequentialist'. The word deontological comes from the Greek word deon, which means duty. Duty based ethics are usually what people are talking about when they refer to 'the principle of the thing'. Duty based ethics teaches that some acts are right or wrong because of the sorts of things they are, and people have a duty to act accordingly, regardless of the good or bad consequences that may be produced. Some kinds of action are wrong or right in themselves, regardless of the consequences. Deontologists live in a universe of moral rules, such as: 1. It is wrong to tell lies. 2 It is right to keep promises. Someone who follows Duty based ethics should do the right thing, even if that produces more harm (or less good) than doing the wrong thing: People have a duty to do the right thing, even if it produces a bad result. So, for example, the philosopher Kant thought that it would be wrong to tell a lie in order to save a friend from a murderer. If we compare deontologists with consequentialists we can see that consequentialists begin by considering what things are good, and identify 'right' actions as the ones that produce the maximum of those good things. Deontologists appear to do it the other way around; they first consider what actions are 'right' and proceed from there. (Actually this is what they do in practice, but it isn't really the starting point of deontological thinking.) So a person is doing something good if they are doing a morally right action." (BBC Ethics). The doctrine of moral relativism is inconsistent, inasmuch as it establishes what it proclaims to be impossible to establish, and exalts universal moral absolutes: either a policy of tolerance toward others or a policy of aggression toward others. Held to be graspable by means of pure feeling or intuition independently of reason or experience, and to be irrelevant to consequences, the categorical imperative represents the absolute negation of morality because it sanctions the production of evil in the world. In his principle of universalizability, Kant attempts to do what it is impossible to do: to give rational reasons for obeying a categorical imperative. He states that one should obey a categorical imperative because if one did not, social structures and institutions would break down. He states that if one disobeyed the categorical imperative never to tell a lie, then people would be allowed to tell lies whenever it suited their purposes or whenever they found it expedient to do so, and the institution of honesty and promise keeping would break down. He states that if one disobeyed the categorical imperative to carry out all orders issued by a legally constituted authority, then people would be allowed to disobey orders whenever it suited their purposes or whenever they found it expedient to do so, and the legitimate institution of command and obedience would break down. In point of fact, social structures and institutions would not break down if a rational reason were provided to disobey a categorical imperative. It would not be rational to tell the truth if by doing so, one sent an innocent person to his death. It would not be rational for a subordinate to obey an order issued by his superior if by doing so, he committed an immoral or unjust act. Kant's morality of the categorical imperative reduces man to the level of a programmed, psychopathic robot spreading mass murder helter skelter in obedience to its own laws, feelings, intuitions and impulses. The philosophy of moral relativism has exacted a death toll reaching into the millions and spread fear and chaos in its wake. There is a pandemic of violence in the world, from Honduras to Detroit to London to Madrid to Moscow, which has seen killing sprees, knife attacks and acts of terror at their highest levels in history. The child murderer has been apprehended and placed on trial. He sits in the prisoner's dock before a panel of judges. These judges have the names Deontology, Kantianism, Existentialism and Expressionism. They have delivered their verdict: not guilty by reason of moral relativism. The defendant is set free. The culture fades to black.

RED DOT COM

The Communist International was an organization devoted to the establishment of a world Marxist state. At its second congress, it resolved to struggle by means of agitation, propaganda and force of arms to overthrow liberal democracies and create an international Soviet style regime. Over a half a century after the dissolution of the Comintern, the moral and spiritual successor of this organization has appeared on the scene and continued its campaign of subversion. It has appeared in cyberspace in the form of a global media infrastructure and commands a massive audience and wields massive power; included among its students and followers are elected officials, public intellectuals, law professors, historians, social scientists and Hollywood celebrities. Traveling at the speed of light, a media universe, fever swamp and whirlwind of partisan hysteria, presided over by red podcasters, red petitioners, red conspiracists, red commentators, red sensationalizers, red news aggregators, red peddlers of rumors, red traders in innuendos, red inventors of dishonest stories, and red traffickers in fake news and misinformation, has halted the search for truth, blocked the free exchange of ideas and information, and raised the specter of violence and bloodshed across every neighborhood, home, school and office in the world. The rulers of this new digital, notional environment which has taken control over the mental space of mankind have issued a program and manifesto for the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and the rational social order bequeathed to the present day by the Enlightenment, and the establishment of a red totalitarian tyranny in its place. They have proclaimed that the Trump presidency, the Republican Party, and the conservative libertarian movement are the mortal enemies of the people's liberation and must be swept aside by social justice commissars who will seize control over society and the government. They have proclaimed that American politicians, journalists and government officials are secret Russian agents working to subvert the nation and must be immediately sent to jail. They have proclaimed that Russian intelligence agencies possess compromising information on every American citizen and will use it to blackmail and manipulate the people. They have proclaimed that a sex tape involving President Trump will soon surface and be revealed to the public. They have proclaimed that Queen Elizabeth told President Trump that he must resign immediately. They have proclaimed that presidential administrations which defend the cause of freedom throughout the world are oppressive and war crazed and must be immediately ousted from office. They have proclaimed that the highest type of journalism is "multidimensional" journalism which rejects the dimension of reality, sweeps aside all "metanarratives" or universal truths, and engages in unabashed lying to advance the people's crusade of social justice and totalitarian dictatorship. They have proclaimed that Republican legislators in the House and Senate who resign their seats or choose not to run for reelection do so because they are being blackmailed by the Russians. Look at the red dominated internet environment which has enveloped the present day. Look at the digital rules written by the reds to ensure that ideas, opinions and political candidates which have come out in support of individual rights and the rule of law are never seen or heard by the public. Look at the search engines, the search algorithms and the instruments of search intelligence which have been taken over by the enemies of freedom in their campaign to fix elections, censor information, fabricate news, and obstruct the free flow of discussion and debate. Breathing the fires of red propaganda and assuming control over the eyes and ears of the people, a triple headed cyber monster called Google-Facebook-Twitter has prepared the way for the destruction of civilization: "Robert Epstein tried a simple experiment in the run up to the presidential election: running searches on Google and Yahoo for political topics. The results were stunning. Google searches returned twice as many proHillary Clinton news articles as Yahoo searches. Perhaps even more stunning was that men and blue state residents saw more than double the number of proClinton articles than women and people living in red states, Mr. Epstein, of the American Institute for Behavioral Research and Technology, and Robert E. Robertson, a professor at Northeastern University, argued in a report this year. Mr. Epstein said he is still studying what caused the bias but worries that Google's search algorithm—a form of artificial intelligence that chooses what results a searcher is looking for—ranked proClinton articles ahead of positive articles about her opponent, Donald Trump. Those algorithms have become the modern day Walter Cronkite or Edward R. Murrow, deciding what news reaches the eyes and ears of Americans in an increasingly Google-Facebook-Twitter dominated media environment." (How The Liberal Leanings Of Google, Facebook Shape The Political Landscape by Jeff Mordock). Look at the red manipulation of the Internet which has sown fields of hatred and rage against the capitalist system. Elevating biased and misleading information dyed in red to the status of Holy Writ, while burying and suppressing the voices of reasoned, liberal dissent, the social media companies which rule the Internet have acquired the power to shape contemporary politics, a power which is as fearsome and terrifying as it is unchallengeable and unshakeable. The omnipotent censors and gatekeepers of the world of cyberspace, controlling access to what people can see and hear, the leviathans of the Internet have crushed civilization and pushed it into the abyss: "In recent months, the focus has been on whether the companies were able to be manipulated by Russian connected operatives who attempted to sow chaos in the US surrounding last year's elections. But the power of the companies to shape American politics goes well beyond that. 'The social media companies are the gatekeepers,' said Frank Foer, a writer at The Atlantic and former editor of the New Republic who has authored a book on social media's power. 'Whatever choices these companies make to elevate or bury information is very powerful and will have a big impact on what people read.' Conservatives say they have long suspected that some of the internet giants discriminate against them and their content. They point to whistleblowers who have acknowledged they were pushed to treat conservatives differently." (How The Liberal Leanings Of Google, Facebook Shape The Political Landscape by Jeff Mordock). Look at the red programming of the Internet. Look at the red swamping of cyberspace by means of politically slanted search results, politically predetermined search sessions, and politically controlled search engines. Rejecting the liberal principles of truth, fact, objectivity and equal time, the reds have boosted the candidates of totalitarian tyranny and through secret sequences, instructions processes and calculations have shut down the information highway devised by free people: "Mr Epstein and Mr. Robertson, in their research, looked at 4,045 election related searches on Google and Yahoo during a twenty five day period from mid October through Election Day. They found that the proClinton articles swamped proTrump news. 'The algorithms are not programmed with an equal time rule,' said Mr. Epstein, a vocal Clinton supporter. 'They are programmed to put one thing ahead of another in a way that is highly secret and ever changing.' He said his experiments show the power of news searches to affect politics and has found that he could boost support for a candidate by as much as 63 percent after just one Google search session. That is based on five experiments Mr. Epstein ran in two countries in which study participants changed their opinions of a candidate based on a manipulated search engine. He has dubbed this the 'search engine manipulation effect.' " (How The Liberal Leanings Of Google, Facebook Shape The Political Landscape by Jeff Mordock). In the days of the Communist International, the reds spread their propaganda by such means as sidewalk pamphlets, physical chain letters, brick and mortar book stores, door to door tub thumping, megaphones blaring down public streets, and posters plastered throughout the public square. A half a century later, the reds have added to these physical means of transmission a gargantuan, imagination defying amplification. Its weapons include rigged search results, politically charged news probes, formulas filtering out viewpoints and perspectives which conflict with the principles of political correctness, and algorithms promoting red parties and red ideologies. Through a network, a community and an interconnected, interacting system of virtual reality leaping across the barriers of time and space and invading every digital page in the world, the reds have completed, effected and carried out their plan of sabotage and subversion.

CORPORATE REDS ATTACK CAPITALISM

The human resources department of a business corporation deals with the hiring, training and administration of personnel. Its traditional aim has been to ensure that only the most qualified people are kept, retained, rewarded and promoted in the organization. The evolution of Western civilization into the fever swamps of the radical left, commencing in the twentieth century, has resulted in a sea change in the function and activities of business corporations. Staffed and controlled by the forces of the left, today's corporations have become global beacons of red activism and red campaigning and have reconfigured their human resources departments into ideological watchdogs and all pervasive thought police whose aim is to ensure that job qualifications are downgraded as secondary considerations in personnel engagement and evaluation, and that only the most politically reliable employees are kept, retained, rewarded and promoted. From the mail room to the shop floor to the executive suites to the corporate boardroom, the politics of today's masses has left its mark and imprint and transformed business corporations into agents and engines of world revolution. Reflecting the general turn toward the left of society at large, the business world's turn toward the left has been faithfully recorded in interviews, articles, press releases, official statements, employee manuals, company handbooks and shareholder presentations produced by the chairmen, presidents, vice presidents and general managers in charge of global corporate power. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one which traffics in identity politics and fights for the rights of women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transsexuals and the poor, and disregards, as a construct of white male reaction, the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one which promotes the cause of social justice and has commenced a culture war to discredit Western liberal Enlightenment values. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one which has launched boycotts against cities and states which protect freedom of association and the right of private business establishments to serve whom they wish to serve on the ground that there is no such thing as a private business establishment. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one which promotes the people's red bigotry, the bigotry of women, nonwhites and the poor in their war of violence and persecution against successful, white males. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one which promotes the values and interests of the people as a whole, and is manned by graduates of the people's red universities and the people's red law schools who are dedicated to the creation of a multinational, multiheaded monster. This is a monster whose names include Apple, Disney and Paypal, and a monster which advertises the virtues and righteousness of red totalitarian power. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one which has declared war against the world of Wall Street, conservatism and entrepreneurial freedom in the name of the religious left, the mystical left, and the communities of gender, race and class activists. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one which is governed by a red mindset and a red philosophy which has suppressed the free exchange of ideas and opinions, named, shamed and summarily dismissed the voices of dissent who have dared to speak truth and reason to ideological conformity, and set up in the workplace a red envelopment and surrounding which protects and comforts the sensibilities of women, nonwhites, transgenders and homosexuals. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one whose culture and values are collectivist, antiliberal, anticapitalist, and dedicated to the enforcement of political correctness and to making "the world a better place", a better place for tribal identities to be recognized and to acquire unchallengeable political power. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one which is dedicated to the overthrow of liberal individualism, liberal meritocracy and modern industrial progress in the name of diversity, inclusiveness and environmental sustainability. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one whose discourse is dominated by slogans of gender, race and class oppression at the hands of the liberal capitalist system, and condemns as a malicious bigot any employee who stands up for a policy of rational, neutral, nonpolitical, evidence based assessment of all points of view. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one which fosters a diverse and inclusive workforce by prohibiting the hiring of white males. They have proclaimed that a progressive corporation is one which has bravely stood up to the reactionary, white male voices of libertarianism and conservatism in its workforce by segregating them, hounding them into cubbyholes, making them cower in fear and anxiety, marching them before the human resources firing squads, and expelling them from the ranks of the human race. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which encourages red corporate activism and sees it as a vital instrument for the mobilization of the masses to storm the ramparts of constitutional democracy. Look at the reds and see how they have silenced at the workplace the voices of liberal dissent and the defenders of meritocratic advancement. See how they have transformed centers of business, work and production into enclosed ideological spaces in which they encounter only their own beliefs and opinions and opposing beliefs are suppressed by endless reverberations of abuse and calumny and the holders of these beliefs are unceremoniously dismissed from the ranks of the organization. Prohibiting the free, open and honest exchange of ideas and opinions, and outlawing the fearless pursuit of truth and understanding, today's corporate reds have launched an attack. Establishing political bias as official company policy, and disallowing rational argumentation in the name of protecting the psychological health and well being of the employees, they have painted a portrait of the extremist, authoritarian future which awaits the West: "The Google engineer who penned a controversial antidiversity essay has confirmed he is no longer working for the firm, after being fired for 'perpetuating gender stereotypes.' Harvard graduate James Damore sparked outrage last week when he posted a sprawling memo—titled Google's Ideological Echo Chamber—in an internal company network. The ten page missive took aim at Google's 'misguided' diversity efforts. 'Discrimination to reach equal representation is unfair, divisive, and bad for business,' he added. Damore, who first joined Google in 2013, also argues that the company is deliberately silencing those who speak out against liberal [leftist] views or diversity initiatives. 'Google's political bias has equated the freedom from offense with psychological safety, but shaming into silence is the antithesis of psychological safety,' he wrote. 'This silencing has created an ideological echo chamber where some ideas are too sacred to be honestly discussed. The lack of discussion fosters the most extreme and authoritarian elements of this ideology.' " (Google Fires Employee Over Controversial Essay by Nicola Middlemiss). Look at the reds and see how they have unleashed a a firestorm of mob rule and political activism in business corporations and incinerated competence and professionalism. No challenge, no criticism, no open environment, no mental stimulation, no rational disputation, no support for the cause of truth and understanding, and no conflicting points of view, only the dead, monochromatic light of red ideological lockstep and thought regimentation: such as the state of today's corporations and such is the fearsome and terrifying future which awaits the West: "On Friday afternoon, Hachette Book Group announced publicly and to its employees that it will not publish Woody Allen's memoir, Apropos of Nothing, as planned next month. In a statement to NPR, the publisher said: 'Hachette Book Group has decided that it will not publish Woody Allen's memoir A Propos of Nothing, originally scheduled for sale in April 2020, and will return all rights to the author. 'The decision to cancel Mr. Allen's book was a difficult one. At HBG we take our relationships with authors very seriously, and do not cancel books lightly. We have published and will continue to publish many challenging books. As publishers, we make sure every day in our work that different voices and conflicting points of views can be heard. Also, as a company, we are committed to offering a stimulating, supportive and open work environment for all our staff. Over the past few days, HBG leadership had extensive conversations with our staff and others. After listening, we came to the conclusion that moving forward with publication would not be feasible for HBG.' " (Publisher Drops Woody Allen's Book After Ronan Farrow Objects, Employees Walk Out by Anastasia Tsioulcas). The reds are in control of today's corporations and mass consumption finances their operations. Every computer, smartphone, operating system and social media platform utilized is a vote for the reds and their plan of totalitarian rule. Every automobile, radio, television, item of food and airline ticket purchased is a financial grant to the social justice warriors who seek to halt the advance of history and force mankind into retreat from the age of liberal modernity. Conservative and libertarian shareholders, board members and chief executive officers are as common nowadays as the Tasmanian tiger and, amidst a culture locked in the grip of a wintertime age of collectivist politics, will never return to the world of business. The voices of liberty in today's workplaces have been outnumbered and outvoted by a tidal wave of red activists and have given up their struggle to preserve the integrity of their organizations. In any organization, personnel dictate policies, and the red personnel in charge of today's business organizations have brought to a culmination the march of the reds through the culture as as whole and ensured the doom of the West.

A WORLDWIDE WEB OF SUBVERSION

A template is a shaped piece of material which is used as a pattern for such processes as painting, drilling and cutting out. If one were charged with the sinister task of mass producing international movements and conspiracies whose aim is the overthrow of civilization, the template one would have to use would be the Communist International. Long before the onset of the global Islamist terror network which today menaces the free world, and long before the Internet began providing what it provides today, a global information and communication platform for the dissemination of red propaganda, an international communist organization established and controlled by the Soviet Union served as the model and standard for the criminals and malcontents of the world to copy and emulate in their campaign of sabotage and subversion of liberal governments and institutions. The story of the Communist International is the story of the worldwide growth and expansion of a movement and ideology appealing to those whose lives have been irremediably spoiled by the demons of envy, hatred, failure and frustration and who yearn for the destruction of the infrastructure of freedom and law which allows the doers and achievers of the world to flourish and prosper. After his seizure of power in Russia, communist leader Vladimir Lenin turned toward the task of world revolution. He founded the Communist International in 1919, eighteen months after the communist revolution in Russia, and set forth its aim and mission as the export of communist revolution abroad and the establishment of a world Marxist state under the leadership of the Soviet Union. Its policies were to overthrow legitimate liberal democratic governments throughout the world by violent, illegal means; to provide financial and tactical assistance to communist parties in other countries; and to use these parties for the purposes of espionage and subversion. He helped to form communist parties throughout the world, such as the Communist Party of China and the Communist Party of the United States, and placed these parties under the control of the central party in Moscow and the Communist International. Edgar Snow in Red Star Over China describes the workings, operations, strategy, tactics, political line and command structure of a criminal conspiracy directed against the free world. Under the control of Soviet Russia and its leader Joseph Stalin, and directing and supervising every communist party in the world, this secret plan was called the Communist International: "The political ideology, tactical line and theoretical leadership of the Chinese Communists have been under the close guidance, if not positive direction, of the Communist International, which during the last decade has become virtually a bureau of the Russian Communist Party. In the final analysis this means that for better or worse, the policies of the Chinese communists, like the communists in every other country, have had to fall in line with, and usually subordinate themselves to, the broad strategic requirements of Soviet Russia, under the dictatorship of Stalin." Look at the Marxists and see how they established an international association of the work shy, hate charged rabble of the world to overthrow the institutions of the liberal order. See how they they sought to sweep away the forces of law and order and install Soviet power in all nations. See how they worshiped the reign of terror and totalitarian violence voted into power by the Paris Commune and made it a model and standard for the communization of the world. See how they promoted the liquidation of the class of talented, successful, entrepreneurial achievers in the name of the workers' struggle for emancipation. See how they made blood spill down the streets of the free world by knives and daggers marked World Socialist Republic. See how they sought to disrupt the peace and tranquility of capitalist development by an insurgency of hoodlums ranged against human rights who marched under the banners of a new proletarian system. See how they transformed decent, law abiding citizens into red traitors and saboteurs who stabbed freedom in the back. See how they justified acts of vandalism, violation, desecration and brutalization in the name of freeing the working class from the yoke of capital. See how they unleashed across the world armies of galloping, subhuman marauders who called themselves communists. See how they marched the enemies of socialism and slavery off to slaughter and led the masses in a campaign to uproot every tree of reason and enlightenment in the land. A world soaked in blood, shattered by war, pitted by graves, divided up by proletarians, stalked by psychopathic murderers, terrorized by communist parties, and haunted by the specter of a world federation and republic ruled by red commissars. Such was the unholy mission of the Communist International in its campaign of destruction of civilization: "In March of this year of 1919, an international congress of communists was held in Moscow. This congress founded the Third Communist International, an association of the workers of the whole world who are striving to establish Soviet power in all countries. The First International, founded by Marx, existed from 1864 to 1872. The defeat of the heroic workers of Paris--of the celebrated Paris Commune--marked the end of this International. It is unforgettable. it will remain forever in the history of the workers' struggle for their emancipation. It laid the foundation of that edifice of the world socialist republic which it is now our good fortune to be building. The Second International existed from 1889 to 1914, up to the war. This was the period of the most calm and peaceful development of capitalism, a period without great revolutions. During this period the working class movement gained strength and matured in a number of countries. But the workers' leaders in most of the parties had become accustomed to peaceful conditions and had lost the ability to wage a revolutionary struggle. When, in 1914, there began the war, that drenched the earth with blood for four years, the war between the capitalists over the division of profits, the war for supremacy over small and weak nations, these leaders deserted to the side of their respective governments. They betrayed the workers, they helped to prolong the slaughter, they became enemies of socialism, they went over to the side of the capitalists. The masses of workers turned their backs on these traitors to socialism. All over the world there was a turn towards the revolutionary struggle. The war proved that capitalism was doomed. A new system is coming to take its place. The old word socialism had been desecrated by the traitors to socialism. Today, the workers who have remained loyal to the cause of throwing off the yoke of capital call themselves communists. All over the world the association of communists is growing. In a number of countries Soviet power has already triumphed. Soon we shall see the victory of communism throughout the world; we shall see the foundation of the World Federative Republic of Soviets." (The Third Communist International by Vladimir Lenin). The international communist movement and conspiracy was a sprawling, expansive, tentacular monster which throughout its career traveled under different names and changed these names to adapt to the requirements, expediencies and exigencies of the moment. The first and most famous name was the Communist International. In 1943, the Soviets changed the movement's name to the International Department of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. In 1947, the Soviets again changed its name and called it the Communist Information Bureau. In 1956, three years after the death of Stalin, the Cominform was dissolved and the international communist movement was led by an informal forum of communist parties which met in Moscow; the meetings and movement were coordinated, recorded and reviewed by the World Marxist Review, which was published by the parties. The international communist movement under the leadership of the Soviet Union endured for over seventy years and dissolved when the Soviet Union dissolved in 1991. This melancholy period saw the rise and ascendancy of a power which covered one sixth of the earth's surface, enslaved one third of the world's population, fomented revolutions in colonial nations, gained the sympathy and support of the masses and intelligentsia of the West, and planted espionage agents in every corner of the planet. This movement and its preeminent manifestation and general staff, the Communist International, has been a model and exemplar for the enemies of freedom for the past one hundred years. The gender, race and class activists in charge of the West today, together with their Islamist friends and allies, have studied the waves of propaganda and violence which emanated from the cells and towers of the Communist International. They have studied and imitated these and are filled with hope and optimism for the success of their own criminal aims.

TWO MONTHS WHICH SHOOK THE WORLD

The night was full of fury. Shells, shrapnel and gunfire burst in concert. The sky was red with mass murder. Walking through the fire and smoke of war and destruction, a phantom figure descends into Satan's chambers to write the story of the past two months in this city, the city of Paris, from March 18 to May 28, in the year 1871. These were two long, eventful, ominous months whose developments threatened the foundations of the liberal order and were a harbinger of the age of communism which would engulf the world a century later. This Satanic figure who wrote his story exalted the revolution which had transpired in the city. The revolution commenced at dawn on March 18 when thunder claps roared out Long Live The Paris Commune! The proletarian rabble of Paris, the multitudes of failures, nonachievers, idlers and shirkers, proclaimed that the hour had struck for them to take the government into their own hands. They proclaimed that it was their right and duty to make themselves masters over society and wielders of absolute power. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a social republic which has established the primacy of class rule over the rule of law. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which the mob has risen up in arms and replaced the legitimately constituted forces of the army and police by a people's national guard which will ransack homes, schools, offices and parliaments and hurl the great books of the Western world into the funeral pyres of civilization. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is ruled by an armed mob which will trample over the rights of the individual in the name of the working class. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is ruled by red councilors and commissars who will combine the offices of executive, legislator, judge and jury and exercise instant, absolute, untrammled power over the life and soul of the people. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is ruled by specially trained and constituted, people's political police force which is responsible for the enforcement of ideologically correct attitudes and opinions. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is based upon the equality of all people, the equality of the competent and the incompetent, the noble and the contemptible, the educated and the uneducated, and the skilled and the unskilled, and pays everyone the same wage. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a church of moral, spiritual and physical repression whose apostles, teachers, priests and parsons feed off the people as they wield absolute power over their lives, careers and fortunes. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has replaced liberal education by political proselytizing and placed science in the service of class power and prejudice. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one who judiciary is not independent of politics but is a rubber stamp of the will of the mob, and its decisions are reversible and revocable at any moment. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose employees, managers, executives and companies are agents of the mob and are constituted by the mob and make decisions on the basis of politics and not reason, morality, merit or quality. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose guiding democratic principles are universal suffrage extended to the lowest, basest, vilest strata of subhuman existence, and the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms by majority vote. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a neoChristian congregation and inquisition whose mission is to burn reason and enlightenment at the stake of class war, and crucify human freedom and dignity upon the altar of the people's state power. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which the individual has been reduced to the level of a wheel in the machinery of the people's social justice state, one whose mission is to crush of liberty in the mortar of equality and redistribute wealth to the scum of the world. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a proletarian government which has turned the moral universe upside down: it has expropriated the wealth produced by the class of the talented and successful, placed it in the hands of the shiftless multitudes, and unlocked the gates to the prison houses and mental asylums in the name of the emancipation of the downtrodden and the oppressed. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a regime of social slavery governed by a red constitution in which individuals have become mere attributes, levers and tools of production of a proletarian, class based state. Look at the reds of the Paris Commune and see how they abolished the most fundamental freedom lying at the basis of all other freedoms: the freedom to own property. See how they confiscated the wealth produced by the energy and ambition of an entrepreneurial class in the name of expropriation of the expropriators. See how they reduced the individual to a feudal serf in the service of the social organism in the name of the emancipation of labor. See how they transformed a civilized society into an arctic gulag under the banners of associated labor and cooperative production. See how they sacrificed the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual upon the altars of a common plan, common ownership, social regulation and the red flag of mob rule. See how they justified the nightmare and horror of a collectivist dystopia in the name of ending capitalist anarchy and fulfilling the laws and plan of human history. Collectivizing land, capital, markets, minds and bodies, see how they brought totalitarian enslavement and exploitation to a city in the West and sought to reverse one thousand years of liberal progress and enlightenment, and bring about the convulsion and collapse of civilization: "Yes, gentlemen, the Commune intended to abolish that class property which makes the labor of the many the wealth of the few. It aimed at the expropriation of the expropriators. It wanted to make individual property a truth by transforming the means of production, land, and capital, now chiefly the means of enslaving and exploiting labor, into mere instruments of free and associated labor. But this is communism, 'impossible' communism! Why, those members of the ruling classes who are intelligent enough to perceive the impossibility of continuing the present system—and they are many—have become the obtrusive and full mouthed apostles of cooperative production. If cooperative production is not to remain a sham and a snare; if it is to supersede the capitalist system; if united cooperative societies are to regulate national production upon common plan, thus taking it under their own control, and putting an end to the constant anarchy and periodical convulsions which are the fatality of capitalist production--what else, gentlemen, would it be but communism, 'possible' communism? The working class did not expect miracles from the Commune. They have no ready made utopias to introduce par décret du peuple. They know that in order to work out their own emancipation, and along with it that higher form to which present society is irresistibly tending by its own economical agencies, they will have to pass through long struggles, through a series of historic processes, transforming circumstances and men. They have no ideals to realize, but to set free the elements of the new society with which old collapsing bourgeois society itself is pregnant." (Civil War In France: The Paris Commune by Karl Marx). The phantom figure who wrote the story of the Paris Commune and exulted in its violence, destruction and dictatorship of the proletariat was Karl Marx. On May 21, the French Army entered the city to abolish the communist government and restore law and order. It encountered fierce resistance from communists and the seven days of communist fighting are known as the Bloody Week. When Marx finished his story, communist snipers were still firing from roofs, windows and cellars and ambulances were still screaming out of the city carrying under their blankets the dead bodies of the innocent. The story of the Paris Commune is the story of flotsam and jetsam without honest purpose or legitimate ambition streaming in like raw sewage from nations around the world, collecting in the streets of Paris, and achieving absolute political and economic power. It is the story of an untrammelled red mobocracy inspired by the ideas of Marx which ruled Paris for two months in 1871. The creator of the first communist revolution in the modern world, the Paris Commune was the precursor of the communist empire which, under the leadership of the Soviet Union, ruled most of the world for most of the twentieth century. Flashes of the Commune's massacres, committed in the name of freedom and justice for the working class, continue to hearten, encourage and light up the paths of Marx's followers, the gender, race and class activists who have achieved victory in the present day.

RED THUNDER CLOUDS OVER THE WORLD

A study of the mental characteristics and attitudes of the masses reveals a melancholy list of moral and political priorities. This list is dominated by such concerns as safety, security, health, welfare, brotherhood and equality. Nowhere in this list is there to be found any concern for the protection of human liberty. Such concern is the preserve of the few, who use their liberty to flourish and succeed as human beings ought to, and to live a life of rational purpose, achievement and self perfection, and do not view themselves as sacrificial lambs to be sent out to slaughter for the sake of the totality. For the masses, a safe, secure, healthy life predicated upon equal having, equal sharing, equal doing, equal thinking, the equal pursuit of bread and circuses, and the equal enjoyment of bestial license and bestial pleasure, is held to constitute the moral norm and moral perfection of man. This fact serves to explain the basic affinity the masses have always had for socialist systems, and their basic hostility toward the liberal order, which protects individual rights and demands self responsibility from all. It serves to explain the masses' extreme, unremitting hostility toward the Greco-Roman system of ordered liberty, which makes rights conditional upon their use, demands rational, human flourishing from all, and does not protect the rights of those who do not rationally, humanly flourish. It serves to explain the political developments which have taken place since the dawn of the twentieth century and rise to dominance of welfare states and totalitarian systems of all stripes and varieties which have driven human freedom past the point of total extinction. The story of the past one hundred years is the story of the masses' love affair with red ideologies, red revolutions, red regimes and the red agitators who ruled them. It saw the enactment of a social regulatory, Social Gospel and managed competition state under the banner of Progressivism in the early decades of the twentieth century. It saw the United States grant diplomatic recognition to the Soviet Union, the greatest Marxist state and the most murderous regime in the history of mankind, in 1933. It saw the abandonment of the gold standard throughout the West in the 1930s and its replacement by a system of fiat money which derived its value by nothing more than governmental decree. This enabled governments to finance an ever expanding welfare state by simply printing money. The story of the past one hundred years saw the enactment of a system of social security, welfare support, public works programs, government control of the financial industry and government inflation of the currency under the banner of a New Deal in the 1930s. It saw the formation of the Big Three during World War II, a Grand Alliance between America, Britain and the Soviet Union. It saw America providing tens of billions of dollars in military armaments and equipment to the Soviets under the Lend Lease program during the war. It saw America and Britain at the wartime Tehran Conference grant to the Soviets total authority in the Balkans and allow them to enslave one hundred million people in Eastern Europe. It saw America and Britain at the wartime Potsdam Conference grant the Soviets authority over East Germany, thereby isolating West Berlin from the West. It saw America and Britain at the wartime Yalta Conference give Manchuria, North Korea and the Kurile Islands to the Soviets. It saw General Dwight Eisenhower order General George Patton to halt his drive into Czechoslovakia to defeat the communists. It saw General Eisenhower withdraw from the Elbe River and allow Soviet troops to occupy Berlin. It saw America deny weapons to Nationalist China or sell them at list prices while other nations were paying discounted prices. It saw the State Department withhold funds and weapons from the Nationalists which the Congress had voted for. It saw General George Marshall order Nationalist leader Chiang Kai Shek to include communists in his government. It saw Washington's suppression of the Wedemeyer Report, written by General Albert Wedemeyer, which recommended that vigorous American military training and assistance be given to the Nationalists. The surrender of North Korea to the communists resulted in communist aggression against South Korea and a war in which the West was unwilling to fight to victory: "I gained the unenviable distinction of being the first United States army commander in history to sign an armistice without a victory." (From The Danube To The Yalu by Mark Clark). The story of the past one hundred years saw the creation and encouragement of a threat to mankind beyond all other threats ever confronted. This was a threat which was allowed to advance relentlessly at the Tehran, Yalta and Potsdam conferences during World War II, and to spread its tentacles into the Far East with victories in Korea and China. This was the danger and peril of an international communist movement, party and conspiracy. This was a movement which emanated from Moscow, was led by the Soviet government, was financed and supported by the red masses and intelligentsia in the West, and which shattered the form and structure of the civilized world: "Having thus created the communist menace, we nurtured it with eleven billion dollars of lend lease, without strings. We nurtured it with Tehran, with Yalta, with Potsdam, with failing to win in Korea, where our top military men said we could and should have won. All this in spite of the fact that the American ambassador in Moscow had cabled in 1936, 'We should not cherish for a moment the illusion that it is possible to establish really friendly relations with the Soviet government or with any Communist Party or communist individual.' " (Martin Dies' Story by Martin Dies). The story of the past one hundred years saw British Prime Minister Winston Churchill abandon conservative principles and accept the newly created welfare state in the 1950s. It saw the enactment of antidiscrimination laws invading the right of private property, freedom of association and freedom of enterprise beginning in the 1960s. It saw the hijacking of the legal system by a feminist hate movement bent on imprisoning as many men as possible on the basis of false or frivolous sexual assault charges supported by nothing more than an allegation or series of allegations. It saw the final nail in the coffin of the West in the shutting down of the global economy and the placing of human rights and fundamental freedoms under quarantine and lockdown in the twenty first century. This was done in the name of fighting the covid 19 pandemic and was enthusiastically embraced by the masses in their prioritization of medical health over personal liberty. Look at the reds and see how they invaded, occupied, vandalized, desecrated and dumped in the New York Harbor a world renowned statue, once a beacon of hope and inspiration to the oppressed and downtrodden throughout the world. Given to America as a gift from France to commemorate the American Revolution, the Statue of Liberty was pulled into the waters of oblivion by rampaging red mobs and replaced by a Statue of Public Health: "About 150 demonstrators braved the edict against mass gatherings in Dallas, many of them carrying home-made signs saying things such as Free the People, Constitutional Rights Matter, The Shutdown Is Not Legal and Work Not Welfare as they marched around the south end of Dealey Plaza with Reverend Stephen Broden leading them and carrying a megaphone chanting, 'Shut down the shutdown—elected officials work for us.' " (Citizens Rally to 'Shut Down the Shutdown' In Dallas by Kurt Hyde). The past one hundred years in the West have been a dark and stormy night, roaring and crashing with the noise of red politics and red revolution. From Progressivism to Marxism to gender, race and class politics to the lockdown, shutdown and curtailment of freedom of movement across the world under the banner of protecting public health and fighting covid 19, the story of the West since the dawn of the twentieth century has been a story of the cancerous expansion of government, controlling and dominating every aspect of thought and behavior. Red empires, red takeovers, red occupations, red regulations red speech codes, red taxation, red confiscation, red prison houses, red concentration camps, red justice, red kangaroo courts, red lynchings, red hysteria, red public schools, red universities, red environmentalists, red home confinement, red social distancing, red induced recessions and depressions. Such is the tyranny and terror which has rained down upon an evening land called the West over the past one hundred years. It has been justified in the name of the National Interest, the New Deal, the Fair Deal, the New Frontier, the Great Society, Compassionate Conservatism, the Rights of Women, Nonwhites And The Poor, Freedom From Discrimination, Diversity, Inclusion, Equity And Social Justice, Hope And Change, the Social Dimension Of Life, Something Bigger And Greater Than The Self, the Right to Healthcare, We Are All In This Together, A Sense Of Oneness, Belonging And Community, Black Lives Matter, Zero Carbon Emissions, Extinction Rebellion, the Air, Trees, Water And Animals, a Green New Deal, Multiculturalism, Moral Relativism, the Moral Superiority of Non Western Cultures, and Fighting the Covid 19 Pandemic. Promoted, supported and installed into power by the masses in their craving for safety, security, health, welfare, equality, fraternity, the rights of gender, race, class and sexual orientation tribes, and the rights of everything and everyone except the rights of free, sovereign, self acting individuals, these are the slogans and rubrics of the totalitarian doom and disintegration of the West.

THE IRISH RED ARMY

The popular front was a common communist tactic for seizing power in which communists formed a coalition with noncommunist factions and entered the ranks of government. In the 1930s, communists in Spain and France formed popular fronts and achieved political power. But the prototype and exemplar of the popular front appeared in Ireland in the 1920s when communists entered the Irish Republican Army and transformed it into a communist front organization. Members of the newly formed Communist Party of Ireland worked within the IRA and after it suffered defeat by the forces of the Irish Free State, party leaders Roderick Connolly and George Pollock traveled to London, where they met with Mikhail Borodin, an agent of the Communist International. Dispatched by the Soviets to assist the IRA, Borodin set forth a communist program for the Republicans, demanding the nationalization of land and industry, the abolition of rent, the arming of red workers, and the overthrow of liberal democracy. Borodin also set forth a plan to set up a Soviet government in Cork, modeled after the government set up in Munster, and by mobilizing the masses with the communist program, thereby defeat the Irish Free State and win the civil war then raging. Listen to Communist Party member Sean McLoughlin who promotes Borodin's program to the IRA. Listen as he tells IRA leader Liam Lynch to prepare and organize the sewage from the cities, towns and farms to rampage against the rule of law and in a cyclone of fury and madness hurl freedom in Ireland into an inferno of socialist totalitarian tyranny: "Victory lies with the side that can attract itself to the masses, the workers of the towns and cities, and the landless peasants. Republicans, here is your chance. With the workers behind you, the Free State lapses into the black hell from whence it came." Listen to Communist Party leader Charles McGuire who raised the red flag over the IRA and moved it into Marxist socialism. Who sought to overthrow the Irish government and in the name of antiimperialism and the class struggle, demanded the destruction of one thousand years of freedom and liberty in a blood drenched civil war. This was a war to be fought between the talented and successful classes of society, and the misfits, malcontents and abject failures who reproduced in its sewers and basements, marching under the banners of communism: "The Irish Civil War was a deeply significant conflict. It exposed starkly the class divides in the Irish independence movement and, as a result of the input of the Communist Party of Ireland, led to a section of the IRA moving toward socialism as a means of toppling the Free State. For socialists and antiimperialists today, it remains a conflict worthy of close study. This is because it showed clearly that any compromises with imperialism only strengthens it, and that any antiimperialist strategy that divorces itself from the struggles of the working class will either end up angling for such a compromise, or be powerless to prevent it." (Communists And The Irish Civil War by Charles McGuire). Listen to Irish communist leader James Connolly who sought to sweep away the Irish republic of freedom and liberty and install a socialist autocracy in its place. Who condemned the institutions and government of free, sovereign, independent people and agitated for the people's enslavement and destruction at the hands of an international movement and conspiracy. Seeking to abolish liberal, capitalist democracy and make the people's red commissars the owners, landlords and masters over society, he packaged chaos and criminality in bright red ribbons marked The Cause Of Labor and The Struggle For Freedom and worked for political change which would transport Ireland at the speed of light into the year zero: "An Irish Republic, the only purely political change in Ireland worth crossing the street for, will never be realized except by a revolutionary party that proceeds upon the premise that the capitalist and the landlord classes in town and country in Ireland are criminal accomplices with the British government, in the enslavement and subjection of the nation. Such a revolutionary party must be socialist, and from socialism alone can the salvation of Ireland come. Only the working class remains as the incorruptible inheritors of the struggle for freedom in Ireland. The cause of labor is the cause of Ireland, and the cause of Ireland is the cause of labor, the two cannot be dissevered." Listen to the voice of an Irish communist who condemns the Anglo-Saxon heritage of human rights and the rule of law as a system of viciousness and cruelty directed against the working class. Who speaks the language of force and violates and promotes a culture of collectivization of mind and body in the name of the emancipation of the proletariat. Who seeks to overthrow the English rule of rational jurisprudence and liberal democracy by a permanent, never ending, ever intensifying revolution of rampaging red mobs. Who condemns the notion of a free, sovereign state protecting the rights of its citizens as a product of bourgeois nationalism and advocates the establishment of a global red empire and prison house of nations. Who has fed and nourished a mass mob animal, one which is ferocious, aggressive, wild and dangerous, and unleashed it to revolt and run riot against everything decent, benevolent and law abiding in the world. People without property, people without freedom, people without dignity, people stalked by poverty and starvation, and people brutalized, oppressed and surveilled around the clock: such is the frightful, terrifying dream of the IRA reds which they package under the name of a National Democratic Socialist Revolution and have killed thousands of people in a campaign to bring into actuality: "Ireland was England's first colony and experienced the vicious cruelty of the Anglo-Saxon ruling class long before the peoples of Africa and Asia. From the twelfth century onwards the Irish nation was devastated by a series of wars of conquest--the economy was wrecked, the people reduced to starvation, and their language and culture destroyed. Centuries of brutal oppression under English rule bred a fierce spirit of revolt and repeated uprisings. The whole history of these struggles is dominated by the courage of the people's struggles on the one hand, and by the betrayal of those struggles at every turn by the bourgeois nationalist leaders on the other. It is no accident, therefore, that without ever referring to Trotsky's phrase the Permanent Revolution, nevertheless, we find exactly the same conclusion running through all the writings of James Connolly. Namely, that the bourgeoisie in the modern epoch is incapable of solving the tasks of the national democratic revolution. That the leadership of that revolution has passed to 'the men (and women) of no property', to the 'incorruptible inheritors of the fight for freedom', the working class, who will not stop at its boundaries but must carry on to the tasks of the socialist revolution." (Socialism And The Long Struggle For Irish Freedom by Phil Mitchinson). The Communist Party of Ireland, the Workers' Party and the Irish Republican Army were loyal members of the Soviet Union's global network and conspiracy. Their agenda, established by Moscow, was to overthrow the Irish government and transform Ireland into a Soviet satellite state in the manner of Cuba and the nations of Eastern Europe. Obeying orders issued by the Soviets, the IRA manipulated the mobs of Northern Ireland, agitated on the streets, and championed red totalitarian tyranny in the name of civil rights and freedom from discrimination. They promoted the use of violence and terror in the name of achieving union between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic and the establishing a workers' socialist republic. The Soviets proclaimed that the IRA was a national liberation movement, utilized it as an espionage center against the West, and supplied it with massive arms shipments. In 1972, in Derry, Northern Ireland, IRA gunman, arsonists and bomb throwers, on a mission of terror, were killed by police on a day memorialized by Marxists the world over as Bloody Sunday. The purpose of the planned attacks was to plunge Ireland into anarchy and overthrow the government. With communist assistance, the IRA then burned down the British embassy in Dublin. Spreading fear and panic under a plethora of names, from the Original IRA to the Official IRA to Sinn Fein to Fianna Fail to the Workers' Party of Ireland to the Irish National Liberation Army to the Irish People's Liberation Organization to the Democratic Left to the Provisional IRA to the Continuity IRA to the Irish Republican Liberation Army to the Real IRA to the Thirty Two County Sovereignty Movement to the Republican Action Against Drugs to the New IRA, the Irish nationalist movement has served as a front for Marxist ideas and activities and a vehicle of Soviet subversion. A quarter of a century after the fall of its Soviet masters, the movement's Marxist aspirations continue unabated as does its campaign of destruction.

THE RED MONEY PRESS

Magic is the belief in the existence of a power which can influence the course of events by supernatural means. In the sixteenth century, when European nations conquered and colonized primitive, savage lands, they replaced the belief in magic which they found deeply rooted there by a belief in the primacy of reason and science. In the twentieth century, the West entered upon a stage of decline and fall which saw a resurgence in the belief in magic. Among the deadliest and most blatant examples of this resurgence lay in the field of economics and saw the belief that value can be created by the mere printing of money unrestrained by any objective standard of value. It was the belief that the value of a currency can be defined by government fiat and not in terms of anything real. This belief resulted in the abandonment of the gold standard, under which a nation's paper currency has a value which is directly linked to gold, and the establishment in its place of a fiat currency, which is accepted as a means of payment simply by government order or fiat, and is backed by nothing outside the government's control. Reds of all persuasions, united one and all by a philosophy of statism, led the movement to abandon the gold standard and establish a fiat currency by their desire to finance the burgeoning welfare state. The belief in the legitimacy and propriety of a fiat currency is a dogma from the department of magic and is among the bedrock beliefs which govern the economics of the present day. The proponents of a fiat currency have issued a program and manifesto for a return to the age of voodoo and witchcraft which is intended to finance the new socialist leviathan which looms ominous and threatening over the people and has invaded their lives and liberty. They have proclaimed that the gold standard is incompatible with a policy of deficit spending and borrowing money through the issuance of government bonds, which are necessities to help finance the people's social equity state, and therefore must be replaced by a fiat currency. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is an egalitarian swampland in which the government taxes the wealth of the achieving, productive members of society and with this stolen wealth, plus wealth generated by the printing of money, sets up social programs to benefit the class of nonachievers, nonproducers, loungers and layabouts and elevate them to become a new class of multimillionaires. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is financed by paper reserves, endless credit expansion and government bonds unshackled to the facts of reality and backed by nothing more than the will of the state. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which forces its citizens to convert their gold coins, bullion, and certificates into worthless paper currency. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has defined its currency as legal tender by way of a decree from the people's commissars on high. The attack on the gold standard by the reds is an attack on reason, liberty and human welfare. It is an attack on objective values, physical commodities and real wealth. It is an attack on international trade, progress, and law and order. It is an attack on the world of free minds, free souls, free markets, and the riches which come from honest work and real production. It is an attack on sanity, soundness, human well being and the advancement of the liberal order. It is an attack on peaceful cooperation and the unity of nations which produce real goods and real services. It is an attack on real money and real transactions in the name of the politics and economics of those who have bid farewell to the demands of the world around them and are mentally and emotionally unbalanced. It is a melancholy banner emblazoned with the fantasies and superstitions of latter day sorcerers and necromancers who proclaim the power to transform base paper into infinite wealth. It is the declaration of a deranged, disordered dream to reach heights of unprecedented, unheard of wealth by the wave of a magic wand and a decree from the people's proletarian state. Sowing seeds of psychosis, mob rule, welfare statism, arbitrary currency exchange rates, and the legal counterfeiting of coins and notes, to the remotest parts of the world where modern industrialism and real capital had once civilized and liberated savage, backward lands, the attack on the gold standard launched by the reds is a doctrine, a policy and a war of sabotage and destruction directed against everything achieved by successful, flourishing, well ordered human beings: "The gold standard was the world standard of the age of capitalism, increasing welfare, liberty, and democracy, both political and economic. In the eyes of the free traders its main eminence was precisely the fact that it was an international standard as required by international trade and the transactions of the international money and capital market. It was the medium of exchange by means of which Western industrialism and Western capital had borne Western civilization into the remotest parts of the earth's surface, everywhere destroying the fetters of age old prejudices and superstitions, sowing the seeds of new life and new well being, freeing minds and souls, and creating riches unheard of before. It accompanied the triumphal unprecedented progress of Western liberalism ready to unite all nations into a community of free nations peacefully cooperating with one another. It is easy to understand why people viewed the gold standard as the symbol of this greatest and most beneficial of all historical changes. All those intent upon sabotaging the evolution toward welfare, peace, freedom, and democracy loathed the gold standard, and not only on account of its economic significance. In their eyes the gold standard was the labarum, the symbol, of all those doctrines and policies they wanted to destroy. In the struggle against the gold standard, much more was at stake than commodity prices and foreign exchange rates." (Human Action by Ludwig von Mises). The attack on the gold standard is an attack on those who oppose government induced inflation, bankruptcy and impoverishment. It is an attack on those who reject the ambition of the mob and its agents to create wealth by counterfeiting money. It is an attack on political parties and pressure groups who pander to the masses and shower them with riches which do not exist. It is an attack on those who are not disabled by psychosis and understand that no one can become rich by the printing of money. It is an attack on those who reject the superstition that money can be conjured up out of the void and purchasing power increased by government fiat. Worshiping at the altar of the omnipotent state, the reds have taken over the national banks and inundated society with pieces of paper. These are marked The Magic of Alchemy, The Miracle Of Will Created Wealth And The Destruction Of Civilization: "The significance of the fact that the gold standard makes the increase in the supply of gold depend upon the profitability of producing gold is, of course, that it limits the government's power to resort to inflation. The gold standard makes the determination of money's purchasing power independent of the changing ambitions and doctrines of political parties and pressure groups. This is not a defect of the gold standard; it is its main excellence. Every method of manipulating purchasing power is by necessity arbitrary. The gold standard removes the determination of cash induced changes in purchasing power from the political arena. Its general acceptance requires the acknowledgment of the truth that one cannot make all people richer by printing money. The abhorrence of the gold standard is inspired by the superstition that omnipotent governments can create wealth out of little scraps of paper." (Human Action by Ludwig von Mises). The confiscation of wealth through price inflation. The theft of property through the fraud of fiat money. Debts paid in worthless paper. Bank deposits consisting of coins and notes counterfeited by the state and devoid of all value. No safe store of value permitted anywhere in society. No means for the owners of real wealth to protect themselves. Workers paid in worthless currency and cheated out of compensation. Government created paper currency submerging the economy, drowning labor and capital, and filling up an ocean of poverty and deprivation. Such is the frightening dystopia and underworld of the dead brought into being by the forces of the left in their quest to conjure up wealth by the power of an official order and make the mobs rich beyond their wildest dreams. Such is the final stage of the West rung open by the avatars of mysticism and the occult in their fearsome and terrifying policy and regime. It is a policy to revive alchemy, legitimize the belief in miracles, and transform death into life and paper into real wealth. It is a regime to shower the subhuman waste reproducing in the sewers of the earth with mountains of lucre through magical creation, the abandonment of the gold standard, and the descent into raging insanity.

REDS TARGET ISRAEL

Wolves hunt in packs and bring down their prey in a relentless, coordinated effort. Since the establishment of the state of Israel in 1948, the forces of the left have been involved in a massive, worldwide, coordinated effort to destroy Israel and have stopped at nothing in their efforts to do so. These forces consisted in the Soviet Union, the Warsaw Pact states, Maoist China, communist parties around the world, Marxist governments in the Third World, and leftist intellectuals, activists and political parties in America and Europe. These forces have targeted Israel for one reason and one reason alone: because Israel since its inception has been a liberal democracy firmly aligned with the West and uncompromisingly anticommunist. The Soviet war against Israel had its antecedent in Lenin's condemnation of zionism as "bourgeois nationalism" and "a socially regressive movement" because it rejected Marxist class divisions and a Marxist class war. In the 1950s, less than a decade after Israel's founding, the Soviets and their satellite states began arming Arab states. In 1965, Mao opened an Office of the Palestinian Liberation Office in Beijing. The nonaligned nations of the Third World denounced Israel as as a dagger of Western imperialism. In 1967, the Socialist German Student Association passed a resolution condemning Israel. The resolution stated that the Arab struggle against Israel was a struggle by the oppressed and the downtrodden to defeat Western capitalist imperialism. It stated that Arab refugees must be rehabilitated back to Israel in order to destroy capitalism in the country and create a socialist state. It stated that Israel must be swept away by a revolutionary Marxist movement which will storm the ramparts of Anglo-American liberal order and reconfigure the people into dutiful workers in the service of a red totalitarian tyranny. In 1967, the Soviet Union instigated an armed conflict against Israel by its client states, Egypt and Syria. The Soviets' aim was to protect the antiAmerican, antiWestern governments in Egypt and Syria, consolidate communist forces throughout the Middle East, and bring about the destruction of Israel. Toward the end of the six day war which saw a resounding victory for Israel, the Soviets aided Syria by providing a naval landing, airborne reinforcements and air support for ground operations to help stop an Israeli advance. Listen to the words of East German leader Walter Ulbricht as he denounces Israel as an oppressive, aggressive, colonialist state by virtue of the fact that it repelled two Soviet proxy states and spread freedom into the West Bank and Gaza Strip: "The world cannot accept that a quarter of a century after the Second World War, the aggressor Israel and its men behind the scenes form a Sinai Protectorate or a General Government of Jordan for the purpose of renewed colonial oppression of the Arab peoples." In 1969, the journal Agit published the leaflet Shalom And Napalm written by terrorists who had sought to blow up a Jewish community center in West Berlin. The leaflet stated that Anglo-American liberal democracy is a system of atrocities perpetrated against Palestinian Arabs and must be replaced in Israel by a movement of Arab and Palestinian guerrillas. This movement will expel and massacre the Jewish voices of personal freedom and private capital and establish a fascist, national socialist state for the Palestinians: "Under the guilt laden pretext of coming to terms with the fascist atrocities against the Jews, they [West German government and industry] make a decisive contribution to Israel's fascist atrocities against Palestinian Arabs. True antifascism is the clear and simple expression of solidarity with the fighting fedayeen. The Jews who were expelled by fascism have themselves become fascists who, in collaboration with American capital, want to eradicate the Palestinian people." In 1975, the United Nations issued a condemnation of Israel. It stated that Israel, by virtue of being a Western style liberal democracy in which individuals are afforded maximum freedom under the rule of law, is racist, aggressive, colonialist, expansionist and fascist. It must be overthrown by a people's liberation movement to establish an Arab nation and homeland dedicated to the rollback of modern civilization: "Israel is racist and fanatic in its nature, aggressive, expansionist, and colonial in its aims, and fascist in its methods. Israel is the instrument of the Zionist movement, and geographical base for world imperialism placed strategically in the midst of the Arab homeland to combat the hopes of the Arab nation for liberation, unity, and progress." Look at the reds and see their hatred of Israel and the Jews reach down to their core and essence. See how they esteem Arab terrorist organizations as valued friends and allies. See how they lay wreathes on the graves of Arab terrorists and glorify those who massacre Jews. See how they traffic in obscenities and calumniation against Jews. See how they are affected with a fanaticism of the soul which makes them foam with hatred against the Israeli voices of liberal freedom and progress. See how they launch streams and outpourings of unrestrained adulation to Muslim rabble rousers stirring up the gutters of the Arab street. See how they sanction ambushes and assassinations of soldiers and policemen protecting law and order in Middle East. Unrestrained by the principles of reason, facts, empiricism or common sense, the preachers and propagandists of socialism have painted a portrait of the world. It is a portrait painted in the colors of frenzy and delirium. It is a portrait painted in the tones of paranoia and conspiracy. It is a portrait painted in the sulphuric studios of Marx and Hitler. It is a portrait painted in the flames and heat of The Communist Manifesto and Mein Kampf. It is a portrait of the domination of the world at the hands of Jewish capitalist bankers, financiers, industrialists and imperialists. It has set into motion a whirlwind of unmitigated horror, a trajectory of unabashed criminality, and an agenda of violence and terror. Fueled and fanned by the Laborites, Corbynites and the Democratic Party activists of the left, this whirlwind, trajectory and agenda has rained down death and destruction to Israel and the Jews: "Labor Party boss, Jeremy Corbyn, is antisemitic to his core. He has referred to Hamas and Hezbollah as his friends. In September 2014 he laid a wreath over the graves of terrorists responsible for orchestrating the 1972 massacre of eleven Israeli athletes in Munich. He defended a mural depicting Jewish bankers (with grotesquely exaggerated facial features) exploiting minorities, and actively participated in Facebook groups in which antisemitic conspiracy theories and memes were casually tossed about. He offered praise for Raed Salah, a rabid Muslim preacher who referred to Jews as germs and claimed that Jews used the blood of nonJewish children for ritualistic purposes. After sixteen Egyptian soldiers and policemen were killed in an ISIS ambush in Sinai, Corbyn, in an interview with an Iranian propaganda site, blamed Israel saying that the Israelis had most to gain from the deaths of Egyptians. He also offered praise and wrote the foreword for a reprint of a book whose author alleged that Jews control world economies through their domination of the financial and banking sectors. I always feared that the potential existed for the Democratic Party to be subsumed by the radical agenda pushed by extremist socialists within their ranks but never imagined that the descent into Corbynism would be so swift and devastating. Democrats have a serious antisemitism problem that mirrors British Labor. If the current ideological trajectory continues, Democrats will not only face insurmountable odds in 2020, they will lose a vital constituency and cause irreparable harm to their party." (A Radical Squad's Jew Hate by Ari Lieberman). Whatever is premodern, preEnlightenment, antimodern, antiEnlightenment and postEnlightenment in outlook and attitude, the forces of the left embrace as their friends and allies. Arab culture embodies this outlook and attitude and has been supported and encouraged by the forces of the left. Throughout the world, reds of all persuasions have joined together, formed an alliance with the Arab world, and launched a campaign against Israel which has replicated Hitler's war against the Jews. Wielding unchallengeable power and descending to the worst of all evils, the international leftist movement and conspiracy has placed Israel within its sights and launched a campaign of total destruction. Blinded by hatred toward the world of modernity, reason, science, freedom, self responsibility, the rule of law, constitutional government and Western Enlightenment values, the antisemites and antizionists at work today have held aloft their banners emblazoned with swastikas, hammers and sickles, and the slogans and insignia of gender, race and class activism. They have held them aloft and charged into Israel, a shining, blooming garden of the liberal, rationalist world of the West which grew and developed amidst the primitive, desert savagery of the Arabian Middle East. They have charged into Israel in a quest to carry out a Final Solution and drown a lone citadel of civilization in a tidal wave of blood.

THEY WALKED ALONE

War heroes come in all shapes and sizes and do not always wear uniforms or carry deadly weapons. The West's war against communism was conducted by Western governments and had little grassroots appeal. Distinguished by a basic sympathy and affinity for the swamplands of collectivism which fill the world of communism, and contemptuous down to their core and essence of the system of liberty which allows the great and the excellent to flourish, the masses produced few heroes in the Cold War struggle to defend the free world against communism. Those among the masses who did step forward to fight the communists served only to highlight the general sympathy and indifference shown in the West to the red menace which advanced toward it and was ready to devour its civilization. Two such heroes who rose up among the mass of ordinary citizens were the most successful communist informants in history and their careers were shining monuments to the triumph of moral integrity over mass corruption, and the yearning to protect freedom over the desire to enforce equality, and served as beacons of hope and inspiration to all those who dared to defy the will of the mob and to speak truth and right before the degraded thrones of the majority. These two heroes were Herbert Philbrick and Matt Cvetic and their stories are the stories of the living who rose up among the dead, who rose up among those whose souls had been invaded and taken away by the reds, and were the stories of those who turned their backs on their family, friends, neighbors and colleagues, so that their children and children's children could grow up in freedom. Herbert Philbrick's involvement with communism commenced in 1941 when he joined the Cambridge Youth Council, a communist front group in Cambridge, Massachusetts. His suspicions were aroused by the Leninist power structure of the group and by the antiAmerican positions adopted by it. He contacted the Federal Bureau of Investigation and offered to become an informant. He next joined the Young Communist League and then the Communist Party itself. Philbrick was an advertising salesman and a Baptist youth leader and he was used by the party for his communication skills and public profile associated with these positions. He worked in local party cells in Wakefield and Walden, Massachusetts. He received training in the tenets of Marxism and Leninism and worked for the party in front groups. He was told by the leadership that the party operated front groups across the length and breadth of New England. He left local party work and was promoted to work in a cell of seasoned professionals, where he worked on the 1948 presidential campaign of Henry Wallace, who was running on the ticket of the communist front Progressive Party. In 1949, his secret life was exposed when he became the star witness in the trial in New York City of the Communist Party leadership under the Smith Act on charges of seeking to overthrow the United States government by force and violence and establish a red totalitarian tyranny in America. He exposed the leaders as culpable plotters, testified about the instruction he had received in the theory and practice of class war, and affirmed that Marxism is a criminal conspiracy whose aim is to subvert free institutions, sweep away the rule of law, and establish the world domination of mob power under the direction of red emperors, bosses, demagogues and commissars. Listen to Philbrick as he describes the communist mind. It is a mind blackened and eaten away by a fearsome and terrifying disease. This is the disease of serial thrill killing, the sensationalization of brawling and street fighting, scheming, plotting and propagandizing for revolution and overthrow, and the perpetration of mass violence exalted as the most pleasurable form of excitement. Promoted by a party of moral and political psychopaths and pornographers who proudly claim to be emancipated from reason and to be unshackled to morality, this is the disease of Murder Incorporated which commits its crimes under the banners, the sanctions and the theoretical support of Marxism: "I used to sit next to these people in these meetings and try to figure out why, why were they doing it? I don't know. All I can say is that the communist mind is definitely a criminal mind. They seem to get a big thrill out of being a part of this conspiracy, out of putting it over on people. We're the smart ones and they're the stupid ones. Intellectual arrogance is definitely a part of it." (Interview in The Boston Globe). "Case closed", proclaimed the judge in the Foley Square Courthouse in New York City as he banged out the glorious culmination of Philbrick's career against communism. Based on Philbrick's testimony, the jury in the case found the Communist Party leadership guilty of sedition and they were sentenced to spend years behind bars. Matt Cvetic's involvement with communism commenced after he received a telephone call from the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Impressed by his unswerving opposition to communism and to its monstrous juggernaut which had advanced relentlessly across Eastern Europe, the FBI asked him if he would be prepared to turn his back on his family, friends, and normal social and business existence and infiltrate the Communist Party. Contemplating in fear and trembling the future of a world devoid of human freedom and dignity, a world crushed beneath the leviathan of communism, Cvetic agreed without a moment's hesitation. In 1943, he joined the party and began reporting on a regular basis to the FBI. During his career as an informant, he attended over 3,000 party meetings, compiled over 50,000 pages of reports on party conspiracies, and provided the FBI with the names of hundreds of Soviet spies and secret police, and American communists. Believing he was a communist, his mother, father, wife, children, friends and business associates scorned him, swore vengeance upon him, and shut him out of their lives. His sole contacts were his fellow communists and the FBI. In 1950, he testified before the House Committee on UnAmerican Activities and provided the committee with the names of hundreds of members of the Communist Party, with information regarding organizations from coast to coast controlled by the branch, and with information regarding the functioning and operations of the Pittsburgh branch of the party. In 1951 and 1952, Cvetic was the star witness at trials against Communist Party leader Steve Nelson on charges of sedition, and as a result of his testimony, Nelson was convicted and spent years behind bars. Listen to Matt Cvetic who describes the evidence he provided to the House committee concerning the communist conspiracy planned and carried out against America. How he provided the names, dates, letters, credentials, check stubs, bank statements and accounting statements which were integral components of a fearsome and terrifying script. Composed in the red radio propaganda towers which sat like colossi and octopi atop the world, this was a script for the deportation and liquidation of the voices of liberal dissent, and the protection and promotion of a foreign born, unAmerican disease called Marxist totalitarian tyranny: "In February and March of this year [1950], I appeared before the House Committee on UnAmerican Activities. With me I took ninety three pounds of Communist Party bank statements, check stubs, minute books of meetings, radio scripts, letters, credentials and accounting statements. I gave the committee the names of 292 communists. Typical examples were the names of two comrades who were among the leaders of the American Committee for the Protection of the Foreign Born. The real function of this committee is to raise money to fight deportation proceedings against foreign born communists." (I Posed As A Communist Spy For The FBI By Matt Cvetic). The careers of Herbert Philbrick and Matt Cvetic are studies in heroic deeds and object lessons in the courage to stand up against the red currents which coursed through society and against the diabolical power which loomed over the West. Citizens, communists and counterspies: the careers these patriotic Americans led were almost too fantastic to be believed but too encouraging for the cause of liberty not to be told. While their exposes of red criminal conspiracies and sabotage were not for the faint hearted and were almost too horrifying to read, what has been worse over the years has been the crucifixion of these figures upon the cross of popular scorn and contempt and their relegation to seas of oblivion and insignificance. America was founded as the land of the free and the home of the brave. By the examples of their lives, Philbrick and Cvetic validated these centuries old descriptions, but in so doing incurred the disparagement and odium of the world around them.

THE WITCH DOCTOR'S DRUMBEAT OF WORDS

Divination is the practice of seeking knowledge by supernatural means. A traveling lecturer in universities throughout the Roman Empire in the second century AD, Lucian of Samosata epitomized the Classical commitment to empiricism and dismissal of divination as the traffic in bogus miracles and a species of rank charlatanism and fraud: "Alexander the false prophet was trained by one of those who advertise enchantments, miraculous incantations, charms for your love affairs, visitations for your enemies, disclosures of buried treasures, and successions to estates". (Alexander the False Prophet by Lucian). In Western culture, by contrast, divination has been the essential and fundamental method of philosophy for centuries beginning with Descartes, and in the twentieth century, after five centuries of blooming and flowering in the Cartesian, Kantian and neoKantian gardens of mystical deduction and contemplation, this distinctively Western, Germanic, Faustian approach to knowledge and reality swept away once and for all time empirical theories of linguistics and established in their place the unchallengeable rule of the primitive diviner. The philosophers of linguistics over the past one hundred years have issued a program and manifesto for the rejection of reason and reality and, turning their backs on the noonday world Classical culture and the Age of Enlightenment here in the West, for the descent of the mind into the bottomless depths of raging insanity. The father of modern linguistics, the figure who led the retreat of the field into the swamplands of subjectivism and deductivism, was Ferdinand de Saussure. A loyal student of the academy of Kant who sat in its front row and listened attentively to the words of the master, the creator of modern subjectivist linguistics proclaimed that language is a closed system of interrelated elements whose meanings are derived from their positions within the system and not from anything outside the system. He proclaimed that linguistic data have nothing whatever to do with extralinguistic phenomena because no such phenomena can be meaningfully held to exist. He proclaimed that language functions like a game of chess or a system of money in that the entities involved have a meaning only in relation to each other and possess purely conventional values. He proclaimed that words provide no propositional knowledge, no knowledge about natural classes, ontological categories or about what the world is really like, and are purely arbitrary and self referential. He proclaimed that language generates facts and realities and there are as many different world views as there are languages, no one of which may be valued as truer or more correct than any other. He proclaimed that different worlds exist by virtue of the language community to which they belong and cease to exist when that community is no longer extant. The philosophy of Saussure is the philosophy of Kant and the latter was a model and inspiration for the former. Rejecting the principle of common sense and mental health and well being that physical existence is that which is grasped by consciousness and is ontologically primary, Saussure and Kant project a world in which consciousness is the only thing which is known and is the only thing which exists. It is a world in which cognition is the cognition of itself, concepts are concepts of themselves, categories are categories of themselves, perceptions are perceptions of themselves, intuitions are intuitions of themselves, images are images of themselves, and linguistic signs are signs of themselves. Rejecting the doctrine of empiricism on the grounds that the belief in physical objects is an ancient prejudice, superstition and holdover from Classical times, the Kantian-Saussurean universe is a sealed, black chamber. Inside this lifeless, lightless, suffocating, spiritual hell lies a world of form without content, words without meaning, logic without reference, grammar without grounding, and the wild, turbulent, unrestrained noise of psychosis and disintegration. Within this sinister mental vault, apriori deductions reign supreme, language has become the dictator of reality, psychology has become unwell, unbalanced and has descended into relativism, and the mind has become an organ of madness: "The present essay has advanced us some of the way toward recognizing the structural affinities of the Kantian and Saussurean programs and toward trying out the intervention of one in the other. One version of that trial has been my claim that any given language bears the structure of Kantian cognition. Which is to say that it consists of a purely formal underlying system (langue), capable in practice of being materially realized (parole). The latter is a physical manifestation that would be mere noise, except in accord with a system. The former is a structure that is mute until physically rendered. But I have also described how the language mechanism links acoustic images with psychological concepts and inserts the resultant signs into a network, and I have suggested that this renders them capable of functioning in the conceptual mode of (Kantian) cognition. This latter constitutes the stronger version of my claim: that the empirical concepts deployed in an act of thinking are already linguistic signs. That claim suggests that thinking is a dialectical process linking formal with sensible or material contents, first in the formation of empirical concept signs and second in the determination of those concepts by intuitions. It also suggests that each moment of this process is governed by a set of categories that are grammatical as well as epistemological, and the universal aprioricity of which reigns in the otherwise unchecked relativism that might result from any other system in which language is held to determine thought. Saussure preserves and at the same time rescues that famous dictum, espoused by Humboldt, that 'language is the formative organ of thought.' " (Kant and Saussure by Robin Muller). Taking the baton of apriorism and subjectivism from the Kantian-Saussurean axis was Noam Chomsky, the founder of present day linguistics and the most influential linguist after Saussure. Listen to Chomsky as he clothes the dreams and aspirations of ancient sorcerers, spellbinders, magicians and medicine men in the mortarboards and tassels of today's doctors of philosophy. A doctrine of mystical feeling and instinct packaged in the form of a modern sounding doctrine of universal grammar, generative grammar, transformational grammar, an innate language faculty, apriori syntactic structures, and the hard wiring and deep structures of the human mind. Such are the terms employed by Chomsky in a campaign to replant the savage jungles of the distant past within the gleaming cityscapes of the present day and bring the story of the Faustian West to an ignominious finish: "He has made a number of strong claims about language: in particular, he suggests that language is an innate faculty--that is to say that we are born with a set of rules about language in our minds, which he refers to as the Universal Grammar. The universal grammar is the basis upon which all human languages build. If a Martian linguist were to visit Earth, he would deduce that there was only one language, with a number of local variants. He would be able to study the language and determine the rules based on the patterns he hears and the patterns of other languages. Children do not simply copy the language that they hear around them. They deduce rules from it, which they can then use to produce sentences that they have never heard before. They do not learn a repertoire of phrases and sayings, as the behaviorists believe, but a grammar that generates an infinite number of new sentences. Have you ever been around a toddler as they are acquiring new language? They suddenly change from 'I play' to 'I'm playing' without any formal instruction. Children are born, then, with the Universal Grammar wired into their brains. This grammar offers a certain limited number of possibilities--for example, the word order of a typical sentence." (Montgomery Schools, Maryland). In primitive African medicine, the diviner was esteemed as a special type of sage who was able to gain insight a higher world of spirituality, divinity and the occult by pure apriori means independently of the senses. Racing forward past the distant centuries and thundering down the corridors of time, the African diviner has made a comeback in the present day, installed into power by the Faustian, Germanic knights of the West. Clothed in the mantles of the Saussureans and their descendants, the African diviner has returned to halt the march of progress and enlightenment and smash the clocks of ideational, empirical, scientific advance. Proclaiming that knowledge is composed in the form of stories, texts, signs and discourses which have no objective, physical, absolute content or reference, the new African diviners have returned in academic garb. Proclaiming that the meanings of words are arbitrary and have no natural link or validation, and are the products of social consensus and social interaction, the Saussurean mystics, peddling primitive wares wrapped in philosophic terminology, have rung down the curtain on modern civilization.

ARISTOTLE VERSUS FREGE

Psychosis is a severe mental disorder in which thought is so impaired that all contact with reality is lost. When psychosis marks the origin, course and development of a culture, the end and dissolution of the culture brings a nightmare horror in its wake. In the eyes of civilized people, Western culture commenced its career one thousand years ago in Northern Europe and is as far removed in spirit and essence from Classical culture as night is removed from day. When civilized people think about Western culture, they think about a land of Faust, Germanism, romanticism, subjectivism, formalism, expressionism and the pure, unshackled will to power, a land which they behold as a dark, threatening, foreboding forest and jungle, a land which they judge as located a universe apart from the bright, placid, noontime fields of Classical culture. They think about symbols and protagonists in a grand, world historical, cultural tragedy, the tragedy of the West, and in the field of philosophy, they see the figure of Gottlob Frege as a symbol of the Kantian inspired degeneration of the field into the psychosis of pure linguistic analysis, and they contrast this figure with the preeminent symbol of Classical culture, the leading expositor of its Apollonian ideals: Aristotle. The antithesis between Aristotle and Frege is their shorthand summary for the fundamental differences underlying Classical and Western philosophy, and in their studies of the two philosophers, they see a portrait of mental health and well being, and a portrait of mental maladjustment and disintegration. The Classical world of Aristotle is a world in which consciousness is primarily the consciousness of something other than itself, language is primarily about something other than itself, and logic is primarily about something other than itself, and this something is objective, absolute, physical reality. It is a world which understands that the notion of a consciousness which is conscious of nothing other than itself is a contradiction in terms, inasmuch as it purports to be a statement expressing an objective, absolute truth, and not a statement which is merely subjectively or relatively true. The world of Aristotle is a world of physical objects and their properties, a world of subjects and their predicates, because it understands that existence means determination, that to be means to be something, and that a world of objects without properties and subjects without predicates is a world of objects which are nonobjects and are equal to nothing. It understands that any denial of the validity of subject-predicate language is self contradictory, inasmuch as it inevitably employs such language in its own statement: subject-predicate language is invalid. The world of Aristotle is a world of noncontradiction, a world in which a thing is as it is and cannot act in contradiction to what it is, and cannot be both A and non A, and be both black all over and white all over, at one and the same time. If things were not as they were, if their actions were unrelated to their natures and essences, if they could act in any manner whatever, and could be both black all over and white all over at one and the same time, then words would express multiple, contradictory meanings at one and the same time and would say nothing, and the statement which purported to express the truth of contradiction would itself be both true and not true at one and the same time. The world of Aristotle is a world which recognizes that induction is the only means of acquiring knowledge about reality, because any attempt to deny the primacy of induction inevitably makes use of inductive argumentation in its enumeration of particular instances of alleged inductive failure. Listen to Aristotle who affirms that all perception is the perception of something outside itself, and is the perception of physical objects and their forms and qualities, that the act of perception and the object of perception are two separate and distinct things, and that an alleged act of subjective perception would be the perception of nothing and would be incapable of existing: "By a sense organ is meant what has the power of receiving into itself the sensible forms of things without the matter. This must be conceived of as taking place in the way in which a piece of wax takes on the impress of a signet ring without the iron or gold; we say that what produces the impression is a signet of bronze or gold, but its particular metallic constitution makes no difference. In a similar way, the sense organ is affected by what is colored or flavored or sounding, but it is indifferent to what in each case the substance is; what alone matters is what quality it has, that is, in what fractions its constituents are combined." (On The Soul by Aristotle, Book II). Such was the world of common sense and mental health championed by Classical culture, a world which perished in the smoldering ruins of the Roman Empire, and was never to return. The founder of analytic philosophy and the linguistic turn away from reality which rose to influence in the twentieth century, Frege spoke from a sealed mental chamber deprived of the light and air of human sanity and normal, rational thinking, lined with the concrete of apriorism poured by a philosophic head mason named Kant, and sent plunging into the bottom of the ocean of schizophrenic surrender and retreat. The world of Frege is a world of terms and relations, "arguments" and "functions", "objects" and "concepts", without subjects or predicates of any kind. It is a world in which words refer to nothing in reality and acquire their meaning solely in relation to other words. It is world in which meaning is determined by context, by sentences and propositions, and not by the facts of reality. It is a world in which philosophy consists in nothing more than an analysis of language and has no relation whatever to any extramental or extralinguistic realm of objects. It is a world in which words are arbitrary "senses" or names without real meaning or reference of any kind. It is a world in which the validity of subject-predicate language is rejected on the grounds that physical entities are superstitions like the Homeric gods, and subject-predicate language is replaced by a purely relational language in which nothing is related. It is a world in which terms do not refer to physical entities and do not possess predicates, but exist only in relations to other terms, and acquire their meaning purely contextually and not by reference to sense experience. Listen to Frege who proclaims that the notion of empirical certainty is meaningless and illusory. Who proclaims that the foundations of all thought and science are grasped independently of experience. Who proclaims that the highest and most certain form of reasoning involves a process of inward analysis, deduction, feeling and intuition, conducted in the manner of an ancient seer, sorcerer, medicine man and witch doctor: "This much everyone would allow, that any inquiry into the cogency of a proof or the justification of a definition must be a matter of logic. But such enquiries simply cannot be eliminated from mathematics, for it is only through answering them that we can attain to the necessary certainty. Yet it must still be borne in mind that the rigor of the proof remains an illusion, even though no link be missing in the chain of our deductions, so long as the definitions are justified only as an afterthought, by our failing to come across any contradiction. By these methods we shall, at bottom, never have achieved more than an empirical certainty, and we must really face the possibility that we may still in the end encounter a contradiction which brings the whole edifice down in ruins. For this reason I have felt bound to go back rather further into the general logical foundations of our science than perhaps most mathematicians will consider necessary." (Foundations Of Mathematics by Gottlob Frege). A boulder is hurtling down a mountain. It was pushed over the brink by Frege, obeying the will of Faust and the teachings of Kant. It is a boulder marked Western Philosophy and it is moving wildly, uncontrollably, and throwing up clouds of dirt and dust. It has crashed at the bottom of the mountain and shattered into countless shards and fragments, flying off in all directions. These are the shards and fragments of human consciousness. They have presently settled upon the ground and laid down fields of delirium. These are fields marked Pure Subjectivism, Pure Conventionalism, Pure Deductivism, Pure Analysis, Pure Mentalism, Pure Linguisticism, and Pure Inward Staring and Gazing. These fields whisper with the words of Frege: "But the more fruitful type of definition is a matter of drawing boundary lines that were not previously given at all. The conclusions we draw from it extend our knowledge, and ought therefore, on Kant's view, to be regarded as synthetic; and yet they can be proved by pure logical means, and are thus analytic. The truth is that they are contained in the definitions, but as plants are contained in their seeds, not as beams are contained in a house." (Foundations Of Mathematics by Gottlob Frege). These fields are the final ruins of the West.

MIDNIGHT ROLLS THROUGH THE WORLD

In Svalbard, Norway, the northernmost inhabited region of Europe, there is no sunlight for two and a half months out of the year and the people live in total darkness twenty four hours per day. At the end of this Polar Night, this long night of deep winter, the people celebrate the return of the sun and the coming of springtime. For seven decades in the twentieth century, a moral and spiritual darkness settled over a substantial region of the earth and left its inhabitants hoping, wishing, praying and dreaming, as they had never hoped, wished, prayed or dreamed before, when the darkness would lift and when they would be able to live as other people far away lived, and live in the sunlight of freedom and dignity. This darkness, this mortal enemy of the rights of man, was the international communist movement and conspiracy, and the story of its unstoppable rise to power and its relentless advance across the world is the story of the masses' own basic affinity for communist ideas, their own basic antipathy toward individual existence, and their own willingness to aid and abet the forces of subversion. Communism was a world wide movement headquartered in Moscow. It operated in every nation on earth, sometimes openly, sometimes secretly, and its single, overriding, defining aim and mission was to conquer the world and bring every man, woman and child under the shadow of a fearsome and terrifying red totalitarian tyranny. Developed by Lenin, Trotsky, Stalin, and their comrades, proteges and successors, the methods and tactics employed by the communists included the following: political warfare, economic warfare, penetration, infiltration, espionage, political strikes, riots, demonstrations, campus activism, the undermining of parliamentary processes, guerrilla warfare, the seizure of power by force, proxy war, limited war and open war. According to communism, mankind is divided into two competing classes or camps: the class of knowledge workers, called the bourgeois, which includes entrepreneurs, managers, executives, scientists, engineers, inventors, writers, artists, academics, and all those who work with their minds; and the class of manual workers, called the proletariat, which includes all those who work solely with their muscles, possess no skills and perform no intellectual labor. This latter class cannot in point of fact exist because human beings are defined by the existence of their minds, by their faculty of reason and by their ability to think. But communism, based upon a metaphysics of materialism, exalts this nonexistent class of human appearing animals as the source of all economic wealth and the rightful owner of all industrial profits, and condemns the bourgeois class of knowledge workers as idlers, parasites, exploiters and oppressors of the proletariat, and calls for their expropriation, enslavement and extermination. Because communism denigrates knowledge work as a form of pseudowork and exalts animal, muscular labor as the only true form of work, it advocates class war, a war between the proletariat and the bourgeois, as a moral, political and economic necessity, and rejects all policies of peaceful coexistence between these classes. After communists achieve control over a government, they move to eliminate all bourgeois classes, activities, ideas and centers of opposition. The international communist movement and conspiracy was directed by the Communist Party of the Soviet Union; the party directed communist parties throughout the world, national and international communist front organizations, and secret intelligence organizations. The Soviets provided the members of their movement with the following support: policy guidance and directives, training, money, illegal travel from a country, and safe haven behind the Iron Curtain for members who had committed crimes. The members of the movement were required to adhere undeviatingly and unconditionally to the Soviet party line, provide the Soviets with intelligence, passports, identification documents for use in illegal activities, and meeting places for Soviet intelligence agents. In 1947, the Communist Information Bureau was founded by Stalin to coordinate the activities of communist parties throughout Europe under the direction of the Soviet Union. Its journal, For A Lasting Peace, For A People's Democracy!, was the voice of Moscow, and transmitted guidance, orders and propaganda policies from the center to the field. The international communist movement operated three branches in the nations of the free world. These were the local communist parties, the local sections of a secret subversive and espionage organization, and local communist front organizations. The organization and policies of the local communist parties replicated those of the Soviet Communist Party. Adhering faithfully, openly, blindly and unswervingly to the Soviet party line, these local parties aimed their cannons of hatred at America and everything for which it stood and inspired freedom lovers throughout the world by. The confiscation of American assets and interests; the confiscation of the property of all those who supported American ideals and stood up for the cause of human liberty; and the liquidation of the voices of reason and dissent: such were the goals of the local communist parties, obeying the directives of the Soviet party, in their campaign to sweep away the traditions and institutions protecting individual existence and establish a "people's democracy" of red totalitarian tyranny, dictatorship and Soviet hegemony in their place: "The Brazilian communists openly acknowledge the guidance of the Soviet party saying: 'It is our duty to recognize that we are able to prepare a document of the scope of our program only because the party follows unconditionally the world communist movement and remains completely loyal to its inspirer and guide, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.' Following the Soviet approved tactics of Mao Tse-tung, the program calls for a 'concentration of fire' on 'the principal enemy'--the United States. It demands not only the liquidation of United States' interests in Brazil but the confiscation of large landholdings and of the properties of Brazilian citizens who oppose communism and are friendly to the United States. The announced goal is the establishment of a People's Democracy under the dictatorship of the Communist Party." (The Subversive Effects of International Communism by Herbert Brownell). Reaching out of the Iron Curtain and spreading into the nations of the free world were the fearsome tentacles of communist espionage and subversion. Operating under the cover of diplomatic and commercial activities, this covert apparatus did the Devil's work under the red banners of the proletarian revolution. It built a vast chamber and filled it with arms, ammunition, explosives, money, sabotage, training in forging, stealing, assassinating and undermining public officials and institutions, training in fanning the embers of hatred, resentment, envy and jealousy glowing in the squalid souls of the mob into a blaze of bloody violence, and training in techniques of uncovering classified military information and smuggling it into the hands of its Soviet masters. It attached this chamber to the breech of a mighty people's rifle assembled in the red motherland, pulled the trigger, and blasted out a stream of death and destruction the likes of which free nations had never witnessed before: "The next arm of Soviet communism in this hemisphere is the extensive clandestine organization which exists in each of our countries. Today the Soviets are undertaking to expand and strengthen their covert apparatus. Its bases of operations include communist bloc diplomatic and commercial establishments. The role of the secret organization is the highly technical and often dangerous field of espionage and subversion. It handles much of the training of local agents in the arts of sabotage, mob violence and subversion of public officials. It builds up the deposits of revolutionary arms and handles much of the transfer of money, information and agents with the necessary forging of documents. It attempts to ferret out secret defense and military data for transmission behind the Iron Curtain." (The Subversive Effects of International Communism by Herbert Brownell). Throughout the free world, organizations whose ostensible aims included the promotion of world peace, women's rights, racial equality, youth opportunities, international trade, intellectual freedom, scientific research, and freedom of the press served as shields and covers for subversive and illegal communist activities, communist intelligence gatherings and the promotion of Soviet interests, and as perpetual motion machines for the saturation of the free world with the raging currents of red propaganda. For over seven decades, a monster dripping with blood stalked the face of the earth. This inhumanly cruel and wicked being was communism. Its blood spilled across the Eastern Bloc and inundated the lands of East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, Albania, Mongolia, Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, Korea, China and Grenada with the violence of class war and class extermination. This monster had a brother in the West, fashioned from the same hand of Marx, and supported by the same human appearing waste and debris. This was a six headed monster breathing the fires of mass murder. Its heads were marked Gender, Race, Class, Equity, Diversity and Inclusion. Championing every stripe and variety of tribalism and identity politics, it presently rules the earth alone.

WESTERN IMPERIALISTS LIBERATE THE WORLD

In the centuries before the reds instituted the reign of political correctness and moral relativism in the twentieth century, a savage had been identified as a member of a wild, primitive, uncivilized, barbarian culture. People understood that the advance of Western imperialism across the face of the earth was the greatest act of human deliverance and liberation in the history of mankind. People understood that cultures which reject the values of reason, science, technology, progress, law, individual rights and constitutional government cannot, morally speaking, be called human cultures and are human cultures in name and in appearance only, and are, in reality, animal cultures which have no moral right to live or right not be wiped out. It was known for centuries, prior to the ascendancy of

Marxism and its offshoots and derivatives in the twentieth century, that the world ruled and inhabited by nonWestern cultures is a world founded in mental, moral and spiritual darkness. Civilized people have affirmed for centuries, and have affirmed in vanishing pockets in the present day, that the rejection of nonWestern cultures is a rejection of all that negates, opposes and seeks to destroy the light defined universe of human intelligence and human flourishing. It is the rejection of a world without private property and private labor. It is the rejection of a world in which communal lands have swallowed up personal existence and slavery has crushed the spirit of man. It is the rejection of a world in which leaves, seeds, flowers, herbs and shrubs are worshiped as sacred medicines and manifestations of divinity. It is the rejection of a world in which people take steam baths in sweat lodges as a means of mystical cleansing and purification. It is the rejection of a world in which tribal elders tell stories of bloodthirsty gods to the beat of drums. It is the rejection of a world in which diseases are treated by the use of mind altering drugs, by the letting of blood, and by the invocation of magic and the supernatural. It is the rejection of a world in which the Devil's Masses are conducted with the use of drums, chants and dances. It is the rejection of a world in which Ghost Dances are performed which unite the living with the spirits of the dead. It is the rejection of a world in which hallucinogenic drugs are exalted as visionary sacraments which open up pathways to the gods. It is the rejection of a world in which individual objects are condemned as illusions and reality is held to reside in the mystical oneness of the Great Mystery and the Great Spirit. It is the rejection of a world in which physical objects are viewed as signs and reflections of a higher reality which transcends the world of nature and are held to possess no absolute or independent value. It is the rejection of a world in which souls are held to leave the body at the point of death and to live for an eternity in a higher supernatural realm: "The white man will never be alone. Let him be just and deal kindly with my people, for the dead are not powerless. Dead, did I say? There is no death, only a change of worlds." (Chief Seattle). It is the rejection of a world in which objectivity, separateness, science and matter are condemned as illusions and true reality is held to reside in subjectivity, connectedness, emotion, symbolism, holism, unity and dreams. It is the rejection of a world in which there is held to be a mystical power which pervades all things, a power called wakanda, orenda and manitou, and shamans possess this power to the highest degree and can perform magic feats of healing, bring wild game to hunters, and make torrential rains fall. It is the rejection of a world in which the path to true reality is held to reside in visions and dreams induced by fasting, deprivation, mortification and psychotropic drugs. It is the rejection of a world in which an enlightened sage is held to be one who has refocused his mind away from the natural world and entered a higher order of reality through chanting, drumming and embarking upon vision quests in which one is guided by animal spirits. It is the rejection of a world in which every aspect of daily life is pervaded by religion and is accompanied by prayers and ceremonies. It is the rejection of a world in which the reality of perceived entities is denied and true reality is held to reside in the forms, categories and processes of thought. It is the rejection of a world in which the universe is held to have been created by mystical, holy animals, such as coyotes, ravens and great white hares. Stalwart defenders of human rights who expended blood and treasure to bring light into darkness in the remotest regions of the earth, Western imperialists are defiled, protested against, taken down and burned in effigy by the reds, relativists and their friends and allies who rule the world today. Confronting a common enemy which champions everything it hates, an enemy which champions the values of human reason, human advancement, and the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual, a coalition of Marxists and Islamists has declared war against Western civilization and is celebrating its final victory in every home, office and campus in the world. A monster has walked through the gates of civilization, let in by the mob and sent on its way to its wild applause. It is a monster festooned with swastikas, hammers and sickles, red crescents, and the slogans and bywords of multiculturalism, and it has established a regime of suppression, prohibition, collectivism, indoctrination and lockstep. Supported vociferously by the masses, intellectuals, adults and youth of the world, it has razed to the ground and smashed the citadels of human liberty and human prosperity achieved under the rule of law: "Intellectual elites argue that different cultures and their values are morally equivalent. That's ludicrous. Western culture and values are superior to all others. I have a few questions for those who'd claim that such a statement is untrue or smacks of racism and Eurocentrism. Is forcible female genital mutilation, as practiced in nearly 30 sub-Saharan African and Middle Eastern countries, a morally equivalent cultural value? Slavery is practiced in Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Chad and Sudan; is it morally equivalent? In most of the Middle East, there are numerous limitations placed on women, such as prohibitions on driving, employment and education. Under Islamic law, in some countries, female adulterers face death by stoning. Thieves face the punishment of having their hands severed. Homosexuality is a crime punishable by death in some countries. Are these cultural values morally equivalent, superior or inferior to Western values? Much of the Muslim world is at war with Western civilization. Islamists' use multiculturalism as a foot in the door to attack Western and Christian values from the inside. Much of that attack has its roots on college campuses among the intellectual elite who indoctrinate our youth. Multiculturalism has not yet done the damage in the US that it has in Western European countries—such as England, France and Germany—but it's on its way. By the way, one need not be a Westerner to hold Western values. One just has to accept the sanctity of the individual above all else. (Western Values Are Superior by Walter Williams). In huts, mosques and mountain retreats in nonWestern lands, a strange and frightening shadow has made its home. This is the shadow of moral and spiritual death. This is an apparition from the netherworld whose empty eye sockets scream out a message of mysticism, ignorance, superstition, poverty, fatalism, passivity and collectivist tyranny. This is a vortex and vacuum in which the values of reason, enlightenment, science, progress, industrialization, ambition, purpose, self reliance and individualism have been crushed, pulverized and fed to the nomadic animal masses who roam the plains. Savages cowering before the forces of nature. Savages incapable of creating productive societies. Savages with no notions of property, property rights or human development. Savages who worship at the altars of fear, sorcery, conjuring and magic. Savages without settled societies or constitutional governments. Savages imprisoned behind bars of sacrifice, prayer, supplication and genuflection before the supernatural power held to organize and animate the universe: "Sacrifice has its apparent origin in the same early period of culture and its place in the same animistic scheme as prayer, with which through so long a range of history it has been carried on in the closest connection. As prayer is a request made to a deity as if he were a man, so sacrifice is a gift made to a deity as if he were a man. The human types of both may be studied unchanged in social life to this day. The suppliant who bows before his chief, laying a gift at his feet and making his humble petition, displays the anthropomorphic model and origin at once of sacrifice and prayer." (Primitive Culture by Edwin Tylor). Such was the gloom of nonWestern cultures which Western imperialists fearlessly confronted and relentlessly expelled in their mission to make the world safe for civilization.

LOGIC AND EVOLUTION

The theory of evolution is the central organizing principle of modern biology. It is the theory of the gradual development of species by the natural selection of those varieties which are better adapted to the environment, the better adapted organisms passing on their traits via their genes. The theory is promoted as the rational alternative to creationism, the theory that living organisms originated from specific acts of divine creation. The theory however merely replaces one religion by another; it replaces a religion of supernatural creation by a religion of pure process in which the only type of change in the universe is gradual change and nothing in the universe is as it is. The ontology of process violates the most fundamental law of reality, the law of noncontradiction, which states that a thing cannot possess contradictory characteristics at one and the same time, that a thing cannot be both black all over and white all over at one and the same time, and that A is at all times perceived as A and as nothing other than A. It states that there are no essential changes of entities but only evolutionary changes and that the world is populated with contradictory half states and intermediate beings such as black--nonblack beings and beings which are human—not human. The nonexistence of living species is proclaimed by Charles Darwin, the founder of evolutionary theory. Subspecies, nonspecies, incipient species, arbitrary species, fluctuating species, blending species, species as varieties, and species which constantly and gradually change into other species. Such is the intellectual netherworld of Darwin. Such is a universe of raging delirium whose distinguishing marks are contradiction, unintelligibility, and the rejection of reason, experience and common sense. Rejecting the creationist theory of living species as fixed arbitrarily by God, Darwin proclaims that there are no essential species at all and that biological entities are living, breathing freaks, monstrosities, malformations, and logical and ontological absurdities: "Certainly no clear line of demarcation has as yet been drawn between species and sub-species—that is, the forms which in the opinion of some naturalists come very near to, but do not quite arrive at the rank of species; or, again, between subspecies and well marked varieties, or between lesser varieties and individual differences. These differences blend into each other in an insensible series; and a series impresses the mind with the idea of an actual passage. Hence I look at individual differences, though of small interest to the systematist, as of high importance for us, as being the first step towards such slight varieties as are barely thought worth recording in works on natural history. And I look at varieties which are in any degree more distinct and permanent, as steps leading to more strongly marked and more permanent varieties; and at these latter, as leading to subspecies, and to species. The passage from one stage of difference to another and higher stage may be, in some cases, due merely to the long continued action of different physical conditions in two different regions; but I have not much faith in this view; and I attribute the passage of a variety, from a state in which it differs very slightly from its parent to one in which it differs more, to the action of natural selection in accumulating (as will hereafter be more fully explained) differences of structure in certain definite directions. Hence I believe a well marked variety may be justly called an incipient species; but whether this belief be justifiable must be judged of by the general weight of the several facts and views given throughout this work. It need not be supposed that all varieties or incipient species necessarily attain the rank of species. They may whilst in this incipient state become extinct, or they may endure as varieties for very long periods, as has been shown to be the case by Mr. Wollaston with the varieties of certain fossil land shells in Madeira. If a variety were to flourish so as to exceed in numbers the parent species, it would then rank as the species, and the species as the variety; or it might come to supplant and exterminate the parent species; or both might coexist, and both rank as independent species. But we shall hereafter have to return to this subject. From these remarks it will be seen that I look at the term species, as one arbitrarily given for the sake of convenience to a set of individuals closely resembling each other, and that it does not essentially differ from the term variety, which is given to less distinct and more fluctuating forms. The term variety, again, in comparison with mere individual differences, is also applied arbitrarily, and for mere convenience sake." (On The Origin Of Species by Charles Darwin). The ontology of noncontradiction is championed by Aristotle against process ontology and against the evolutionary theory championed in his day by Empedocles. Championing a world of human sanity, a world in which there are no contradictory, unperceivable, A—non A entities such as man-apes or man-oxen, Aristotle affirms the fixity of species and affirms that living species are as they are and cannot evolve through time into different species: "A difficulty presents itself: why should not nature work, not for the sake of something, nor because it is better so, but just as the sky rains, not in order to make the corn grow, but of necessity? What is drawn up must cool, and what has been cooled must become water and descend, the result of this being that the corn grows. Similarly if a man's crop is spoiled on the threshing floor, the rain did not fall for the sake of this--in order that the crop might be spoiled--but that result just followed. Why then should it not be the same with the parts in nature, e.g. that our teeth should come up of necessity--the front teeth sharp, fitted for tearing, the molars broad and useful for grinding down the food--since they did not arise for this end, but it was merely a chance result; and so with all other parts in which we suppose that there is purpose? Wherever then all the parts came about just what they would have been if they had come be for an end, such things survived, being organized by chance in a fitting way; whereas those which grew otherwise perished and continue to perish, as Empedocles says his 'man-faced ox-progeny' did. Such are the arguments (and others of the kind) which may cause difficulty on this point. Yet it is impossible that this should be the true view. For teeth and all other natural things either invariably or normally come about in a given way; but of not one of the results of chance or spontaneity is this true. We do not ascribe to chance or mere coincidence the frequency of rain in winter, but frequent rain in summer we do; nor heat in the dog days, but only if we have it in winter. If then, it is agreed that things are either the result of chance or for an end, and these cannot be the result of chance, it follows that they must be for an end; and that such things are all due to nature even the champions of the theory which is before us would agree. Therefore action for an end is present in things which come to be and are by nature." (Physics by Aristotle, Book II). The notion of an apriori science is a contradiction in terms. All true science proceeds on the basis of experience and a science which did not would be a mere pseudoscience and would be a form of mysticism. The most fundamental law and fact of experience is the law of noncontradiction and any scientific theory which purports to deny this law has no validity whatever. The law of noncontradiction rules out the possibility of a thing being both black all over and white all over at one and the same time, and rules out the possibility of transitional species of life existing in nature. It does not rule out the possibility that species change from other species or that that all species of life, great and small, plant and animal, primate and nonprimate, were derived from a common primordial cell or organism. But it rules out the possibility that species evolve through time from other species and that life evolved through time from insentient nature. It demands that qualitative changes, or changes from one species to another or from nonlife to life, occur instantaneously and not through time. It affirms that nonessential or quantitative changes involve a process of evolution, while essential changes are sudden changes or saltations. It rejects the creationist explanation of the origin of species on the grounds that supernaturalism is an incoherent doctrine, projecting an existence beyond existence, a place beyond places, and entities beyond entities. It rejects the creationist account that species are the products of the arbitrary will of God, on the grounds that if species had been created by God, they could have been other and different from what they are if God had so decreed, which means that A could have been non A. It rejects the alternatives of creation and evolution as not exhausting all possibilities. Rejecting the supernaturalism and arbitrariness inherent in creationism, and rejecting the process ontology inherent in evolutionism on the grounds that there are two types of change in the universe, process change characterizing changes in degree and instantaneous change characterizing changes in kind, it champions a third alternative. In the name of fundamental sanity, mental health and well being, and the integrity and soundness of science, it champions the doctrine of biological naturalism and essentialism.

PERCEPTUAL REALISM AND ITS ENEMIES

Schizophrenia is a long term mental disorder whose symptoms include impaired states of perception and a withdrawal from reality into a world of fantasy and delusion. The schizophrenic rejects the recognition made by the civilized and the sane that the act of perception is the perception of something and gives us an awareness of external reality. Over the course of the centuries since the time of Descartes, Western philosophy has rejected the common sense recognition that perception is the perception of physical objects and promoted the doctrine of subjectivism in its place, and in so doing has mimicked the symptoms of schizophrenia. The widespread acceptance of the doctrine embraced by those suffering from schizophrenia, the doctrine that we are only aware of the contents of our own minds, is the inevitable result of the Faustian character of Western culture, with its exaltation of romanticism, expressionism and the primacy of the will. Standing in sharply delineated contrast to this midnight Western Faustian ride through the Valkyrian mountains of mental disorder was the Apollonian culture of the Greeks and Romans, which never gave a moment's thought to the question of whether perception is the perception of physical reality. For the citizens of Classical culture, it was an axiom above all other axioms that perception is the perception of something physical or else there is no act of perception at all. This unswerving Classical commitment to the noontday fields of human sanity was epitomized by the philosophy of Aristotle, which affirms that perception is a passive mirror of nature. For Aristotle and Classical culture, perception is an act of direct reception and can be nothing other than this. It is an act in which reality and nothing else than reality is presented to a sense power. It is an act in which physical forms and qualities are known and nothing else is known: "By a sense organ is meant what has the power of receiving into itself the sensible forms of things without the matter. This must be conceived of as taking place in the way in which a piece of wax takes on the impress of a signet ring without the iron or gold; we say that what produces the impression is a signet of bronze or gold, but its particular metallic constitution makes no difference. In a similar way, the sense organ is affected by what is colored or flavored or sounding, but it is indifferent to what in each case the substance is; what alone matters is what quality it has, that is, in what fractions its constituents are combined." (On The Soul by Aristotle, Book II). When Faust built the house of Western philosophy and opened up its gates, the civilized people who walked through beheld the gloom and twilight of a mental chamber sealed off from light, air and sound; they descended into a pool of blackness in which floating sense organs perceived only themselves; and they ran out of the house screaming in horror and fear. They took with them a program and manifesto of this house which they later read in shock, dismay and total disbelief. Composed in the wild, disordered hand of Faust and his students, it proclaimed that objects are only perceived indirectly through intermediate representations in one's consciousness. It proclaimed that we perceive ideas and sense data and not real, physical objects. It proclaimed that we can never get outside ourselves to view objects as they are in themselves. It proclaimed that the veil of perception is a veil which can never be pierced and all we can ever deal with and be aware of are just the elements of our own consciousness. It proclaimed that we must dispense with all notions of physical reality and focus exclusively on our representations as the building blocks of all reality. It proclaimed that our sensory processing apparatus manufactures the objects of all knowledge and philosophic wisdom resides in the recognition that what is called reality is generated by us. It proclaimed that reality is that which is grasped by feeling and mysticism and is the supernatural will, and in consequence what are called physical objects are delusions produced by the human mind, so that man is blind because he sees, deaf because he hears, dumb because he says something and ignorant because he thinks. It proclaimed that reality is Mind, Idea and the Absolute which transcends the world of physical objects. It proclaimed that the fundamental axiom of philosophy is that being is mind, existence is consciousness, and to be is to be perceived. It proclaimed that the elements of consciousness are the elements of reality and the only meaningful and legitimate philosophy is that of subjectivism, relativism, mentalism and idealism. It proclaimed that we can be certain of nothing beyond the existence of our own consciousness, and what is indubitably true is the statement, I think, therefore I exist and not the statement, I perceive, therefore I exist, and our perception of physical objects does not prove their existence. It proclaimed that reality is an infinite, pantheistic, mental substance called Nature or a Monad. It proclaimed that the world is the will, the will to power, the will to suffering, the will to death or the will to pleasure, and what are perceived as physical objects are nothing more than our own subjective ideas. It proclaimed that what are called physical objects are cultural conventions, useful fictions, and products of language games and forms of life. It proclaimed that there is no physical existence but only the "thereness" of human consciousness. It proclaimed that philosophy is the phenomenology of pure consciousness which has prescinded from and bracketed out the existence of the physical world. It proclaimed that reality is a swirling flux of mental feelings, prehensions and apprehensions. It proclaimed that consciousness is that which exists "for itself" and not for an alleged physical reality which does not in fact exist. It proclaimed that the physical world is a product of bourgeois rationalist cultural narratives and has no real, extramental existence. It proclaimed that the physical world is a product of gender, race and class interests and has no existence apart from these. It proclaimed that the physical world is a product of pragmatism and social construction and is a projection of human needs, wishes, interests and desires. It proclaimed that the sole objects of knowledge are just our own sensations, perceptions, experiences and streams of consciousness. It proclaimed that reality is a series of meaningless texts which can be endlessly interpreted and deconstructed. Listen to the words of a popular contemporary exponent of perceptual subjectivism. According to Ayn Rand, perception is an act of integration of sensations and not the simple, direct, unmediated perception of physical reality. A perception is a group of sensations and not the ability to see a physical object. A percept is a group of sensations and not a physical object which is perceived. There is no direct awareness of the world outside of consciousness but only an integrated awareness, which means no awareness at all. The act perception is a transformative, processing act and not a real, bona fide act of perception: "The higher organisms possess a much more potent form of consciousness: they possess the faculty of retaining sensations, which is the faculty of perception. A perception is a group of sensations automatically retained and integrated by the brain of a living organism, which gives it the ability to be aware, not of single stimuli, but of entities, of things. An animal is guided, not merely by immediate sensations, but by percepts. Its actions are not single, discrete responses to single, separate stimuli, but are directed by an integrated awareness of the perceptual reality confronting it. It is able to grasp the perceptual concretes immediately present and it is able to form automatic perceptual associations, but it can go no further." (The Virtue Of Selfishness by Ayn Rand). The career of Western philosophy is a fearsome and terrifying journey into the heart of darkness and derangement conducted by a captain called Faust together with his deck officers and first mates. Proclaiming that mind is a mirror which sees only itself, that perception is an active and not a passive mechanism, that objects exist by virtue of their relationship to our consciousness and sense organs and do not exist intrinsically or objectively, and that to see is to process, transform and integrate elements of consciousness and not to simply and directly see an object, Faust's officers from Descartes to Kant to Heidegger to Wittgenstein to Ayn Rand are the symptoms and carriers of a profound cultural sickness. It is a sickness with many names: romanticism, voluntarism, formalism, subjectivism, apriorism, internalism and idealism. They all reference the same reality: a mind fragmented, conflicted, separated, disconnected, distorted, uncoupled, detached, withdrawn, and regressing, introspecting and vanishing into an infinitesimal mental point and psychological void. They all point inescapably to the same diagnosis and to the same disease: schizophrenic insanity. This disease defines the character and essence of the West, the Germanic West, the Faustian West, the antiApollonian West and the antiClassical West. It is a malfunction which has created a mental wasteland and spread mental impoverishment throughout the world.

THE COLORS OF DANGER

Psychologists have long known that colors can be powerful instruments of communication which can influence action, mood, emotions and physiological responses. The field of color psychology is vast, fruitful and widely used. Over the past one hundred years, decent, civilized, law abiding people have identified certain colors as symbols of political dangers which have been advancing fiercely and relentlessly upon free institutions and declared open war against the Western liberal democratic order. These colors are red, brown and yellow. In the code of civilized people, red stands for Marxism and Islam, brown stands for the gender, race and environmentalist politics promoted by women, nonwhites and environmentalist activists, and yellow stands for the danger which emanates from China. The red star of Marxism and the red crescent of Islam are symbols of ideologies which commenced their march against freedom in the early decades of the twentieth century. The red star symbolizes a world which proclaims that matter is the only reality and mind is a bourgeois created illusion which has no relevance whatever to the life of man or society. It proclaims that because mind is an illusion, the nature of man is that of pure bones and muscles, and muscular labor is only true form of labor and the only true source of wealth, and the class of muscular laborers, called the proletariat, deserves one hundred percent of the profits of industry. It proclaims that because mind is an illusion, there is no such thing as mental labor or knowledge work, and those who perform it, such as entrepreneurs, directors, executives, traders, bankers, writers, artists, scientists and engineers, who are called the bourgeois, do not in fact perform any work at all and are idlers and parasites who live off the proceeds of the proletariat. It proclaims that the only proper way to view reality is through the lens and prism of class and resides in the recognition that there is no universal, absolute system of truth, logic or morality but only systems of class truths, class logic and class morality. It proclaims that a progressive society is one which has abolished the right to private property and placed all property into the hands of the masses and all industry into the hands of the muscular laboring proletariat. It proclaims that a progressive society is a workers' socialist state in which education in proletarian consciousness and political correctness is achieved through a regime of round the clock indoctrination backed up by firing squads, concentration camps and slave labor battalions. The red crescent of Islam symbolizes a world which proclaims that the universe was brought into being from absolute nothingness by God's command: "Be, and it is". It proclaims that God is all powerful and can transgress the law of noncontradiction and make something out of nothing, as if nothing was an existing something out of which something else could emerge, and can make something to be black all over and white all over at one and the same time, and can make two and two equal five. It proclaims that the purpose of man's life is to know and worship God and obey his commands without a moment's doubt or hesitation. It proclaims that the final revelation and word of God is found in the Quran, whose verses were revealed to the Prophet Muhammad through the archangel Gabriel between AD 610 and Muhammad's death in AD 632. It proclaims that the prophets were those chosen by God to convey his messages, his warnings, his glad tidings, his teachings and his laws to the people and that these words can be summarized by the single instruction to submit to the will of God. It proclaims that the future will bring a Day of Resurrection which has been preordained by God but is unknown to man. At this time, all people will be judged on the basis of their good and bad deeds and consigned either to heaven or to hell. The worst of all sins is disbelief in God and disobedience to his will and this will automatically consign the sinner to the raging inferno called hellfire. The color brown symbolizes the brownshirt movements of feminism, black racism and environmentalism which have taken German national socialism as their guide and inspiration and promoted mystical, tribalist ideologies of gender, race and the Eternal Enchanted Forest. The world of feminism proclaims that liberal democracy is a system of patriarchy in which men are allowed to dominate and oppress women and must be replaced by a regime of matriarchal totalitarian dictatorship which will enslave and liquidate the male population. It proclaims that as long as there exist meritocratic societies in which people succeed by virtue of their talents and abilities, men will continue to marginalize women, and the order of meritocracy must therefore be replaced by a regime of active, positive, systematic discrimination against men. It proclaims that a progressive society is a national organization of women and a women's liberation movement with one item and one item only on its agenda: the destruction and liquidation of men. It proclaims that men's repression, exploitation and discrimination against women is deliberate, relentless and ongoing and can only be defeated by a permanent separation of the sexes and the establishment of a lesbian nation. It proclaims that all sexual relations between men and women represent acts of violence against women, all pictures of naked women represent acts of violence against women, and all forms of touching of women by men represents acts of violence against women, and these must all be outlawed. It proclaims that women who make sexual assault allegations against men must be automatically be believed and be treated as victims, all due process requirements must be suspended at trial, an accusation or a series of accusations must be granted maximum probative weight, and the conviction of the defendant must be a foregone conclusion. The world of black racism proclaims that a progressive society is a social justice activist community in which blacks have been granted their own nation, the power to enact their own laws, and the power to exact reparations from whites for their crime of existing. It proclaims that a progressive society is one in which black convicts and mental patients have been released and allowed to run wild in the streets and set up a government of black foxes, black bears and black panthers. It proclaims that a progressive society is a black nation which possesses the lawful authority to enslave all white people. It proclaims that a progressive society is an aggressively antiwhite society whose black nationalist manifesto advocates the destruction of American and European civilization. It proclaims that a progressive society is a racist, genocidal society which has outlawed mixed race relationships and launched a Final Solution against whites. It proclaims that white businesses prey upon and exploit black communities and are the bloodsuckers of the black soul and must be looted and ransacked by the people's black liberation brigades. It proclaims that a progressive society is one in which only blacks are citizens and black representation in schools, offices and governments has been set at one hundred percent. It proclaims that the liberal order in which individuals achieve success by virtue of their talents and abilities is unfair to the class is inept, incompetent, shiftless blacks and must be replaced by a regime of affirmative action, preferential treatment and discrimination against whites. The world of environmentalism proclaims that the values of reason and science are moral and spiritual toxins and must be purged from the soul by a process of resacralizing and reconnecting with nature. It proclaims that the greatest challenge confronting mankind is the incineration of the planet by greenhouse gases and this imminent doomsday can only be averted by the establishment of a zero carbon emissions policy which mandates the prohibition of internal combustion engines and intercontinental air travel and the abolition of modern industrial civilization. It proclaims that a progressive society is an earth liberation movement and a community of activists dedicated to saving the air, trees, water and animals from the presence of human life by obliterating the latter. It proclaims that development of mankind from hunter-gatherer societies to agricultural societies resulted in alienation from the mystical currents of nature and must be reversed. It proclaims that a progressive society is one which has established a policy of deindustrialization, abolished all forms of human technology, and returned to wild, uncivilized ways of life. It proclaims that a progressive society is a barbaric, preColumbian, Mesoamerican society whose nomadic bands of hunter-gatherers enjoyed the greatest amount of leisure time in the history of mankind and spent it on improving themselves through feasting, drinking, participating in games of violence, and indulging in mindless relaxation. The fall of communism in China in the late twentieth century brought a resurgence of the yellow peril which for centuries had loomed over the West. For centuries before the terror of Maoism and Marxism threatened the world, an indigenous miasma drifted out of China which made all those who came into contact with it unpleasant, unhealthy and unwell. This was the foul emanation from a country whose inhabitants were filthy, uncivilized, morally unclean, psychologically unbalanced, bestial in their habits and dispositions, ensconced in clouds of opium addiction and intoxication, and incapable of engaging in normal, human social relations. Now a monstrous image from the Middle Kingdom imperils the West anew and presently stands on the brink of actuality. It is the image of a Chinese man, armed and dangerous, standing astride a fallen European. In this man's eyes are pools of swirling darkness which have enveloped and consumed the West in a nightmare. This is the nightmare of a global pandemic called covid 19. This is the nightmare of Chinese wet markets and human copulation with bats, snakes and pangolins. This is the nightmare of patent theft, copyright theft, technology theft, currency manipulation, the suppression of freedom and democracy in Hong Kong, military attacks in the South China Sea, and violations of nuclear proliferation agreements. Red, brown and yellow: the color metaphors devised by civilized people to signal a rising tide of trouble, danger and ruination which threaten to conquer, subjugate submerge the way of life bequeathed by the Enlightenment. They are the sensations, reflections, symbols and signposts of the pain and suffering, beyond the reach of consolation, experienced by those who have beheld their most sacred possessions, their human freedom and human flourishing, under relentless attack.

TIMELINE OF THE WEST

Electricity is a form of energy which results from the existence of charged particles called electrons and protons. Electrons are particles of negative electricity, while protons are particles of positive electricity, and the two particles repel each other with great force. As electrons and protons represent opposite charges and repel each other, so two cultures which arose on the same continent of Europe over the course of three thousand years represent moral and spiritual opposites and repel each other with the greatest possible force. These two cultures are Classical and Western cultures, and no two cultures in the history of mankind have been more opposed to each other in form and essence, and have inhabited such profoundly contrastive philosophic universes. Coursing through Classical culture was the spirit of Apollo, the spirit of reason and sanity, while coursing through our own Western culture is the spirit of Faust, the spirit of will and delirium, and if the term culture is to designate anything more than the sum total of human intellectual achievements which developed in a particular geographic location, and is to designate the sum total of achievements only insofar as they are unified and organized according to a specific philosophic principle, then it is as clear as daylight that the achievements which arose on the European continent over the course of three millenia fall into two separate cultures, Classical and Western, and not into one, Western. If the term culture is to mean anything beyond the fact of mere geography and is to involve as well philosophic coherence, then the Apollonian world inhabited by the Greeks and Romans constituted a separate sphere of culture and a philosophic proton to the Faustian world and philosophic electron inhabited by the citizens of the West. The history of the West is a story of demonic presence, evil religion, unmitigated horror, and Satan begetting a child in a ceremony presided over by Doctor Faust, student of sorcery and necromancy, from his raised platform in the heart of darkness. The spirit of Faust, orchestrating the birth of Satan's child, ushered in the first age of the West, the Dark Age, which lasted from AD 1000 to 1500. During this time, the spirit of Faust can be seen in the Gothic cathedrals, in the Canterbury Cathedral in England, the Cologne Cathedral in Germany and the Chartres Cathedral in France, with their exaltation upon pure space and expanse unmoored to mass, weight or physical reality. It can be seen in the Gregorian chants, organ music and polyphonies which fill up, ascend into and merge with all of space. It can be seen in Dante's Divina Commedia which describes a pilgrim's journeys through hell, purgatory and heaven, its ascent to God, its rejection of reason, and its exaltation of faith, feeling and mysticism. It can be seen in the launching of the Crusades by the Catholic Church in which the Faustian will, carried by mounted warriors, the Knights of the Holy Sepulcher, the Knights Hospitalier, the Knights Templar and the Teutonic Knights, expanded into the Holy Land to combat Islam, and into Southern and Eastern Europe up to the Baltic Sea to combat paganism. It can be seen in the expansion of the Vikings into France, Sicily, Southern Italy, England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland and the Near East. It can be seen in the sealing of the Magna Carta by King John, which was the first statement of the Faustian liberal order. Described by jurist Alfred Denning as "the greatest constitutional document of all times—the foundation of the freedom of the individual against the arbitrary authority of the despot", the charter guaranteed personal liberty in purely Faustian fashion, as a form of personal license, and not in Classical fashion as an instrument of human flourishing whose sole ground and justification lies in its use to secure a human way of life. The second age of the West was the Renaissance, which lasted from 1500 to 1600. Marking the transition of the West from the Dark Age to modernity, the Renaissance did not signify a rebirth of Classical values, as its propagandists proclaimed, for no such rebirth would have been possible in an alien Faustian setting. The Renaissance was Faustian through and through and the spirit of Faust can be seen in the works of Brunelleschi, Botticelli, Da Vinci, Michelangelo, Giotto, Donatello, Titian and Raphael, which exhibit force, tension, colossality and readiness for combat. It can be seen in Gutenberg's development of mass printing, in voyages of global discovery undertaken by Columbus, Vespucci and Da Gama, and in the invention of the telescope and microscope, which expanded human sight into infinity. It can be seen in the works of Shakespeare, with their soliloquies, self reflections, self awareness, and explorations of the characters' minds. It can be seen in the Protestant Reformation led by Luther and Calvin, which proclaimed that salvation consists in faith and feeling independently of external, objective good works, It can be seen in the artistic styles of mannerism and the baroque with their irrational scales, lighting, perspectives, ornateness, elaborateness and extravagance, exemplified in the Palace of Versailles and the music of Bach. The third age of the West was the Enlightenment, which lasted from 1700 to 1800. The spirit of Faust can be seen in the philosophy of Descartes, which proclaimed that the sole certainty which man can achieve is the prior certainty of his own consciousness, that the sole objects of man's perception are his own ideas and representations, that the statement, I think, therefore I am, is indubitably true, while the statement, I perceive, therefore I am, is not, and that the perception of physical objects does not prove or guarantee their existence. It can be seen in the philosophy of Kant, which proclaimed that the act of perception shapes, creates and structures all that we perceive, that the world of perception of physical objects is in fact a universal collective delusion, and that objective reality, the world of things as they are in themselves or things as they are not perceived by man, is unknowable. It proclaimed that philosophy requires a reverse Copernican Revolution which recognizes that reality is that which revolves around and is determined by consciousness and not the other way around, and recognizes that perception is not the perception of real physical objects and is the perception of nothing, and that man is blind because he sees, and deaf because he hears, and is ignorant because he thinks. The spirit of Faust can be seen in the philosophy of Bacon, which proclaimed that the purpose of empirical methods in science is not to acquire knowledge for the sake of knowledge but to acquire knowledge for the sake of technical mastery and control. It can be seen in the New Science of Galileo and Newton with their purely mathematical descriptions of reality whose aim is the prediction and not explanation of events. It can be seen in the English Glorious Revolution and the English Bill of Rights, and in the American Revolution, Constitution and Declaration of Independence, which championed the cause of liberal freedom and limited government without regard to the achievement of proper human flourishing. It can be seen in the philosophy of Locke which proclaimed that individuals have natural rights to life, liberty and property which exist whether or not they are utilized to succeed and flourish in a human manner. The fourth age of the West was the Age of Romanticism, which lasted from 1800 to 1900, and fifth and final age commenced at the dawn of the twentieth century. These last two centuries have seen the final winding down and playing out of Faustian subjectivism and the Faustian will to power and expansion. These last two centuries should be named the Age of Romanticism, and the entire history of the West should be named the History of Romanticism, for Western culture is nothing if not a romanticist, Faustian, Germanic, Northern European, soaring twilight forest culture which has brought forth positive achievements in the fields of mathematical physics, high technology, medicine and biology, as it has brought forth negative achievements in the fields of philosophy and the arts. Side by side with Faust's noonday fields glistening with steam engines, electric power, nuclear energy, transistors, integrated circuits, rocket propulsion, space exploration, DNA sequencing, antibiotics and vaccines are the dark flowing rivers of Faust's insane, subjectivist philosophy. This is a stream of pure consciousness without existence, a turbulent watercourse of pure form without content, and a wild rainstorm of apriori ideologies without empirical verification of any kind, and they have committed the following intellectual crimes. Formalist ontology without belief in physical objects. Formalist logic without the method of induction. Formalist mathematics without empirical axioms. Formalist language without subjects or predicates. Formalist literature without plots or stories. Formalist painting without representation of objects. Formalist architecture without functionality. Formalist music without melody or harmony. Formalist morality of categorical imperatives intuited by pure feeling and commanded by the will. Capitalist liberty conceived as animal license. Socialist politics of totalitarian tyranny and mass murder justified in the name of gender, race and class, marching under the banners of women, nonwhites and the poor, and enshrined in statues under the titles of Diversity, Equity and Inclusion. A new Nietzscheanism promoted as postmodernism when in point of fact it is simply postEnlightenment thought and is thoroughly modern. Environmentalist politics of zero carbon emissions, an antiindustrial revolution, and the elimination of the human species. Such are the philosophic evils and mental corruptions brought forth by the West since 1800. Such is a monster stalking the earth dripping with the blood of Satan and Faust.

ENGLISHMEN AND GERMANS

A collider is an accelerator in which two beams of subatomic particles are made to collide. After the collision, detectors are used to study the collision results. In the history of the West, the true Faustian West and not the incoherent, Classical--Medieval--Modern construction promoted by Western historians, two ideologies were on a collision course for centuries and fought wars of world domination, and their collision results changed the course and structure of world politics. These two ideologies were products of the two main ethnic branches of Western culture, the English branch and the German branch, and while their Faustian commonalities have placed them under the same cultural roof, their specific differences ensured that they would come into violent conflict again and again and fight each other for the mastery of the planet. The English branch produced the ideology of liberalism, while the German branch produced the ideology of socialism. The liberal world of the English is a world of free, private individuals who are governed by one principle and one principle alone: the principle of nonaggression. This principle states that individuals have a right to live in any manner they choose, and to live in a bestial, nonhumanly flourishing manner, so long as they respect the equal rights of others to live in any manner of their choosing and do not engage in acts of force and aggression. They must abstain from initiating the use of force against others on the grounds that man has no definition, man is not a rational animal and has no natural, rational end or perfection, and all moral values are in consequence purely subjective. The socialist world of the Germans is a world in which there are no free, private individuals and every member of society has been placed under an obligation to live and work for the sake of others, for the sake of the state and community, for the sake of the mystic totality. All morality is social in character because the definition of man is that of a social animal, individuals have no real, independent existence, and groups are the primary ontological realities. The individual has no right to live or work for himself, to live a life of human flourishing for himself, or to live any other type of life for himself, but must live his life as a ward and worker of the people and nation, and as a dutiful cog in the machinery of the social organism. Promoting a morality of individualism and a morality of collectivism, these two political systems share a common denominator which places them squarely within the Faustian West: the exaltation of license, disorder and the will. Whether the agent of license be projected as the individual, in liberalism, or as the group, in socialism, the same rejection of reason, virtue, purpose and finality can be seen throughout and serves as the unifying link between the two systems. Liberalism is closer to reality than socialism because it at least recognizes the ontological primacy of the individual and does not traffic in the mysticism of groups which views them as actually existing entities. But liberalism founders on the rocky shoals of self contradiction inasmuch as it promotes the principle of nonaggression as a universal moral absolute, while at the same time proclaiming that all morality is subjective. Liberalism purports to do what it is inconceivable and impossible to do: to project man as a being without a definition. While rejecting the socialist definition of man as a social animal, liberalism projects man as a being without determination of any kind. While recognizing that individuals and only individuals exist in reality, liberalism projects these individuals as units of indeterminate nothingness and violates the cardinal principle of all existence: that to be is to be something and that an existence which is the existence of nothing is a contradiction in terms. Listen to the words of John Stuart Mill who advocates the principle that all individuals, regardless of their moral character, are entitled to be free of aggressive violence. Who proclaims that the use of force may only be used in self protection and self defense, and the class of those who do not humanly flourish is entitled to enjoy equal rights with the class of those who do. Who proclaims that there is no such thing as a civilized community because all morality is subjective and a progressive society is a moral sewer which grants equal protection under the law to the lowest specimens of subhumanity, with the sole proviso that they do not commit acts of harm or aggression against others. Who proclaims that individuals have no duties to themselves to perfect themselves in a human manner because morality is a matter of arbitrary taste and preference, and the sole duty which is incumbent upon them is toward others, to respect the equal rights of their fellow savages. Who proclaims that a progressive society is one which recognizes that there are no objective standards of truth, wisdom, intelligence, goodness or virtue, and in consequence the most debased and depraved individuals, so long as they do not interfere with the lives of others, have the right to enjoy total, absolute sovereignty and independence over their mind and body: "The object of this essay is to assert one very simple principle, as entitled to govern absolutely the dealings of society with the individual in the way of compulsion and control, whether the means used be physical force in the form of legal penalties, or the moral coercion of public opinion. That principle is, that the sole end for which mankind are warranted, individually or collectively in interfering with the liberty of action of any of their number, is self protection. That the only purpose for which power can be rightfully exercised over any member of a civilized community, against his will, is to prevent harm to others. His own good, either physical or moral, is not a sufficient warrant. He cannot rightfully be compelled to do or forbear because it will be better for him to do so, because it will make him happier, because, in the opinions of others, to do so would be wise, or even right. These are good reasons for remonstrating with him, or reasoning with him, or persuading him, or entreating him, but not for compelling him, or visiting him with any evil, in case he do otherwise. To justify that, the conduct from which it is desired to deter him must be calculated to produce evil to some one else. The only part of the conduct of anyone, for which he is amenable to society, is that which concerns others. In the part which merely concerns himself, his independence is, of right, absolute. Over himself, over his own body and mind, the individual is sovereign." (On Liberty by John Stuart Mill). Listen to the words of Karl Marx who proclaims that a progressive society is a collectivist, proletarian nightmare which has abolished all private property and all freedom, dignity, independence and individuality. Who proclaims that the hallmarks of a civilized society, the rights of free buying, free selling, free enterprise, free production, free trade, free markets, free speech and free thought, are bourgeois chains and shackles around the proletariat and hold no meaning whatever for the proletariat and must be resolutely abolished. They must be swept aside by a people's revolution which will horrify civilized people and fill them with feelings of fear and foreboding. This will be a revolution to turn back the clock of history to the eons before the Dark Ages and revive the tribal tyranny of the plains, jungles and seething swamplands under the banners and torchlights of red totalitarian rule: "The theory of the communists may be summed up in the single sentence: Abolition of private property. And the abolition of this state of things is called by the bourgeois, abolition of individuality and freedom! And rightly so. The abolition of bourgeois individuality, bourgeois independence, and bourgeois freedom is undoubtedly aimed at. By freedom is meant, under the present bourgeois conditions of production, free trade, free selling and buying. But if selling and buying disappears, free selling and buying disappears also. This talk about free selling and buying, and all the other brave words of our bourgeoisie about freedom in general, have a meaning, if any, only in contrast with restricted selling and buying, with the fettered traders of the Middle Ages, but have no meaning when opposed to the communist abolition of buying and selling, of the bourgeois conditions of production, and of the bourgeoisie itself. You are horrified at our intending to do away with private property. But in your existing society, private property is already done away with for nine tenths of the population; its existence for the few is solely due to its nonexistence in the hands of those nine tenths. You reproach us, therefore, with intending to do away with a form of property, the necessary condition for whose existence is the nonexistence of any property for the immense majority of society. In one word, you reproach us with intending to do away with your property. Precisely so; that is just what we intend." (The Communist Manifesto by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels). The world of Faustian liberalism, the world of the English, was brought by roving, piratical bands of Viking adventurers and was exemplified in English trading companies which subdued and developed savage continents. The world of Faustian socialism, the world of the Germans, was exemplified by the Knights of the Teutonic Order and the style of Old Prussia. In two world wars fought in the twentieth century, these ideologies clashed in a death struggle for world mastery. In World War I, Germany was defeated, but the free world was during this time adopting Germanic policies of welfare statism and social regulation. In World War II, Germany was again defeated, but the march of welfare statism and social regulation continued throughout the war, and had by the end of the war greatly accelerated. The collectivization of the free world was exemplified during the war by widespread support for the Soviet alliance with the West, forming the Big Three, and the concession of Eastern Europe to the Soviets. The end of the war saw the victory of the Soviet Union and its world wide web of satellites, sympathizers, coconspirators and client states. During the Cold War, the West's struggle against communism was half hearted, lacked grassroots support and the support of the intelligentsia, and was corrupted by an official policy of appeasement and retreat packaged as containment, for the free world had itself renounced liberal ideals and accepted the Soviet ideas of welfare statism and social regulation, and lacked the moral weapons to fight communism. Commencing in the late twentieth century and proceeding up to the present day, the identity politics of gender, race and class has declared open war against the liberal order. Marching under the banners of diversity, equity, inclusion, multiculturalism, and special rights for women, nonwhites, Muslims and the poor, it has composed the final chapter of the story of the West. Just before The End are written the words: "English liberalism lay in ruins and the spirit of Germany rose triumphant across the world."

COMMON SENSE COSMOLOGY VERSUS THE BIG BANG

During the Age of Enlightenment, there was a rock bottom belief accepted by all people which described the form and character of the age. This was the belief that there is an inherent and ineradicable conflict existing between science and religion, a conflict which defines the difference between civilization and savagery. People understood that science stands for reason and empiricism, while religion stands for faith and apriorism, and that a society which rejects reason in favor of religion is a society which, morally speaking, cannot be described as a human society. People during the Enlightenment looked back at the infamous Galileo Affair, in which Galileo was placed on trial and condemned by the Roman Catholic Inquisition for his support for the view that the earth and planets revolve around the sun, and they were determined that such a thing must never again be allowed to happen and disgrace the lands of Europe. During this glorious age, this Century of Reason, it never did happen again, and its citizens were optimistic that it would never happen again in the future of mankind. They could not imagine in their worst nightmares that two short centuries later, in the twentieth century, the rule of religion would return to the West and launch an invasion of science anew. Return it did, and one of the most infamous instances of its return was again in the field of astronomy. This time around, the forces of religion laid down as law that the universe had a beginning in time and was created from nothing by a Big Bang and has been expanding through supernatural space ever since. During the Age of Enlightenment, and during all ages of all cultures when reason and common sense ruled the minds of the people, the following cosmological principles were held to be true. The universe is the sum total of existence and is thus unlimited in size and extent, and is eternal and uncreated. There is nothing outside of, before or after existence except more existence. There is nothing which could cause existence except more existence. The notion of multiple universes is the notion of multiple everything's and is a contradiction in terms. The notion of the universe expanding or contracting is the notion of everything expanding or contracting and is a contradiction in terms; there is nothing outside of everything into which everything could expand or contract. Nothing can be created out of nothing because there is no nothing; there is only something. Space is the absence of existence and has no physical properties; only physical objects have physical properties; and to speak of space doing anything such as expanding or contracting is to use words without meaning. The notion of a supernatural existence is a contradiction in terms. For such an existence, being a negation of natural existence, would lack place and would be a place beyond places, a location beyond locations, an existence without place or location of any kind, an existence which was nowhere. Listen to the words of Aristotle who states that existence had no beginning and cannot come to an end. For at any given point of time and existence, there is necessarily a time and existence before and a time and existence after, a T minus 1 or a T plus 1. Common sense and human sanity demand that the universe, the totality of existence, lack a creator or a creation point and an end point: "Further, how can there be any before and after without the existence of time? Or how can there be any time without the existence of motion? If, then, time is the measure of motion or itself a kind of motion, it follows that, if there is always time, motion must also be eternal. But so far as time is concerned we see that all with one exception are in agreement in saying that it is uncreated: in fact, it is just this that enables Democritus to show that all things cannot have had a becoming: for time, he says, is uncreated. Plato alone asserts the creation of time, saying that it had a becoming together with the universe, the universe according to him having had a becoming. Now since time cannot exist and is unthinkable apart from the moment, and the moment a kind of middle point, uniting as it does in itself both a beginning and an end, a beginning of future time and an end of past time, it follows that there must always be time: for the extremity of the last period of time that we take must be found in some moment, since time contains no point of contact for us except the moment. Therefore, since the moment is both a beginning and an end, there must always be time on both sides of it. But if this is true of time, it is evident that it must also be true of motion, time being a kind of property of motion." (Physics, Book 8, Part 1). Study the philosophy of physicist Peter Higgs which affirms, common sense style and in the manner of Aristotle, the nonexistence and impossibility of absolute zero, absence, emptiness, the void and the vacuum. Which affirms that everywhere and at all times there is something, there is mass, and that the universe is existence and plenum, and that nowhere, in no place and at no time, is there nothing: "Nothing is not as simple as it seems. The concept of nothing has fascinated philosophers and scientists throughout history. The search for an ever-deeper understanding of nothing has driven scientific discovery since the age of ancient Greece, and today the pursuit of nothing defines the frontier of modern particle physics. But before we talk about nothing, let's talk about something: air. For millennia, philosophers thought that 'empty' air was nothing. Aristotle and the ancient Greeks, though, recognized air as a thing in its own right. Wind, after all, is nothing but air, yet it can be felt powerfully. Indeed, the Greeks considered air to be one of the basic elements, along with earth, water, and fire. These elements, in turn, were believed made of some basic something which they called ur matter. A familiar modern example, sucking on a drinking straw, seems to illustrate the impossibility of creating a vacuum: The straw doesn't fill up with vacuum but instead implodes, apparently confirming the Greek belief that 'Nature abhors a vacuum.' The Higgs field is believed to disturb the motion of fundamental particles like electrons as they move through it, producing the effect that we call mass. If this is correct, there should be particle manifestations of the Higgs field, known as Higgs bosons, just waiting to be discovered. The Large Hadron Collider (LHC) at CERN is hot on the trail of these particles, but decisive evidence of the Higgs boson—which is very massive and can only be produced in an enormous blast of energy—is still elusive. Scientists working on the LHC expect that they may see the first glimpse of the Higgs by the end of 2012. Whether this is the real deal or whether we are being fooled by some cruel, random throw of Nature's dice, time will tell. Aristotle was right: There is no thing that is nothing. Is the Higgs field part of the something? Within a few months we may know the answer." (Much Ado About Nothing by Frank Close). In Classical Culture, religion was permanently absent from philosophy and the special sciences, which were ruled exclusively by the principles of reason, sanity, common sense and ordinary experience. These principles affirmed the fundamental truths that nonexistence does not exist, that the universe is everything, and that to speak of its cause, beginning, end or expansion is to reify nothingness, to project an existence outside of all of existence, and to use words without meaning. In Western Culture, during the Age of Enlightenment in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, the Scientific Revolution led by Galileo and Newton banished religion from physics. In the nineteenth century, Darwin banished religion from biology. In the twentieth century, the march of history was halted by a resurgence of religion and the champions of reason were forced into an ignominious rout and retreat. The progress of time was transformed into a sinister wheel racing backward faster than the speed of light. It transported astronomy back into the stained glass pages of the Bible and into the gloomy chanting of the cloister and swept away mental health and well being with the fantastic story described in Genesis. Listen to the corruption of science in the present day brought by the walking dead from the distant past: "The biggest error of his life, Einstein said, was insisting that the universe was static and not expanding. Had he the benefit of biblical tradition, he might have felt secure in the prediction of his theory of relativity, that indeed the universe was in a state of expansion. The 3.5 K cosmic background radiation confirms not only the scientific theory of the expanding universe. It also confirms the traditional biblical statement of the expanding universe." (Genesis and the Big Bang: The Discovery Of Harmony Between Modern Science And The Bible by Gerald Schroeder). A scientist did not write these words. These words were written by a barker for a twenty first century tent revivalist congregation beckoning passersby to come on in and get religion. They were written by the voices of a latter day movement of ignorance and antienlightenment at whose hands the West has come full circle and ended at its beginning, in the Dark Ages.

TWO TRIALS IN ANTIQUITY

The time is 399 BC. The place is Athens. A man has been placed on trial and condemned to death by the popular assembly on the charge of opposing the prevailing liberal order and the philosophy of subjectivism on which it is based, and for championing the cause of universal truth and morality. Four centuries later, in Jerusalem, a man has been placed on trial and condemned to death on the charge of opposing the order of reason and sanity and promoting the dispensation of fear and superstition in its place. Two trials which took place in the Classical world, the first, the trial of Socrates, which disgraced this world, the second, the trial of Jesus, which ennobled it. A severe critic of liberalism and its ethos of relativism and tolerance, Socrates was convicted of employing his philosophic talents and abilities to pervert his younger friends and associates from loyalty to this order, which had retaken power in Athens in 403 BC. Listen to the words of Socrates which proclaim that the order of liberalism is the order of the mob. Which proclaim that liberal societies are moral monstrosities and alliances of human appearing animals whose cardinal organizing principle is the projection of truth and morality as relative to whim and fancy. Which proclaim that liberal societies are like ships without captains which have filled themselves with the swirling waters of moral subjectivism and sunk to the bottom of the ocean of moral iniquity. Which proclaim that liberal societies are morally blind, morally infirm, morally deaf, morally mute and lack the moral compass and navigating power which enable civilized societies to steer past the sea monsters of vice and degeneracy. Which proclaim that liberal societies violate the principle of fundamental justice by granting to worthless, contemptible scum of the earth the right to hold the reins of power and to direct the ship of state. Which proclaim that liberal societies have blocked the moral senses and faculties, chained up the champions of virtue and nobility, drawn and quartered the exemplars of human flourishing, ingested the narcotic of the disturbed, the amphetamines of rancor and resentment, staged popular uprisings and acts of mass violence, mutinied against the order of justice and desert, taken possession of the economic and political power which they are not morally entitled to possess, ransacked and plundered the factories and grain stores of civilization, and feasted and drank their way into the lowest rungs of hell and damnation. Which proclaim that liberal societies are terrifying voyages into moral and spiritual destruction conducted by the partisans, pilots, seamen, sailors and captains of the multitudes, the statesmen plying the classes of the indolent, the shiftless, the irresponsible and the good for nothing. Commanding the apparatus of compulsion, coercion, and public slander and vilification, these leaders have taken the helm of moral, political and social authority and closed the story of mankind with a final chapter entitled: The Permanent Winter Season Of Moral Turpitude And Mass Murder: "I perceive, I said, that you are vastly amused at having plunged me into such a hopeless discussion; but now hear the parable, and then you will be still more amused at the meagerness of my imagination: for the manner in which the best men are treated in their own States is so grievous that no single thing on earth is comparable to it; and therefore, if I am to plead their cause, I must have recourse to fiction, and put together a figure made up of many things, like the fabulous unions of goats and stags which are found in pictures. Imagine then a fleet or a ship in which there is a captain who is taller and stronger than any of the crew, but he is a little deaf and has a similar infirmity in sight, and his knowledge of navigation is not much better. The sailors are quarreling with one another about the steering --every one is of opinion that he has a right to steer, though he has never learned the art of navigation and cannot tell who taught him or when he learned, and will further assert that it cannot be taught, and they are ready to cut in pieces any one who says the contrary. They throng about the captain, begging and praying him to commit the helm to them; and if at any time they do not prevail, but others are preferred to them, they kill the others or throw them overboard, and having first chained up the noble captain's senses with drink or some narcotic drug, they mutiny and take possession of the ship and make free with the stores; thus, eating and drinking, they proceed on their voyage in such a manner as might be expected of them. He who is their partisan and cleverly aids them in their plot for getting the ship out of the captain's hands into their own whether by force or persuasion, they compliment with the name of sailor, pilot, able seaman, and abuse the other sort of man, whom they call a good for nothing; but that the true pilot must pay attention to the year and seasons and sky and stars and winds, and whatever else belongs to his art, if he intends to be really qualified for the command of a ship, and that he must and will be the steerer, whether other people like or not--the possibility of this union of authority with the steerer's art, has never seriously entered into their thoughts or been made part of their calling. Now in vessels which are in a state of mutiny and by sailors who are mutineers, how will the true pilot be regarded? Will he not be called by them a prater, a star gazer, a good for nothing?" (The Republic by Plato, Book VI). In 33 AD, Jesus was brought before the Roman governor of Judea, Pontius Pilate, and charged with spreading a mass movement of fear and superstition, and was found guilty and executed. Proclaiming himself to be the King of the Jews and the Son of God, Jesus sought to cast moral darkness and a moral eclipse across the noonday fields of Classical reason and sanity. The Roman historian Tacitus describes a Jewish poison from the East called Christ. He describes the thoughts and deeds of a Jewish criminal who peddled spiritual evil and intellectual horror, who told the defenders of empirical science to feel ashamed of themselves before the higher order of faith and feeling and to show regret and remorse for their sins and transgressions, and who was fueled by a single, passionate, implacable, overriding hatred for the human race. He describes the crucifixion of Jesus, when his flaming corpse lifted the darkness of ignorance and reverence for the supernatural which he had brought forth, and allowed the sunlight of pagan enlightenment and soundness of mind to shine through: "The originator of the name, Christ, was executed as a criminal by the governor Pontius Pilate during the reign of Tiberius; and though repressed, this destructive superstition erupted again, not only through Judea, which was the origin of this evil, but also through the city of Rome, to which all that is horrible and shameful floods together and is celebrated. Therefore, first those were seized who admitted their faith, and then, using the information they provided, a vast multitude were convicted, not so much for the crime of burning the city, but for hatred of the human race. And perishing they were additionally made into sports: they were killed by dogs by having the hides of beasts attached to them, or they were nailed to crosses or set aflame, and, when the daylight passed away, they were used as nighttime lamps." (Annals by Tacitus). Socrates and Jesus were spokesmen for two movements. Socrates was the spokesman for a Classical movement of reason, while Jesus was the spokesman for a Jewish movement of faith. Socrates was a pagan Greek who was guided by a clear, dispassionate intellect focused exclusively upon the world of reality, while Jesus was a member of the Arabian culture who was guided by his feelings and suffered from schizophrenia. Listen to Jesus's schizophrenic ravings in his claims to perform miracles and in his fantastic delusions of grandeur: "Do not believe me unless I do the works of my Father. But if I do them, even though you do not believe me, believe the works, that you may know and understand that the Father is in me, and I in the Father." (John 10:37-38). The condemnation of Socrates was a travesty of justice, a criminal conspiracy against an innocent man, and a massive indictment of the liberal order. Socrates was convicted of a thought crime, a crime of conscience, the crime of believing that man has a definition, that man is a rational animal, and that those who, by their choices and actions, have ignored this definition and refused to live a life of human flourishing have misused their freedom and are not in justice entitled to enjoy human rights. The condemnation of Jesus was the epitome and perfection of justice; it was the eradication of a sworn enemy of mental maturity, balance, health and well being; the execution of a prophet of mysticism, mania, madness and superstition. Jesus was arrested, tried, convicted and executed by the forces of reason. After his death, there was a resurrection, not of Jesus, but of the sickness for which he stood. The resurrection fueled a global movement which would, centuries later, inspire the leading philosophers of the Faustian West. Inhabited by the spirit of Jesus, the most influential philosopher of the West proclaimed: "I have found it necessary to deny knowledge in order to make room for faith." (The Critique of Pure Reason by Immanuel Kant). Two groups which the Romans in their heyday had sought to exterminate, the Christians and the Germans, lived on in spirit in the succeeding culture of the West. The spirit of a man who martyred himself for the cause of truth, the spirit of Socrates, would never anywhere rise again.

THE YELLOW PERIL

For centuries before the red peril of Marxism streamed out of China and loomed over the free world, there had been an indigenous yellow peril which cast its hideous shadow and threatened the lives of civilized people. Before the relentless advance of this threat, the citizens of the West, who earned their living through honest labor framed in the garlands of moral uprightness, sought to guard their most sacred possessions, their values, ideals and way of life, and launched wars of conquest, subjugation, colonization and extermination. Brave beyond words of description and unflinching in the face of unmitigated horror, the defenders of the West looked into the face of the Chinese monster whose flames and tentacles had scorched the institutions of virtuous, law abiding people and grabbed hold of their homes, offices, schools and neighborhoods, and reported to their friends and allies all that they saw and heard. They saw a pervasive moral vacuum devoid of Anglo-Saxon notions of human rights. They saw a people without moral compass or Western style appreciation of individual rights. They saw a society which denigrated liberal institutions and a society whose view of the relation between the state and individual was that between a master and slave. They saw a society without a minimum fulfillment of rights and freedoms and a society which sacrificed human dignity and individual autonomy upon the altar of safety nets and social justice. They saw a society in which tribalism and authoritarianism were justified as the Chinese people's selection of their own social and political system. They saw a society which proclaimed that there is no such thing as an abuse of human rights by the state because the notion of human rights is a Western construct and has no meaning in the superior Chinese order ruled by clans, families and tribes. They saw a society which proclaimed that the traditional Western focus on individual rights is based on the illusion of separateness and multiplicity and must be swept aside by a Chinese national revolution which will establish collective socioeconomic justice. They saw a society which proclaimed that the people's right to subsistence and security takes precedence over their right to live in freedom and dignity. They saw a society which proclaimed that the people have a right to enjoy a minimum standard of living and enjoy a continual improvement in that standard and the right to enjoy nothing else in the way of individual constitutional rights. They saw a society which proclaimed that the ideal state is a Confucian state which has renounced the language of individual rights and based legitimate governmental rule upon the achievement of collective economic welfare. They saw a society which proclaimed that the ideal state is one which reflects the ways in which ordinary Chinese people think and act and is thus one which deemphasizes the protection of human rights and promotes in its place national socioeconomic progress and development. They saw a society which proclaimed that the ideal government is interventionist, proactive and not constitutionally circumscribed; it promotes collective economic welfare and security; and rejects the existence of individual, natural, inalienable rights. They saw a society which proclaimed that the highest and noblest form of citizenship is Chinese style social citizenship, which establishes the mystical collective right to economic welfare and security, while the lowest, basest form of citizenship is Western style liberal, minimal citizenship, which establishes individual rights to property, liberty and due process of law. They saw a society which proclaimed that the ideal state is derived from the Confucian tradition and recognizes the right of the individual to possess an acceptable socioeconomic status, to have his basic material needs satisfied, and to live and prosper in a social welfarist order. They saw a society which proclaimed that the ideal state is one which has rejected the Western notions of private rights and circumscribed government and fulfilled its social responsibilities. It has confiscated wealth from those who are talented and successful to ensure that the masses of human appearing debris are fully protected, their livelihoods are unconditionally guaranteed, and their animal impulses are abundantly satisfied. They saw a society which proclaimed that the skillful management of state affairs requires the establishment of a social economy which protects and promotes the means of securing life's necessities of the most debased, degenerate classes. Listen to the words of Horace Greeley who describes a class of beings without the mental or moral qualities proper to civilized people. A class driven relentlessly onward by depraved desires and the impulse to bestial gratification. A class injecting itself with lines of vice and corruption and without human self respect of any kind. A class carried away in endless, aimless clouds of sleep and euphoria. A class inhabiting houses of dissipation bathed in the red lights of analgesia to relieve itself of the pain of existing. A class secluding itself from the demands of reality, lying prostrate in dens of iniquity, and blanketing itself in clouds of opium smoke. A class whose sole export to the West was drug abuse and built lairs of intoxication wherever it lived, breathed and fouled the air. A class whose highest calling was chaos, crime, license and the break up of friendships, homes and families. A class unable to speak the language of decent, upright, hard working people and whose only words were those of diseased wolves scavenging the streets for subsistence while luxuriating in altered states of consciousness. A class of repellent monsters reproducing in the mine shafts of the Devil and officially called the Chinese: "The Chinese are hardly used here. In the first place, they are taxed four dollars each per month for the naked privilege of mining at all. Next, they are not allowed to mine anywhere but in diggings which white men have worked out and abandoned, or which no white man considers worth working. Thirdly, if these rejected diggings happen, in Chinese hands, to prove better than their reputation, and to begin yielding liberally, a mob of white sovereigns soon drive the Chinese out of them, neck and heels. John [Chinaman] does not seem to be a very bad fellow, but he is treated worse than though he were. He is not malignant nor sanguinary, and seldom harms any but his own tribe. But he is thoroughly sensual, and intent on the fullest gratification of his carnal appetites, and on nothing else. He eats and drinks the best he can get, and as much as he can hold; but he is never so devoid of self respect as to be seen drunk in a public place; even for an opium debauch, he secludes himself where none but a friendly eye can reach him. His 'particular vanity' in the eating line is rice, whereof he will have the best only, if the best is to be had; he likes a fat chicken also, and will pay his last dollar for one, rather than go without. Lacking the dollar, it is charged that he will rob hen roosts; at all events, hen roosts are sometimes robbed, and John has to bear the blame. He is popularly held to spend nothing, but carry all his gains out of the country and home to his native land--a charge disproved by the fact that he is an inveterate gambler, an opium smoker, a habitual rum drinker, and a devotee of every sensual vice. But he is weak in body, and not allowed to vote, so it is safe to trample on him; he does not write English, and so cannot tell the story of his wrongs; he has no family here (the few Chinese women brought to this country being utterly shameless and abandoned), so that he forms no domestic ties, and enjoys no social standing. Even the wretched Indians of California repel with scorn the suggestion that there is any kinship between their race and the Chinese. John has traits which I can neither praise nor justify; yet I suspect that, if other men's faults were punished as severely as his, a good many Californians would be less comfortable than they are." (California Mines and Mining by Horace Greeley). For four decades after the communist seizure of power in 1949, China existed in name only. It was not a sovereign, independent nation but a member of the international communist movement and conspiracy under the command of the Soviet Union, enforcing its Brezhnev Doctrine against satellite dissenters. After the fall of international communism, China regained its independence and began threatening the West anew as the yellow peril of yore. The unleashing of a global disease pandemic caused by its consumption of and intercourse with wild animals. The systematic theft of patents, copyrights and high technology. Espionage cells organized in every city in America. Military aggression in the South China Sea. Violations of nuclear nonproliferation agreements. The manipulation of its currency. Unfair trade practices culminating in dumping. The abolition of Hong Kong's special status as an autonomous region under the "one country, two systems" agreement with Britain through the establishment of a National Security Law. This law will prohibit individual freedom, parliamentary democracy, the rule of constitutional law and connections with the West in Hong Kong as acts of "treason, secession, sedition and subversion". Uninformed observers have described these developments as part of "the new China". They are in point of fact part of the old China and they have returned to wage war on the West and the disrupt peace of the world.

THE SHAME OF THE CITIES

Garbage lies strewn across a sidewalk. Vagrants are sleeping on it in a drug induced stupor. Pedestrians walk by it and scatter it into the gutter. Behind the sidewalk is a wall and on the walk is the gigantic shadow of a rat. These baneful rodents are in control of today's cities, both literally and metaphorically. The rats of red politics have granted mastery of the streets to the actual animals and together the two have lowered the curtain on centuries of metropolitan progress. While cities have traditionally been shining, soaring symbols of capitalist power and success, since the dawn of the twentieth century they have become magnets, tanks, bowls and receptacles for the socialist masses, symbols of a cultural shift toward the left which has composed the final chapter of the West. In America in the last presidential election, rural dwellers voted for the politics of freedom championed by Donald Trump, while urban dwellers voted for the politics of gender, race and class championed by Hilary Clinton. In Europe, rural dwellers oppose unrestricted immigration and demand the assimilation of newcomers to liberal values, while urban dwellers promote the politics of moral relativism and multiculturalism and have opened the borders of their nations to the enemies of civilization. In Britain, rural dwellers supported Brexit with its promise of a return to Anglo-Saxon liberty, while urban dwellers opposed Brexit and sought to achieve ever closer connections to the politics of statism and dictatorship which the European Union had come to represent. From San Diego and to Stuttgart to cities across Switzerland, the reds have marched on city hall and assumed control over its policies and programs. A portrait of a city is a portrait of mass aggregation. It is a portrait of antiliberal, anticapitalist, antindustrial and antiprogress administrations. It is a portrait of radicals for expansive government and a portrait of the decline and fall of the West: "In Switzerland, big cities are governed by left wing administrations, but they are islands in a more center-right sea. Newly released statistics confirm the picture. In the six Swiss cities with over 100,000 inhabitants (Zurich, Geneva, Basel, Lausanne, Bern, Winterthur) left wing groups held over seventy percent of local government positions in 2018, the Federal Statistical Office (FSO) reported on Tuesday. As the towns become smaller, the profile changes: in urban areas of under 20,000, just twenty three percent of seats are held by the left; the most represented group in these towns is the center-right Liberal Radicals. Indeed the Liberal Radicals are the most successful party overall in the 172 towns and cities examined by the FSO, holding thirty percent of the seats. Along with the People's Party and Christian Democrats, the center-right and right account for over half of all seats. Regionally, the picture also conforms to received wisdom: French speaking towns and cities are more left than the national average, while in Ticino things lean towards the right. As for the right wing People's Party, their urban base is almost exclusively confined to towns and cities in German speaking Switzerland. Greens have continued to progress and stood at seven percent of seats nationally in 2018." (The Bigger The City, The More Left Wing Its Politics by Swiss Info). Ruled by the reds, America's cities are case studies of moral degeneration luxuriating in mountains of filth. Chased away by decent, law abiding people bearing torch lights blazing with virtue and righteousness, the Devil was granted sanctuary in America's cities and see how he set up shop. From Baltimore to Buffalo to Birmingham to Brownsville to Los Angeles to Seattle to Cleveland to Memphis, the Devil's story, the story of savage jungles defiling lands settled by civilized people, remains the same, and only the names, dates and protagonists have changed. It is the story of homelessness and impoverishment stalking unsafe streets. It is the story of safe harbor given to illegal immigrants. It is the story of violent crime bringing down darkness at noon and make people scared to leave their own homes and scared to look at their own shadows. It is the story of a sprawl of zeroes, zero tax base, zero infrastructure, zero employers, zero trained workers, zero business incentives, zero corporate investment, zero border controls and zero law enforcement, laying pavements of downfall and decline across fields of nothingness. It is the story of lives and careers drawn, quartered, plundered and ransacked by the mounted riders of murder, manslaughter, robbery and aggravated assault. It is the story of citizens deprived of their Second Amendment rights and all means to protect themselves. It is the story of onerous tax burdens, excessive business regulations, unrelenting crime waves, snakes directing black markets, scoundrels peddling vice and degeneracy, and specimens of subhumanity without moral health or well being abolishing safety and security in the streets. Listen to the words of a traitor and turncoat in a land of freedom called America who entered the precincts of today's urban sewers and embraced the cause of totalitarianism. Who descended into an inferno of collectivist politics and scorched his soul. Who renounced his belief that human beings are born in a state of freedom and dignity and not born enslaved in a nexus of social responsibility. Who renounced his belief in natural law mandating the freedom of man when he underwent the Devil's baptism in the urban fever swamps and became a programmed robot. Who became a machine replicating human movements and functions but without a human mind or conscience, a fearsome automaton whose websites and messages promote socialized medicine, universal healthcare, state aggression against the individual, the sacrifice of all to all, and the dissolution of five centuries of liberal order: "There is perhaps no other single issue I have had such a hard 180-degree turn on than healthcare. As a conservative, I vehemently opposed Obamacare and saw it as a slippery slope to a single payer healthcare system—in other words, socialized medicine. But now I live in California and, self employed, need to provide my own healthcare. Using the Covered California website to find a healthcare plan, I find that the cheapest possible plan is about $500 per month—plus another $40 for dental coverage. That's $6,480 per year just for health insurance, which doesn't include copays ($75 per visit because the premium is so cheap) and medication. I know California isn't the most expensive in the country, but it's still a huge amount of money for a self employed person to spend out of pocket. I recognize that a lot of people in California are in far more dire financial situations than I am. How can they afford healthcare? I have a new opinion about universal healthcare: Bring it on—the sooner the better. Thirty year old Dave would not even recognize me." (I'm A Conservative Who Moved To A Liberal City, And I Was Surprised To See My Views Change On Several Issues by Dave Johnson). Listen to the reds who celebrate the totalitarian coloration of the city. Whose mayors, masses, labor unions, professional classes, teachers, professors, writers and intelligentsia have marched on city hall and enforced socialism on every street corner. Who have breached the wall of separation between church and state, built up laboriously and with great struggle over the centuries by liberal jurisprudence, and corrupted public municipal offices with the tenets of a new religion. This is a religion of social justice and social responsibility in which the state has been granted total control over social and economic affairs and the individual has been reduced to a rightless cog in the machinery of the people's municipal council. This is a religion whose activists and clergy have lowered the curtain on liberal freedom, capitalism and self responsibility and crushed every man, woman and child within the maw of a hyperleviathan promoting universal slavery in the name of progressive social reform: "Socialist Kshama Sawant's election to the Seattle City Council in November 2013 made national news, a kind of man bites dog story that the media found shocking and irresistible. The Los Angeles Times's front page article described Sawant as '41 year old software-engineer-turned-far-left-sweetheart.' The Seattle Times called her 'the council's first socialist member in modern history.' In fact, the United States has a long tradition of municipal socialism. One hundred years ago, at the Socialist Party's high point, about 1,200 party members held public office in 340 cities, including seventy nine mayors in cities such as Milwaukee, Buffalo, Minneapolis, Reading, and Schenectady. (Before Sawant, the last socialist to get elected in Seattle was journalist Anna Louise Strong, who won a seat on the School Board in 1916). These local leaders, whose ranks included working class labor union members and middle class radicals such as teachers, clergy, and lawyers, worked alongside progressive reformers to improve living and working conditions in the nation's burgeoning cities. In today's hypercapitalist economy, their experience may still offer some lessons for contemporary activists." (Radicals In City Hall: An American Tradition by Peter Drier). The city is the natural home of the masses and the sins of the masses are the sins of the cities. Endless rows of beggars and thieves. Swirling currents of refuse and filth. Unabashed peddlers of vice and debasement. Ear splitting tub thumpers demanding occupation and revolution. Gangland leaders spreading a scourge of violence and homicide. Misfits and degenerates vanishing fetal position into corners of drug induced euphoria. Such are scenes from the cities of today presided over by the reds and the rats reproducing like the Black Death in the dying hours of the West.

THE ENEMIES OF GLOBAL CAPITALISM

The twentieth century commenced the sharp downhill slide of the West into the raging fever swamps of pure collectivism. This moral and political calamity saw the rejection of the notion of civil citizenship, first championed in the eighteenth century during the Age of Enlightenment, which guaranteed to the individual the rights to property, personal liberty and due process of law, in favor of the new notion of social citizenship, which rejected individual rights and viewed the individual as born enslaved within a nexus of social responsibility. Rejecting the Enlightenment ideal of a minimal state combined with maximum individual freedom, the twentieth century championed the reverse ideal of a maximum state combined with minimum individual freedom, and reduced the individual to the level of a rightless cog in the machinery of the social organism, duty bound to serve his fellow man. Proclaiming that the individual has a right to have his basic material needs satisfied by others, and that the individual was born on this earth encumbered by the moral obligation to live, breath, think, act and work for the sake of others, the religion of collectivism which gained ascendancy in the twentieth century has declared open war against the advance of global capitalism and sought to turn back the clock of history to the nameless, gloomy eons when freedom was unknown and the clan, tribe and bloodthirsty kingdom ruled the life and career of the individual. The enemies of global capitalism wear many faces and masks but all stand united in their implacable hatred of freedom and their single minded determination to crush the individual beneath the dead weight of a collective entity, whether it be a gender, race, class or nation. The first salvo against global capitalism was launched in the mid nineteenth century and took a half a century to land and take full effect. Expelled from the capital cities of the European continent, a moral and spiritual virus landed in London, and under the shelter of the English system of liberty which he so vehemently despised, composed a program and manifesto for the sewage currents of society which had gathered around him and worshiped him as their prophet and savior. Listen to the words of Karl Marx who promotes a religion of materialism which denies the existence of the human mind and views matter, muscles and machinery as irreducible primaries. Who proclaims that the source of all wealth and profits resides in brute muscular labor, that matter controls spirit, muscles create capital and machines originate ideas, and that the class of intellectual laborers or knowledge workers, called the bourgeois, does not in fact perform any real work but only exploits, expropriates and enslaves the true working class, called the proletariat. Who proclaims that this oppressed class of muscular, manual, unskilled, proletarian laborers must organize themselves, form a vast army and stage a mighty revolution. This will be a revolution to overthrow the world of modern manufacturing and industry, the modern legal system of individual rights on which it is based, and the global liberal capitalist order, and establish in their place a global people's order manned by the sergeants, officers and overlookers of red totalitarian tyranny: "Modern industry has converted the little workshop of the patriarchal master into the great factory of the industrial capitalist. Masses of laborers, crowded into the factory, are organized like soldiers. As privates of the industrial army they are placed under the command of a perfect hierarchy of officers and sergeants. Not only are they slaves of the bourgeois class, and of the bourgeois state; they are daily and hourly enslaved by the machine, by the overlooker, and, above all, by the individual bourgeois manufacturer himself. The more openly this despotism proclaims gain to be its end and aim, the more petty, the more hateful and the more embittering it is. The less the skill and exertion of strength implied in manual labor, in other words, the more modern industry becomes developed, the more is the labor of men superseded by that of women. Differences of age and sex have no longer any distinctive social validity for the working class. All are instruments of labor, more or less expensive to use, according to their age and sex. No sooner is the exploitation of the laborer by the manufacturer, so far, at an end, that he receives his wages in cash, than he is set upon by the other portions of the bourgeois, the landlord, the shopkeeper, the pawnbroker, etc." (The Communist Manifesto by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels). As the Marxist missile landed and exploded into the twentieth century and its heat and blast gave rise to the international communist movement and conspiracy, one of Marx's students stepped forward onto the stage of history and made a discovery as evil and sinister as that of his master. Just as Marx had discovered the socialism of the proletariat and fueled its war of hatred against global capitalism, so his preeminent student discovered the socialism of the race and fatherland and fueled its war of hatred against global capitalism. Listen to the words of Adolf Hitler who condemns the capitalist system of global freedom and liberty. Who calls for a reawakening of the primitive forces of race and blood and the formation of nationalist economic systems. Who condemns the order of international finance, banking, trade and currency standards and their liberation of labor and capital throughout the world. Who condemns the order of global freedom as a raging cataract of financial catastrophe and makes a clarion call for the creation of a new movement. This is a movement of race hatred, primitive tribalism and fatherland worship which will sweep away the aims, missions, programs and policies of Enlightenment civilization: "It is today no longer possible to build up a state on a capitalist basis. The peoples eventually begin to stir. The awakening of the peoples cannot be prevented by wars. On the contrary, war will only hasten it. Such states will be ruined by financial catastrophes which will destroy the foundations of their own former financial policy. The gold standard will not emerge victorious from this war. Rather, the national economic systems will conquer. And these will carry on among themselves the trade that is necessary for them. Whether this does or does not suit a few gold standard bankers in the world is quite immaterial. And if some of these gold bankers declare: 'We cannot tolerate your trading with this or that country,' it is none of their business. In future the peoples will decline to accept rules as to their trade policy laid down by a few bankers. They will follow the policy which is best adapted to their needs. I am not the slave of a few international banking syndicates. I am under no obligation to any capitalist group. I sprang from the German people. My Movement, our Movement, is a German people's Movement, and it is only to this German people that we are obligated " (Speech To The National Socialist Party In Munich, February 1941, by Adolf Hitler). Global capitalism is the greatest political and economic invention in the history of mankind. A product of the Enlightenment, global capitalism is the order of freedom which transcends national borders. It is the order of private economy, private production, private trade, private exchange, private information, private distribution, private profit, private corporations, private capital, private labor, private finance, private investment, private partnerships, private competition, private transactions, private relations, private contracts and private markets which has extended the reach of freedom to everyone everywhere on the planet. It stands today in the throes of death agony and a death rattle. For the world is evenly divided between two camps of anticapitalists, who are fighting each other and fighting their common enemy for global mastery and control. The first camp has descended directly from Marx and marches under the banners of global proletarian socialism. The second camp has descended from Marx via Hitler and marches under the banners of gender, race and nationalist politics. Listen to the words of a Marxist proletarian globalist who condemns the global movement of freedom which has brought forth the scimitars of deregulation, privatized economies, cut back welfare states, and demanded greater self responsibility from all. Who seeks to make the springtime Age of the Enlightenment a political and cultural irrelevancy and establish a new international order. Marching under the banners of Occupy Wall Street and the struggle of the working class, this is a revolution to contract the moral and spiritual quality of life down to a vanishing point by placing freedom in permanent recession and retreat. This is a revolution to take possession of private property, private wealth, private prosperity and private rights and commence an age of popular despotism and dictatorship: "From its inception in mid September, Occupy Wall Street has identified with the revolutionary Arab Spring in a spirit of internationalism that sees the struggle of working people everywhere against the ravages of recessionary economies governed by deregulation, privatization, and austerity measures. These policies have meant foreclosures, unemployment, downsizing, and a generally lower quality of life for most of us while the very rich enjoy a prosperity not seen since the Gilded Age." (Occupy Wall Street And The Rhetoric of Equality by Deborah Jacobs). Listen to the words of an antiglobalist national socialist who rejects the right of the individual to live and work for himself and demands that consumers pay higher prices for domestically made goods in order to support their fellow tribesmen. Who demands massive tariffs on imports and a Buy American program to advance the power and glory of the Fatherland: "Obviously, a lot of consumers would happily pay more to know that something is made in the USA—or at least not in China. We'd like to support our fellow Americans. How about that search refinement, Amazon? 'Made in USA—including constituent parts' or '0% Chinese.' I'd wager these would be more popular than the hundreds of other search parameters, such as star ratings, price, manufacturer, prime, calories, gluten free and so on. Where are the massive tariffs on Chinese goods and the Buy American programs?" (The Bill For Globalism Has Arrived by Anne Coulter). The twenty first century has brought the arrival of mounted riders of the apocalypse. Named Gender, Race, Class and Nation, these figures have laid civilization to rest in a graveyard marked Identity Politics.

A MESSAGE TO GARCIA

In February 1898 in the Havana Harbor, 258 American sailors on board the USS Maine, stationed to protect the Cuban people in their war of independence, were sent to their deaths by an exploding torpedo fired by the Spanish government. The torpedo was part of a secret arsenal of torpedoes used by Spain to sabotage the efforts of freedom fighters on the island who were determined to repulse the overlords of Spanish persecution. Seeking to make contact with General Calixto Garcia, leader of the Cuban War of Independence, President William McKinley summoned First Lieutenant Andrew Rowan of the United States Army and gave him a message to deliver to Garcia. This message was a description of American idealism ranged against a criminal infernal machine set into motion by the agents of Spanish imperialism. This message described American power spread across the Western Hemisphere freeing the Cubans from the cruelties of the Spanish imperialist monarchy. It described the long line of atrocities committed by Spain in Cuba, which culminated in the sinking of the USS Maine, which had made Americans resolved to fight the Spanish invaders. It described a decrepit, degenerate and despotic Spanish empire being rolled back by the armies of American civilization. It described Spanish troops placing Cubans in concentration camps where they were mauled to death by the wild panthers of hunger and disease. It described Secretary of the Navy Theodore Roosevelt and Colonel Leonard Wood at a regimental training camp in San Antonio, Texas, where they transformed hunters of the mountains and rough riders of the plains into disciplined soldiers trained to fight for the freedom of Cuba. It described the charge of the Rough Riders up San Juan Hill to show the world the practical meaning of American idealism. It transmitted the words of Henry Cabot Lodge who swore eternal allegiance to the Cubans in their struggle to gain their freedom and independence. Who sought to put an end to the enslavement and persecution of the Cuban people by any and all means possible. Who proclaimed that so long as Cubans were not free and lived in fear and horror, he, his fellow Americans and the citizens of the civilized world, were all Cubans, in heart, mind, spirit and soul: "Of the sympathies of the American people, generous, liberty-loving, I have no question. They are with the Cubans in their struggle for freedom. I believe our people would welcome any action on the part of the United States to put an end to the terrible state of things existing there. We can stop it. We can stop it peacefully. We can stop it, in my judgment, by pursuing a proper diplomacy and offering our good offices. Let it once be understood that we mean to stop the horrible state of things in Cuba and it will be stopped. The great power of the United States, if it is once invoked and uplifted, is capable of greater things than that." McKinley's message to Garcia transmitted the words of Albert Beveridge who exalted a global sentinel of liberty called America. Who exalted a nation whose coastlines framed a canvas of freedom and opportunity upon which the oppressed people of world would settle and compose their life story. Who exalted a land vitalized and ennobled by the currents of modern civilization, a land whose liberal institutions, liberal authority, liberal might, liberal blood, liberal folk, liberal toilers, liberal purpose and liberal mission, bequeathed by England, were destined to spread the blessings of a human way of life to the downtrodden subjects of Spanish rule in Cuba: "It is a noble land that God has given us; a land that can feed and clothe the world; a land whose coastlines would enclose half the countries of Europe; a land set like a sentinel between the two imperial oceans of the globe, a greater England with a nobler destiny. It is a mighty people that He has planted on this soil; a people sprung from the most masterful blood of history; a people perpetually revitalized by the virile, man producing working folk of all the earth; a people imperial by virtue of their power, by right of their institutions, by authority of their heaven directed purposes--the propagandists and not the misers of liberty." (The March Of The Flag by Albert Beveridge). McKinley's message to Garcia transmitted Beveridge's words of faith in the glorious future and decisive victory of human liberty. Words which exalted the soldiers and statesmen of America who understood their shining destiny and would not allow the sun of triumph ever to set upon it. It was the destiny to implant human civilization beyond the farthest boundaries of the known world: in barren, blazing deserts, in grim, hostile mountains, in wild, savage continents, and in unexplored nations and kingdoms, and to serve as prophets and martyrs for the cause of liberty on the island of Cuba: "It is a glorious history our God has bestowed upon His chosen people; a history heroic with faith in our mission and our future; a history of statesmen who flung the boundaries of the Republic out into unexplored lands and savage wilderness; a history of soldiers who carried the flag across blazing deserts and through the ranks of hostile mountains, even to the gates of sunset; a history of a multiplying people who overran a continent in half a century; a history of prophets who saw the consequences of evils inherited from the past and of martyrs who died to save us from them; a history divinely logical, in the process of whose tremendous reasoning we find ourselves today." (The March Of The Flag by Albert Beveridge). McKinley's message to Garcia transmitted Beveridge's words which recognized the right of America to unfurl its flag of liberal government upon the most distant, savage, oppressed shores. Which recognized that human beings who do not live and flourish as human beings ought to live and flourish are not, morally speaking, human beings and are not entitled to enjoy the blessings of self government. Which recognized that the notion of consent does not apply to children or to human appearing animals and they are not entitled to be protected from the imposition of aggressive violence. Which looked forward to the day when the reeking miasma of bloodshed, plunder, cruelty and extortion which engulfs foreign lands like a whirling black cloud is lifted and dispelled by the placid sunshine of benevolent, refined, civilized, enlightened authority. Which eagerly awaited the time when the gates of Asia were hurled open to the rule of liberty and law, when the territories of the East were impelled to become compassionate and humane, when the islands of the Atlantic and the Pacific were educated in the ways of reason and virtue, when the people of Cuba, long treated unjustly by the Spanish throne, were given back their rights, the sovereignty and their dignity, and when the world became America's and the world became free: "Hawaii is ours; Puerto Rico is to be ours; at the prayer of her people Cuba finally will be ours; in the islands of the East, even to the gates of Asia, coaling stations are to be ours at the very least; the flag of a liberal government is to float over the Philippines, and may it be the banner that Taylor unfurled in Texas and Fremont carried to the coast. The Opposition tells us that we ought not to govern a people without their consent. I answer, The rule of liberty that all just government derives its authority from the consent of the governed, applies only to those who are capable of self government We govern the Indians without their consent, we govern our territories without their consent, we govern our children without their consent. How do they know what our government would be without their consent? Would not the people of the Philippines prefer the just, humane, civilizing government of this Republic to the savage, bloody rule of pillage and extortion from which we have rescued them? And, regardless of this formula of words made only for enlightened, self governing people, do we owe no duty to the world? Shall we turn these peoples back to the reeking hands from which we have taken them? Shall we abandon them, with Germany, England, Japan, hungering for them? Shall we save them from those nations, to give them a self rule of tragedy? " (The March Of The Flag by Albert Beveridge). When Garcia finished reading the message given to him by McKinley, he slipped into a reverie and the following scenes passed through his mind, forming a progression of events leading up to a glorious climax. In the first scene, Spanish troops line up Cuban rebels against a wall and fire a volley. There is a flash of rifles and drifting smoke. In the second scene, the Spanish sink the USS Maine with a torpedo and the explosion claims the lives of most of the crew. In the third scene are the three musketeers of the Spanish-American War for the liberation of Cuba: Theodore Roosevelt, who led the war on the battlefield; Henry Cabot Lodge, who led the war on the floor of the Senate; and William Randolph Hearst, who led the war on the pages of newspapers and in the homes of each and every American. In the fourth scene is the image of an American eagle spreading its wings from the Philippines to Puerto Rico, 16,000 kilometers from tip to tip, sheltering the free people of Cuba. Garcia woke up from his dream and contemplated the true story which he had beheld. It laid a wreath of glory and nobility upon the infantry and cavalry of American imperialism.

CITIZEN HEARST

In a house in Beverly Hills, California in 1951, the greatest news media magnate in the world lies on his deathbed. As the nurse enshrouds his body and the Grim Reaper enters to take him away, his friends and associates gather round to reminisce on a life lived and a journey undertaken which was larger and greater than life itself. The name of the deceased was William Randolph Hearst and his friends exchanged stories and reflections on a man whose media empire reached across the nation and educated an audience from New York to Boston to Chicago to Los Angeles to San Francisco. Words and images from Hearst's life passed through their minds and told the story of a man who defined the quality of moral integrity and set a standard of principled business management which few business practitioners have ever reached. This was the story of a man who was willing to advance any crusade, however unpopular, and to confront any individual, however powerful, in the name of defending truth and justice, and was ready to apply all the resources at his command to defeat the enemies of freedom and civilization, no matter what the professional or personal consequences might be. This was the story of a man who created and maintained a news media empire dedicated to the presentation of unbiased reporting, unfiltered information, unscreened facts and the defense of liberal, enlightenment values. This was the story of a man who championed the Spanish-American War to free Cuba from the yoke of Spanish imperialism. His newspapers were the voice of decent, civilized Americans and compelled President William McKinley and Congress to declare war against Spain in 1898. Recognizing the right of the Cuban people to throw off the shackles of a foreign invader, he celebrated the right of a free press and a free people to rule, regulate and reform the world. This was the story of a man who advocated the expansion of freedom throughout the Western hemisphere through the annexation of Hawaii, the construction of an interoceanic canal through Panama or Nicaragua, the acquisition of strategic bases in the Caribbean, the maintenance of a world class navy, and the establishment of national military universities at West Point and Annapolis to train the soldiers of liberty and stock the arsenals of Western civilization. He achieved all these objectives by means of Congressional legislation. This was the story of a man who crusaded under the banners of modern civilization, the banners of humane culture, constitutional democracy, and individual liberty under the rule of law, and recognized the right to impose this civilization upon primitive, retrograde societies in whose souls coursed the religions and institutions of collectivism and brute force. Who condemned friendship and fraternization with barbarian cultures as unwarranted, unwise and ungrounded in the principles of justice and advocated the annihilation of these pockmarks and blights upon the human race. Who advocated the establishment of a global imperialist movement embodying the American ideals of liberal governance and dedicated to the acquisition and development of subhuman regions and territories. Who advocated the establishment of America as the dominant world power, an America which would launch a mighty assault against the bestial marsh gases emanating from the decaying matter of Asia and Russia, and build up an indomitable deterrent force against threats to civilization whenever and wherever they arose. Who advocated the Americanization of the Western hemisphere, the pacification of the fierce jungles of Latin America under the umbrella of a liberal empire and in the sanctuary of a civilizing program, whose army, navy, guns, ammunition, labor, capital, markets and military bases, reaching from Paraguay to Panama to Cuba to Puerto Rico, would let the bells of freedom toll to the ends of the earth: "But in this age of world imperialism—the building of huge navies, the arms race, the acquisition of territories in undeveloped areas, the competition for foreign markets and goods—Wilson's New Freedom 'policy of friendship based on altruism' was to Hearst's way of thinking impracticable, if not astoundingly foolish. He envisioned the United States as a dominant world power. Much like Theodore Roosevelt, he believed that the civilized nations were the purveyors of culture, the protectors of laws and liberty, indeed the practitioners of democracy. Of course, the most practical way to carry out such a civilizing program was through an expanded empire, where American ideals and principles could be implemented immediately. Yet, when such possibilities were either inaccessible or unattainable, Hearst reasoned, the United States must act as a deterrent force against 'the threatening and tremendous assault of the Asiatic and the Slav upon the religion, the institutions, and the civilization of us Caucasians.' Hearst therefore crusaded for expanding the American empire. After his active participation in bringing about the Spanish American War, he continued to hail as exemplary the establishment of the military base in Cuba (at Guantanamo Bay) and the territorial acquisition of Puerto Rico." (William Randolph Hearst: The Later Years, 1911-1951 by Ben Proctor). The story of Hearst was the story of a man who championed the cause of humanity and civilization and sought to spread its virtues and goodness into the darkest and most benighted regions of the earth. Who sought to rescue indigenous lands from the monstrous jaws of political tyranny and savage ignorance in which they had been consumed for nameless, gloomy eons. Who sought to conquer, disinfect, immunize and heal barbarian societies with the antivirals and antibacterials of American armies and schools, and American methods of force and persuasion, which reason and justice demanded. Who recognized the natural, inalienable, infeasible right of American forces, Western forces, liberal forces and progressive forces to occupy and confer a human character upon ancient cultures whose flags stood for blood and violence, and in so doing, to make the world safe for the survival, success, advantage and advancement of humanity: "The course for the Wilson administration was therefore clear, Hearst concluded. True to his progressive beliefs, he fervently urged the president 'to occupy Mexico and restore it to a state of civilization by means of American MEN and American METHODS.' In April 1914, when Wilson ordered US forces to seize the eastern port of Vera Cruz for what the New York American characterized as continued insults to the American flag, Hearst was only temporarily satisfied. By June, with conditions in Mexico continuing to deteriorate, he argued that annexation was the logical solution. 'Our flag should wave over Mexico as a symbol of the rehabilitation of that unhappy country and its redemption in humanity and civilization,' because 'our right in Mexico is the right of HUMANITY.' After all, Hearst reasoned, 'if we have no right in Mexico, we have no right in California or in Texas, which we redeemed from Mexico from savagery and for civilization.' Indeed, the American people 'have always fought for the cause of civilization and the principles of humanity. And what we conquer, let us conserve for the advantage and advancement of all humanity.' " (William Randolph Hearst: The Later Years, 1911-1951 by Ben Proctor). The story of Hearst was the story of a man who condemned President Roosevelt's New Deal as an egregious violation of the Constitution. Who understood that the function of a judge is to enforce the law and not to legislate from the bench, and to interpret constitutional texts in accordance with their plain meaning and not to conjure up meanings out of whole cloth in order to advance a social justice agenda. Who recognized that America is a nation governed by the rule of law and not the will of a dictator, and that the Supreme Court is the ultimate guardian of the people's rights and the final scale of constitutional justice, and not an engine of despotism, oppression, class war or mob revolution. Who understood that America, as a liberal society, was founded upon the principle of equal protection for all under the law, the principle of equal treatment, liberty and opportunity for rich man and poor man, black man and white man, immigrant and native born, and was not founded upon the tribalization, collectivization, disparagement and destruction of the individual: "Hearst then, in thoughtfully worded sentences, demonstrated his disdain for FDR'S New Deal. The Revolutionists of 1776 had intended 'to OBTAIN freedom, not to despise and discard it.' They had 'created a Supreme Court to interpret the Constitution, and maintain exact justice and equality before the law,' not like the New Dealers 'try to PACK THE SUPREME COURT and personally DICTATE the laws of the land.' And they had established 'a Congress to represent the WHOLE PEOPLE,' not 'a venal body subservient to the will of a dictator, receiving their reward in patronage for betrayal of the peoples rights.' Hearst then announced to his 10 million strong Sunday readership that 'if Mr. Roosevelt is ESPECIALLY descended from immigrants, he should remember that most of those immigrants came to this country to escape despotism, oppression, and extortion, and to find liberty, opportunity, and prosperity in those basic American institutions which misguided modern revolutionists of the New Deal are mistakenly endeavoring to disparage, demolish, and destroy.' " (William Randolph Hearst: The Later Years, 1911-1951 by Ben Proctor). When Hearst's friends and associates departed from his room and paid him their last respects, they briefly spoke to each other outside on the street before they went home. They spoke about a man whose legacy was truth in journalism, liberal idealism, and the defense of civilization against an advancing empire of totalitarian tyranny. They spoke about a man the likes of which the world never see again.

THE JOURNEY OF CHARLES LINDBERGH

On May 19, 1927, pilot Charles Lindbergh tries to sleep in a hotel room near Roosevelt Field. His friend guards his room from reporters. He is unable to sleep but has a mighty vision of the future which awaits him, a vision of a stupendous journey through air and space and through the treacherous waters of political incorrectness, a journey which would make him one of the most unusual, most inspiring and most victimized heroes in American history. The vision commences on May 20, when Lindbergh takes off in The Spirit Of Saint Louis from Roosevelt Field. He flies northeast along the coast and flies over Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. He flies over the Atlantic Ocean using only a magnetic compass and an airspeed indicator. He flies over Ireland. Crossing the Irish Coast, he heads toward Paris. Landing at Le Bourget Field after thirty three and a half hours of flight, he is greeted by a frenzied, ecstatic crowd of hundreds of thousands. He is the first person to fly solo across the Atlantic Ocean. After his triumphant return to St Louis in June, after ticker tape parades attended by thousands across the nation in his honor, after being awarded the Medal of Honor by an act of Congress, the vision jumps to the year 1939. This is the year when Lindbergh hears the call of conscience and opposes America's intervention in the war in Europe, the year when the adulation of the nation disappears, and the year when Lindbergh becomes the object of national calumny and vilification. His vision next jumps to the year 1941, when he joins the America First Committee, an organization which opposes American entry into World War II, and the hate campaign against him intensifies. Listen to Lindbergh who champions the cause of freedom and civilization against the international communist movement and conspiracy. Who unfurls the banner of human liberty and the rule of law as he confronts a totalitarian beast called Russia. Who crusades against the forces of aggression emanating like wildfire from the steppes of Asia and demands that the tyranny of the reds be crushed forever. Who beholds a Marxist empire spreading its fearsome tentacles into Europe, enslaving the people of Finland, befriendng and trading with the Devil, peddling class hatred and class war, greedy beyond greed for the riches of the West, and demands that the Allies' obscene alliance with the Soviets ended immediately: "First, we were subjected to a fear campaign, and told that America would be invaded if we didn't defend England. Then we were subjected to a greed campaign, and told that Germany would get some of our foreign trade if we didn't protect the British Empire. Now we are subjected to a hate campaign, and told that Germany may not be crushed if we don't enter the war ourselves. And in between, our ideals are appealed to. We are told that we must go to war to help the British Empire and the Soviet Union defend democracy and liberty and nonaggression. We democratic people are apparently considered such imbeciles that we can be told one year that France and Finland represent everything we would be willing to die for; and told the next year that France and Finland have changed and represent everything we should be willing to die against. One year Russia is a totalitarian monster, and the next year she is a democratic friend. Before we send American soldiers to fight for Soviet Russia, let us inquire why a nation as brave and as respected as Finland, a nation that has fought for freedom and democracy with the utmost courage, let us inquire why such a nation has been fighting on the other side." (What Do We Mean by Democracy Freedom? by Charles Lindbergh). Listen to Lindbergh who advocates a global crusade against Stalin's Soviet Russia on behalf of the Western liberal order. Who demands that the citizens of the free world rise up to defeat a social, political and cultural system which declared war against human aspirations, human ideals, human nature and human dignity and relegated the individual to the status of a passive, rightless cog in the machinery of the party, the class, the people and the state, a social, cultural and political system called communism. Who recognizes that for free people seeking to preserve their freedom and their human way of life, a war against communism is both inevitable and desirable, and is a war which free people have to win under all circumstances and at all costs. Who beholds a monster raging from the depths clothed in Asiatic garb and breathing the slogans of Marx, a large, ugly, inhuman, frightening form which the people of Europe and America are duty bound to slay and to scatter to the winds: "Rather, he feared Joseph Stalin's Soviet Union, which had, in Lindbergh's opinion, a culture and political system which would, if given the chance, radically alter Western civilization. He thought that war with the Soviets was inevitable, and his greatest hope lay in the possibility that a war would be confined to fighting between Hitler and Stalin. It seemed probable that Germany would be victorious in such a conflict; and by that time France and England would be stronger. "Under any circumstances, I believed that a victory by Germany's European people would be preferable to one by Russia's semiAsiatic Soviet Union. Hitler would not live forever, and I felt sure the Germans would eventually moderate the excesses of his Nazi regime.' " (Developing For Peace: An Analysis Of Charles A. Lindbergh's Views On American Foreign Policy by Adam Jantunen). Listen to Lindbergh who decries the advance of Soviet imperialism and the march of the red menace across the face of the earth. Who recognizes that no political system is more evil and criminal than communism, a system which deprives human life of all meaning and existence, and sacrifices the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual upon the altars of proletarian revolution and social responsibility. Who demands that America make common cause with Germany, improve relations with the field marshals of fascism, as a necessary expedient to defeat the scourge of Marxist totalitarianism and make the world safe from this unique threat to civilization. Who recognizes that Stalin is more nefarious than Hitler, that communism is more murderous than fascism, and that the peace and security of the free world depend upon America making a temporary, pragmatic alliance with Hitler to smash the communist slave empire. Who recognizes that the Third Reich is a formidable bulwark and dagger against communism and should be utilized by America as such, and who is subsequently subjected to endless volleys of vituperation and abuse for this recognition: "Lindbergh's second suggested way of preventing Germany from going to war with America was for the US to improve its diplomatic relations with the Third Reich. Such a move would not only would prevent Germany and America from fighting, but it would also limit Soviet expansion. In October 1938, he readily accepted an invitation from U.S. Ambassador to Germany Hugh Wilson to a dinner party at the American embassy, at which Lindbergh and Field Marshal Herman Goering were to be the guests of honor. Wilson hosted the dinner in an attempt to improve American-German relations, a turn of events which seemed possible after the Munich Conference two weeks earlier, at which France and Britain opted for a policy of appeasement. At the dinner, without the permission of Wilson, Goering presented Lindbergh with a medal, on behalf of Adolf Hitler. Though Lindbergh was viciously condemned in later years for accepting the award, Wayne Cole, in Charles A. Lindbergh And The Battle Against American Intervention in World War II, argues that even if the Americans had advance notice about the medal presentation: 'They probably would not have changed their conduct significantly. To have refused the medal in that setting would have embarrassed America's ambassador, offended [Goering] and worsened German-American relations at a moment when they showed a possibility of improvement.' " (Developing For Peace: An Analysis Of Charles A. Lindbergh's Views On American Foreign Policy by Adam Jantunen). Lindbergh's vision next jumps to the year 1974, when he lies on his deathbed in seclusion on the island of Maui, far away from his native land which had rejected him. He reflects upon a career during which his epoch making airplane landed safely in Paris in 1927, while his reputation soon thereafter went down in flames over his politically incorrect positions on communism. Defying the passions of the masses and intelligentsia which worshiped the communist ideal of universal enslavement to a leviathan called the state, Lindbergh advocated a global war against the Soviet Union and its worldwide web of satellites, conspirators and coreligionists, a war which would involve Germany in a temporary alliance. For this position, he paid the ultimate price of relentless national censure and unremitting slander of his character. His vision now ends, he steps out of his reverie, and he prepares himself for the next day when his plane will take off. When he boards the Spirit Of St Louis, this twenty five year old air mail and National Guard pilot knows the future which awaits him. America will gain, exalt and then defeat and destroy a hero, a victim of the red plague which will bring down the West.

RED CELLS SPREAD ACROSS THE NATION

Cancer is an insidious disease which spreads and attacks an organism from multiple locations throughout the body. After a development lasting years, cancer finally ravages the organism in a mighty onslaught coming from all directions. America has in the present day been stricken by a social cancer whose cells are active in every major city and have engulfed the nation's body and soul and marked it for death. These cells are the reds, and they have multiplied uncontrollably, invaded every home, office, street and neighborhood in the land, and transformed a constitutional republic into a rotting, bankrupt structure which has fallen and collapsed into a barren wasteland of bloody violence. The reds are on the march in a coast to coast, coordinated campaign to foment civil war and take down the nation. They spring out of shadows in small groups. Their faces are covered and they are dressed in black. They carry shields. They carry bottles of milk to protect themselves against tear gas and pepper spray. They wear helmets, knee pads and gas masks. They head for the front lines and commence their assault against America. In their campaign, they torch businesses, smash windows, destroy automobiles, plunder shops, vandalize offices, organize riots, ravage cities, and unleash panic and fear upon the streets. They are the cells of red terror, and they have converged upon the nation in the wake of the George Floyd killing to lower the curtain on America's liberal order, and to bury the lives and careers of decent, law abiding citizens beneath the smoldering rubble of national ruination. Conducted in broad daylight and conducted night after night, the violence which has convulsed the nation has been planned and carried out by Antifa and Black Lives Matter, the leaders of the red cancerous movement to destroy America. With the sympathy and encouragement of the nation's masses and intelligentsia, these organizations have moved in on the streets to pursue their violent, socialist agenda, and through the nonresistance and active support they have encountered from the people and their leaders, have shown the world just how sick and dying America really is. As the flames of destruction leap ever higher into the skies and spread ever farther and wider across the country, the program and manifesto of these red cancer cells has become apparent to every man, woman and child and been scorched forever in the nation's psyche. Rejecting everything America has traditionally stood for and the sacred ideals on which it was founded, the fearsome philosophy of this red cancer on society has proclaimed that the order of liberal democracy is the order of Hitler and Mussolini and must be smashed by a people's antiracist action front. It has proclaimed that capitalism is a system of German national socialism and white supremacy and those who defend it must be deprived of all public platforms to speak and must be hounded out of the precincts of society. It has proclaimed that capitalism is a system of racism, sexism, homophobia and hatred of the poor and must be swept away by a socially and politically leftist totalitarian tyranny. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which organizes round the clock red agitation and propaganda campaigns, builds community coalitions among the classes of misfits, the maladjusted and the emotionally disturbed, monitors the voices of reason and law and forces venues to cancel their speeches, holds nationwide training sessions on the art of aggressive violence, and inculcates the citizenry in the moral necessity to physically confront the advocates of liberal peace and beat them to a bloody pulp. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which marches under the banners of communist supremacy, wears the black hoods of the Marxist klan, has taken over every public forum and channel of mass communication, and cut down the voices of liberal protest and dissent in cold blood. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has hunted down and identified the supporters of free institutions wherever they are, given information on their addresses, families, friends and employers to the people's political security squads, and advocated the use of violence and intimidation against them as a necessary purgative and cleansing agent. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which justifies acts of aggression as acts of the people's self defense, and arms the people's red supremacists of social justice with guns and clubs, and orders them to prevent the defenders of liberty from spreading their views. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is unapologetic about its use of force and violence to suppress freedom of speech and proudly advertises its program of extermination against the enemies of socialism. It has proclaimed that a progressive political movement is one which exhorts red activists to go out onto the streets and clash with the police and storm the ramparts of law and order. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which does not allow opponents of socialists to air their views and seeks to crush them with violence and sweep them into a black hole of media nonexistence. It has proclaimed that a progressive political movement is one whose members are dressed in black, wear face masks, set fire to buildings, beat up Trump supporters, throw objects at police, force conservative commentators to cancel their speeches, and blast the rifles of political correctness against the voices of liberal dissent. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a global network of black power communities which seek to disenfranchise and disempower every white person on the planet. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has granted blacks total economic and political power and seeks to create a world

free of whites. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose guiding religion is hatred of whites and recognition of the moral superiority of primitive African cultures. It has proclaimed that a progressive political movement is one which resounds with a call to action for state sanctioned violence against whites and the exclusion of whites from civil society. It has proclaimed that the highest form of justice is social justice, because groups and not individuals are the primary existents, and social justice demands a people's program of rampant, deliberate violence against whites, because black lives matter and only black lives matter. It has proclaimed that a progressive political movement is one which has taken over capitals, taken to the streets, taken down cities, organized freedom rides jangling with chains of subjugation for whites, and become a home and sanctuary for psychopathic black racists throughout the world. The red cancer against America is a sickness in its terminal stages of development. The reds coordinate pop up riots in cities throughout the nation and bail each other out of jail. The reds operate communications networks spanning the nation to plan and execute their attacks. The reds bus each other across state lines to organize an insurrection. Red field commanders using military grade communication devices direct the front line action. Threats, intimidation, instigation, arson, looting, and psychopathic violence justified as a political program: such are the symptoms of the red cancer which has overrun the nation. Listen to the voices of prominent Americans who sanction and support the terror. The Democratic Party of Fairfax, Virginia states: "Riots are an integral part of this country's march towards progress." Colin Kaepernick states: "The cries for peace will rain down, and when they do, they will land on deaf ears." Carly Fiorina states: "It's white America that now must see the truth, speak the truth and act on the truth." Kay Cole James states: "How many times will protests have to occur?" Nikki Haley states: "Tonight, I turned on the news and am heartbroken. It's important to understand that the death of George Floyd was personal and painful for many. In order to heal, it needs to be personal and painful for everyone." Look at the prominent Americans who have given their financial support, packaged obscenely as a Freedom Fund, to the red rampage and campaign of plunder across the nation. Look at this list of stars, this who's who of Hollywood treason: "Actors Steve Carell and Seth Rogen are among the Hollywood celebrities donating money to the Minnesota Freedom Fund, a nonprofit group raising money used to bail out protesters in Minneapolis as rioters and looters flood the streets in the wake of George Floyd's police involved death. The list of stars donating to the Minnesota Freedom Fund reads like a who's who of monied Hollywood elites—Don Cheadle, Olivia Wilde, Patton Oswalt, Nick Kroll, Janelle Monae, Ben Schwartz, and actress Beanie Feldstein." (Steve Carell, Seth Rogen Among Celebs Donating Bail Money for Minneapolis Protesters by Jerome Hudson). These are the faces and voices of national chaos, destruction, suicide and collapse. Aided, abetted, sanctioned and supported by the American people and the American establishment, an uncontrolled division of malignant red cells has closed the story of America.

ANCIENT POISONS FROM THE EAST

The plague is a contagious bacterial disease which produces fever and delirium. In the fourteenth century in Europe, a plague coming from central Asia and China, carried by fleas and rats, killed one third of the population. Three thousand years ago, in the deserts of Arabia, a plague of the soul entered the life of mankind via spiritual fleas and rats called the people of Israel, and this plague would, over the course of centuries, spread throughout the world and contaminate and destroy the lives of millions of people. This was the plague of the monotheism, the belief in a supernatural creator of the universe, and carried by the Jews, the Christians and the Muslims, it introduced a form of psychological corruption which, whenever and wherever it was allowed to take hold and flourish, would halt and prevent the course of proper human development. Revealed by Abraham, the ancestor of the Israelites, by Jesus, the messiah of the Christians and by Muhammad, the prophet of the Muslims, the belief that existence has a cause outside of itself and is sustained at every moment by the arbitrary will of a supernatural deity is the symptom of a mental fever and delirium without parallel in the history of ancient religions, and has brought forth a culture of superstition, violence, bigotry and sectarianism which has blackened the history of mankind. Look at the insanity brought forth by the Abrahamic religions, look at three thousand years' worth of foaming mental sickness and rabid, convulsive fanaticism, and see what the world looks like when viewed from inside the minds of the masses, the misfits and the miasmas of the gutter. This is a world which proclaims that the highest and greatest reality is that of an eternal and infinite God who created the universe out of nothingness and who rules, reveals, loves, judges, punishes and forgives. It proclaims that God is omnipotent and can will any contradiction into existence and make entities violate their natures and act in a manner which contradicts what they are. It proclaims that God is all powerful and is unrestrained by the laws of logic and can make a thing to be black all over and white all over at one and the same time. It proclaims that God is revealed in the figure of Jesus, the son of God, and in the Holy Spirit, and this trinity of God, the son and the holy spirit constitutes the supreme dimension beyond the perceived realm of physical objects. It proclaims that Jesus is the savior of mankind, the expiator of its sins through his sacrifice, and is God incarnate. It proclaims that God sends prophets and angels to mankind as his messengers to reveal his will. It proclaims that on the day of the Last Judgment, in the distant future, God will intervene in human history and separate the saved from the damned, and the saved will ascend to a blessed life in Heaven, while the damned will descend into the fiery depths of sulphur and brimstone and endure the agonies of Hell. It proclaims that the basis of morality is mysticism and the good consists in obedience to laws of God and evil in disobedience. It proclaims that history has a beginning and an end, and began with God's creation of the world, and will end with the final judgment, the resurrection of the dead, and the supernatural world to come. It proclaims that Jerusalem is a holy city because Isaac's sacrifice at God's command took place there. It proclaims that Jerusalem is a holy city because Jesus was brought there as a child, and in the city preached and healed, drove the money changers from the temple, was arrested in Gethsemane on the charge of heresy, was tried and convicted, held the Last Supper, died on the cross, was buried, resurrected and ascended to heaven, and will return to earth on the Day of Judgment. It proclaims that Jerusalem is a holy city because the Al Aqsa Mosque, the most important mosque after the mosques in Mecca and Medina, is located there, the first Muslims prayed toward Jerusalem, and Muhammad ascended through the Seven Heavens on a winged mule named Buraq, guided by the Archangel Gabriel, from the Temple Mount in the city. It proclaims that Abraham was the father of the children of Israel to whom God promised a great nation: "I will make of you a great nation and I will bless you." (Genesis 12:2). It proclaims that God made an agreement with Abraham to be his god and the god of his descendants: "I will maintain my covenant between me and you and your descendants after you throughout the ages as an everlasting covenant, to be your God and the God of your descendants after you ." (Genesis 17:7). It proclaims that Abraham is a role model for all good people because he blindly obeyed the will of God by offering his innocent son Isaac as a sacrifice, which was a foreshadowing of God's offering of his innocent son Jesus as a sacrifice. It proclaims that Abraham is a prophet and messenger of God who stands in a long, illustrious line of prophets and messengers, from Adam to Muhammad, to whom God gave his revelations. It proclaims that Abraham was an early great Muslim, a Muslim before Muhammad, because he rejected naturalism and secularism and championed supernaturalist monotheism. Listen to the voice of the Romans which condemned the sinister traffic of the Christians, their worship of magic, miracles, mysticism and sorcery. Which condemned the Christian nocturnal assemblies beating the drums of criminality, conspiracy, secret plans and insurrection against the state. Which condemned the Christian exaltation of faith above reason and unconditional belief above sound assent. Which condemned the Christian exaltation of fancy and absurdity above common sense and scientific investigation. Which condemned the Christian cosmology of creation out of nothingness by the arbitrary will of God. Which condemned the Christian belief that existence is contingent and not absolute and requires an explanation in a supernatural superdimension. Which condemned Christian hallucinations of a deity who can make something appear out of nothing, and make two and two equal six, and make gold turn into ice, and make entities do what they cannot do. Which condemned the Christian fire bombing of the human mind and the Christian conflagration against the pagan houses of wisdom and understanding. Which condemned the Christian peasants, lowlifes, ruffians, demons and sons of the dirt in their war against progress and civilization. Which condemned a mass religion, mass delusions, mass superstitions and uncontrollable mass emotions and frenzy flowing through the gutters of Christian squalor and fouling Roman streets: "The Christians are accustomed to having private assemblies, which are forbidden by law. For of assemblies, some are public, which are conformable to the law of the land; but others are secret, and these are such as are hostile to the laws; among which are the Love Feasts of the Christians. Men who irrationally assent to everything resemble those who are delighted with jugglers and enchanters. For as most of these are depraved characters who deceive the vulgar and persuade them to do whatever they please, this also takes place with the Christians. Some of these are not willing either to give to receive a reason for what they believe; but are accustomed to say, 'Do not investigate but believe, for your faith will save you. For the wisdom of the world is bad, but folly is good.' The world, according to Moses, was created at a certain time, and from its commencement existed for a period far short of ten thousand years. The world, however, is without a beginning; in consequence of which there have been from all eternity many conflagrations, and many deluges, among the latter of which the most recent is that of Deucalion. Goatherds and shepherds among the Jews, following Moses as their leader, and being allured by rustic deceptions, conceived that there is only one god. These goatherds and shepherds were of the opinion that was only one god, whether they delight to call him the Most High, or Adonai, or Celestial, or Saboath, or to celebrate by any other name the fabricator of this world; for they know nothing further. For it is of no consequence whether the god who is denominated, after the accustomed manner of the Greeks, as Zeus, or is called by any other name, such as that which is given to him by the Indians or Egyptians. Let us grant that miracles were performed by you [Jesus]; but they are common with the works of enchanters, who promise to effect more wonderful deeds than these, and also with what those who have been taught by the Egyptians to perform in the middle of the forum for a few oboli; such as expelling demons from men, dissipating diseases by a puff; evoking the souls of heroes, and exhibiting sumptuous suppers, and tables covered with food, which have no reality. These magicians also represent animals as moving, which are not in reality animals, but merely appear to the imagination to be such." Three thousand years ago, a mental fire erupted in the Land of Abraham, the fire of Jewish mysticism and otherworldly religion. One thousand years later, this fire became the burning cross of Christianity and spread wildly, as physical fire spreads through dry brush, throughout the decadent, superstitious masses of the Roman Empire. A half a century later, the flaming sword of Islam completed the Abrahamic triad of revealed religions and would come to embrace an ummah, a community of the faithful, whose membership exceeds one billion. A cardinal tenet in the teachings of Abraham, Moses, Jesus and Muhammad is the resurrection of the dead. In the secular, modern age of the West, these religions from the East were resurrected. They reappeared under the guise of communism. Championing a mysticism of matter in place of a mysticism of mind, a mysticism of the proletariat in place of the mysticism of God, and a mysticism of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin in place of a mysticism of Abraham, Moses, Jesus and Muhammad, these neoAbrahamic movements of the modern West are the mounted riders of a global apocalypse which has submerged the world in blood.

DAVID AND GOLIATH

In the story of David and Goliath, the latter was a Philistine giant who was slain by a young David in a single combat. For a half a century, America had a David who did battle with a Goliath and kept the nation safe from its mission of destruction. This David was J. Edgar Hoover and this Goliath was the international communist movement and conspiracy and from the early part of the twentieth century to the latter part, Hoover was the nation's preeminent hero in its struggle to defeat the reds. Hoover's career began in 1919, when he became head of the Bureau of Investigation's General Intelligence Division, whose goal was to monitor and disrupt the work of domestic communists. During this time, Hoover's major assignment was to carry out the Palmer Raids. Conducted under the leadership of Attorney-General Mitchell Palmer, the Palmer Raids were a response to a communist onslaught which saw labor strikes, race riots, arson attacks and bombings launched from coast to coast. The Palmer Raids resulted in the arrest of 3,000 communists and the deportation of over 500 and were applauded by patriotic, law abiding Americans from every walk of life. In 1921, Hoover was appointed deputy director of the Bureau of Investigation, and in 1924, he was appointed director. Hoover established a premier, world class law enforcement apparatus, staffed by the highest qualified personnel and equipped with a centralized fingerprint file, a national crime laboratory, a national crime statistics center, and a National Police Academy, and placed it in the service of investigating the premier threat posed against the West: the community of communist sympathizers, supporters, subversives and spies active in the government and the private sector. Listen to Hoover who condemns the communist program of destruction aimed at the Western liberal, constitutional order embodied in the American form of government. Who condemns the communist advance against all things which promote human flourishing and a human way of life: freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of enterprise, the right to private property and the right of the people to choose their leaders. Who condemns in the strongest moral terms the party of Marxism and Leninism, the party of the Soviet Union, the party of world revolution and the party which seeks to create a Soviet of the United States, and sweep away the customs and institutions established by free, humane, benevolent, civilized people. Who condemns the imposition of socialist force, brutality and totalitarian regimentation in the name of the historic mission and struggles of the working class. Who condemns the communist fever, frenzy and rabid fanaticism which ignited a marsh fire from the decaying matter of corrupted minds, a conflagration called the dictatorship of the proletariat, and fanned, fueled and stirred it up across the world. Who condemns the juggernaut of communist imperialism whose religion of violence spread to the four corners of the earth and suppressed the cries of liberty beneath an avalanche of mob politics and mass agitation. Who condemns the forces of red reaction which seek to turn back the clock of history to the year zero when individual freedom was stomped to death in savage jungles ruled by the families, communities, cultures and blood ties of the collective. Who condemns the movement of red educators, red indoctrinators, red schools, red parties, red caucuses, red factions, red agents, red terrorists and red insurrectionists in their sinister plans and designs to make blood flow in the streets and bring forth the doom of the West: "The communist movement in the United States began to manifest itself in 1919. Since then it has changed its name and its party line whenever expedient and tactical. But always it comes back to fundamentals and bills itself as the party of 'Marxism-Leninism.' As such, it stands for the destruction of our American form of government; it stands for the destruction of American Democracy; it stands for the destruction of free enterprise; and it stands for the creation of a 'Soviet of the United States' and ultimate world revolution. The preamble of their latest constitution of the Communist Party of the United States, is filled with Marxian double talk, proclaims that the party 'educates the working class, in the course of its day to day struggles, for its historic mission, and the establishment of socialism.' The phrase 'historic mission' has a sinister meaning. To the uninformed person it bespeaks tradition, but to the communist, using his own words, it is: 'achieving the dictatorship of the proletariat; to throw off the yoke of imperialism and establish the proletarian dictatorship; to raise these revolutionary forces to the surface and hurl them like a devastating avalanche upon the united forces of bourgeois reaction, frenzied at the presentiment of their rapidly approaching doom.' In the recent years, the communists have been very cautious about using such phrases as 'force and violence;' nevertheless, it is the subject of much discussion in the schools and in party caucuses where they readily admit that the only way in which they can defeat the present ruling class is by world revolution. The communist, once he is fully trained and indoctrinated, realizes that he can create his order in the United States only by 'bloody revolution.' " (Speech Before The House Committee On UnAmerican Activities by J. Edgar Hoover, March 26, 1947). In 1956, Hoover initiated a secret counterintelligence program to surveil, infiltrate, expose, discredit, misdirect, disrupt and neutralize communist and other leftist organizations dedicated to the overthrow of liberal democracy in America. The program sought to protect national security, prevent nationwide violence, and maintain the social and political order of America predicated upon the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual. The targets of COINTELPRO comprised a rainbow spectrum and who's who of the nation's subversive activists and included the following: feminists; members of the Black Panther Party; anti-Vietnam War organizers; environmentalists; animal rights activists; the Nation of Islam; the American Indian Movement; the Communist Party USA; Antioch College, the vanguard of the new left; the Socialist Workers Party; the Young Socialist Alliance; Students for a Democratic Society; the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee; the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; the communist front National Lawyers' Guild; and the Young Patriots Organization. Listen to Hoover who condemns the forces of black nationalism, black militancy, black revolution, black violence and black terror in their war against American liberal government and the rule of law. Who condemns the growth, respectability and nationwide acceptance of red coalitions ranged against constitutional order and capitalist freedom. Who condemns the rabble rousers, firebrands, proselytisers and agitators who advocate the extermination of white people in the name of black civil rights and who don the mantle of messiah of the victimized and the oppressed: "1. Prevent the COALITION of militant black nationalist groups. In unity there is strength; a truism that is no less valid for all its triteness. An effective coalition of black nationalist groups might be the first step toward a real Mau Mau in America, the beginning of a true black revolution. 2. Prevent the RISE OF A MESSIAH who could unify, and electrify, the militant black nationalist movement. 3. Prevent VIOLENCE on the part of black nationalist groups. This is of primary importance, and is, of course, a goal of our investigative activity; it should also be a goal of the Counterintelligence Program to pinpoint potential troublemakers and neutralize them before they exercise their potential for violence. 4. Prevent militant black nationalist groups and leaders from gaining RESPECTABILITY, by discrediting them to three separate segments of the community. 5. A final goal should be to prevent the long range GROWTH of militant black organizations, especially among youth. Specific tactics to prevent these groups from converting young people must be developed." (The FBI Sets Goals For COINTELPRO by J. Edgar Hoover). The story of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is the story of a man who transformed the bureau into a modern, national organization whose professionalism, scientific crime fighting and world famous G man brand kept the communist menace at bay and defeated red formations of all stripes and varieties, their plans of sabotage and their blueprints of destruction. The FBI headquarters in Washington DC is named the J. Edgar Hoover Building in honor of the courage, achievements and noble qualities of a red hunter who commanded America's internal security, counterintelligence and federal law enforcement antired force. Under the directorship of J. Edgar Hoover, America's domestic intelligence and security service, with field offices located in every major city in the nation, was the world's premier police investigator of the red enemies of civilization.

ATTORNEY GENERAL PALMER

The power of sight has been granted to few people in the world. Most people see reality through the distorting prisms of their own wishes, desires, passions and prejudices. The attorney general of the United States from March 1919 to March 1921, Mitchell Palmer was one rare soul who was able to see a certain reality in all its ugliness, monstrousness and unmitigated evil, and when he saw it, he did not waver or flinch, and when he saw it, he was determined to do something about it, and to expunge it from every corner of the nation. Attorney General Palmer saw the reality of a red menace closing in on America, attacking its free people and its free institutions, and he launched a massive counterattack. He saw communist labor agitators lead general strikes across the nation. He saw followers of the communist Luigi Galleani, advocate of "propaganda by the deed", sending out dozens of letter bombs to government officials, law enforcement personnel and business leaders. He saw victims of these bombings suffer severe injuries, including having their hands blown off, and people killed as a result of them. One letter bomb reached his own home and had been sent to kill him and his family. Accompanying each letter bomb was a flyer declaring war on capitalism in the name of communist revolution. He saw communists lead a police strike in Boston and saw the city descend into nights of anarchy and violence. In August 1919, he appointed J. Edgar Hoover to lead a new division of the Justice Department's Bureau of Investigation, called the General Intelligence Division, whose aim was to investigate the programs of communist groups and identify their members. In November 1919, on the second anniversary of the communist revolution in Russia, he ordered agents of the Bureau of Investigation together with local law enforcement agencies to execute a series of raids against the Union of Russian workers in twelve cities across the nation. As a result of the raids, Palmer amassed the names of 60,000 communists and arrested 250. In January 1920, Palmer ordered another series of raids, this time covering thirty cities and towns in twenty three states, and these resulted in the arrests of 3,000 communists. In total, the raids resulted in the deportation of 556 communists. Communist sympathizers in and out of government, sympathizers such as Assistant Secretary of Labor Louis Post, and members of the American Civil Liberties Union who did not recognize the constitutional basis of property rights or economic freedom, criticized Palmer's raids on the grounds that many of the arrests were made without warrants. In point of fact, Palmer did not need warrants to arrest individuals who had been caught in or just after an act of wrongdoing. Just as law enforcement authorities do not require a warrant to arrest an individual who is in the process of committing or who has just committed a robbery or a murder, so they do not require a warrant to arrest an individual who is in the process of committing an act of revolution or insurrection with the use of force and violence. The communists apprehended by Palmer had been caught red handed, in flagrante delicto, and were thus detainable without a warrant. Listen to Palmer who ordered the apprehension of individuals in the very act of executing their plan of violent overthrow of American liberal democracy: "The government should encourage free political thinking and political action, but it certainly has the right for its own preservation to discourage and prevent the use of force and violence to accomplish that which ought to be accomplished, if at all, by parliamentary or political methods." (Palmer Upholds Red Repression, The New York Times, January 24, 1920). Listen to Palmer who saw the reality of communism as few people have seen it. Who saw the true face of communist moral filth and justification of rank criminality. Who saw the communist intellectual poison which promotes murder and robbery in the name of the liberation of the working class. Who saw alien assassins invade the shores of America, smash through the homes and offices of its citizens, and spread a fearsome and terrifying creed of round the clock revolution and mass destruction: "Robbery, not war, is the ideal of communism. This has been demonstrated in Russia, Germany, and in America. As a foe, the anarchist is fearless of his own life, for his creed is a fanaticism that admits no respect of any other creed. Obviously it is the creed of any criminal mind, which reasons always from motives impossible to clean thought. Crime is the degenerate factor in society. Upon these two basic certainties, first that the reds were criminal aliens, and secondly that the American government must prevent crime, it was decided that there could be no nice distinctions drawn between the theoretical ideals of the radicals and their actual violations of our national laws. An assassin may have brilliant intellectuality, he maybe able to excuse his murder or robbery with fine oratory, but any theory which excuses crime is not wanted in America. This is no place for the criminal to flourish, nor will he do so, so long as the rights of common citizenship can be exerted to prevent him." (The Case Against The Reds by A. Mitchell Palmer). Listen to Palmer who condemns the communist commissars who morally and physically destroyed Russia and placed America next in their sights. Who condemns the communist refuse and rejects of society who streamed down the sewage canals of the world and flooded into the homes, schools and streets of the nation. Who condemns communist murderers, robbers, demagogues and deceivers who sit on thrones marked Class Envy and Class Vengeance and rule the scum and lowlifes in the basements of civilization. Who condemns the Kremlin's reign of violence and terror and seeks to deport its agents and envoys from America: "By stealing, murder, and lies, Bolshevism has looted Russia not only of its material strength, but of its moral force. A small clique of outcasts from the East Side of New York has attempted this, with what success we all know. Because a disreputable alien—Leon Bronstein, the man who now calls himself Trotsky—can inaugurate a reign of terror from his throne room in the Kremlin; because this lowest of all types known to New York can sleep in the Tsar's bed, while hundreds of thousands in Russia are without food or shelter; should Americans be swayed by such doctrines? Such a question, it would seem, should receive but one answer from America." (The Case Against The Reds by A. Mitchell Palmer). Listen to Palmer who condemns the forces of red revolution sweeping across the nation. Who saw a nation in jeopardy, threatened by the red wagon of communist mob politics, and was determined to set it right. Who confronted the treacherous tentacles of the communist monster, reaching out from the Moscow gang commanded by Lenin and Trotsky, spreading out into the world under the name of the Communist International, and spreading out into the arsenal of the free world under the names of the Communist Labor Party and the Communist Party of America. Who ensured that this unparalleled danger would not be allowed to imprison the nation behind proletarian watchtowers and barbed wire fences, and take away the nation's heart and soul, and remove all that makes America to be America, and deprive the American people of their freedom of thought, speech, enterprise or movement: "It as always been plain to me that when American citizens unite upon any national issue, they are generally right, but it is sometimes difficult to make the issue clear to them. If the Department of Justice could succeed in attracting the attention of our optimistic citizens to the issue of internal revolution in this country, we felt sure there would be no revolution. The government was in jeopardy. My private information of what was being done by the organization known as the Communist Party of America, with headquarters in Chicago, of what was being done by the Communist International under their manifesto planned at Moscow last March by Trotsky, Lenin, and others, addressed 'To the Proletariat of All Countries,' of what strides the Communist Labor Party was making, removed all doubt. In this conclusion we did not ignore the definite standards of personal liberty, of free speech, which is the very temperament and heart of the people. The evidence was examined with the utmost care, with a personal leaning toward freedom of thought and word on all questions ." (The Case Against The Reds by A. Mitchell Palmer). In December 1919, the Soviet Ark steamed out of New York Harbor carrying a human plague. Rounded up by Mitchell Palmer, this was a plague of red conspiracy, agitation, incitement, revolution and destruction and its leading personages were dedicated deputies in the service of Lenin and Trotsky, and included Emma Goldman, Ethel Bernstein, Peter Bianki and Alexander Berkman. Greeted in Russia with wild cheers resounding with the Russian national anthem, these insects and ticks of class hatred and class terror had been swept out of America by the unremitting efforts of its fiftieth attorney general.

AMERICA'S REDS JOIN FORCES

During the Weimar Republic, the Communist Party and the National Socialist Party formed a joint campaign to dissolve the Prussian parliament and overthrow the constitution. They recognized that the Social Democratic Party was their common enemy because of what it championed, liberal capitalist democracy, and that they had to vote together as a single bloc. In the national elections of March 1933, the communists voted for the national socialists in order to destroy freedom in Germany and they thereby facilitated Hitler's rise to power. In the election, 56 percent of the voters supported these two totalitarian parties and together they won 396 seats in the Reichstag or 61 percent of the total. History repeats itself when premises and principles are the same, and in a fearsome and terrifying parallel, America in the twenty first century has plunged into the socialist underbrush which blazed beneath the Weimar Republic and seen two red movements lock arms in eternal comradeship as they confront their common enemy: the nation's liberal democratic system as enshrined in its constitution. In this latest revival of the reds' treason against Weimar Germany, the players are essentially the same while only the specificities have changed. It again features the communists forming an alliance with the fascists, the international socialists supporting the national socialists. This time around, the communists are called Antifa and the national socialists are called Black Lives Matter, and together they have launched a massive, unremitting, round the clock assault against the American state and society, against every free ideal, free institution, free tradition, free aspiration and free citizen they can find, and have cowritten, codirected, coproduced and costarred in the final dark, dismal, somber chapter in the story of a nation which the Founding Fathers once called a Shining City Upon A Hill. Listen to the voices of world's premier Marxist movement in its war against the existing liberal democratic order. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is an international movement of Marxist-Leninists which conducts campaigns of terror in the name of antiracist action. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is an intolerant hate community which is festooned with quotations from Karl Marx and promotes red totalitarian tyranny in the name of democratic socialism. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is a Trump resistance movement, a global megaphone for the promotion of far left ideology, and a satanic church whose congregants worship at the altars of Stalin and the Soviet Union. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has no borders or walls to keep out human debris and is a refuge and sanctuary for the criminal underground who wear the uniforms of red murder and red revolution. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which forces individuals to purchase health care for themselves and to pay for the health care of others and enforces a mandate of universal enslavement in the name of welfare entitlement. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has sacrificed individual rights, liberal enlightenment and capitalist opportunity for all upon the altars of the people's socialist progress. It has proclaimed that the voices of freedom and dignity are the voices of capitalist exploiters and oppressors and must be vilified, slandered, silenced and beaten to a bloody pulp. It has proclaimed that a progressive government is a proudly unconstitutional, terrorist government whose people's brigades have spread violent disturbances far and wide and outlawed peace and order forever. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has legalized criminal behavior and denied due process rights to those who spread socially dangerous ideas promoting individual flourishing and the pursuit of private success and happiness. It has proclaimed that individuals who support Donald Trump and the cause of conservative, constitutional, libertarian government which Trump champions are fascists and national socialists and must be targeted, intimidated and harassed to the ends of the earth. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose establishment marches under the banners of the radical left and sends out its bullies and thugs to disrupt rallies promoting freedom of speech. It has proclaimed that rational intelligence is a liberal, bourgeois construct and the highest form of political debate, communication and argumentation consists in throwing rocks, bricks, bottles and cement filled soda cans at conservatives and libertarians who oppose the Black Bloc mobs of Marxist totalitarians, in assaulting them with pepper spray and bike locks, in punching and clubbing them until they are severely wounded or dead, and in committing acts of vandalism against their homes, schools and offices. Look at the faces of the far left and see their fusillades of Marxist terror. See their rampaging, their plundering, their acts of arson, their attacks on law and order, and their deliberate and unprovoked destruction of the people and places around them. See their campaign of crime and violence planned and coordinated from every corner of the nation. See their gangs and mobs of frenzied, vicious radicals traveling from state to state and from city to city handing out grenades, gasoline cans and matches to the psychopaths and delinquents who come out to greet them. See their agitators and propagandists organize the failures, the incompetents, the frustrated and the discontented classes of society and whip them up to a fever pitch of vengeance and cruelty. See a cancer spreading across the nation, the sights and sounds of a relentless, unstoppable moral malignancy, brought on by the sinister, shadowy forms of Antifa: "But there is little to suggest that these claims are anything other than attempts to divert attention away from the very solid evidence that the far left, Marxist-anarchist Antifa movement is heavily involved in the rioting. As Fox News has reported: 'Antifa sent the word out far and wide to burn buildings, loot stores, destroy cars and attack law enforcement officers.' And Antifa members--who often travel from far flung locations to meet up with their allies in sites that have been preselected for rioting--have coordinated their violent efforts in a very organized way. US Attorney General William Barr alluded to this when he stated: 'Groups of outside radicals and agitators are exploiting the situation to pursue their own separate and violent agenda. In many places, it appears the violence is planned, organized, and driven by anarchic left extremist group—far left extremist groups using Antifa like tactics, many of whom travel from outside the state to promote the violence.' US National Security Adviser Robert O'Brien concurs that the violence 'is being driven by Antifa,' whose constituent groups 'are organized and use Molotov cocktails and fireworks and gas to burn down our cities.'" (The Marxist-Anarchist Face of the Riots, Front Page magazine). Look at the faces of the Hitlerites of today and see their program of apartheid. See how they have outraged the conscience of decent, civilized people by their policy of racial exclusion. See how they exalt a new Aryan race called people of color and call for a Final Solution against white people. See how they have fomented a race war whose goal is a regime of legalized segregation, legalized discrimination and legalized murder of whites. See how they have smashed and burned the institutions of liberal equality and equal protection under the law and constructed in their place an African jungle of thatched huts and animal skin tents surrounded by a fence which reads Whites Not Welcome. See the fearsome spread of a pestilence across America, street by street, town by town, city by city, chapter by chapter, holding aloft the blazing swastikas of racial supremacy, a pestilence called Black Lives Matter: "Nashville Public Library officials have told Nashville's chapter of Black Lives Matter that meetings that welcome only people of color can't take place inside the city's libraries. That decision has outraged members of Black Lives Matter, who say the library canceled all future meetings the group had organized for later this month. But library officials say they're simply enforcing a library policy that says all meetings at their facilities must be open to the general public and news media. 'The library didn't cancel anyone's meeting,' said library spokeswoman Emily Waltenbaugh, referring to a Black Lives Matter meeting for Saturday morning that the organization has now rescheduled for a church instead. 'We're a library,' she said. 'We're taxpayer funded. We have to be open to anyone anytime.' For the past few months, Black Lives Matter in Nashville has held its chapter meetings at the North Branch Library in North Nashville. According to Joshua Crutchfield, an organizer of the Nashville chapter of Black Lives Matter, the group has a rule: Only black people as well as nonblack people of color are allowed to attend the gatherings. That means white people are excluded from attending." (Black Lives Matter Color Only Rule Runs Afoul Of Nashville Library by Joey Garrison). In 1921, the Soviet Union's Communist International formed the Antifaschistische Aktion in Germany to attack the supporters of liberal democracy. They were joined in their attacks by the National Socialist Party. Recognizing their affinity in their politics of collectivism, statism and genocide against targeted groups, these two movements worked together to bring down the Weimar Republic. In America in the twenty first century, the wheel of history has moved full circle and the Weimar alliance between the Marxists and the national socialists has been reborn. Appearing now as Antifa and Black Lives Matter, the Weimar players have coordinated their campaigns, placed their red stars and swastikas side by side on the field of battle, and stormed the ramparts of American civilization.

THE IMPLOSION PHENOMENON

An implosion is the sudden collapse of a system or organization. An implosion is preceded by years of negative, destructive development, but at the time of the collapse, critical mass has been achieved, and the collapse is swift, sure and certain. Under constant, unremitting attack by its masses and intelligentsia who turned red over a century ago, America has imploded in the twenty first century, and the crescendo of red corruption which preceded it and the sheer force of the collapse which has occurred, have ensured that the nation as originally organized and understood will never rise again. The timeline of the implosion is comprised of a rush of events succeeding each other faster than the speed of light and forming a whirling, vertiginous blur which has knocked decent, civilized people off their balance and made them pray for a moment's respite, a moment which will never come. This is how nations typically collapse, through implosion, when decades worth of dry brush have been doused with gasoline and ignited and the resulting flames have consumed in an instant the lives, careers, hopes and dreams of every man, woman and child. The dry brush is the abandonment of reason, which commenced in the early part of the last century, and the resulting rise of faiths and religions exalting mystical collective entities such as genders, races and classes, religions which range from Marxism to black nationalism to radical feminism. The gasoline is the explicit, ear splitting, coast to coast call for violence and revolution by these religions. The spark of ignition is the first wave of violence which hits. The first wave hit soon after the election of Donald Trump, when the American people and their intellectual voices decided that they would not tolerate an antiestablishment figure who sought to disrupt and slow down the radical development of the nation which they held so dear. A minority president who lost the popular vote by almost 2.9 million, receiving 62,979,636 votes to Hillary Clinton's 65,844,610 votes, Donald Trump accomplished just that. Incurring the implacable ire of the red majority which trounced Trump in the last election and which presently runs the nation, Trump eliminated the Affordable Care Act penalty for individuals who do not acquire health insurance. He instituted across the board business deregulation and fundamental tax reform. He established due process protections for university students accused of sexual assault. He mandated that universities enforce the free and open exchange of ideas and protect the expression of politically incorrect views and opinions. He rejected the attack on industrial civilization launched by the environmentalist movement in the name of zero carbon emissions. He appointed federal judges who support the rule of logic and law in the face of leftist antitextualism. He abandoned the Iran antinuclear agreement which allowed Iran to develop nuclear weapons openly after ten years, allowed Iran to develop nuclear weapons immediately in restricted access military sites, allowed Iran to develop ballistic missiles capable of carrying nuclear warheads, and released 100 billion dollars of Iran's frozen assets, allowing it to fund terrorist organizations such as Hezbollah and Hamas and destabilize the Middle East. He came out in fervent support of Israel and sought to protect the cause of freedom in the Middle East, the cause of Israel, from Arab attack and invasion. To achieve this end, he recognized Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, opposed any right of return for Palestinian refugees who would spread antiliberal values like a plague, advocated Israeli sovereignty, the sovereignty of freedom, over the Jordan Valley, and opposed evacuations of Israeli settlements, the settlements of freedom, from the West Bank. He opposed the leftist attack on science expressed in the transgender movement which proclaimed that gender identity is changeable and is not based upon the immutable facts of biology. He issued an executive order that transgender individuals will not be allowed to serve in any capacity in the United States military on the grounds that such individuals suffer from acute psychosis. He has eliminated guidance to public schools on how they should accommodate transgender students. He upheld the constitutional right of freedom of conscience and belief and supported the right of private business establishments not to serve transgender individuals. The reds knew Trump would accomplish all of these things, he said he would accomplish all of them, and accomplish them he did, and since Trump's election, violence against conservatives, libertarians, Republicans and Trump supporters has increased by 300 percent. The masses have declared war against a free society and have sounded the clarion call in thunderous tones. Listen to the voices of America's ruling reds as they advocate violence against the opposition. As they attack the opposition anywhere and everywhere they find it. As they drive the opposition from neighborhoods homes, offices and shops. As they take aggressive action against opposition officials in the government. As they demand an end to respect for the rights of others and commence a campaign of wrecking and vandalism of the opposition. As they charge the opposition on the streets, punch and kick them, and scream that they can do anything they want to do because they are the people's lords of the earth, whose power transcends the bourgeois principles of reason and surpasses the liberal precepts of morality: "The repeated calls from top Democrats leaders and influential leftists to harass and even attack conservatives and Republicans are having their effect. GOP officials and conservatives have been attacked and threatened anywhere and everywhere. And the attacks aren't just aimed at national figures such as Senator Ted Cruz, who was driven from a restaurant by #MeToo vigilantes during the confirmation hearings of U.S. Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh. Leftists are attacking state and local GOP officials as well. Meanwhile, unhinged university professors have joined top Democrats in calling for an end to civility. The latest attacks occurred in Minnesota, news reports say. According to the CBS affiliate in Minneapolis, GOP State Representative Sarah Anderson had left home to campaign on October 14 when she spotted a vandal wrecking campaign signs. Reported the affiliate. Parking her car, Anderson confronted the man: 'I said, 'You can't do this!' And he said, 'Yes, I can, I'm an anarchist! I can do whatever I want!' And I said, 'No, you can't, that's not your property.' Wisely, Anderson began video recording, but the violent goon 'backed her into the street, swearing,' the station reported. Then the thug charged. 'Go kill yourself,' he said. Anderson returned to her car and followed the man as he walked away toward a filling station, where she photographed him charging at her again. 'He tried to stop her from leaving, punching her in the arm,' the affiliate reported. 'I said, I'm leaving now. I'm leaving now.' And he was still with his head in my vehicle, just yelling,' Anderson told the station. 'He was irrational, just completely irrational.' The cops have identified a suspect, the Washington Free Beacon reported." (Anti GOP Violence Escalates, Top Democrats Egg On The Goons by Cort Kirkwood). Listen to the journalist Andy Ngo who paints a portrait of a nation in a state of collapse. A nation consumed in insurrection launched by the black masked hoodlums of Antifa and the raging black racists of Black Lives Matter. A nation mobilized to spread panic and fear through the streets. A nation dominated by left wing extremists whose looting, burning, pillaging, rioting, smashing, destruction of the economy, propensity for violence, capability of mayhem, and training in the arts of destabilization and subversion have engulfed the lives of the few civilized people left in the country, overwhelmed the remaining forces of law and order, and lowered the curtain on American civilization: "We are witnessing glimpses of the full insurrection the far left has been working on for decades. Within hours, militant Antifa cells across the country mobilized to aid BLM rioters. The first broken window is the blood in the water for looters to move in. The fires come next. Media, politicians, public—all of us—have underestimated the training, purpose and capability of left wing extremists. Every part of the rioting has a purpose. Fires destroy economy. Riots can overwhelm police and even military. All of it leads to a destabilized state if maintained." (Andy Ngo). Listen to the voices of the national socialists who have painted swastikas across the streets of America and renamed these streets after their movement. Who have exalted the religion of black racism, demanded that the nation bow down before its power and violence, feel deeply its fundamental greatness, and broadcast a fearsome and terrifying message to the world. This is a message that race matters and only race matters, that individuals must be judged on the basis of the color of their skin and not the content of their character, that blacks comprise a master race and have a right to rule over the world, and that social justice demands a regime of discrimination, segregation and extermination of whites: "New York City plans to rename certain streets and paint Black Lives Matter on specific streets in all five boroughs, Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) announced on Tuesday. 'It's time to do something officially representing this city to represent the fundamental power of Black Lives Matter,' de Blasio said during a Tuesday press briefing. 'A proposal put on the table was to name streets in each borough and to paint the words on the streets of this city in each borough at a crucial location,' he explained. 'What will be clear in the street name and on the streets of our city is that message that now our city must fully, fully, deeply feel—and this nation must as well—that black lives matter,' he said of the decision. The first display will reportedly appear near City Hall." (NYC To Paint 'Black Lives Matter' On Specific Streets In All Five Boroughs by Hannah Bleau). One hundred years after the American people embraced leftist class politics, fifty years after the people embraced the leftist triad of gender, race and class, hours after the people embraced the flaming banners of Antifa and Black Lives Matter, the implosion has come. As liberal ideals and institution lie in wreckage and ruins, a new and dangerous America has arisen to take their place.

THE KLAN RIDES AGAIN

The time is 1865, soon after the Civil War. A Klansman dressed in white robes and a white hood holds aloft a burning cross. He is the member of a new organization. He will commence a night ride of terror spreading a gospel of white supremacy. These night rides will continue unceasingly over the decades; only the hate actors and the hate targets will change; and in the twenty first century, lightning will strike and bring back the Ku Klux Klan in spirit and soul, in full force with a complete organizational and administrative structure, and promoting an explicit agenda of racial extermination. The lightning bolts of red politics have resurrected the Ku Klux Klan in the form of a black racist organization called Black Lives Matter and its agenda is the overthrow of the United States government and the establishment of a national socialist black swastika regime in its place. Black Lives Matter was founded in 2013 by Alicia Garza, Patrisse Cullors and Opal Tometi in response to the acquittal of George Zimmerman in the killing of Trayvon Martin. Zimmerman worked as a watch leader for a gated community in Florida. In 2012, he encountered a black youth in his neighborhood, Martin, who did not live there and had no business being there. Zimmerman ordered him to leave, Martin attacked him, inflicted bloody injuries on him including a broken nose, and tried to take his gun. In the ensuing struggle, Zimmerman killed Martin in self defense. Zimmerman was charged with murder but was acquitted by a jury. Garcia, Patrisse and Tometi created Black Lives Matter to protest the verdict and call black racists to action to storm the ramparts of liberal jurisprudence and establish a race based legal and political order. The spiritual founder of Black Lives Matter was Joanne Chesimard. She was the founder of the Black Liberation Army terror organization, was convicted of the first degree murder of a New Jersey state trooper in 1973, escaped from jail in 1979, and was granted asylum in Cuba in 1984, where she has lived ever since. Black Lives Matter is funded by the American cultural establishment and has received hundreds of millions of dollars from the Ford Foundation, the Borealis Philanthropy, and the Democracy Alliance, a red donors' collaborative whose members include George Soros, Tom Steyer, Robert McKay, Rob Reiner, Norman Lear and Rachel Pritzker Hunter. Listen to the thunderous paces of today's Klansmen as they gallop across plains of race hatred and charge the citadels of human decency and equal protection for all. Listen to the fury of rabid fanatics commanding a black based organization dedicated to the sabotage and destruction of a nation. The new Klansmen have proclaimed that liberal democracy is a system of antiblackness and must be replaced by a global network of black communities, black thugs, black enforcers, black lynch mobs and black death squads which will create a world which social justice demands. A world in which blacks hold all social, economic and political power and a world which is free of whites: "Four years ago, what is now known as the Black Lives Matter Global Network began to organize. It started out as a chapter based, member led organization whose mission was to build local power and to intervene when violence was inflicted on black communities by the state and vigilantes. In the years since, we've committed to struggling together and to imagining and creating a world free of antiblackness, where every black person has the social, economic, and political power to thrive." (What We Believe, Black Lives Matter). Listen to the voices and defenders of the black Hitlerites' dream of white annihilation. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which resounds with calls to action for antiwhite racism and state sanctioned violence against whites. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in the raging grip of antiwhite politicians and under the iron heel of antiwhite legislation. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has galvanized black racist scum from every corner of the earth to connect and commit themselves to a program of uncontrolled violence against whites in the name of racial justice. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which black killers of whites are automatically acquitted in court and have marched on capital cities and seized the reins of government. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is roaring, blaring ride for black freedom, black power, black justice and black defense and ends high atop the mountains of the promised land of a global holocaust against whites. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a political and ideological home for blacks who hate whites and who seek to smash the structures and facilities of law and civilization. They have proclaimed that the supreme embodiment of moral perfection is a catalyst, a rabble rouser, an agitator, an organizer, a conspirator and an incendiary in the service of an antiwhite movement and culture whose goal is to target whites in their neighborhoods, homes, schools and offices and place them in maximum danger everywhere they live, breathe, move and work: "Black Lives Matter began as a call to action in response to state sanctioned violence and antiblack racism. Our intention from the very beginning was to connect black people from all over the world who have a shared desire for justice to act together in their communities. The impetus for that commitment was, and still is, the rampant and deliberate violence inflicted on us by the state. Enraged by the death of Trayvon Martin and the subsequent acquittal of his killer, George Zimmerman, and inspired by the 31 day takeover of the Florida State Capitol by POWER U and the Dream Defenders, we took to the streets. A year later, we set out together on the Black Lives Matter Freedom Ride to Ferguson, in search of justice for Mike Brown and all of those who have been torn apart by state sanctioned violence and antiblack racism. Forever changed, we returned home and began building the infrastructure for the Black Lives Matter Global Network, which, even in its infancy, has become a political home for many. Ferguson helped to catalyze a movement to which we've all helped give life. Organizers who call this network home have ousted antiblack politicians, won critical legislation to benefit black lives, and changed the terms of the debate on blackness around the world. Through movement and relationship building, we have also helped catalyze other movements and shifted culture with an eye toward the dangerous impacts of antiblackness." (What We Believe, Black Lives Matter). Listen to the membership, partners, supporters and staff of a global black national socialist family which is hell bent on the destruction of the order and institutions predicated upon the Age of Enlightenment. This unholy multitude has proclaimed that the killing of white people is justified in the name of the liberation of blacks. It has proclaimed that murder is not murder if committed to achieve the collective freedom of the black tribe. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which black psychopaths who enjoy torturing and killing whites are seen, heard and applauded on every college campus and esteemed as the people's national heroes. It has proclaimed that the ancestors of today's black assassins were the angels in heaven and every black predator who roams the streets in search of white victims has divine blood coursing through his veins. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one lorded over by the friends and allies of the black revolution who will make the world safe and secure for every beggar, thief, wastrel, ignoramus, pervert, degenerate and psychotic who swims and crawls through the sewers and cesspools so long as his face is colored black. It has proclaimed that the liberal system of equal protection, equal opportunity and advancement by merit and not by skin color has inflicted deep wounds on the lives of worthless, contemptible, incompetent, morally disabled, psychologically disturbed black brothers and sisters and must be replaced by a regime of black discrimination, black affirmative action, black special treatment and black totalitarian dictatorship. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which recognizes that black lives matter and only black lives matter and the lives of whites are the lives of morally stunted, deficient, evil beings and must be stamped out forever. It has proclaimed that the notion of a universal rational human essence is a liberal, bourgeois, Enlightenment superstition. In point of fact, blacks and whites share nothing in common and show only differences; the differences between blacks and whites are the differences between human beings and apes; and blacks everywhere must bond together, proudly and openly announce the moral and spiritual superiority of blacks to whites, the exalted beauty of the black soul and the monstrous ugliness of the white soul, and the entitlement of blacks to freedom, privileges and social justice. Blacks must build and nurture a virulent hatred of whites and launch a killing spree against every white man, woman and child on the planet: "The Black Lives Matter Global Network is as powerful as it is because of our membership, our partners, our supporters, our staff, and you. Our continued commitment to liberation for all black people means we are continuing the work of our ancestors and fighting for our collective freedom because it is our duty. Every day, we recommit to healing ourselves and each other, and to cocreating alongside comrades, allies, and family a culture where each person feels seen, heard, and supported. We acknowledge, respect, and celebrate differences and commonalities. We work vigorously for freedom and justice for black people and, by extension, all people. We intentionally build and nurture a beloved community that is bonded together through a beautiful struggle that is restorative, not depleting. We are unapologetically black in our positioning. In affirming that Black Lives Matter, we need not qualify our position. To love and desire freedom and justice for ourselves is a prerequisite for wanting the same for others. We see ourselves as part of the global black family, and we are aware of the different ways we are impacted or privileged as black people who exist in different parts of the world. We are guided by the fact that all black lives matter, regardless of actual or perceived sexual identity, gender identity, gender expression, economic status, ability, disability, religious beliefs or disbeliefs, immigration status, or location. We make space for transgender brothers and sisters to participate and lead." (What We Believe, Black Lives Matter). The end of the Civil War saw the birth of a Klan nation in the heartlands of America. Then commenced the midnight rides lit up by the fiery crosses of race hatred. Over the ensuing decades, the rides never stopped nor did the race hatred nor did the Klan lay down their robes. What changed was that the reds took over the horses, the robes and the crosses and changed the targets. Riding under the banners of black privilege and black power, the black Klansmen of Black Lives Matter have galloped into the twenty first century and reduced the liberal democratic polity to dust.

THE RED DONOR CLASS

In the advanced stages of social cancer, every level of society has been invaded and every demographic category has been consumed and no one has been spared save the few who have chosen to stand up against the mob. America in the present day has been stricken by the cancer of leftist ideas and this cancer has created a community of well healed donors to red causes, a community whose wealth reaches into the top most echelons of society, and a community whose aim and mission is the overthrow of the liberal democratic order. The donors to red causes comprise a who's who of America's cultural establishment, ruling corporate circles and billionaire class and with every multimillion dollar donation they make to the enemies of freedom, they reveal just how rotted and hollowed out the soul and institutions of the nation are. Look at the forest of mushrooms felling mighty trees and see the traitors to America in action. Robotized by the reds and with their conscience snatched away, this class of patrons and benefactors is relentless and unbending in its campaign to bankroll totalitarian movements, shower money on people who are filled with hatred, rage and disaffection, and bring about violent world revolution. Leftist causes are awash in cash today and the contributors are full throated in their endorsement of everything which has turned the world of decent, civilized, humane, benevolent, law abiding people upside down. The vanishing voices of Western Enlightenment values look at these money presses for the reds and want to run for the hills and run for their lives because they see a financial power without restraint, without limitation and without moral compunction funding a neoMarxist monster rampaging through homes, schools, offices and neighborhoods and leaving panic, fear and ideological lockstep in its wake. Look at red funder George Soros. See how a multibillionaire spends his fortune on a campaign to subvert capitalism. See how he blames the free market for all the ills of the world. See how he condemns freedom as bourgeois religion of market fundamentalism and advocates a new people's religion of red totalitarian tyranny in its place. See how he condemns individual liberty as harmful to society and advocates a regime of public regulation and intervention in the lives of the people. See how he condemns America as oppressive and exploitative of women and nonwhite by virtue of its system of equal rights and freedoms and opportunities for all without regard to race or gender. See how he promotes the election of red political candidates whose programs consist in opposition to national security, support for the forces of terror, and the overthrow of the United States government. See how he condemns American military actions to smash global terror networks, roll back the rising tide of global Islam, silence the guns of Iran's proxy armies, and rescue the victims of Marxist dictatorships suffering in the jungles and rainforests of the world. See how he condemns the Western liberal counterattack against Marxism and Islam as an unjust, immoral and unwarranted action and a crime against humanity. See how he condemns patriotic Americans who support the institutions of free enterprise and private property as club wielding barbarians ready to crush the skulls of the poor, the downtrodden, the victimized, the marginalized, the indigenous, and the people of color. See how he promotes open immigration, open borders, open sewers, open cesspools, open zoos and the transformation of America into a refuge and sanctuary for the wild animals and moral dregs of the world. See how he advocates one hundred percent taxation levied on the talented and successful classes of society in order to finance one hundred percent social welfare support for the shiftless, purposeless scum of the earth. See how he advocates unconditional amnesty and national cheers of adulation for the every specimen of depravity and corruption who has crashed through the gates and borders of the nation and reproduces like a virus within its homes and neighborhoods. See how he offers aid, comfort and moral support to bombers and arsonists who have declared war on America and justify psychopathic violence as the program of the working class and the command of Allah's faithful. See how he demands that all white Americans kneel down before the world and ask for forgiveness for the crime of "white privilege" which means white existence. See how he advocates the disarmament, surrender and prostration of America before the global juggernaut of Islamic jihad and socialist revolution. See how he advocates human rights for criminals and denies justice for their victims. See how he promotes universal health care entitlement on the backs of the producers and achievers of society. See how he advocates the sacrifice of American freedom, independence and constitutional government on the altars of a global socialist dictatorship under the command of the United Nations. See how he rejects the liberal principle of equal opportunity and advancement on the basis of merit in favor of a regime of racial and gender preferences. See how he advocates the destruction of technological progress and industrial civilization in the name of clean air, clean water, a green new deal, and the rights of plants and animals. Spending millions on the financing of red causes and the recruitment and training of a red army, Soros has declared total war on American liberty and its free marketplace of ideas and opinions. His activists have stormed the ramparts of the City On A Hill: "Even though the free market has made Soros a multibillionaire, he blames capitalism for the world's problems.

"In a Der Spiegel interview in 2008, Soros advocates European style socialism for America, 'is exactly what we need now. I am against market fundamentalism. I think this propaganda that government involvement is always bad has been very successful--but also very harmful to our society.'" Soros's answer to America's problems involves more regulation and more government intervention in the marketplace. Soros pours billions of dollars into the following antiUSA causes:

- Promoting the view that America is institutionally an oppressive nation
- Promoting the election of leftist political candidates throughout the United States
- Opposing virtually all post 9/11 national security measures enacted by US government, particularly the Patriot Act
- Depicting American military actions as unjust, unwarranted, and immoral
- Promoting open borders, mass immigration, and a watering down of current immigration laws
- Promoting a dramatic expansion of social welfare programs funded by ever escalating taxes
- Promoting social welfare benefits and amnesty for illegal aliens
- Defending suspected antiAmerican terrorists and their abettors
- Financing the recruitment and training of future activist leaders of the political Left
- Advocating America's unilateral disarmament and/or a steep reduction in its military spending
- Opposing the death penalty in all circumstances
- Promoting socialized medicine in the United States
- Promoting the tenets of radical environmentalism, whose ultimate goal, as writer Michael Berliner has explained, is 'not clean air and clean water, [but] rather the demolition of technological/industrial civilization'.
- Bringing American foreign policy under the control of the United Nations
- Promoting racial and ethnic preferences in academia and the business world alike "Indirectly, Soros is one of the main funders of the socialist Green New Deal." (George Soros, Conservapedia).

America today is morally unrecognizable. It bears no resemblance to the America of the Boston Tea Party, the Declaration of Independence and the new nation which received the British surrender at Yorktown in 1781. America today is a sick polity whose masses have attacked free institutions with the cancer cells of red revolution. Elected, appointed and cheered on by the masses, America's red donor class has flooded the enemies of liberal democracy with hundreds of millions of dollars. Look at the donors and look at their causes and a portrait of mass, collective treason emerges which has sealed the fate of the nation. The donors include Sony Music, Walmart, Warner Music, Nike, Alphabet/Google, Amazon, Facebook, General Electric, Target, Verizon, United Health, Goldman Sachs, Spotify, Disney, Proctor & Gamble, Cisco, Lego, Microsoft, Starbucks, Intel, McDonald's, Uber, Duke Energy, The Travelers' Companies, Warby Parker, Glosser, PWC Charitable Foundation, Etsy, Yelp Foundation, H & M, Levi's and LuLuLemon. Marching under the banners of diversity, inclusion, social justice, racial justice, freedom rides for the forces of Marxist terror, and bail money for vandals, rioters and looters, America's red donor class has financed the totalitarian transformation of the nation.

JAWS

In 1916 between July 1 to 12, there was a series of shark attacks along the Jersey shore which killed four people. Making headlines around the world, the attacks during these twelve days of terror occurred when thousands of people were at the shore during the summer heat wave and revealed sharks to be fearless, ruthless, relentless killers. Civilized people have viewed the Jersey shore attacks of 1916 as providing a fitting metaphor for the current wave of violence, revolution and insurrection sweeping across the West and consuming its final hours. In this metaphor, the sharks stand for the reds who have been sabotaging liberal institutions for over one hundred years and the attacks at the shore stand for the final campaign of destruction, as the climax and culmination of this development, bringing forth the actual, physical overthrow of civilization. Two decades into the twenty first century, the red masses who control the West have achieved victory on the streets and squares and victory in the houses of culture. After decades of fighting, the culture wars have finally concluded, and listen now to the voices of the victors. They have proclaimed that liberal democracy is a system of white privilege and white racism and must be replaced by a black totalitarian dictatorship on whose banners are inscribed Black Lives Matter. They have proclaimed that whites must make a full and unequivocal confession of their crime of existing and get on board an I Take Responsibility movement and offer themselves up as sacrificial victims grovelling on the altars of their black overlords. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one under the iron grip of race baiting, neoMarxist hoodlums bearing the slogans and emblems of black nationalism and black power. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which journalists, editors, film stars, television stars, pop stars, radio show hosts and bestselling authors kneel and touch the ground in worship and submission to the red guards of black fascism. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one under the control of a radical left, Taliban movement called Black Lives Matter whose program consists in smashing monuments and statues and spreading violence in the streets. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has banned films such as Gone With The Wind on the grounds of political incorrectness while allowing such films as Mission To Moscow, which peddles overt communist propaganda, wide, unrestricted, uncensored circulation. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a social justice movement which has granted special privileges to women and nonwhites and allowed women to persecute men with false or frivolous sexual assault allegations, based on nothing more than an accusation or a series of accusations, and has allowed blacks to escape arrest and apprehension for their crimes on the grounds that any use of force by the police is a sign of police racism and brutality. They have proclaimed that white heterosexual males should be ashamed of themselves because their very act of existing poses a mortal threat to the rights of blacks and homosexuals and they should apologize to these groups and agree to relinquish their jobs and careers to them. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a mob of social justice warriors which has invaded physical and digital space and removed toys, books, films and television programs which symbolize or support the world of freedom and capitalism and hurled these politically problematic works into the bonfires of the people. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has instituted censorship of artistic productions and removed all scenes, moments, characters and words which offend the sensibilities of the reds' chosen gender, race and class groups. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one in which the purveyors of entertainment are the promoters of political correctness and have forced the voices of artistic integrity into the underground cells of cultural nonexistence. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has burned to ashes the Enlightenment edifice of human liberty, independent thought and rational flourishing and replaced it with a tribal jungle of woke values promoting social justice, feminist politics, homosexual rights, transgender rights, black rights, indigenous rights, and the extermination of light skinned, blue eyed people. Across the West, the reds have moved in on the streets, set up separate nations, ignited whirlwinds of violence and destruction, and read out their proclamations of a new totalitarian order. Listen to the words they have uttered which have shocked and horrified civilized people. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has voted Marxist tyrants into power and voted out law and order. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a police free zone and a block party celebrating blood and violence. They have proclaimed that the people's supreme statesmen are Marxist warlords who have seized territory, occupied cities, demarcated perimeters, constructed barriers, set up armed checkpoints, established entry and exit control, and proclaimed a sovereign, autonomous nation devoted to the infliction of unremitting terror. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has capitulated to the pressure of red mobs, defunded and dismantled police departments, and allowed murder, robberies and muggings to be committed with impunity. They have proclaimed that a progressive political leadership is one which allows vandals to deface statues, torch cities, scream out red slogans in school classrooms, and eliminate the institutions of civil society considered as a community of rationally flourishing citizens. They have proclaimed that Marxists and blacks built the cities of the world, they own the cities of the world, and they are entitled to loot and burn the cities of the world. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has been founded by red conquerors who have deported the voices of liberal constitutionalism and kept them out with walls, barricades and armed border guards. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose sign at the entrance reads You Are Now Leaving The West and has established a refuge and sanctuary for the misfits and miscreants streaming in from the sewers of the world. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose program of economic development involves extortions and shakedowns of business enterprises conducted by the people's enforcers of gender, race and class justice. Look at the wave of protests and demonstrations sweeping across the world demanding the closure of Western civilization. Look at the size and frequency of the marches and mass agitations demanding the destruction of the world of the Enlightenment, the world of reason and science, Locke and Newton, freedom and progress, and see the faces of savagery and tribalism wearing the uniforms of the reds. These are the uniforms of immigration rights, refugee rights, black power rights, feminist rights, transgender rights, homosexual rights, the rights of plants, animals, minerals and the air, the rights of mass killers and terrorists who blow up homes schools, shops and offices, and the rights of idlers, degenerates, beggars and thieves to be supported by the wealth of honest toilers. Multiplying by the hour and by the minute, the reds have smashed through the gates of civilization and spread into its main streets, central squares and residential districts. Chanting the slogans of identity politics and rallying under the banners of Antifa and Black Lives Matter, they have set fire to the centers and capital cities of the West, made them go up in smoke and flames, and lowered the curtain on life as civilized people have known and understood it: "Tens of thousands of protesters took to the streets across Germany on Sunday, with demands including greener policies, immigration rights, animal rights, racial justice and solidarity with the Black Lives Matter movement. The marches were the latest in a string of demonstrations that have risen in frequency and size since the beginning of the coronavirus pandemic—starting before the killing of George Floyd sparked a global wave of protest against racism and police violence. In the capital, Berlin, organizers estimated that up to 20,000 people formed a human chain from the landmark Brandenburg Gate in the city's center to Kreuzberg, a popular and diverse residential district. The rally followed a protest in support of the Black Lives Matter movement last weekend, when more than 15,000 people gathered at a central square in the German capital. The growing size and frequency of protests in some European cities—up 20% in Berlin this year, according to Berlin state estimates, despite the pandemic—has taken governments aback. The chants and banners demanded urgent policies to tackle climate change and more acceptance of refugees, and one banner urged Bill Gates, the Microsoft founder who now supports public health projects, to develop a vegan vaccine against coronavirus." (In Germany, A Smorgasbord Of Causes Results In One Vast Protest March by Bojan Pancevski). Sharks are among the ocean's deadliest predators and are driven by a single minded drive to kill. The red sharks of the masses and intelligentsia have pulled civilization under the water and are feeding on its remains.

THE SOUL SNATCHERS

The place is Anytown, USA and the time is the early decades of the twenty first century. Mr X has been away for five years on a business trip abroad and has returned home. The people he meets, his family, friends and associates, look the same on the outside but have changed in their spirit and soul and seem like imposters. These are not the people he had said goodbye to five years before. They say things he had never heard them say before and he is filled with feelings of fear and foreboding for the future of the nation. Since he left five years ago, there has been an ideological invasion which has removed people's reason and conscience and transformed them into soulless life forms moved by programmed instructions. No longer themselves, the people around him have become the fearsome and terrifying carriers of an invasion of the reds which has put an end to freedom in America. He should have seen this coming, he should have seen the warning signs all around him, for this invasion had been over a century in the making. It was the final development of a process of mass treason which commenced around the turn of the twentieth century and saw ordinary people abandon the principles of liberal democracy upon which the nation had been founded and embrace the politics of hatred, envy, jealousy, victimhood and class revolution. It saw ordinary people corroborating the diagnosis of the masses made two thousand years ago by Socrates, Plato and Aristotle and rejecting the natural, inalienable right of the individual to live and work for himself, to rationally flourish for himself, to perfect himself and to live as human beings ought to live, and willingly and enthusiastically accept in its place a religion of communal distribution, welfare, service, sacrifice and enslavement. In historical time, the five years during which Mr X was away occurred in the blink of the eye; this blink was the final spark in a hundred year long series of red coruscations; and this final spark lit the fuse which finally, definitively and conclusively blew up the nation and established the physical take over and occupation of America by the reds. The new invaders, the new occupiers, Mr

X's family, friends and associates, delivered a program and manifesto to him whose frenzy, fanaticism and wanton disregard for the rights of others made him run for his life, sound an alarm bell, and warn the world about the doom and destruction which have come for them. Devoid all rational, civilized, enlightened humanity, the red automatons around him uttered words which he did not want to believe but had to believe and had to do something about. The people he once knew proclaimed that a progressive society is an anticapitalist society in which every man, woman and child has got on board a socialist bandwagon and designated activist thugs to block freedom of speech. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which conducts militant, round the clock protests against the liberal order and does not shrink from using violence against innocent people. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has sanctioned the takeover of industrial management by the people's state thugs and the reduction of free laborers to the level of servants of the community. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a red supremacist organization which is ready, willing and able to commit violent crimes to promote their political beliefs. They proclaimed that a progressive society is one which instigates violent clashes with the opponents of Marxism and enforces an ideological outlook which justifies rank criminality in the service of the people. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a movement of radicals opposed to Enlightenment values who have packaged their opposition in red sandbags labeled anarchism, socialism, communism, environmentalism, homosexual rights and the rights of indigenous populations and hurled them in the faces of civilized people. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a tribalist society which has rejected the liberal principles of individual rights and advancement by merit and fallen under the control of gender, race and class skinheads and Klan riders on behalf of women, nonwhites and the poor. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a centralized, monolithic movement and structure which has compiled a list of enemies comprising the friends of liberty, humane values, scientific progress and the rule of law and crushed beneath its weight the voices of liberal dissent. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a nationalist, supremacist society which has abolished civil liberties and placed absolute power into the hands of gender, race and class commissars. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a red echo chamber from top to bottom which provides safe harbor to communist and fascist hoodlums at federal, state and local levels and has intimidated and suppressed conservatives and libertarians at public marches with a massive show of force. They proclaimed that the supreme model for the people is a social justice warrior who engages in violent criminality and takes the law into his own hands when confronting the voices of virtue and order who express their ideas in a peaceful, rational, disputational manner. Look at the citizens of the new red America and see how they have placed armed thugs and ruthless extortionists in charge of their people's soviet socialist autonomous republics. See how they have burned and ransacked lawfully constituted police stations and proclaimed Marxist warlords to be the new chiefs of police. See how they have forced the law to abandon and retreat from its bases and buildings and relinquish the streets to chaos. See how they have confiscated private homes, schools, shops and offices and declared them to be the property of the progressive working class. See how they have defended, dismantled and dissolved the institutions of free people, and outlawed the enforcement of order. See how they have rammed tanks into the soldiers of liberty and deported the defenders of constitutional government. See how they have transformed towns and cities into police free zones in which they have perfected the tactics of revolution and sharpened the razor blades of sadistic violence. See how they have organized marches and demonstrations carrying weapons, shield and helmets, and wearing the swastika armbands of gender, race and class politics, and gone on a rampage of street fights and criminal aggression justified as the defense of social justice. See how they have taken over the nation, house by house, street by street, block by block, precinct by precinct, town by town, city by city, and state by state, and in mass demonstrations, multiple shootings and festivals of violence and intimidation, how they have announced the end of the liberal democratic order: "Seattle police say they have received reports of armed guards and potential extortion in a self declared autonomous zone that spans several blocks and includes a now closed precinct. 'We've heard, anecdotally, reports of citizens and businesses being asked to pay a fee to operate within this area. This is the crime of extortion. If anyone has been subjected to this, we need them to call 911,' Assistant Chief of Police Deanna Nollette said on Wednesday. The seemingly abandoned East Precinct station of the Seattle Police Department is covered in a tarp declaring it 'property of the Seattle people'. Protesters declared a Cop Free Zone following days of demonstrations in response to the police involved death of George Floyd in Minneapolis. Protesters calling to defund the police and make sweeping reforms to law enforcement tactics have declared a six block region--spanning 13th Avenue past 11th Avenue, near Cal Anderson Park, and from East Olive Street to East Pike Street-- the 'Capitol Hill Autonomous Zone' (CHAZ). The region encompasses the SPD's East Precinct, which was abandoned by cops on Monday following days of violent clashes between law enforcement and protesters in the wake of George Floyd's death, as well as parts of Capitol Hill. Officers retreated from the area in an effort to quell the violence-- which included multiple shootings, one that was sparked after a man rammed his vehicle into a crowd of protesters." (Seattle 'Autonomous Zone' Has Armed Guards, Local Businesses Being Threatened With Extortion, Police Say by Vandana Rambaran). Those who seek to warn their neighbors about the red juggernaut moving in on free institutions are engaged in a vain enterprise. It is too late to warn people because the reds are here in vast numbers and have taken control over the people's souls. The voices of the opposition who have resisted indoctrination have been chased by red mobs bent on destroying them and been forced to hide and seek refuge wherever they can. They have seen the reds load tyranny and fear onto trucks and unload them across the nation, and screamed out to their fellow citizens not to be the next victims, but few remain to listen.

THE HEAVY TRUNCHEONS OF THE THOUGHT POLICE

Those who knew him called him Samaritan. He was the best friend and neighbor a person could have, honest, decent, virtuous, benevolent and industrious. One day, while he was riding on a train to return home from work, he fell into a dream. In his dream, he was in a world which was perpetually gray, dark and dismal. The thought and speech of the population were controlled by omnipresent surveillance. Raging mobs and their governmental henchmen suppressed images and ideas which deviated from the ways of thinking deemed to be politically correct. The thought police had a mandate to search for, find, monitor and expunge all forms of expression which transgressed the strictures of social justice. The reds had assumed control over newsrooms, schools, businesses and government. They held social justice seminars in which it was unanimously agreed that people have a right to be protected from words and pictures which were opposed to Marxism and offended the sensibilities of radical women, radical blacks, radical homosexuals, radical transgenders and the radical poor. The reds had deplatformed conservatives, libertarians and supporters of Donald Trump, preventing them from meeting and engaging in public debate, on the grounds that their views and opinions were unacceptable and offensive to progressive communities. They removed the iconic image of a Native American woman from Land O'Lakes butter packages on the grounds that images of indigenous people on Western capitalist products constitutes insensitivity toward savage, backward, nonWestern cultures. They removed commercial brand names such as Aunt Jemima on the grounds that names and images of blacks on Western capitalist products constitute an endorsement of slavery. On the grounds that images of blacks engaged in the culinary arts and exhibiting pride, dignity, competence and professionalism in their work constitute unabashed racism and a romanticization of black exclusion. On the grounds that images of blacks with warm, friendly, appealing personalities cooking for millions and revered for their cooking are disrespectful stereotypes of blacks and incitements to discrimination. On the grounds that images of blacks preparing popular American food violate the principles of racial equality and constitute nostalgia for the plantation. On the grounds that consumers expect absolute adherence to the tenets of political correctness in all corporate marketing campaigns and will only purchase brand portfolios granted an official license and seal approval by the reds. On the grounds that commercial brands must be constantly updated to reflect the most recent red political commitments and changes in the red party line. On the grounds that images of black women who are accomplished storytellers and artful in the kitchen are an endorsement of the antebellum degradation. On the grounds that images of black achievements and respect and popularity among whites are blatant images of black inferiority. On the grounds that images of black excellence, black flourishing and black showmanship are symbols of the preCivil War era when blacks were subjected to unremitting lashes of terror and abuse. In his dream, Samaritan saw red corporations donating millions of dollars to the cause of black racism, black separatism, the black will to power, the black war to enforce political correctness, the black campaign to establish preferential treatment on the basis of race and deny educational and employment opportunities to whites, and the black dismantling of the Western, liberal democratic order. He saw the black community radicalized by the reds and placing America under constant, relentless attack. He saw cities across America remove historical monuments commemorating statesmen and generals who fought for the cause of freedom and fought on freedom's soil on the grounds that such exhibitions show insensitivity to black culture which hates America and the equal opportunity, meritocratic system which America symbolizes. He saw crowds of red protesters defacing, destroying and pulling down statues commemorating the people who founded America, who fought for American freedom and independence, who fought for the principle of equal protection under the law without regard to race or color, and who fought to make the world safe for freedom for their children and their children's children. He saw civilization descend into a vortex of mass disturbances, mass disruptions, mass disorder, mass agitation, mass killing, mass rioting and mass looting planned, organized and carried out by hoodlums marching under the banners of Black Lives Matter: "Quaker Foods, the company behind the Aunt Jemima brand of syrup and other breakfast foods, says it will rename this line of products and discontinue its label's image of a black woman 'to make progress toward racial equality'. Aunt Jemima has been featured on these products for 130 years. NBC reported on the development:

The picture has changed over time, and in recent years Quaker removed the mammy kerchief from the character to blunt growing criticism that the brand perpetuated a racist stereotype that dated to the days of slavery. But Quaker, a subsidiary of PepsiCo, said removing the image and name is part of an effort by the company 'to make progress toward racial equality.'

'We recognize Aunt Jemima's origins are based on a racial stereotype,' Kristin Kroepfl, vice president and chief marketing officer of Quaker Foods North America, said in a press release. 'As we work to make progress toward racial equality through several initiatives, we also must take a hard look at our portfolio of brands and ensure they reflect our values and meet our consumers' expectations.'

Kroepfl said the company has worked to 'update' the brand to be 'appropriate and respectful' but it realized the changes were insufficient.

"As an example of 'consumers' expectations,' NBC quoted Riche Richardson, an associate professor at Cornell University, who said Aunt Jemima is 'a retrograde image of black womanhood on store shelves.' 'It's an image that harkens back to the antebellum plantation. Aunt Jemima is that kind of stereotype is premised on this idea of black inferiority and otherness,' Richardson said. 'It is urgent to expunge our public spaces of a lot of these symbols that for some people are triggering and represent terror and abuse,' he declared. 'Quaker said the new packaging will begin to appear in the fall of 2020, and a new name for the foods will be announced at a later date,' NBC reported. 'The company also announced it will donate at least $5 million over the next five years 'to create meaningful, ongoing support and engagement in the black community.' The purge of Aunt Jemima comes as a wave of municipalities across the United States are removing historical monuments for similar complaints of racial insensitivity. Crowds of protesters have defaced or even destroyed statues of notable figures from the Civil War era Confederate States of America, Founding Fathers, veterans, and even abolitionists. The current unrest was sparked by a string of racially charged killings: Ahmaud Arbery in Georgia, Breonna Taylor in Kentucky, and George Floyd in Minnesota. As the Black Lives Matter movement organized protests across the nation, some of which descended into violent riots and looting, tensions flared again after Atlanta police shot and killed another unarmed man, Rayshard Brooks. Mere weeks before this unrest, another food brand removed a longstanding label icon over perceived racial insensitivity. Land O'Lakes announced in April it would remove the likeness of a Native American woman from its butter products after 92 years." (Quaker Foods To Rename 'Aunt Jemima' Scrub Logo 'To Make Progress Toward Racial Equality' by Penny Starr and Ezra Dulis). Samaritan saw a vertiginous whirl of images dance through his dream. He saw a statue of Winston Churchill defaced in London. He saw a statue of Christopher Columbus removed from a park in St Louis, Missouri. He saw a statue of John McDonogh pulled down in Duncan Plaza in New Orleans and dumped into the Mississippi River. He saw a statue of Thomas Jefferson defaced and pulled down at a high school in Portland, Oregon. He saw the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier of the American Revolution, which features a statue of George Washington, defaced. He saw Oriel College of Oxford pull down a statue of Cecil Rhodes. Samaritan was jolted out of his nightmare by the conductor asking for tickets. When he disembarked and looked around him, he saw that the frightening, unpleasant images in his dream were all a reality. He must have been asleep for a hundred years. The next day, he went back on board the train and disembarked at an old, abandoned cemetery with a rusted entrance gate and there he joined the dead.

ANTIFA TAKES OVER THE WEST

Fire brigades throughout the world employ a system of color codes to define levels of fire danger. For the lowest level of danger, the color code is green. For the highest level, the color code is red. This color indicates a fire which starts quickly, spreads furiously and burns intensely. Decent, civilized, law abiding people, dedicated to the preservation of Western liberal values, have alerted their friends and neighbors to a fire raging out of control across the world and have used the color code red to signal their concern. This is the fire of violent occupation staged by members of the Antifa movement and it has consumed every major city in the West. Although a hundred years in the making, the result of the treachery of the Western masses who turned their backs on liberal capitalism in the early decades of the twentieth century, the invasions and attacks by Antifa exploded suddenly in the late twentieth and early twenty first centuries, the final result of a century long social, political and ideological crescendo, and have spread furiously and intensely across Europe and America, and burned the houses of law and order and liberal jurisprudence to the ground. What began as the paramilitary wing of the German Communist Party in the 1920s, the Antifaschistische Aktion, whose aim was to eliminate both its rival brother national socialists together with the liberal democratic opposition, has expanded into a global movement which has transformed modern cities into savage jungles presided over by warlords shouting slogans of social justice backed by the gun barrels of the people's liberation brigades. Look at a map of Europe and America and see a swath of destruction advancing from Stockholm to San Francisco and placing the few voices of liberty remaining in the grip of panic and fear, while the masses celebrate it as a movement of block parties and arts festivals enforcing the people's progressive rule of gender, race and class politics. Look at lawless, antipolice, no go squatter sites encamped across Europe under the control of Antifa. Look at Rota Flora in Hamburg, a former theater occupied by Antifa since 1989. Look at Riga 94, an apartment complex in Berlin occupied by Antifa since 1990. Look at the Antifa members who successfully fought an eviction from the complex by taking to the streets and attacking police and banks, smashing storefronts, and setting automobiles on fire across Berlin. Look at the ZADs, Zones A Défendre, set up by Antifa and located throughout France. There are ZADs in L'Amassada, Bure, Moulin, Notre Dame des Landes, Roybon and Testet. Look at the Paris suburb of Bagnolet, which contains a building whose entrance sign reads: "Welcome to our Paris HQ Antifa". Look at the former Olympic Village in Turin, Italy, which has been occupied by Antifa since 2006. Look at the highest levels of the German government and see the fearsome tentacles of Antifa at work. See prominent legal careers placed in the service of far left extremists. See constitutional courts transformed into soapboxes for the advocacy of violent revolution. See the Office for the Protection of the Constitution transformed into an organization for the aid and comfort of the reds. See court cases utilized to argue for the right of individuals to commit criminal acts in the name of the liberation of the working class. See supreme court judges conspiring in the shadows and planning acts of sabotage in their conferences and chambers. See courtrooms transformed into theaters of agitation and propaganda seeking to overthrow liberal constitutionalism. See constitutional deliberations subverted by an agenda to provide leftist criminals and violent offenders with moral, legal, political and financial support and to grant them immunity from prosecution. See supreme court judges declaring total war against capitalist freedom, liberal democracy, constitutionally bound and delimited government, and the agencies of national security. See judges ignore the the commands of the law and became rubber stamps for red public opinion and its support for the forces of terror. See judicial authorities hand down rulings, instructions and exhortations to open up the prisons, sewers and mental hospitals of society and let red extremists and psychopaths run amok across the land. See national capitals transformed into headquarters of the reds and the seats of a new antigovernment organized to sweep away the legacies of the Enlightenment, the legacies of reason, science, progress and human flourishing, and establish a people's republic of Marxists, Islamists, Kurds, Kikuyu and Bantus in their place: "A constitutional judge in Hamburg has been linked to Germany's far left extremist Antifa scene as well as the banned Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK) terrorist group. Judge Cornelia Ganten-Lange, formerly an asylum lawyer, was elected to the Hamburg constitutional court in 2009 and again in 2015. She has been reported to have a deep history with Antifa far left extremists during her legal career. She has previously spoken at events held by the organization Rote Hilfe, or Red Help, which is classified as extremist by the German Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution. She spoke on topics relating to Turkish far left extremists after representing several members of the PKK terror group in court cases. According to a report from German newspaper Die Welt, at least one of these conferences was held at the notorious Rote Flora building, an abandoned theater in Hamburg that has been occupied by far left Antifa extremists for over thirty years and is regarded as their headquarters in the city. Along with the Rigaer 94 squat in Berlin, Rote Flora is regarded as one of the most important headquarters of Antifa in Germany and was their base for the 2017 G20 riots. Rote Hilfe is described by the Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution (BfV) as a legal organization that provides 'criminal and violent offenders from the left wing extremist spectrum with political and financial support, for example in the case of legal and litigation costs as well as fines'. They add that the group also attempts 'to discredit the security and judicial authorities and democracy based on the rule of law through public opinion work'. Ganten-Lange has also spoken for a similar legal fund for Kurds called Azadi which is also classified as extremist and is linked to the terrorist PKK. 'There are close ties to PKK related organizations and the left wing extremist prison aid organization Rote Hilfe eV', a BfV report claimed." (Hamburg Judge Linked To Far Left Antifa Extremists And Banned Kurdish Terrorist Group by Chris Tomlinson). Look at the outlaw regime set up by Antifa in Seattle and see the fearsome workings of a mob dedicated to a life of crime. See a culture of murder, robbery, victimization and devastation justified as an imperative of social equity. See the violation of people's rights and the assassination of the police legitimized in the name of the oppressed and the marginalized. See liberal democratic communities replaced by red autonomous zones with an agenda of socialism and statism painted in the rainbow colors of identity politics. See mayors and police chiefs replaced by red commanders whose brutal ferocity is matched only by their hatred of the law. See gangs of red activists overrun peaceful cities and place every home, street, block and precinct in a vice grip of extortion, exaction, force and intimidation. See the red riders of an apocalypse reduce righteous neighborhoods to scenes of crimes planned, crimes in progress and crimes completed, and compel every decent, law abiding resident, every father, mother, brother and sister who upholds liberal values in a civilized society, to place emergency calls to nonexistent police forces and then run for their lives: "Police have been unable to respond to 'rapes, robberies, and all sorts of violent acts' occurring in Seattle's East Precinct, which authorities abandoned on Monday, leaving the area in the hands of activists who set up their own police free 'Capitol Hill Autonomous Zone' (CHAZ), Seattle Police Chief Carmen Best said Thursday. The police chief is now working on a plan to reopen the precinct, telling reporters calls for service 'have more than tripled.' 'These are responses to emergency calls—rapes, robberies, and all sorts of violent acts that have been occurring in the area that we're not able to get to,' she said. Emergency response times in the area have tripled, she noted, going from just over five minutes to 18 minutes. 'If that is your mother, your sister, your cousin, your neighbor's kid that is being raped, robbed assaulted (or) otherwise victimized, you're not going to want to have to report that it took the police three times longer to get there to provide services to them,' Best said. 'It was never an option to have residents of the precinct, many of whom are members of our most marginalized communities by the way, waiting for an extra length of time for an officer to arrive to a violent crime in progress,' she stated. The police chief also confirmed someone breached the building, which was abandoned on Monday." (Seattle Police Chief: Cops 'Not Able to' Respond to Rapes, Robberies Due To Autonomous Zone by Hannah Bleau). Alarm bells are ringing through the night but the masses do not hear them. Maps of Europe and America are going up in flames but the masses do not see them. Ideologies of collectivism and dictatorship spill their blood across newspapers and web pages but the masses do not condemn them. Morally blind, deaf, mute and unthinking, the masses have donned the Antifa garb of black masks and black bloc and commenced an assault against Western civilization.

THREE CHEERS FOR THREE AMERICANS

A maverick is an unorthodox, uncommon, unusual, independent minded individual who often provokes hostility and antagonism from the people around him. In the field of politics, mavericks wear the mark of Cain and are drawn, quartered and burned in effigy because they challenge and resist the religion of the establishment set forth by the reds. Proudly swimming against the current by championing the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual, political mavericks are routinely cast in the role of a nation's villains and are permanently excluded from its pantheon of heroes. Prior to the twentieth century, today's political mavericks would have been lauded by the masses as models and exemplars of outstanding statesmanship and skill in managing public affairs for the maximization of personal liberty. In the upside down world which emerged in the twentieth century, these same mavericks are treated as outcasts and pariahs and school children are taught to utter their names in shame. The constant, unremitting barrage of vilification and abuse to which they are subjected serves as a striking indicator of just how morally sick and bankrupt today's society is. In America, three political mavericks have stood out since the dawn of the twentieth century as persistent reproaches to the statist trend of American society, as nagging reminders of the moral failings of America and its descent into red totalitarian tyranny, and as brave, determined public figures whose rejection of the political mainstream and rejection by the political mainstream taught the vanishing minority of civilized Americans how the mainstream has disgraced, discredited and brought undying shame to the American nation which it claims to represent, to the nation conceived two centuries ago in the dreams of human liberty and dedicated to principle of constitutional rights. These three political mavericks are Joe McCarthy, Barry Goldwater and Donald Trump. Listen to these stalwart figures as they confront the enemies of freedom and champion this noble cause at home, abroad and throughout the world. Listen to Joe McCarthy who exposed nests of red collaborators, sympathizers and security risks at work at the highest levels of the government shaping and guiding national policy. Who exposed individuals who by virtue of their friends, associates, colleagues and the company they kept could not be trusted with the privilege of holding sensitive government posts. Who exposed a morally decayed and decadent swampland called the American political establishment, the members of which were exalted as the nation's best, brightest and most educated, but were in reality agents and carriers of an international red movement and conspiracy. Who exposed the secret plans of traitors and saboteurs working assiduously on the national scene to establish the hegemony of the Communist Party and its Soviet masters in America. Who exposed the disloyalty to America of the highest and most senior governmental officials and their unswerving loyalty to the cause of the reds. Who exposed the moral abominations running the nation's top governmental departments, and extinguished the sparks and flames of internal subversion, and reestablished honesty, decency and integrity in government: "The reason why we find ourselves in a position of impotency is not because our only powerful potential enemy has sent men to invade our shores. but rather because of the traitorous actions of those who have been treated so well by this nation. It has not been the less fortunate, or members of minority groups who have been traitorous to this nation, but rather those who have had all the benefits that the wealthiest nation on earth has had to offer the finest homes, the finest college education and the finest jobs in government we can give. This is glaringly true in the State Department. There the bright young men who are born with silver spoons in their mouths are the ones who have been most traitorous. I have here in my hand a list of 205, a list of names that were made known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping policy in the State Department. As you know, very recently the Secretary of State proclaimed his loyalty to a man guilty of what has always been considered as the most abominable of all crimes—being a traitor to the people who gave him a position of great trust—high treason. He has lighted the spark which is resulting in a moral uprising and will end only when the whole sorry mess of twisted, warped thinkers are swept from the national scene so that we may have a new birth of honesty and decency in government." (Speech of Joseph McCarthy, Wheeling, West Virginia). Listen to Barry Goldwater who sought to secure America from the incursions of red tyranny and to make the world safe for the institutions of freedom. Who sought to marshal the strength and resources of America in a world historical struggle to preserve liberal capitalist civilization. Who championed the Republican Party as the party of Lincoln, the party of liberty, the party of the federal constitution, the party of limited government, and the party of America. Who sought to free the American people from a welfare state leviathan and social regulatory monster which rejected constitutional restraints and rendered the rule of law null and void. Who denounced the spurious claims of social justice proselytizers and the preachers of tribal solidarity upon the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual. Who sought to reestablish constitutional jurisprudence which had been hijacked and assassinated by red judges who reinterpreted the constitution beyond all recognition and declared it to be a manifesto of untrammelled majority rule and rank collectivist politics. Who bravely stood up to the mob and upheld the sanctity of private property and the right of private business establishments, guaranteed under the Constitution, to set the terms and conditions of their employment, accommodation and service to the public. Who defied the strictures of the establishment and the will of the majority and promoted the cause of healthy, wholesome, morally invigorating, all American extremism: extremism in the defense of individual liberty, extremism in the pursuit of individual justice, and extremism in the consolidation of liberal, humane, Enlightenment values: "Today, as then, but more urgently and more broadly than then, the task of preserving and enlarging freedom at home and safeguarding it from the forces of tyranny abroad is great enough to challenge all our resources and to require all our strength. Anyone who joins us in all sincerity, we welcome. Those who do not care for our cause, we don't expect to enter our ranks in any case. And let our Republicanism, so focused and so dedicated, not be made fuzzy and futile by unthinking and stupid labels. I would remind you that extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice. And let me remind you also that moderation in the pursuit of justice is no virtue. The beauty of the very system we Republicans are pledged to restore and revitalize, the beauty of this Federal system of ours is in its reconciliation of diversity with unity. We must not see malice in honest differences of opinion, and no matter how great, so long as they are not inconsistent with the pledges we have given to each other in and through our Constitution. Our Republican cause is not to level out the world or make its people conform in computer regimented sameness. Our Republican cause is to free our people and light the way for liberty throughout the world. Ours is a very human cause for very humane goals. This Party, its good people, and its unquestionable devotion to freedom, will not fulfill the purposes of this campaign which we launch here now until our cause has won the day, inspired the world, and shown the way to a tomorrow worthy of all our yesteryears." (1964 Acceptance Speech at the Republican National Convention by Barry Goldwater). Following in the footsteps of McCarthy and Goldwater, Donald Trump has defied the ruling red dispensation and set forth a philosophy to restore the rule of reason, liberty, sanity and traditional American values to public life. A minority president who lost the popular vote by nearly three million, Trump has sought to roll back the legacy of Barack Obama and the trend of far left radicalism which has engulfed the nation over the past quarter century and on every point his philosophy is at odds with the red ethos of the man on the street. Trump believes that the federal government has no authority to order individuals to obtain health care. He believes that the individual health care mandate is a penalty and not a tax and that the notion of a penalty-tax is a contradiction in terms. He believes that Antifa is a terrorist movement and organization and that the philosophy of the reds, the philosophy of tribal politics and gender, race and class hatred, must be unreservedly condemned by all right thinking Americans. He believes that agitators of class hatred are on par with agitators of race hatred and that both are essential players in the red program to overthrow the Western liberal democratic order. He believes that universities must protect and promote freedom of speech on campus and prohibit acts of violence and intimidation and the enforcement of political correctness by the forces of the left. He believes that university students who are accused of sexual assault are entitled to enjoy full due process of law protections such as the presumption of innocence, the right to confront and cross examine accusers, and the right not to be found guilty without independent, corroborating evidence. He believes that private business owners have the right to refuse to provide services which violate their conscience and beliefs. He believes that sex is determined by immutable biological facts and is not changeable and that transgenderism is an assault on science and reality. He believes that environmentalism is a doomsday religion whose advocacy of zero carbon emissions is a deliberate program of destruction of technological progress and industrial civilization. He believes that the removal of historical monuments and the expunging of commercial brands is a movement of dismantling and erasure of Western capitalism and the legacy of the Enlightenment. He believes that the function of judges is to interpret the law in accordance with its plain, objective meaning and not in accordance with social, political or ideological considerations. When Ronald Reagan was elected president, he was no longer Ronald Reagan but had undergone a makeover in which his conservative credentials dissolved in a smiling ocean of warm congeniality. By contrast, Trump has always been Trump, just as Goldwater was always Goldwater and McCarthy was always McCarthy. Therein lies the essential characteristic of the political maverick: undeviating commitment to the cause of freedom and a political substance which determines political style. The NeverTrumpers, such as Irving Kristol, George Conway and George Will, who profess to disdain Trump's political style are in reality closet reds who reject Trump's political substance. Supporting the Civil Rights Act of 1964, including its prohibition of discrimination in private business establishments, Will turned red two decades ago. Defying both in style and substance the red orthodoxy which has governed America since the turn of the twentieth century, three political mavericks under the names of McCarthy, Goldwater and Trump have shown in their careers of courage the treason of the American majority.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT WHICH ENDED CIVIL RIGHTS

The mob was rampaging down the street, smashing windows and torching buildings. Consisting of every race and color, it was a mob which represented a cross section of the American people and it transformed peaceful homes, law abiding neighborhoods, places of work and business, legislative bodies, constitutional courts and liberal educational institutions into raging social justice war zones which promoted the rule of totalitarian tyranny and demanded the end of freedom in America. The time was the early 1960s and the place was any town and any city across the nation. Ordinary Americans, black, white and from all walks of life, had gathered together and begun marching under the flags of state intervention and state imposition and begun agitating for an expansion of governmental power without precedent in the history of the nation. They marched under the flags of the reds, flags which had replaced the traditional stars and stripes, and under these flags they demanded the enactment of civil rights legislation which would repeal the system of civil rights as known and understood for centuries by liberal minded people, and establish in its place a regime of state regulation and control of private business. So they raised their hands, and raised the hands of their legislators, and the hands of their judges, and the hands of their governors and president, and the hands of their professors, pundits, editorialists and intellectuals, and the entire nation voted en masse for the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Listen to the act and listen to its nationalization of privately owned accommodations. Listen to its invasion of private commerce. Listen to its intrusion into private associations. Listen to its reduction of private business proprietors to the level of business agents and administrators under the control of the government. Listen to its invention of a right to be served on private property. Listen to its identification of private action with state action and its regulation of private action out of existence. Listen to its rejection of freedom of association in the name of tribal rights. Listen to its rejection of the right to privacy in the name of the common good. Listen to its seizure of every private economic entity in the nation and its transformation of inns, hotels, motels, restaurants, cafeterias, lunchrooms, lunch counters, gasoline stations, cinemas, theaters, concert halls and sports arenas into places of public service, public dealing, public trading, public buying, public selling, public provision, public transaction, and into public facilities and rightless cogs in the machinery of a red totalitarian leviathan without precedent in the history of the nation. "All persons shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages, and accommodations of any place of public accommodation, as defined in this section, without discrimination on the ground of race, color, religion, or national origin. Each of the following establishments is a place of public accommodation within this title if its operations affect commerce, or if discrimination or segregation by it is supported by state action: (1) any inn, hotel, motel, or other establishment which provides lodging to transient guests, other than an establishment located within a building which contains not more than five rooms for rent or hire and which is actually occupied by the proprietor of such establishment as his residence. (2) any restaurant, cafeteria, lunchroom, lunch counter, soda fountain, or other facility principally engaged in selling food for consumption on the premises, including, but not limited to, any such facility located on the premises of any retail establishment, or any gasoline station; (3) any motion picture house, theater, concert hall, sports arena, stadium or other place of exhibition or entertainment; and (4) any establishment which is physically located within the premises of any establishment otherwise covered by this subsection, or (within the premises of which is physically located any such covered establishment and which holds itself out as serving patrons of any such covered establishment." (Civil Rights Act, Title II). Listen to the Civil Rights Act and listen to its invasion of private workplaces. Listen to its usurpation of private rights and its dictating of the terms and conditions of private employment. Listen to its transformation of private employers into public employers and its abolition of private zones of economic freedom and privacy. Listen to its sacrifice of freedom of enterprise, work, employment, contract and association upon the altars of a spreading, amorphous, arbitrary presence as unconstitutional and uncontrollable as it is morally harmful and pernicious: a presence called Antidiscrimination: "A. Employer practices. It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—(1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; or (2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employees or applicants for employment in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. B. Employment agency practices. It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employment agency to fail or refuse to refer for employment, or otherwise to discriminate against, any individual because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, or to classify or refer for employment any individual on the basis of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. (Civil Rights Act of 1964, Title VII). Civil rights are the rights of individuals to political freedom and equal protection under the law. The most fundamental political freedom is the right to private property because an individual is not a pure mind but a unity of mind and body and cannot be truly free unless he can own and dispose of material things. An individual's body, home, personal belongings and business enterprises are his private property and if the state has the power to regulate and control these, then the human individual, the natural, indivisible harmony of matter and spirit, is not a free born agent and was born into a state of slavery. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 is unconstitutional. The federal government has no power to forbid acts of discrimination in the private sector. The Interstate Commerce Clause of the Constitution allows Congress to regulate businesses which conduct commerce between the states and not businesses whose activities simply affect commerce between the states. There is a fundamental difference, a difference which is as plain as daylight, between acts of interstate commerce and acts which simply affect interstate commerce; acts which affect interstate commerce are not acts of interstate commerce and businesses which only engage in them cannot be regulated by Congress. Since every business engages in activities which have an effect on interstate commerce, either directly or indirectly, the Interstate Commerce

Clause could not possibly have granted to Congress the power to regulate each and every business. Businesses which actually conduct business across state lines, businesses such as interstate bus companies, interstate railways and interstate airlines, can be regulated under the Interstate Commerce Clause and no other businesses. As well, the Constitution does not grant to the states the power to forbid acts of discrimination in the private sector. The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution is not merely a procedural right to due process of law before an individual can be deprived of his life, liberty or property, but by its very mention of these rights, the amendment establishes these as fundamental. Their mere mention in the amendment establishes their existence and places a brake on state police power to regulate individual liberty in the name of public health or safety. Under this doctrine of substantive due process, which was born in the precepts of logic and common sense and on the pages of English jurisprudence beginning with the Magna Carta, the right of a state to regulate private businesses does not extend to restricting economic privacy or freedom of economic association and to forbidding acts of private discrimination. Listen to the description of a travesty of justice committed by the Supreme Court in its decision Heart Of Atlanta Motel Versus The United States. Listen to what nine agents of mob politics unanimously held that Congress has the power which in point of fact Congress has no power to do. Listen to how nine robed police officers protecting the prerogatives of a statist great white whale sought to deny and dissolve the words of the Constitution by claiming that the Interstate Commerce Clause does not say what it says. Listen to nine political activists masquerading as constitutional judges claim that the Interstate Commerce Clause allows Congress to regulate businesses which merely have an impact on interstate commerce and not only businesses which actually engage in interstate commerce. Listen to a political, ideological, extralegal, extraconstitutional ruling handed down by red judges to the red masses, and fed to the masses as raw meat feeds a wild, vicious, lawless animal, during the final hours of American liberal democracy. Listen to a ruling voted upon in a populist tent of mob government which purports to prove that businesses which do not engage in interstate commerce in fact engage in interstate commerce and that A is non A: "The Commerce Clause extends the antidiscrimination provisions in the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to hotels that host travelers from outside the state. In a unanimous decision authored by Justice Clark, the Court held the government could enjoin the motel from discriminating on the basis of race under the Commerce Clause. Since the motel was positioned near Interstates 75 and 85 and received most of its business from outside Georgia, this showed that it had an impact on interstate commerce, which is all that is needed to justify Congress in exercising the Commerce Clause power." The most egregious breach of property rights in American history, without constitutional basis of any kind, the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was a bellwether development. It would spawn an ever expanding, hydra headed monster called Antidiscrimination which would be impossible to resist or overcome because created and nourished by the majority. Invading private businesses and private economic spaces and prohibiting discrimination on the basis of race, gender, sexual orientation, transgender identity, religion, creed, disability, height and weight, America's antidiscrimination jackboots, set into motion by the Civil Rights Act of 1964, have quickened the tempo a hundred fold of America's tragic, dismal march into totalitarian tyranny.

AMERICA'S RACE WARS AND THE REDS

Four short decades after the end of the Civil War and the abolition of slavery, blacks across America turned their backs on the liberal capitalist system which had set them free and embraced the cause of socialism. In so doing, they followed in the footsteps of the mass of white Americans, but their support for socialism was deeper and stronger, because African culture had for thousands of years devalued the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual and exalted in its place a religion, a statecraft and a kingship of ethnic tribes. In consequence of this leftist blood flowing through black cultural veins, America's blacks in the early decades of the twentieth century migrated to the communist cause in droves and declared war on their nation. The first volley was fired by W. E. B. Du Bois, who in 1909 cofounded the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which he proclaimed "had a strong socialist element in its leadership in persons like Mary Ovington, William English and Charles Edward Russell." (W. E. B Du Bois Joins The Communist Party, Southern California Communist Party USA). In 1927, Du Bois visited the Soviet Union and exalted communism as "the most useful vehicle for the workers of the world". He spent the next years as a communist propagandist and sought to convert the NAACP into a communist front. In 1935, he wrote Black Reconstruction, a communist interpretation of the Reconstruction Era. In the 1940s, Du Bois was active in the following communist fronts: the American Committee for Protection of the Foreign Born, the American Committee for a Democratic Greece, the Civil Rights Congress, the Jefferson School of Social Science, the California Labor School, and the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace. In 1947, he signed a statement We Negro Americans which defended the Communist Party. Listen to Du Bois who exalts universal enslavement as the only human way of life. Who exalts a morality of forced giving, forced sharing and the sacrifice of millions as the essence of human freedom. Who condemns individual rights as crimes against humanity and advocates the imprisonment of the people behind bars marked the Social Good. Who proclaims that no nation which allows individuals the right to live their lives as they deem fit and to live and work for themselves as free agents, and prohibits all forms of communist tyranny and dictatorship, can call itself truly free, humane or just. Who proclaims that communism is coming to all mankind; it is the shining, glorious wave of the future; and its religion of regimentation and confiscation in the name of social rights and social justice will bring forth the golden age of human salvation: "No universal selfishness can bring social good to all. Communism--the effort to give all men what they need and to ask of each the best they can contribute--this is the only way of human life. These aims are not crimes. They are practiced increasingly over the world. No nation can call itself free which does not allow its citizens to work for these ends." (Dr. W.E.B. Du Bois Joins Communist Party at 93 by Peter Kihss). In 1919, Cyril Briggs founded the African Blood Brotherhood and proclaimed that blacks must make their permanent home in the creed of Karl Marx and work faithfully with Soviet alliances. In 1924, black leader Lovet Fort Whiteman traveled to Moscow to study communism and later sought to establish an American Labor Negro Congress as an organization to promote communism to blacks. In 1927, blacks were honored speakers at the Communist International's Fourth Congress. At the congress, black leader Otto Huiswood proclaimed that communism was a freedom movement for blacks and must be supported without deviation by every black man, woman and child. In 1928, statistics came out which showed the flight of America's blacks from the world around them: over 14,000 had become red and joined the Communist Party. In 1928, black leader Harry Haywood advocated the formation of a black communist state in America under the slogan, "A nation within a nation". In 1934, black leader Paul Robeson visited the Soviet Union and when he returned home, he exalted the red totalitarians he saw as bringers of safety, security, freedom, friendliness, benevolence, happiness, joy and abundance to mankind. He exalted the oppressive heat of state control which surrounded him and scorched him during every moment of his stay in Russia. He exalted the suppression of the opposition and the assassination of the voices of liberty by the watchtowers and secret police bureaus manned by the Soviet government. He exalted the fear and suspicion of neighbor toward neighbor, the daily horror of life lived under the shadow of work camps and firing squads, and the endless rounds of violence and terror fired at the people from the gun barrels of proletarian liberation and revolutionary justice. He exalted the destruction of a free society and the execution of innocent people in the name of class law and class rights. He exalted the hatred of talented, successful, intelligent and ambitious creators of private wealth, a hatred which comprised the official religion of the communist system, and a hatred toward which he felt an eternal affinity and kinship and a hatred in which he truly felt at home: " 'I was not prepared for the happiness I see on every face in Moscow', said Robeson. 'I was aware that there was no starvation here, but I was not prepared for the bounding life; the feeling of safety and abundance and freedom that I find here, wherever I turn. I was not prepared for the endless friendliness, which surrounded me from the moment I crossed the border. I had a technically irregular passport, but all this was brushed aside by the eager helpfulness of the border authorities. And this joy and happiness and friendliness, this utter absence of any embarrassment over a race question, is all the more keenly felt by me because of the day I spent in Berlin on the way here, and that was a day of horror--in an atmosphere of hatred, fear and suspicion.' Commenting on the recent execution after court martial of a number of counterrevolutionary terrorists, Robeson declared roundly: 'From what I have already seen of the workings of the Soviet Government, I can only say that anybody who lifts his hand against it ought to be shot! It is the government's duty to put down any opposition to this really free society with a firm hand and I hope they will always do it, for I already regard myself at home here. This is home to me. I feel more kinship to the Russian people under their new society than I ever felt anywhere else. It is obvious that there is no terror here, that all the masses of every race are contented and support their government.' " (I Am at Home, Says Robeson at Reception in Soviet Union by Vern Smith, Daily Worker, January 15, 1935). In 1931, the communist front Sharecroppers' Union was formed in Alabama and Louisiana and attracted blacks from across the South. In 1935, the communist front National Negro Congress was formed and led violent labor strikes and mass riots which denounced capitalism as a system of fascism and racism. In the 1930s, communists founded the Federal Negro Theater, the Federal Writers' Project and the Harlem Community Arts Center, all vehicles of communist propaganda and all exalted and esteemed by the black community. The communist led labor unions, the Mine, Mill and Smelters Workers Union and the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, organized black workers throughout the nation. Blacks traveled by the thousands to fight in the Spanish Civil War on the side of the communists and were part of the communist led Abraham Lincoln Brigades. In 1945, three communist front organizations united, the National Negro Congress, the International Labor Defense and the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, and formed the Civil Rights Congress, headed by black communist William Patterson, and promoted communism as the only system of civil rights for blacks and the poor. America's blacks, reds, masses and mobs have roared into the twenty first century and turned the nation upside down. Staged under the banners, slogans and hashtags of Black Lives Matter, a cultural and political revolution is underway which seeks to smash, erase, expunge and pull down the legacies of the Enlightenment which for centuries have made America a beacon of hope to people throughout the world struggling to be free. The black and red masses have proclaimed that America is afflicted with systemic racism. In point of fact, there is not a racist law discriminating against blacks on the books in any town, city or state in the nation. The only discriminatory laws on the books in America are those which mandate that preferential treatment be granted to women and nonwhites in the name of diversity and inclusion. The red activists in charge of the black community have proclaimed that brand names and brand images on commercial product packages which feature blacks are symbols of racism. In point of fact, societies which have constructed hate objects do not allow the names or images of these hate objects to be featured on product packages. In Soviet Russia, the names and images of members of the bourgeois were not featured, and in the Third Reich, the names and images of Jews were not featured. The brands Aunt Jemima and Uncle Ben's feature flattering, charming pictures of blacks fully integrated in American society, fully accepted by American society, and taking pride and pleasure in their skills and professionalism. The red agitators in control of the black community have proclaimed that the statue of Theodore Roosevelt in front of the entrance to the Museum of Natural History is a symbol of racism because the image is flanked by walking figures of Indians and Africans. Listen to the words of Bill de Blasio who proclaims that the statue is a depiction of black subjugation and inferiority: "The American Museum of Natural History has asked to remove the Theodore Roosevelt statue because it explicitly depicts black and indigenous people as subjugated and racially inferior. The city supports the museum's request. It is the right decision and the right time to remove this problematic statue." In point of fact, if blacks had been viewed as racially inferior and fit only for subjugation, a black figure would not have been depicted as he is depicted: idealized, dignified, graceful, stately and composed in mien and carriage, proudly participating in the glorious march led by Roosevelt, the march of Western civilization. No such equivalent idealized depictions of Jews or capitalists can be found in the art of Soviet Russia or the Third Reich. Across the nation, a rampaging coalition of blacks and reds has taken down and defaced monuments and statues of figures who fought for the rule of freedom, liberty, peace and law which the West has conferred upon the world, figures ranging from Christopher Columbus to George Washington to Thomas Jefferson to Andrew Jackson to Ulysses Grant to America's veterans in a World War II memorial in Charlotte, North Carolina. Across this war memorial, vandals emblazoned a red hammer and sickle. This memorial now serves as dismal tombstone of the nation and the hammer and sickle serves as the nation's tragic epitaph, an image of treason by which it will always be remembered.

CORRUPTION IN CITY HALL

He arrived in Nicaragua in 1988. He spoke in long, effusive paragraphs about Karl Marx and Bob Marley. He spoke about his feverish visions of an untrammelled leftist state and society. He gathered popular support for the tyrannical communist regime of the Sandinistas. He proclaimed that under communism people are free and receive what they are entitled to receive: education from others, health care from others and land from others. He proclaimed that a communist society is a fair and inclusive society which improves the lives of millions and keeps their ideas and opinions politically correct because it cracks down on dissent. He raised funds for the Sandinistas and subscribed to the party's newspaper Barricada. He advocated the suppression of individual rights in the name of democratic socialism. He praised the Sandinistas for helping the poor and expropriating the classes of the talented and successful: "It was very affecting for me. They were in their own humble way, in this small country, trying to figure out what would work better." He denounced as 'American imperialist terrorists all those who opposed the Sandinista regime and sought to liberate the people from its tyranny. He distributed food and medicine to Sandinista guerrillas. He dreamed of socialist rifle shots, socialist protest songs and a socialist movement sweeping their way across Latin America and across the world. He shouted "A Marxist homeland or death!" in the streets. He proclaimed that the only free and just society is an egalitarian society in which individual rights have been crushed by the leviathan of social justice. He advocated an expansive, active, proactive and hyperactive government which will repeal human freedom in the name of mass equality: "There was something I took away from that —how hands on government has to be, how proactive, how connected to the people it must be." He advocated the sacrifice of constitutional rights and individual liberty on the altars of social security and community needs. He proclaimed that American assistance to the forces of freedom in Nicaragua battling the Nicaraguan reds was illegal and immoral and must be immediately stopped. He solicited and shipped millions of dollars in food, clothing and military supplies to the Nicaraguan government. He worked at the headquarters of the Nicaragua Solidarity Network of Greater New York where he sought to drum up public support for the Sandinistas who had lost power in 1990, raised funds for the Sandinistas, and proclaimed "the Nicaraguan struggle is our struggle." He organized block parties to celebrate the communist revolutions in Cuba and Nicaragua and sold subscriptions to the international edition of Barricada. He exalted red totalitarian tyranny as a system of economic, political and social democracy: "They [the Sandinistas] gave a new definition to democracy. They built a democracy that was striving to be economic and political, that pervaded all levels in society." He expressed his admiration for European socialism, New Deal socialism, liberation theology socialism, and any and every type of socialism which is undeviating in its quest to stamp out and suffocate individual human existence. He denied that human beings are free born agents possessing inalienable rights and dignity and exalted in place of the liberal morality of living and flourishing for oneself, the socialist morality of altruism, selflessness, sacrifice and enslavement. He was a loyal supporter of the Sandinistas throughout their career and had unbreakable sympathies with the cause of communism: "People who had shallow party sympathies with the FSLN pretty much dropped everything when they lost. Bill wasn't like that." He spent his honeymoon in Cuba and supported the communist regime there. He admired the Sandinista's totalitarian plan for Nicaragua as the essence of political idealism and sound statesmanship and a wellspring of moral inspiration to freedom fighters throughout the world: "They had a youthful energy and idealism mixed with a human ability and practicality that was really inspirational." He preached from the catechisms of the Marxist gospel, studied the Marxist manuals of strategy and tactics, defended Marxist cruelty and inhumanity, blamed the failures of Marxism on the desire of normal individuals to live in freedom, and launched a campaign of class war to overthrow the institutions of liberal democracy: "Republican Joe Lohda told WCBS-TV: 'Mr De Blasio's involvement with the Sandinistas didn't happen in 1917; it happened 70 years later when the cruelty and intrinsic failure of communism had become crystal clear to anyone with a modicum of reason. Mr De Blasio's class warfare strategy in New York City is directly out of the Marxist playbook. Now we know why.' " (De Blasio 'Needs To Explain Himself' Over Cuba Honeymoon, Sandinista Support Which He Is Proud Of by Michael Zennie). He proclaimed that one of the primary tasks of the government is to enhance the lives of the poor with money stolen from the rich. He was a unique public figure in America, fighting for the cause of Marxism and the agenda of the Sandinistas, clearly, explicitly and in a detailed manner, leaving no room for confusion or doubt, from the steps of city hall: "I am concerned about the future of the city of New York. I question anyone here to find a government that has espoused communism and Marxism the way he has supported the Sandinistas." (Lhota: De Blasio 'Needs To Explain Himself' Over Cuba Honeymoon, Sandinista Support, CBS News). He proclaimed that justice for the marginalized and the oppressed throughout the world can only be secured by an alliance between Marxists and Islamists who will work together to make opposition to liberalism the dominant force in politics and will storm the ramparts of Western civilization. Listen to his words which proclaim that the right to private property is the root of all oppression and that the liberal legal system which protects it must be swept away by a system of red totalitarian control. That the highest and noblest impulse of man is the impulse to socialism, service, sacrifice and self immolation, and this impulse must set into motion a people's revolution which will replace personal choice with public planning, and lower the curtain on a thousand years of civilized jurisprudence which recognized the right of the individual to be free in his mind, in his body, and in the use and disposal of the property he has earned by his honest work and effort. That the highest and noblest type of government is an all powerful government, an all pervasive government, a government which owns and controls every thought, decision, action, enterprise, undertaking, wage, rent, profit, place of living and plot of land, and in the name of a New Deal, a Fair Deal, a Green Deal and a New Frontier, has obliterated individual existence and made the state and community the primary reality in the lives of the people: "What's been hardest is the way our legal system is structured to favor private property. I think people all over this city, of every background, would like to have the city government be able to determine which building goes where, how high it will be, who gets to live in it, what the rent will be. I think there's a socialistic impulse, which I hear every day, in every kind of community, that they would like things to be planned in accordance to their needs. And I would, too. Unfortunately, what stands in the way of that is hundreds of years of history that have elevated property rights and wealth to the point that that's the reality that calls the tune on a lot of development. Look, if I had my druthers, the city government would determine every single plot of land, how development would proceed. And there would be very stringent requirements around income levels and rents. That's a world I'd love to see, and I think what we have, in this city at least, are people who would love to have the New Deal back, on one level. They'd love to have a very, very powerful government, including a federal government, involved in directly addressing their day to day reality." (Interview with de Blasio, quoted in Bill de Blasio Is America's Marxist Mayor by David Boaz). He proclaimed that New York City must honor the Black Lives Matter movement by renaming city streets and painting Black Lives Matter on the streets. Listen to his words: "It's time to do something officially representing this city to represent the fundamental power of Black Lives Matter. A proposal put on the table was to name streets in each borough and to paint the words on the streets of this city in each borough at a crucial location. What will be clear in the street name and on the streets of our city is that message that now our city must fully, fully, deeply feel—and this nation must as well—that black lives matter." Listen to the words of Black Lives Matter. These are the words of a movement which seeks to overthrow the system of meritocratic advancement, individual rights and liberal democracy in the name of black tribalism, black collectivism, black national socialism and a global black family: "We are unapologetically Black in our positioning. In affirming that Black Lives Matter, we need not qualify our position. To love and desire freedom and justice for ourselves is a prerequisite for wanting the same for others. We see ourselves as part of the global Black family, and we are aware of the different ways we are impacted or privileged as Black people who exist in different parts of the world." (Blacklivesmatter.com). He proclaimed that a statue of Theodore Roosevelt riding horseback accompanied by an American Indian and a black male, located at the entrance to the Museum of Natural History, is a symbol of racial subjugation and white supremacy and must be removed: "The American Museum of Natural History has asked to remove the Theodore Roosevelt statue because it explicitly depicts Black and Indigenous people as subjugated and racially inferior. The City supports the Museum's request. It is the right decision and the right time to remove this problematic statue." He denied the fact that if blacks and American Indians had truly been objects of hatred at the time the statue was produced in 1925, they would not have been depicted as they are: solemn, noble, stately and dignified, walking alongside Roosevelt, fully integrated in modern society, fully engaged with modern society and fully accepted by modern society, proud to be soldiers in the movement which Roosevelt led, the movement to extend Western civilization to the backward, savage regions of the earth. No such idealized images of Jews appeared in the Third Reich nor were there such idealized images of the bourgeois in Soviet Russia. Objects of hatred and discrimination are not depicted in the manner in which the two figures next to Roosevelt are depicted. The foregoing items comprise the curriculum vitae of the 109th mayor of New York City who has been in office since 2014. His name is Bill de Blasio. He is the face of New York's radicals who have made the city the heartland of American socialism, and is a leader of the national red movement which has taken over America. His catastrophic career, culminating in his election as mayor of the center of American and global capitalism, is a tragic symptom of the corruption which has spread through municipal governments throughout the nation and the treason of the masses who have unleashed it during the final decades of American civilization.

PSYCHOPATHIC MARX

The nineteenth century saw a second industrial revolution and led to inventions which helped shape the world we live in today. The steam engine, the locomotive, the telephone, the telegraph, the internal combustion engine, the rifle and electric power were among the astounding harvests of science and civilization which propelled mankind to ever new heights of power and glory. But the nineteenth century had an evil, sinister side and saw the invention of something which would grow like a cancer until it blackened, rotted, ravaged and consumed the twentieth century and ensured that the twenty first century would be the final century of mankind. The nineteenth century invented darkness, moral darkness, spiritual darkness and political darkness, and the figure who brought it into being was Karl Marx. This was a darkness which had never before been seen or known in the annals of history and its mass appeal would seal the doom of the civilized ways of life which had been bequeathed to the world by the Age of Enlightenment. Marx was the first thinker in history to offer a justification of mass murder and to defend the psychopath's philosophy of life. There had been programs of killing formulated before Marx but nobody before Marx had mounted Satan's throne and sought to justify the conscious, willful, intentional, premeditated killing of innocent people, to justify murder as murder, and to pitch an appeal to the thrill killers of the world to gratify their impulses and intensify their actions and efforts. Listen to the words of Marx as he seeks to justify the killing of one hundred percent of laboring mankind. He proclaims that mind has no existence whatever and all that exists is matter in motion. He proclaims that in consequence of this sole reality of matter, the only form of labor which produces wealth and value is brute, muscular labor and people who perform intellectual labor do not work. He proclaims that this class of intellectual laborers, called the bourgeois, exploits, oppresses and is parasitic upon the class of brute, muscular laborers, called the proletariat, and must be nationalized and expropriated before it is wiped out and exterminated. Inasmuch as man is a rational animal and there is no such thing as brute, muscular labor among human beings, and all forms of human labor involve the use of man's rational capacities to some degree or other, Marx's condemnation of the bourgeois is a condemnation of all those who perform work, from street sweepers to theoretical scientists, and every person who shows initiative and ambition in his work, from corner apple merchants to academic philosophers, and is a justification of ultimately killing each and every laborer in the world, educated and uneducated, skilled and menial, and transferring his wealth and value into the hands of those who are idle and inactive and into the hands of violent criminals. Starting from a religion of reductive materialism, Marxism provides a conscious justification of the psychopath's ultimate dream: the killing of hundreds of millions of people throughout the world. Loading the bullets of an earthbound mysticism of matter and muscles, Marxism consciously, joyfully, excitedly and with maximum thrill pulls the trigger and fires them at whole nations, states, communities and populations. Look at an account of Marxist philosophy and its inherent genocidal impulses. Look at reductive materialists who were the designers of killing fields and the perpetrators of mass murder. Look at Marxist dictators who were loathed by decent, civilized people. Look at the depopulation of cities, the enslavement of people on collective farms, and the leveling down of the producers and achievers of society, accomplished one and all in the name of reductive materialism and the muscular labor theory of value. Look at prisoners of conscience being clubbed to death and the voices of dissent being suffocated and starved by the Marxist enforcers of political incorrectness. Look at landscapes filled with corpses and a miasma of mass death which hangs over the air, monuments to Marxism and its worship of matter, muscles, mindlessness and primitive tribal politics. Look at the moral bankruptcy and the spiritual impoverishment of Marxism as it denies the existence of all higher forms of human consciousness and the rational, deliberative, abstractive powers of man and reduces human labor to the level of pure animal activity, and human economy to the level of instinctive, tribal organization, and human existence to the level of blind, unthinking matter. Look at the rejection of the products of the mind, the rejection of modern science, industry, skills, expertise, capitalism and modern methods of exchange, transaction, production and distribution, in favor of a socialism, a redistribution and an egalitarianism of mindless, inhuman, animal labor. Look at the denial of the rights, freedoms, dignity, mind, character, disposition and personhood of the human individual and the exaltation of tribal, collective existence which is as savage and cruel as it is unknowing and unenlightened. Look at the rejection of rational human nature and the human essence and the transformation of human beings into bestial cogs in the machinery of an international proletarian revolution and a global socialist superstate. Look at a social, political and moral philosophy which celebrate the mass extermination of talented, successful people as the glorious endpoint, culmination and highest stage of history: "The passing of the former communist dictator of Cambodia, Pol Pot, has been marked by a mixture of relief that he can no longer torment his countrymen by his loathsome presence and anger that he has escaped the bar of justice. As the head of the radical Maoist Khmer Rouge, Pol Pot was the architect of the killing fields, a seemingly incomprehensible genocide where Cambodian cities were systematically depopulated and the entire Cambodian population enslaved on collective farms with a draconian equality imposed on all. Typically, the slightest dissent would be punished by the offender getting clubbed or starved to death, and so many Cambodians were dispatched by such methods (approximately 1.7 million between 1975 and 1979 according to one estimate) that fields filled with corpses became the macabre hallmark of the regime. Mass death is certainly no stranger to communism; even today a terrible famine stalks North Korea to remind us of the lethal nature of Marxism. However, Pol Pot has earned a special place in the history of Marxian Communism as his Khmer Rouge earned the special distinction of being the one communist movement in history to actually attempt the full and consistent implementation of the ideals of Karl Marx. Most Marxists would recoil at the suggestion that Pol Pot is the logical conclusion of their social philosophy, yet any honest assessment of Marx's theory cannot conceal the fact that the radical egalitarianism of the Khmer Rouge is precisely what Marx predicted would be the ultimate culmination of all human history. It must be clearly kept in mind that industrial socialism, as it was known in the former Soviet Union and other mainstream Marxist states, is not the endpoint of Marx's philosophy of history. In his view, the abolition of capitalist production relations is only the first stage of the worldwide proletarian revolution. Marx anticipated that there would be a radical redistribution of wealth and a withering of the global socialist state (the 'crude' stage of communism) followed by a fundamental transformation of human nature as all individual culture, personality, and economic uniqueness disappeared (the 'higher' stage of communism). Marx looked forward to a time when individuals would be freed from an alleged alienation from their own humanity supposedly caused by the division of labor and money based economic transactions. Individuality would be replaced by a new generic species-being personality, a personality that would specialize in nothing and be an expert at everything." (Pol Pot And The Marxist Ideal by Vincent Cook). The world since the dawn of the twentieth century has been haunted by a specter. It is the specter of Marx and his followers, students, votaries and epigones. Look at their world, the world of the past one hundred years, a world in which civilization has been turned upside down and the universe has been morally inverted. Look at the holocaust against the Jews set into motion by Hitler, who learned from his master Marx and invented racial socialism and promoted it in place of Marx's class socialism, and promoted it as a rival, brother system. If Hitler had been a communist and had set into motion the Holocaust as Germany's communist chancellor and fuhrer, there would be no remembrance of the Holocaust today. For Hitler's crime in the eyes of the world was not the persecution of the Jews but the offense he gave to the global cultural establishment, the offense of being a militant opponent of communism, a global establishment which has been communist since the dawn of the twentieth century. Look at the violence and anarchy which have engulfed today's streets and squares in the name of the "woke" values of social justice and tribal politics. Look at the masses clamoring for lockdowns, shutdowns, curfews, masks and social distancing ostensibly to fight a disease pandemic, but look at the masses exempting those who march, demonstrate and congregate by the millions for the cause of social justice from their health rules and regulations. Look at the Capital Hill Autonomous Zone in Seattle, an enclave of murders, assaults, thefts, burglaries, felonies, fear and intimidation patrolled by the thugs of Antifa, who promote class hatred in the name of antifascism, and Black Lives Matter, who promote race hatred in the name of black civil rights, and whom Muhammad Ali Jr has described as "racist, white hating devils". Look at mass protests shouting "Save Our Obamacare" and demanding the continuance of the system of welfare entitlement which robs one man to pay for another man's health care. Look at the politicians and pundits who advocate "reimagining a progressive era as it pertains to capitalism" and advocating the overthrow of liberal democracy in the name of social rights and social equity. Look at the feminist movement which seeks to abolish due process of law protections for men accused of sexual assault and sweep away the presumption of innocence and the right not to be convicted of a crime without independent, corroborating, nonparty evidence. Look at feminist mob justice which grants probative weight to an accusation or series of accusations, rejects the traditional standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, and convicts defendants such as Bill Cosby and Harvey Weinstein whose accusers admitted having business and personal relations with them after the alleged sexual assaults. Look at the condemnation of all forms of speech which offend Marxists or their friends and allies as forms of "hate speech" which must be suppressed. Look at the national campaign to remove statues and monuments, beginning with Confederate statues and progressing through statues of Columbus, Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Grant, Junipero Serra, Civil War veterans, Theodore Roosevelt, and the monuments on Mount Rushmore, as the first step in an agenda to overthrow the Western liberal order and replace it with a communist society. First the symbols of the system are removed, then the system itself is toppled. The statue of Theodore Roosevelt riding on horseback with an American Indian and a black male walking alongside him was removed because it symbolized the liberal march to emancipate mankind from the forces of cultural regression, to free the downtrodden from the jungles of indigenous savagery and from the chains of race slavery. Look at the national outcry against parents who have sought to get their children into top universities by paying bribes to university officials but look at the national support given to race and gender based admissions programs which award preferential treatment to women and nonwhites in the name of diversity, inclusion and affirmative action. Look at the rebranding and reimaging of commercial products, such as Uncle Ben's, Aunt Jemima and Land O'Lakes, on the grounds that idealized pictures of blacks and Indians who are accepted in and by capitalist society present a cultural obstacle to the establishment of a people's socialist republic. Look at America's major corporations denouncing the nation as an antebellum plantation overgrown with "systemic racism" when in point of fact the only discriminatory laws on the books in America are laws which mandate discrimination against whites, males or white males. Look at the jackboots and iron heels of the antidiscrimination police as they outlaw freedom of association, repeal the right to private property, redefine private business establishments as places of public accommodations, and accelerate the nation's dismal march into red totalitarian tyranny, to the cheers and adulation of the majority of voters. A psychopath is a person who is afflicted with a chronic mental disorder who exhibits abnormal, violent behavior. Gleefully advocating the murder of hundred million man class called the bourgeois, an advocate of psychopathic violence under the name of Marx gave rise to a reign of terror in the twenty first century whose smoke and flames have signaled the suicide of the West.

SCHIZOPHRENIC CHRIST

Dr Voltaire, a leading soul doctor from the Age of Enlightenment, has returned in spirit and soul to the present day and commenced a report on the origins of psychosis in the fever swamps of religion. As part of his research, he has visited an art gallery in Paris and beheld the following masterpieces, composed by Michelangelo, Rembrandt, Laurent de la Hyre and Domenico Feti. In picture one, Abraham sees a vision of an angel and refrains from sacrificing his son Isaac. In picture two, Moses has a vision of a burning bush. In picture three, Jesus commands a storm to subside from a ship on the Sea of Galilee. In picture four, Saul has a vision of Jesus while on the road to Damascus. Dr Voltaire has decided to focus his report on one figure alone, on one outstanding figure, on a figure whose thought and doctrines are the preeminent symbols and expressions of the matrix of mental illness in which all Abrahamic religions were conceived, a figure who founded the world's most influential Abrahamic religion. He has entitled his report Schizophrenic Christ and the following are his findings. 1. Jesus had hallucinations, heard voices and saw visions. In Matthew 3:16-17, Jesus' baptism in the Jordan River is described: "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went straightway out of the water. And, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighted upon him. And, lo, a voice from heaven saying, 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.' " In Luke 22:43-44, Jesus saw an angel which "strengthened him." He was in agony and "sweat fell to the ground like great drops of blood." In Matthew 4-11, Jesus saw the Devil and the Devil transported him to "the Holy City and set him on a pinnacle of the temple." In John 12:27-33, Jesus saw his death in Jerusalem and heard a "voice from heaven" which said that his name would achieve eternal glory. Listen to a description of a schizophrenic who seeks to commit suicide by proxy, through the agency of another. Who justifies his suicide as a preparation for his resurrection from the dead and his return to earth in clouds of glory. Who wants to die because he cannot cope with the strictures of reason and reality, which are hard and unyielding toward the misfits and the maladjusted of the world, and who seeks out the Romans to carry out his insane desire for self destruction: "There is a 5%–10% lifetime risk of suicide in persons with schizophrenia. Suicide is defined as a self inflicted death with evidence of an intention to end one's life. The New Testament recounts Jesus' awareness that people intended to kill him and his taking steps to avoid peril until the time at which he permitted his apprehension. In advance, he explained to his followers the necessity of his death as prelude for his return (Matthew 16:21–28; Mark 8:31; John 16:16–28). If this occurred in the manner described, then Jesus appears to have deliberately placed himself in circumstances wherein he anticipated his execution. Although schizophrenia is associated with an increased risk of suicide, this would not be a typical case. The more common mood disorder accompaniments of suicide, such as depression, hopelessness, and social isolation, were not present, but other risk factors, such as age and male gender, were present. Suicide by proxy is described as 'any incident in which a suicidal individual causes his or her death to be carried out by another person.' There is a potential parallel of Jesus' beliefs and behavior leading up to his death to that of one who premeditates a form of suicide by proxy." (The Role of Psychotic Disorders in Religious History Considered by Evan Murray, Miles Cunningham and Bruce Price). 2. Jesus committed acts of violence in the main Jewish temple in Jerusalem. In Matthew 21:12-13, Jesus entered the temple, "overthrew the tables of the money changers" and the "seats of those who sold doves" and threw them outside. In John 2: 14-16, Jesus used a whip to assault and drive out the merchants and money changers from the temple. 3. Jesus cursed a fig tree. In Matthew 21:19, Jesus saw a fig tree and spoke to it: "And when he saw a fig tree in the way, he came upon it, and found nothing on it but leaves, and said unto it, 'Let no fruit grow on you henceforward, forever. And presently the fig tree withered away.'" 4. Jesus claimed the powers of telekinesis. In Matthew 21:21, Jesus says to his friends: "Verily I say unto you, if you have faith not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if you shall say to this mountain, 'Move and fall into the sea, sea, it shall be happen and be done.'" 4. Jesus advocated the general use of force and violence, universal chaos and upheaval, and the total destruction of the family. In Matthew 10:34-35, Jesus states: "Think not that I have come to send peace on earth. I have come not to send peace, but a sword. For I have come to set man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter in law against her mother in law." In Luke 12:49-53, Jesus states: "Do you suppose that I have come to give peace on earth? I tell you, nay; but rather division." In Luke 22: 36, Jesus states: "He who has no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one." In Luke 19:27, Jesus states: "But my enemies, who do not wish that I reign over them, bring them here and slay them before me." In Matthew 36, Jesus states: "And a man's enemies shall be those of his own household." In Luke 14: 26, Jesus states: "If any man comes to me, and hates not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." In Luke 12:52-53, Jesus states: "From henceforth there shall be five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three. The father shall be divided against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; the mother in law against her daughter in law, and the daughter in law against her mother in law." 5. Jesus's contemporaries believed that he was insane. Listen to the description of a person rendered insentient, unconscious, unknowing, bereft of sense and reason, and psychically pulverized in the vortex of fear and horror known as madness: "He was thought to be insane by his own family and neighbors in 'when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, 'He is beside himself'. And the scribes said, 'He is Beelzebub' (Mark 3:21-22--The Greek existemi translated beside himself, actually means insane and witless). The Greek word ho para, translated friends, also means family. On another occasion, the crowd claims 'He is a devil and is mad' (John 10:20). The Greek word mainomai translated mad, also means manic, raving, and insensate." (All The Obscenities In The Bible by Gene Kasmar). 6. Jesus possessed a messiah complex. In Mark 9:9, Jesus states: "Tell no man what they have seen until the Son of man rises from the dead." Listen to the description of a person made raving and delirious in a whirling mass of rank megalomania: "The more trust one puts in the Fourth Gospel's portrait of Jesus the more difficult it is to defend the sanity of Jesus." (The Book Your Church Doesn't Want You To Read by A. J. Mittill). Listen to the description of a person who enthroned his ego in the kingdom of God: "Even the most casual reader of the Fourth Gospel must have the impression that here Jesus's words are exclusively egocentric. The word I occurs six times more often in the Fourth Gospel than in the Gospel of Matthew. The seven I ams of Jesus are found only in the Fourth Gospel. In the Synoptics we see Jesus absorbed in the great cause of the kingdom of God, but in the Fourth Gospel he is engrossed in his own ego." (The Psychic Health of Jesus by Albert Schweitzer). In John 12, Jesus exhibits morbid self infatuation and revels in delusions about his own power and importance: "Whoever believes in me does not believe in me only, but in the one who sent me. The one who looks at me is seeing the one who sent me. I have come into the world as a light, so that no one who believes in me should stay in darkness. I did not speak on my own, but the Father who sent me commanded me to say all that I have spoken. I know that his command leads to eternal life. So whatever I say is just what the Father has told me to say." 7. Jesus advocates self mutilation. In Matthew 19: 12, Jesus states: "Let there be eunuchs who have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He who is able to receive it, let him receive it." In Matthew 5: 29-30, Jesus states: "If your right eye offends you, pluck it out and cast it from you. If your right hands offend you, cut it off and cast it from you." In Matthew 18:8, Jesus states: "Thus if your hand or foot offends you, cut them off and cast them from you. It is better for you to enter into life crippled and maimed rather than with two hands or two feet, to be cast into everlasting fire." In the three year ministry of Jesus, three thousand years of Arabian culture, commencing with the Hebrew patriarch Abraham, reached its culmination in a fearsome and terrifying sandstorm of mental illness. Under the blazing sun of a desolate Jewish wasteland and desert, swirling with the grains of the mass soul, a movement of schizophrenia, schizoaffective disorder, manic depression, delusions of grandeur, auditory-visual hallucinations, paranoia, Geschwind syndrome, temporal lobe epilepsy, religious delusions and hyperreligiosity took shape. Led and inspired by Jesus, it was the first mass movement, mass religion, mass hysteria, mass superstition, mass fear, mass delusion, mass suicide, mass rejection of reason, and mass epidemic of moral and psychological debility in the history of mankind. In the post Enlightenment world which has ruled the past two hundred years, Christianity has been brought back to life by its heirs and successors, by Marx's secular reds and their parties and proletariat, and under the reds its latter day depredations have brought forth the end of civilization. Thus concludes the research report on Christ issued by Dr Voltaire. He has presently closed his book on the final day of the West.

THE MATERIALISTS VERSUS THE IDEALISTS

Professor Common Sense, researching a book on the history of Western philosophy and touring the mental jungles and thickets of the past one thousand years, fell into a frightening dream. In his dream, he was transported into a land of death where he witnessed a titanic battle underway for the soul of man. This was a battle fought between two religious movements, between the proponents of materialism and the proponents of idealism, and he listened in fear and trembling to their opposing views. First he heard from the materialists. They proclaimed that mental states do not exist. They proclaimed that the belief in the existence of mind and consciousness, in the existence of ideas, beliefs, desires, sensations and visual perceptions, is on par with the belief in the existence of phlogiston and the luminiferous ether and the belief in the truth of the geocentric model of the universe, and must be abandoned by science. They proclaimed that thinking and introspection are illusions and that the sole reality in the universe is matter and all actual or possible interactions are purely material interactions. Professor Common Sense listened to a leading theologian of materialism and listened to a theology of reductivism which reduced human beings to the level of subhuman animals and resulted in the deaths of hundreds of millions of people. This theologian named Karl Marx proclaimed that the sole realities are material forces, modes of production, muscular labor and economic classes. That the history of mankind is a history of class struggles. That all labor and value are produced by the class of mindless, subhuman, muscular laborers, called the proletariat, while the class of mental laborers and knowledge workers, called the bourgeois, are exploiters, oppressors and victimizers of the proletariat who steal the fruits of the proletariat's labor. That the culmination of history will see the victory of the proletarian camp over the bourgeois camp, the subjugation and extermination of the bourgeois, the ascendancy of the plebeians, commoners, criminals and members of the lowest dregs, ranks and scum of the earth, and the regimentation and vassalization of mankind by the patricians, knights, guild masters and feudal lords of red totalitarian tyranny: "The history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggles. Freeman and slave, patrician and plebeian, lord and serf, guild master and journeyman, in a word, oppressor and oppressed, stood in constant opposition to one another, carried on an uninterrupted, now hidden, now open fight, a fight that each time ended, either in a revolutionary reconstitution of society at large, or in the common ruin of the contending classes. In the earlier epochs of history, we find almost everywhere a complicated arrangement of society into various orders, a manifold gradation of social rank. In ancient Rome we have patricians, knights, plebeians, slaves; in the Middle Ages, feudal lords, vassals, guild masters, journeymen, apprentices, serfs; in almost all of these classes, again, subordinate gradations. The modern bourgeois society that has sprouted from the ruins of feudal society has not done away with class antagonisms. It has but established new classes, new conditions of oppression, new forms of struggle in place of the old ones. Our epoch, the epoch of the bourgeoisie, possesses, however, this distinct feature: it has simplified class antagonisms. Society as a whole is more and more splitting up into two great hostile camps, into two great classes directly facing each other—Bourgeois and Proletariat." (The Communist Manifesto by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels). Listen to the words of a philosopher of brute animality who invests matter, machines, modes of production and modes of exchange with the magic power to create institutions, states, societies, classes, economies, industries, social structures, and to advance the course of human history: "Modern industry has established the world market. This market has given an immense development to commerce, to navigation, to communication by land. This development has, in its time, reacted on the extension of industry; and in proportion as industry, commerce, navigation, railways extended, in the same proportion the bourgeois developed, increased its capital, and pushed into the background every class handed down from the Middle Ages. We see, therefore, how the modern bourgeois is itself the product of a long course of development, of a series of revolutions in the modes of production and of exchange." (The Communist Manifesto by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels). During his research, Professor Common Sense next heard from the idealists. They proclaimed that material objects are unreal and that what is called reality is indistinguishable from the processes of consciousness, understanding, perception and sensation. They proclaimed that to be is to be perceived and has relation whatever to the world of nature. They proclaimed that the notion of a mind independent, physical reality is a contradiction in terms, because all entities are necessarily and self evidently composed of mind and spirit, and the only possible or conceivable philosophy is one which acknowledges the primacy of consciousness. They proclaimed that what are called physical objects are nothing more than posits and projections of consciousness; they emerged from the womb and matrix of consciousness and their existence proves the mental character of all reality; and they can no more exist independently of consciousness than consciousness itself can exist independently of consciousness. Professor Common Sense listened to a leading theologian of idealism and listened to a theology of inflationism which exalted the powers of consciousness and made them the source of existence of the entire world. This theologian named G. W. F. Hegel proclaimed that the sole path to wisdom and enlightenment is the path of subjective consciousness, self reflection, mental naval gazing, and the recognition that the perceived world of matter is an unreal projection of mind and that the sole substance in the world is spiritual substance. He proclaimed that the hallmark of mental maturity resides in the recognition that all knowledge is subjective knowledge and that objective, physical information does not and cannot exist. He proclaimed that the belief in the existence of physical objects belongs to an early, primitive stage of the intellectual development of mankind and must be superseded by the affirmation that the substance and essence of all existence is mind, that all culture is the culture of mind, that all changes and processes are the changes and processes of mind, and that the universe has a soul and is alive and blazes with the fires of God, the universal, absolute, infinite consciousness: "The particular individual, so far as content is concerned, has also to go through the stages through which the general mind has passed, but as shapes once assumed by mind and now laid aside, as stages of a road which has been worked over and leveled out. Hence it is that, in the case of various kinds of knowledge, we find that what in former days occupied the energies of men of mature mental ability sinks to the level of information, exercises, and even pastimes, for children; and in this educational progress we can see the history of the world's culture delineated in faint outline. This bygone mode of existence has already become an acquired possession of the general mind, which constitutes the substance of the individual, and, by thus appearing externally to him, furnishes his inorganic nature. In this respect, culture or development of mind (Bildung), regarded from the side of the individual, consists in his acquiring what lies at his hand ready for him, in making its inorganic nature organic to himself, and taking possession of it for himself. Looked at, however, from the side of universal mind qua general spiritual substance, culture means nothing else than that this substance gives itself its own self consciousness, brings about its own inherent process and its own reflection into self." (The Phenomenology Of Spirit by G. W. F. Hegel, Preface). Professor Common Sense woke up from his nightmare but saw the nightmare presently unfurled all around him. He saw himself trapped in a land of spiritual death with no hope of escape. He knew the argument against materialism. He knew that materialism is self refuting because it assumes the existence of mind in its claim to being a true belief. He knew that idealism is self refuting in its very claim that idealism exists. For according to the theory, consciousness exists without any physical objects to be conscious of; consciousness exists without existence; and therefore nothing exists, including idealism. He knew that the notion of a consciousness which is conscious of nothing except itself is a contradiction in terms and is the assertion that man perceives nothing when he perceives something and that man is blind when he sees. He knew that the choice between materialism and idealism is the choice between man as a subhuman animal and man as a disembodied ghost and spells the death of man as a rational animal. He knew that the materialists seek to enslave man to a god called society, or to a gender, race or class, while idealists seek to confine man to the psychosis of a purely interior existence, and that both camps have declared holy war against human civilization. He knew the arguments and the consequences but could not convince anybody and he watched and waited as mankind descended into self destruction.

REMOVED, RENAMED, REBRANDED: REVOLUTION

A crescendo is a way for composers to indicate that a musical passage should gradually increase in loudness and intensity. Since the eighteenth century, the instruction for a crescendo has been a long, narrow angle with its apex on the left, which musicians call a hairpin. For the past one hundred years, civilized people throughout the world have read and watched in fear and horror a social, cultural and political crescendo taking place, staged by an ever expanding red majority, and they have seen in the present day, in the present hour, the culmination of this development in a global Marxist based revolution which is sweeping away the forms, symbols, ideals and institutions of nonMarxist states and societies. The aim of this revolution is to take down anything which symbolizes or promotes in any manner whatever opposition to Marxism, including statues of ancient figures and books by ancient authors. Civilized people are listening to the ear splitting explosions of this Marxist revolution happening all around them and are watching and waiting for the day when it will come for them. They have exchanged observations with members of their rapidly diminishing community and have painted a portrait of cultural decline and public madness almost too evil and sinister to be believed. Here are the reports on what they have seen of the mass induced, majority supported suicide of the West. The people of California have voted to hold a referendum on whether to reestablish a system of racial and gender preferences which was banned by a constitutional amendment twenty five years ago. There is a movement to increase representation of black and hispanic students in Ivy League universities by establishing lower admissions requirements for them, while reducing the number of Asian and Jewish students who have higher test scores but are held to be "overrepresented". There is a movement to mandate reparations for slavery and hold every white person in America responsible for the sins committed by white people centuries ago. Statues of Christopher Columbus have been pulled down across America. Columbus was the first European to reach the Americas. In 1492, he set sail from Europe and discovered the New World, landing in the Caribbean. In later voyages, he landed in Central and South America. Columbus' expeditions inaugurated a period of exploration, conquest and colonization for the cause of freedom which lasted for centuries and helped to shape the modern liberal world. The history of Latin America is divided into the preColumbian and Columbian eras, which signify the passage of indigenous peoples from savagery to civilization. In Brussels, the statue of King Leopold II has been taken down. King Leopold was a philanthropist who sought to bring the benefits of Western civilization, including free trade and free commerce, to African natives. Belgium could not afford to establish colonies in Africa, so King Leopold established one himself with his own money. In 1880, he established the Congo Free State and became the proprietor of a land which was given a modern economy based on road building, chopping wood for steamboat boilers, and the production of rubber for the burgeoning global market. In this land, he abolished slavery, the slave raids, whisky traffic and gun traffic, and gave twenty five million Africans a life they had never known before. This was a life of personal freedom, property rights, color blind justice, equal opportunity for all, and free work and free enterprise under the rule of law. A scrupulous defender of human rights, Leopold prohibited all forms of cruelty in his domain: "These horrors must end or I will retire from the Congo. I will not be splattered with blood and mud. It is essential that all abuses cease." The charge that Leopold ordered the mutilation of African workers is revealed as slander by his statement to his officials: "Cut off hands--that's idiotic. I'd cut off all the rest of them, but not hands. That's the one thing I need in the Congo." Listen to the words of Charles Michel who describes Leopold as a planner, prophet, conqueror, colonizer, imperialist and man of courage for the cause of liberal freedom, progress and modern civilization: "King Leopold was a visionary hero. To use the word genocide in relation to the Congo is absolutely unacceptable and inappropriate. Maybe colonization was domineering and acquiring more power, but at a certain moment, it brought civilization." (Ex Commissioner Calls Congo's Colonial Master A 'Visionary Hero' by Leigh Phillips, EU Observer, quoting Michel). In the coastal city of Ostend, a sculpture of Leopold with a Congolese group is inscribed with words of gratitude to Leopold for having dispersed the darkness of Arabian slavery with the light of Western freedom: "The gratitude of the Congolese to Leopold II for having liberated them from slavery under the Arabs" In Bristol, a statue of Edward Colston has been taken down. Colston was one Britain's greatest philanthropists. He endowed schools, almshouses, hospitals and churches in Bristol, in London and throughout the country. His charitable foundations are still in operation today. Colston had no direct involvement in the slave trade and his involvement, effected through the Royal African Company, fades into insignificance when judged against the totality of his achievements: "Edward Colston never, as far as we know, traded in enslaved Africans on his own account. We do not know how much profit he took from the Royal African Company's trade in enslaved Africans--he was paid dividends such as 50 guineas in July 1780, and 160 guineas in November 1685. He sold William, Prince of Orange, some of his RAC shares worth £1,000 in 1689, then bought more for himself. We do not know how much of his fortune was built up from his trade in wine and oil, or from investments or loans, or from money and property inherited from his father. What we do know is that he was an active member of the governing body of the RAC, which traded in enslaved Africans, for 11 years." (Bristol.gov.uk). At Oxford, the university's Oriel College has voted to remove the statue of Cecil Rhodes. Rhodes was a British statesman who advanced the cause of Western liberal imperialism by planting the flag of freedom in Cape Colony, Rhodesia, and in deserts of savagery reaching from the Cape to Cairo. He founded the Rhodes Scholarships which enabled students from around the world to study at Oxford University and learn about the cultivation of spirit and character in the service of freedom, the necessity to outlaw class war and the politics of hatred and envy, and the imperative to promote peace and goodwill among the great liberal powers of the West. Under the pretext of fighting racism, the red masses of the West have accomplished the following acts of removal, renaming, rebranding and rejection. They have removed statues of the signers of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. They have removed statues of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson and James Polk. They have removed statues of Winston Churchill. They have removed the name of Woodrow Wilson from university buildings. They have removed statues of Theodore Roosevelt. They have removed statues of Abraham Lincoln. They have vandalized the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. They have removed statues of Ulysses Grant. They have removed statues of Francis Scott Key. They have removed statues of Junipero Serra. They have removed statues of Emperor Constantine. They have removed statues of Mahatma Ghandi. They have removed works by Plato and Aristotle. They have rebranded Aunt Jemima, Cream Of Wheat, Uncle Ben's and Land O'Lakes. They have taken over the world of social media and censored the pages of Twitter, Reddit and Facebook. They have banned classic Hollywood films. They have abolished free speech on the Internet. They have altered search engines. They have rejected reason, logic and science. They have occupied cities and campuses and spread waves of arson, looting, vandalism and murder. Proclaiming that each and every figure, brand, logo, product and image which is nonMarxist is a symbol of racism and must be expunged, the new majority in control of the West is carrying out its agenda to overthrow the liberal democratic order and establish a totalitarian dictatorship predicated upon class struggle and class revolution. As the community of the civilized exchanges its observations and reports on the revolution sweeping around it, the reds are relentlessly advancing for each and every member. These members are points of infinitesimal light amidst a rising ocean of cultural ignorance and darkness. Zealously protecting public statues and street names in honor of Karl Marx and other communist figures which can be seen throughout Europe and America, the red majority is extinguishing these points of light and the world of the Enlightenment for which they stand.

HEGEL AND THE MEDICINE MAN

Among the savage tribes of Asia and America, the medicine man was a person regarded as having special access to a world of spirits. During a ritual, the medicine man, the shaman, the witch doctor entered a trance state and practiced magic, divination and healing. The medicine man made no distinction between spiritual and physical healing because he viewed matter as an illusion produced by untutored and unenlightened ways of thinking and viewed reality as constituted of pure spirit. In Western culture, under the aegis of Faust, the world view of the medicine man has been installed as the guiding religion and the reality or perceivability of physical objects has been denied by every leading philosopher of the culture, commencing with Descartes. In diametrical opposition to Classical Greco-Roman culture, whose preeminent symbol was Apollo, the West has promoted a philosophy of subjectivism and mentalism and for the past five centuries has taught students and intellectuals the Faustian party line that the ordinary, everyday, common sense world of tables, chairs, sunrises and oceans is not real and is nothing more than an emanation and projection of consciousness. Among the most influential philosophers of mentalism and idealism, who was directly inspired by Kant's apriorist theory of knowledge and rejection of the existence of matter, and developing idealism into new heights of psychosis and shamanism, was G. W. F. Hegel. The premier postKantian philosopher who guided and shaped all subsequent developments, Hegel set forth a program and manifesto for the dissolution of philosophy within the swirling eddies of schizophrenic breakdown and the medicine man's claims to omniscience. He proclaimed that reality is an absolute mind which is nobody's mind in particular. He proclaimed that this mind operates in accordance with a special dialectical logic, a higher form of superlogic and antilogic, which has established that contradictions are the law of reality, that all oppositions are their negations, that all theses are their antitheses, that A is non A, and that a thing can be both black all over and white all over at one and the same time. He proclaimed that man can achieve detailed knowledge of the world without one iota of observation or experience and by simply engaging in a process of mental naval gazing and making deductions from the mystical synthesis of contradictions constantly transpiring inside the absolute mind. He proclaimed that the process of thinking is the absolute idea and is the only subject which really exists and is source of all existence. He proclaimed that only consciousness truly exists and the so-called physical world exists only within the sensations, perceptions, concepts and categories of consciousness. He proclaimed that thought is coextensive with reality and there is no material datum outside of thought or opposed to thought. He proclaimed that the empirical methods of modern science are unnecessary and unreliable and a mere investigation into the nature of thought independently of experience can reveal all there is to know about reality. He proclaimed that reality cannot be discovered by means of sense perception but only by a process of pure thought. He proclaimed that what is immediately known and given, the so-called world of physical objects, is a shadow play which must be penetrated by thought, and what lies behind this illusion is nothing other than a cosmic consciousness. He proclaimed that what is called physical reality is the result of a process of creation and mediation by consciousness and is the culmination and end point of the labors of the absolute idea. He proclaimed that only the work of thought can lead us to the land of reality. He proclaimed that reality resides exclusively within the domain of thought, whatever is mental is essential to the being of things. and is the thing in itself behind the unreal world of physical phenomenon. He proclaimed that natural science is a product of psychological science and has nothing whatever to do with empirical research and investigation. He proclaimed that to assert that the universal absolute mind is not essential to reality is tantamount to the assertion that we cannot know reality and that reality does not exist and is a contradiction in terms. He proclaimed that subjective thoughts are real determinations and disclose the true universal being and essence of all things. He proclaimed that the real is abstract, theoretical, ideational and transcends of the world of physical, concrete particulars. He proclaimed that particular physical objects are never found in experience because they cannot exist and are finite projections of the universal mind. He proclaimed that the world of the finite, the particular and the concrete is an illusion and the essence, quintessence and substance of an object is pure universality, pure notion and pure thought. Listen to Hegel who proclaimed that matter does not exist and spirit alone is real. That the most magnificent monument to human thought, and the supreme mark of modernity and enlightenment is the realization that the sole substance in the world is the conscious subject and its mental system. That matter is a finite illusion and the inner being, essence and existence of all things, that which is self contained, self complete and exists in and for itself, is the spirit. That there is no such thing as physical externality, all existence is interior, mental, spiritual existence, all knowledge is knowledge of spirit and the forms of self consciousness, and to acquire knowledge about the world, all we need to do is make deductions from the acrobatics and gyrations of the absolute idea. That when we perceive so-called physical objects, our consciousness presents these objects to us, and they are nothing more than instances of our own self reflection. That there are no physical contents of reality but only spiritual contents which are produced by the activity of the universal mind. That the supreme mark of wisdom and enlightenment consists in the acknowledgment that reason, logic, science and empirical investigation are illegitimate activities because they assume the existence of physical objects and must be replaced by a process of mystical intuition and blind faith in a new religion. This is a religion which recognizes that there is no materiality, no otherness outside of consciousness, and that reality is self production, self development, self awareness, pure concept, the objectification of mind, and is a kingdom of mental darkness and mental enclosure from which the diamond light of noonday and the sun drenched fields of the everyday world have been banished forever: "That the truth is only realized in the form of system, that substance is essentially subject, is expressed in the idea which represents the Absolute as Spirit--the grandest conception of all, and one which is due to modern times and its religion. Spirit is alone Reality. It is the inner being of the world, that which essentially is, and is per se; it assumes objective, determinate form, and enters into relations with itself--it is externality (otherness), and exists for self; yet, in this determination, and in its otherness, it is still one with itself--it is self-contained and self complete, in itself and for itself at once. This self containedness, however, is first something known by us, it is implicit in its nature; it is spiritual substance. It has to become self contained for itself, on its own account; it must be knowledge of spirit, and must be consciousness of itself as spirit. This means, it must be presented to itself as an object, but at the same time straightway annul and transcend this objective form; it must be its own object in which it finds itself reflected. So far as its spiritual content is produced by its own activity, it is only we [the thinkers] who know spirit to be for itself, to be objective to itself; but in so far as spirit knows itself to be for itself, then this self production, the pure notion, is the sphere and element in which its objectification takes effect, and where it gets its existential form. In this way it is in its existence aware of itself as an object in which its own self is reflected. Mind, which, when thus developed, knows itself to be mind, is science. Science is its realization and the kingdom it sets up for itself in its own native element." (Phenomenology of Spirit by G.W.F. Hegel, Preface). Proclaiming that the only true reality is the absolute mind and that physical existence is nonexistent, Hegel created a philosophical system which was as far removed from human sanity as any system could be. A rabid, virulent student of Faust, Hegel condemned the Greco-Roman philosophy of empiricism as "giving undue importance to the finite". Exalting feeling, intuition, reflection and deduction above scientific observation and experience, Hegel wore the Faustian robes of a mystic, sorcerer, alchemist, astrologer and theosophist. His denial that matter exists and his religion of spirit monism, his projection of reality as a single, infinite, impersonal mental process which, by means of a form a logic which is better and greater than ordinary logic, purports to unite A and non A and to show that a thing can be both something and its negation at one and the same time, inspired a wave of psychosis and violence which mankind had never seen before. Pragmatism, existentialism, collectivism and totalitarianism: the bitter harvest of Hegelian philosophy during the closing hours of the West.

KANT: PHILOSOPHER OF CRIME

At the Stateville Correctional Center in Crest Hill, Illinois in 1988, Richard Speck was interviewed. Speck had been serving twenty two years in jail for the murder of eight student nurses. He was asked how he felt about committing the murders and he replied: "Like I always felt. I had no feeling. If you're asking me if I felt sorry, no." In the auditorium where the interviewed was being screened, many members of the audience walked out aghast, filled with feelings of horror and shock, and for the remainder of their days they sought to determine why so many monsters like Speck were afflicting and blighting society. After extensive research and investigation, they finally discovered the answer and tried to tell the world, but nobody would listen. They surveyed one thousand years of Western culture and beheld a lugubrious pattern of subjectivist philosophy and denial of the existence or perceivability of the external world. They beheld a culture which was permeated with the spirit of subjectivism and was romanticist through and through. They beheld a Germanic culture, a Faustian culture, the first and only one of its kind in the history of mankind, a culture which they saw differed as night differs from day from another culture which had arisen in Europe three thousand years before, the Apollonian culture of the Greeks and Romans, the very paragon of rational intelligence and human sanity. During their investigations into the nature of the Faustian West, they hit upon one figure who could be said to have been the chief philosophic promoter and justifier of the type of evil which Speck so brazenly represented. They understood that the story of his philosophy is the story of philosophy in the West and is the story of subjectivism reaching the endpoint of its development and being granted a license to kill. They told the world about the philosophy of Immanuel Kant and described Kant's spine chilling, imagination defying program and manifesto of mass murder. Here is the story they relayed, a story which fell upon deaf ears when it was released, and a story which has been ignored up to the present day. Kant proclaims that every person is confined to his own perceptions and is condemned to eternal subjectivity and a state of ignorance about the external world. He proclaims that what might exist outside our own ideas we can never hope to know. He proclaims that nothing can be an object of perception except an act of perception itself and nothing can be an object of knowledge except an idea in the mind. He proclaims that the world of nature does not exist; it is a void; and the only things which do exist are the forms and categories of supernatural consciousness and the categorical imperatives of the supernatural will, imperatives which must be obeyed no matter what. He proclaims that the categorical imperative is the unchallengeable voice of conscience; it is the thunder of an internal Sinai and the commandment of an inner god; and we must obey its orders though all manner of evil and injustice be unleashed upon the world. He proclaims that the will is morally absolute and unbound by the strictures of reason, prudence, benevolence and respect for the rights of others. He proclaims that ultimate reality, the thing in itself, is the thing as it is not perceived by man, and is unknowable, because when we perceive so-called physical objects, we perceive nothing at all, and we are blind because we can see. He proclaims that if the will commands an empire of enslavement, or the death of a warrior, or the pistol shots of serial murder, or the rifle volleys of mass slaughter, or the trumpet blasts of universal annihilation, then so be it, these must be brought into being. He proclaims that morality is enacted by the legislation of our feelings and will and is completely independent of common sense or ordinary experience. He proclaims that morality is that which is willed in our hearts and in our private soul and sits upon the almighty throne of decision. He proclaims that the categorical imperative is omnipotent, ruthless, reckless, irresponsible, contemptuous of all consequences, either to oneself or to others, and is a fiery platform for a universe of moral transgressions and for a career of savagery and violence. Listen to a description of a Kantian fiend without a conscience. A rampaging psychopath without a humanitarian impulse in his soul or any concern for wisdom or justice. A ruthless criminal whose only duty is to obey his inner commands, his categorical imperatives, to inflict mass destruction and sacrifice as many people as possible to his whims and caprice. A fanatic who ignores the counsels of experience and common sense, who has no concept of rational self interest or of living as a human being ought to live, and whose sole mission in life is to create as many victims as possible for his relentless, bloodthirsty, categorical will. A heartless persecuter whose course of action cannot be corrected, who cannot be dissuaded from his belief that his will is the arbiter of all morality, who condemns civilized people who protest his depredations as deluded minds, and who has announced himself as the sworn, implacable, unappeasable enemy of all mankind: "The categorical imperative, as Kant personally conceived it, was that of the conscience of the eighteenth century, which had become humanitarian without ceasing to be Christian, the conscience of the Puritans passing into that of Rousseau. But the categorical principle in morals, like the ego in logic, can easily migrate. If today you are right in obeying your private conscience against all considerations of prudence or kindness (though you are prudent and kind by nature, so that this loyalty to a ruthless Duty is a sacrifice for you), tomorrow you may be right in obeying the categorical imperative of your soul in another phase, and to carry out no matter what irresponsible enterprise, though your heart may bleed at the victims you are making. The principle of fanaticism is present in either case; and Kant provides, in his transcendental agnosticism, a means of cutting off all protests from experience or common sense, or a more enlightened self interest. These protests, he thinks, are not only ignoble, but they come from a deluded mind, since the world they regard is a creature of the imagination, whereas the categorical imperative, revealed to the inner man, is a principle prior to all worlds and, therefore, not to be corrected by any suasion which this particular world, now imagined by us, might try to exercise on our free minds." (Egoism In German Philosophy by George Santayana). Listen to a description of a killer without possibility of salvation or redemption of any kind, a wanton destroyer who graduated from the academy of Kant. Who rejected honest work and rational well doing in favor of a career of mass murder. Whose rampages against strangers, perpetrated without guilt, regret or contrition of any kind, and solely in obedience to his feelings and intuitions, filled civilized people with boundless incomprehension and unmitigated terror. Whose slaughter of the innocent, whose expanding lists of victims, and whose endangerment of the security of streets and neighborhoods, were the Kantian crimes of the century which defined the collapse of civilization: "The crime horrified Chicago and the rest of the country because it was so unfathomable—a massacre for no apparent reason by a remorseless stranger against a group of young women he didn't know. And it introduced a term to the American public that has since then become all too familiar: random mass murder. 'It really was the first random mass murder of the 20th century,' William Martin, the assistant Cook County district attorney who prosecuted Speck, told NBC News last week, approaching the 50th anniversary of Speck's 4½-hour rampage on July 13-14, 1966. 'It really was the end of an age of innocence. It changed everything. We all became much more conscious of our security. Eight nurses could be slaughtered in their beds for no reason by a stranger. During his trial, Speck shed no tears for the victims. 'He was totally without contrition, he was totally without remorse,' said Martin, 79, whose 1993 book with Dennis Breo about the massacre, The Crime Of The Century, has been updated and republished to mark the grim anniversary. 'He had no redeeming characteristic whatsoever.'" (How Richard Speck's Rampage 50 Years Ago Changed a Nation by By Corky Siemaszko). Kant's morality of deontology, his morality of duty for duty's sake, his morality of categorical imperatives which have no legitimation in consequences, represents the bankrupt end of all morality and has submerged the world in rivers of blood. His argument from universalizability in support of his morality is the merest shadow boxing. He states that one should never under any circumstances do such things as tell lies or disobey orders given by one's superiors, because if everyone told lies or if everyone disobeyed orders given by their superiors, the institutions of truth telling and the integrity of organizations would be fatally compromised. But common sense does not grant people a license to tell lies or disobey orders given by their superiors. Common sense offers the precept that one should always tell the truth unless one is rationally warranted in not doing so, in order to prevent an evil or injustice from occurring. Common sense offers the precept that one should always obey orders given by one's superiors unless one is rationally warranted in not doing so, in order to prevent an evil or injustice from occurring. Common sense affirms that there are no categorical imperatives in morality, for every command of duty has to be justified in terms of reality and experience, and affirms that there are only hypothetical imperatives, only commands to act for the sake of achieving certain, specified consequences. Proclaiming that morality has nothing whatever to do with the consequences of one's actions and has everything to do with obedience to laws for the sake of obedience, Kant set a Faustian autobahn on fire, abolished all speed limits, and made the world crash into catastrophe.

BATTLE CRY OF FREEDOM: LET US BE DIVISIVE

The time: the year 2100. The scene: the smoldering ruins of Western civilization. The place: the basement of an abandoned house in a city which was once a center of capitalist power. On the floor of the basement lay a speech about freedom which the last holdout against the people's revolution has just picked up. The speech is charred around the edges and the pages have yellowed. It is a relic from the distant past when the defenders of freedom had stood against the mob and sought to thwart the terrifying march of history. The speech was given by one of freedom's leading statesmen who would soon be assassinated along with his movement. This holdout in this basement sat enthralled as he read this speech and was filled with hope against hope that the tide of events could be reversed and the West restored to its former glory. The speech was entitled Battle Cry Of Freedom: Let Us Be Divisive and it ran as follows. We have been accused, when we state the case for the liberal democratic order and when we defend the cause of freedom, of delivering divisive culture war messages. We take this accusation, not as a moral reproach, but as the highest badge of honor and nobility, for there is nothing greater we have to do than to gather freedom fighters around to our cause in sufficient numbers, so that we may disrupt and destroy the fearsome new global consensus that red totalitarian tyranny represents the high water mark of mankind's moral and political progress. If being divisive means to celebrate the legacies of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Teddy Roosevelt, these heroes of the West and the West's shining City On A Hill, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to pay tribute to the founders of constitutional order and the champions of individual rights, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to proclaim that the America which promotes capitalist advancement, and guards individual liberty, and rejects social justice, and extends equal protection and opportunity to all without regard to gender, race or class, is the greatest nation in the history of the world, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to recognize that we are free born agents whose freedoms cannot be taken away by any spurious claims made by a state or a class or a party, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to champion the spirit, wisdom and philosophy of reason which animated the Age of Enlightenment and which protects our freedom from the incursions of red tribalism, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to honor the patriots and Founding Fathers of America who signed the Declaration Of Independence and exalted the primacy of the individual over the force of the collective, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to study the history of freedom, to exalt the heroes of freedom, to esteem the values of freedom, and to resolutely oppose all forms of indoctrination which fill the minds of children with the false idols of social responsibility, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the removal of statues and monuments commemorating the soldiers and statesmen who commanded the capitalist West and led its expansion across the world, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to condemn waves of violent crime which have inundated cities, placed law abiding citizens in a vice grip of fear, and smashed memorials to the victory of European civilization over indigenous savagery, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to fight back against those who seek to cancel the voices of freedom, to drive them from their jobs, to destroy their careers and to demand total submission from them, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to protect the Western capitalist way of life from assault by militant red mobs marching under the swastika banners of identity politics, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the far left peddlers of absolute power for women, nonwhites and the poor, and the disempowerment and disenfranchisement of successful, white males, in the name of diversity, equity and inclusion, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the regime of censorship, cancellation, blacklisting, banishment, persecution and demonetization instituted by the reds against the voices of liberal dissent and capitalist flourishing online and offline, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the dogma of transgenderism, and to affirm that gender is determined by physical reality and is not changeable, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to honor Woodrow Wilson, who led America into World War I, made the world safe for freedom and democracy against the onslaughts of German militarism, and championed a League of Nations as a bulwark of free nations against communist imperialism, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the red control over classrooms, newsrooms, editorial pages, social media pages and corporate boardrooms and to restore liberal, rationalist values to all aspects of society, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose a leftist cultural revolution which seeks to overthrow the civilization, achievements, discoveries and progress set into motion by the American Revolution, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the regime of zero carbon emissions enacted by the environmentalist movement as part of its Project Fear, its doomsday cult and its perfervid hatred of industrial civilization, then let us be decisive. If being divisive means standing up for due process of law and for the right of male defendants in sexual assault cases to have real evidence presented against them before they are convicted of a crime, and the right not to be convicted on the basis of an accusation or a series of accusations, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the leftist view of American history and American society which teaches people to hate capitalism as a system of oppression and exploitation, and to hate the producers of wealth as the people's villains, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the removal of statues commemorating figures who, whatever they did stand for, did not stand for Marxism, figures ranging from George Washington to Thomas Jefferson to Ulysses Grant to Abraham Lincoln to Mahatma Gandhi to Woodrow Wilson to Winston Churchill to Theodore Roosevelt to Frederick Douglas to Christopher Columbus, is divisive, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the rebranding of commercial products, ranging from Aunt Jemima to Uncle Ben's to Cream of Wheat to Land O'Lakes, on the grounds that they are idealized images and stylized symbols of nonMarxist culture, is divisive, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means revering George Washington because he was America's founding general and founding statesman of liberty, because he created a Continental Army and led it onto victory over the British after eight bloody years of battle, presided over the Constitutional Convention, was the first president of the United States, is divisive, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means revering Thomas Jefferson because he was the author of American freedom and American independence, is divisive, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means revering Abraham Lincoln because he led a war to save the union, emancipate the slaves, pass the Thirteenth Amendment which outlawed slavery forever, and consolidate the American system of government of a free citizenry, by a free citizenry and for a free citizenry, is divisive, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means revering Theodore Roosevelt because he projected American power across the world, leading the Rough Riders to defeat the Spanish at San Juan Hill and liberate the Cubans, establishing a global naval fleet to safeguard global freedom, and building the Panama Canal to allow freedom's safe, rapid passage around the world, is divisive, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the politics of social justice because it reifies and deifies society, when in point of fact there is no such entity as society and there only separate, independent, free individuals, is divisive, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the red transformation of justice into a weapon of class vengeance, class repression, class domination and class exclusion, is divisive, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means upholding the right of a free society to safeguard its freedom by securing its borders and keeping out the enemies of freedom who march under the sinister flags of Marxism and Islam, is divisive, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to oppose the trend of moral subjectivism and to affirm that morality is based upon reason, experience, consequences and common sense, is divisive, then let us be divisive. If being divisive means to affirm that people must be judged as individuals and not as members of gender, race, class and sexual orientation groups, is divisive, then let us be divisive. Thus ended the speech delivered decades before in the distant past when freedom was making its last stand. The reader of the speech walked outside of his basement and walked backed into the ugly, frightening reality present all around him. He inhabited a cold, dark, dead world, a world without the light of liberty and without the life of law, a world ruled by the reds. But he was determined to preserve his humanity, as the last man on earth, amidst the permanent desolation of a postcivilization necropolis.

DESCARTES AND THE DSM

The Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders is an authoritative guidebook widely used by psychiatrists throughout the world. It includes sets of diagnostic criteria which enable psychiatrists to determine whether an individual is suffering from a mental disorder. Its major chapters include descriptions of narcissism, schizophrenia and other psychotic ailments. The book was first published in 1952 but had many antecedents, and in a moral, spiritual and philosophical sense, it could be said to have first come off the presses in the seventeenth century with the works of a thinker proclaimed as the "Father of Western philosophy". Virtually unknown in the Classical culture of the Greeks and Romans, whose guiding spirit was Apollo, the god of reason, order and outer, light defined existence, mental illness found a refuge and sanctuary in the Faustian culture of the West and sprang off the pages of the West's first and founding philosopher, the progenitor of all who would succeed him: Rene Descartes. Constructed out of Cartesian words, phrases, paper and ink, a raging monster of mental disintegration came alive five centuries ago and has stalked the West ever since, smashing every symbol of human sanity and rational enlightenment in its path. Listen to its ravings and look at a culture born in a womb of Faustian madness and playing out its madness with increasing loudness and intensity each and every moment of its existence. Listen to the monster of Cartesian philosophy as it breathes the sinister fires of psychosis. This monster proclaims that our senses cannot be trusted to enable us to distinguish between dreams and reality. It proclaims that it is impossible for one ever to be certain whether one is dreaming or in a state of wakefulness. It proclaims that we can only believe and have faith that we are awake and can never know with certainty that we are. It proclaims that our experience may be controlled by an evil, clever, deceitful demon who has created the illusion of a physical world which we think we live in, and in consequence, we have no warrant in trusting even the simplest and most basic of our perceptions. It proclaims that our senses could all be lying to us and we are not able to judge with any objective certainty that the world of nature exists. It proclaims that the existence of the physical world is not something we can know as evident in itself and the only thing we can know as self evident is just the existence of our own consciousness. It proclaims that consciousness is not a consciousness of anything, so that the statement, I think, therefore the physical world exists, is not true, while the statement, I think, therefore I am or therefore consciousness exists, alone is true. It proclaims that the nature of man is not that of a rational animal, since the existence of matter cannot be known with certainty to exist, but is rather that of a pure, self thinking, mental substance which can exist apart from the human body. It proclaims that the objects of man's perception are just his own ideas and are not in any sense physical objects. It proclaims that the sole clear, distinct and certain ideas we have are just the ideas of consciousness, while the ideas of matter are unclear, indistinct and uncertain. Listen to Descartes as he proclaims that the belief in the existence of the external world is subject to legitimate doubt. As he proclaims that our senses inherently deceive us so that we must reject their testimony as false. As he proclaims that the perception of the physical world possesses no greater reality than the belief in an illusion, a hallucination or a dream: "I had long since remarked that it is necessary sometimes to follow opinions known to be uncertain, as if they were not subject to doubt; but, because now I was desirous to devote myself to the search after certain truth, I considered that I must do just the opposite, and reject as absolutely false everything about which I could imagine the least doubt to exist. Thus, because our senses sometimes deceive us I would suppose that nothing is such as they make us to imagine it; and because I was as likely to err as another in reasoning, I rejected as false all the thoughts which I had formerly accepted as demonstrative; and finally, considering that all the thoughts we have when awake can come to us also when we sleep without any of them being true, I resolved to feign that everything which had ever entered into my mind was no more truth than the illusion of my dreams." (Discourse On The Method Of Rightly Conducting One's Reason And Searching For The Truth In The Sciences by Rene Descartes). Listen to Descartes as he proclaims that the first principle of all philosophy, the bedrock truth upon which the house of wisdom has been constructed, is the principle that I think, therefore I am. This is the foundation stone of all philosophic thought because from the existence of thinking and consciousness, nothing else can be deduced, not the existence of a physical world which consciousness would be of or about. The existence of our minds, and absolutely nothing else, is the only clear, distinct and indubitable thing we can know: "But I observed that, while I was thus resolved to feign that everything was false, that it was absolutely that I, who thus thought, must necessarily exist. I observed that this truth—I think, therefore I am—was so firm and so assured that all the most extravagant suppositions of the skeptics were unable to shake it, and I judged that I could unhesitatingly accept it as the first principle of the philosophy I was seeking. I could feign that there was no world, I could not feign that I did not exist; in order to think, it is necessary to exist. And I judged that I might take it as a general rule that the things which we conceive very clearly and very distinctly are all true, and that the only difficulty lies in the way of discerning which those things are that we conceive distinctly." (Discourse On The Method Of Rightly Conducting One's Reason And Searching For The Truth In The Sciences by Rene Descartes). Listen to Descartes as he rejects the reports, the information and the presentations received through the senses. As he proclaims that it is both possible and necessary to doubt the existence of a physical world outside of consciousness. As he proclaims that we can deny that we possess a body but we can never deny that we possess a mind. As he proclaims that the nature of man is that of a supernatural mental entity which can exist independently of the body, and when the body dies, man becomes a pure disembodied ghost. As he seeks to withdraw the mind from the world around it and make it collapse into a dark, silent basement where narcissism, psychosis, schizophrenia, dreams and illusions wind around the floor and dissolve the floor into a bottomless pit: "3. All that I have, up to this moment, accepted as possessed of the highest truth and certainty, I received either from or through the senses. I observed, however, that these sometimes misled us; and it is the part of prudence not to place absolute confidence in that by which we have even once been deceived. 4. But it may be said, perhaps, that, although the senses occasionally mislead us respecting minute objects, and such as are so far removed from us as to be beyond the reach of close observation, there are yet many other of their informations (presentations), of the truth of which it is manifestly impossible to doubt; as for example, that I am in this place, seated by the fire, clothed in a winter dressing gown, that I hold in my hands this piece of paper, with other intimations of the same nature. But how could I deny that I possess these hands and this body, and withal escape being classed with persons in a state of insanity, whose brains are so disordered and clouded by dark bilious vapors as to cause them pertinaciously to assert that they are monarchs when they are in the greatest poverty; or clothed [in gold] and purple when destitute of any covering; or that their head is made of clay, their body of glass, or that they are gourds? I should certainly be not less insane than they, were I to regulate my procedure according to examples so extravagant. 5. Though this be true, I must nevertheless here consider that I am a man, and that, consequently, I am in the habit of sleeping, and representing to myself in dreams those same things, or even sometimes others less probable, which the insane think are presented to them in their waking moments. How often have I dreamed that I was in these familiar circumstances, that I was dressed, and occupied this place by the fire, when I was lying undressed in bed? At the present moment, however, I certainly look upon this paper with eyes wide awake; the head which I now move is not asleep; I extend this hand consciously and with express purpose, and I perceive it; the occurrences in sleep are not so distinct as all this. But I cannot forget that, at other times I have been deceived in sleep by similar illusions; and, attentively considering those cases, I perceive so clearly that there exist no certain marks by which the state of waking can ever be distinguished from sleep, that I feel greatly astonished; and in amazement I almost persuade myself that I am now dreaming." (Meditations on First Philosophy by Rene Descartes). In the middle of the seventeenth century, Descartes was the most famous philosopher in Europe. He had constructed a philosophic house which the Classical philosophers would have found it impossible to inhabit. This was an interior castle in which the mind had retreated from reality and hermetically sealed itself off in banners marked The Prior Certainty Of Consciousness and Consciousness Conscious Of Nothing Beyond Its Own Ideas. Behind these banners, the mind made a journey through the stages of mental illness and ended in schizophrenic breakdown. It burned and pulverized the diamonds of sound, rational, human intelligence and reduced them to black, satanic dust. The spirit of Descartes, guided by the hand of Faust, scattered these ashes down the corridors of time and set the development of philosophy upon its course of doom.

SUPERMAN AT LARGE

On August 25, 1900 at twelve o'clock noon in the German city of Weimar, a man died but was at once reborn. His name was Friedrich Nietzsche and he died just at the dawn of a new century, a century whose attitudes and ethos released his philosophy from the jail cell in which it had languished for decades. When it was set free, it commenced a rampage the likes of which mankind had never witnessed before, and the noonday light which obtained when the philosopher had died, presently descended into dusk and evening, and darkness spread across the face of the world. Hunted with futility by a rapidly diminishing community of civilized people, this monster from the jungles and fever swamps of the Faustian West, from the hothouses of the romanticism which has defined the culture from its very beginning, broadcast its program and manifesto to the cheers and adulation of the masses and intelligentsia. It proclaimed that the good man is one who stampedes over the innocent and savors his superior force. He proclaimed that the good man is one who is cruel, treacherous and deceitful and rejoices in his inhumanity. He proclaimed that the good man is a blond beast who embodies the highest spirit of Germanic warriors and exults in his ability to cause maximum bloodshed and to violently seize the land and property of others. He proclaimed that aggressive war is the highest good; the process of fighting in which innocent people are maimed and killed is the supreme expression of a master personality; and all those who defend the cause of peace, benevolence and the rule of law are effete, bourgeois weaklings who have lost the bloom of life and the flower of energy. It proclaimed that the good man is a relentless, round the clock preacher of violence and an emissary of the Devil who is animated by an unquenchable desire for conquest. It proclaimed that the good man is one whose lodestars are two ideas ever present in his mind, the idea of war and the idea of power, and guided by them, he seeks to rain down destruction upon all mankind. It proclaimed that the good man is a superman who worships superior physical strength and racks up victory upon victory in his war against peace loving neighborhoods and societies. It proclaimed that the good life involves a campaign against liberal intellectuals, an exercise of the will to power, and an exhortation from the pulpit of the Grim Reaper of the virtues of violence and aggression. It proclaimed that the good man is one who has smashed the statues of the saints, spilled blood through the streets, and thrown his arms in weeping affection around the galloping horses of political madness. It proclaimed that the good man is one who commits unspeakable crimes such as waging total war against peaceful nations and slaughtering whole populations and celebrates his criminality as the divine wrath of the Teutonic beast. It proclaimed that the good man is a prophet of blood and iron, a reawakener of bestial values, and a hero in the field of bloody battle who destroys free institutions with the hammer of Thor and greets Satan with the words: Hail Victory! It proclaimed that the good man is one who is dressed in the Germanic war gear of mass murder and coast to coast rapine and has galvanized the youth of the world around the blazing torchlights of race war and the thundering trumpet blasts of national socialism. It proclaimed that the good man is a fervent race theorist, an ardent antiliberal, a people's sociologist of war and revolution, and a radical philosopher of a movement of global destruction. It proclaimed that the good man is an implacable hater of the bourgeois and all that it represents: humanitarian impulses, parliamentary government, the commitment to reason and science, and a social order which protects the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual. It proclaimed that the good society is militant, authoritarian, contemptuous of the Enlightenment notions of natural rights and individual perfection, and is patrolled by earsplitting processions of supermen marching in praise of war and subjugation. It proclaimed that the good man is a perpetual motion machine of intimidation and despoliation, an unrelenting barbarian from the age of the Vikings and the Goths, and an exhibition of unmitigated horror who will keep civilized people in a vice grip of fear until the end of their days. It proclaimed that honest, respectable professions, such as business, banking, law, science and medicine, cause people to lose force, energy and enthusiasm for living and must be repudiated in favor of a career of untrammelled violence, involving killing for thrills and plundering for entertainment. Listen to the words of an insane philosopher who proclaims that the liberal system of letting people alone and respecting their freedom and dignity is oppressive and burdensome to the superman. Who proclaims that the highest type of life is one fueled by revolutionary violence which smashes the presses and stock exchanges of modern civilization. Who proclaims that the highest type of culture is German culture and Prussian culture whose officers, soldiers, statesmen and scholars have the impulses of brute beasts coursing their souls and promote through their words and actions an instinct to wage war, to disrupt peace, to sweep away the counsels of charity and benevolence, and to make as many victims of their depredations as possible across the face of the earth. Who proclaims that the highest type of man is one who has the courage to invade neighborhoods, tear up streets, burn down homes, take over classrooms, occupy cities and terrorize families, without conscience, sympathy or remorse of any kind: "The future of German culture rests with the sons of Prussian officers. Peace and letting other people alone—this is not a policy for which I have any respect whatever. To dominate and help the highest thought to victory—that would be the only thing which would interest me in Germany. The same discipline makes the soldier and the scholar efficient, and looked at more closely, there is no true scholar who does not have the instincts of the true soldiers in his veins. You shall love peace as a means to new wars—and the short peace more than the long one. War and courage have done more things than charity. Not your sympathy but your bravery has hitherto saved the victims." (A Genealogy Of Morals, The Will To Power and Thus Spoke Zarathustra by Friedrich Nietzsche). Listen to the words of a philosopher of power who exalts the spirit of executive autocracy in its campaign to sweep away constitutional government. Who proclaims that the supreme goal and justification of a human life resides in cultivating the virtues of cruelty, brutality and callous indifference to the rights of others. Who proclaims that the wholesale rejection of European freedom and Enlightenment ideals is the only possible path to the moral and political redemption of mankind and must culminate in a program of sabotage, subversion and overthrow of liberal democracy: "Is it not high time, now that the type 'gregarious animal' is developing ever more and more in Europe, to set about rearing, thoroughly artificially, and consciously, an opposite type, and to attempt to establish the latter's virtues? And would not the democratic movement itself find for the first time a sort of goal, salvation, and justification, if someone appeared who availed himself of it—so that at last, beside its new and sublime product, slavery (for this must be the end of Europe and democracy) that higher species of ruling and Caesarist spirits might also be produced, a race of men who would stand upon it, hold to it, and would elevate themselves through it? This new race would climb aloft to new and hitherto impossible things, to a broader vision, and to its task on earth." (The Will To Power by Friedrich Nietzsche). In the backpacks and bullets of soldiers in two world wars, on the desks and lecterns of politicians and professors, and in the arsenals of gender, race and class agitators are the ferocious, fighting, incendiary words of Nietzsche. Proclaiming that reason is stultifying and debilitating and that the ideal man is a superman and a beast of prey who exists beyond good and evil and is moved by his instincts, feelings, blood and will to power, Nietzsche came into his own in the twentieth century. He was released from his nineteenth century confinement and presently roams the earth. His students and votaries include reds of all stripes and varieties who control the cultural and political institutions of the new millennium. Seeking to rise above the restrictions imposed by liberal, rationalist, bourgeois morality, these reds have learned from their master Nietzsche and advocated total rejection of the legacy of the Enlightenment. They call this rejection "postmodernism" but it is in point of fact completely modern. Nietzsche is as modern as the Enlightenment. It is properly a postEnlightenment movement which they champion and with Nietzsche at its helm, it has steered the world into an apocalypse. The Nietzschean monster can never be captured and sent back to jail but will cast a shadow of license, will, war and destruction over the affairs of mankind for all time to come.

EXISTENTIALIST HOODLUMS

Juvenile X is fourteen years old and has just burglarized a store and stolen a gun he found there. He has a fascination with guns. He is an excellent shot with a pistol. After a stint in the army learning marksmanship, he returns home and commences a life of crime. He holds up stores and gasoline stations. He shoots police officers, security guards, grocers and office workers. He makes the national newspapers as a robber and a murderer and becomes the target of a nationwide manhunt. Fleeing into the mountains, he is pursued by police dogs. After a fierce gun battle, he is shot dead by police, and his body rolls into a river. This is a portrait of a hoodlum and it can be found in every police file and in every psychiatric annal of crime in the world. But it is more than this. It is the tragic portrait of an age. It is a portrait of public disorder, social mayhem, cultural decline, and the philosophies which have guided and shaped the West since its inception in the Germanic evening lands of Faust, philosophies which have extolled rank subjectivism and an exaltation of the will. The finishing touches of this portrait have been contributed in the present day by the philosophers of existentialism, and the lines, strokes, colors and shadows they have added have painted, drawn, photographed and engraved a brazen, explicit promotion of violence and destruction which civilized people can scarcely believe or comprehend. But believe it and comprehend it they must because it marks the end of the line of five centuries of Western Faustian subjectivism after which philosophy, finally killed off by the gunshot wounds inflicted by the enemies of reason and common sense, has rolled into the river and died, just as Juvenile X in the portrait above ended his days, after his journey through the rungs of hell. Inspired by the leading philosophers of the West, from Descartes through to Berkeley, Hume, Kant, Hegel and Husserl, the existentialists have set forth a program and manifesto for the commission of crime which has formed the fitting coda and conclusion of a culture which from its earliest days has consciously and explicitly distanced itself from the world view of the Greeks and Romans: the Apollonian world view which extols reason, experience, reality and sanity. The existentialist portrait artists of Western cultural disintegration have proclaimed that what is called reality is a product of the human subject, the acting, feeling, willing, arbitrary, indeterminate human subject. They have proclaimed that the universe is irrational, meaningless, disorderly and absurd. They have proclaimed that reason is soulless, abstract and remote from concrete human experience and must be abandoned. They have proclaimed that the individual provides meaning to his life by his will and feelings and acting in accordance with these, unencumbered by the strictures of reason, alone constitutes an authentic life. They have proclaimed that existence precedes essence and has no essence and is total indetermination. They have proclaimed that the notion that man is a rational animal is a bourgeois Enlightenment fiction designed to shackle human life and action and must be replaced by the definition of man as pure freedom and the will. They have proclaimed that individuals do not discover truth or goodness in reality but bring them into being by an act of consciousness and will and can change them as their needs and interests change. They have proclaimed that man is a subjective thinker whose philosophy, science, religion and artistic endeavors are nothing more than the outpourings and effusions of his passions and will. They have proclaimed that the notions of truth and accuracy have no meaning because what is called reality exists only within the land of the imagination and has no physical actuality whatever. They have proclaimed that individuals are defined only insofar as they act and will and the more ruthless the willing and the more violent the acting, the higher, the more noble, the more exalted and the more authentic the life of the individual. They have proclaimed that the good man lives a life of white hot fever and intensity in which he treats others with a maximum degree of cruelty and savagery, as the maximum expression of his own freedom from rational moral restraints, and then proudly takes full responsibility for and rejoices in all his actions. They have proclaimed that the hallmark of philosophic wisdom and enlightenment consists in the recognition that man exists as an irrational being, encounters himself as an irrational being, surges up like a tidal wave and a volcanic eruption as an irrational being, and is prepared to commit mass murder as an irrational being. They have proclaimed that to be a good person is to be a heartless person, without feeling or consideration for anyone else, and to categorically reject all forms of life shackling, bourgeois humanism. They have proclaimed that the good man is one who recognizes the primacy of feeling over reason, passion over the intellect, emotion over thought, will over logic, action over reflection, becoming over being, and lives, thinks sand plans for the range of the moment. Listen to the words of Martin Heidegger which project existence, not as existent, but as absence, emptiness, zero and nothingness: "Why are there beings at all instead of nothing? That is the question. Presumably it is not arbitrary question, Why are there beings at all instead of nothing?"--this is obviously the first of all questions. Of course it is not the first question in the chronological sense. And yet, we are each touched once, maybe even every now and then, by the concealed power of this question, without properly grasping what is happening to us. In great despair, for example, when all weight tends to dwindle away from things and the sense of things grows dark, the question looms." (Being And Time by Martin Heidegger). Listen to the words of Heidegger which project existence as characterless, indefinable, nonentity, nonbeing, and pure freedom and consciousness: "Being cannot be derived from higher concepts by definition, nor can it be presented through lower ones. But does this imply being no longer offers a problem? Not at all. We can infer only that Being cannot have the character of an entity. Thus we cannot apply to Being the concept of definition as presented in traditional logic, which, within certain limits, provides a justifiable way of characterizing entities." (Being And Time by Martin Heidegger). Listen to the words of Heidegger which proclaim that the the senses are wellsprings of illusion and the perceived world of natural phenomena does not exist. Which proclaim that the notions of rational spirit and rational soul are bourgeois constructs without any relation to reality. Which proclaim that man's physical body has nothing whatever to do with his true existence which is infinite, supernatural freedom, will and consciousness. Which proclaim that the only possible ontology is that of absolute idealism and subjectivity: "Body, soul, and spirit may designate phenomenal domains which can be detached as themes for definite investigations; within certain limits their ontological indefiniteness may not be important. When, however, we come to the question of man's Being, this is not something we can simply compute by adding together those kinds of Being which body, soul, and spirit respectively possess--kinds of being whose nature has not as yet been determined. And even if we should attempt such an ontological procedure, some idea of the Being of the whole must be presupposed. The senses do not enable us to cognize any entity in its Being; they merely serve to announce the ways in which external things within the world are useful or harmful for human creatures encumbered with bodies. They tell us nothing about entities in their Being." (Being And Time by Martin Heidegger). Into a dark river of doom and destruction philosophy has rolled, pushed into it by the prophets of existentialism. As it breaks up and disintegrates in the wild, swirling rapids, it pulls the culture down with it. No field of endeavor has been left unmauled by existentialist turbulence and the norms of civilized behavior have been smashed in the torrent. Easy Rider, One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest, A Clockwork Orange, Badlands, Journey To The End of Night, Albert Camus, Franz Kafka, Rainer Maria Rilke, T. S. Eliot, Herman Hesse, Jack Kerouac, Luigi Pirandello, Nausea, No Exit, Theater Of The Absurd, Samuel Beckett, Waiting For Godot, The Outsider, Eugene Ionesco, Jean Genet, Arthur Adamov, Otto Rank, Ludwig Binswanger and Viktor Frankl. Such is the wreckage of a culture floating down a river rendered unnavigatable and untraversable after five centuries of contempt for empirical science, rational intelligence, and mental balance and sanity. Dangerous, unsound, keyed up, maniacally Faustian and hyperromanticist through and through, existentialism has sent the West down a tempestuous course of self destruction and filled decent, civilized, law abiding people with fear and trembling.

HEADMEN TAKE OVER PHILOSOPHY

Primitive, tribal peoples were ruled by headmen who were said to possess special powers. Various called shamans, witch doctors, spirit seers and dream readers, these headmen were able to gain knowledge of reality and influence the course of events simply by looking into their own minds. Civilized people who have studied the history of Western philosophy have stood aghast at their findings. Exalting common sense philosophy and the empirical methods of science, and marveling at the technological achievements which have proceeded from them, they have observed a five century assault on man's senses and reason which culminated in the twentieth century in the return of ancient Africa and the Americas to the modern world in the guise of analytic philosophy. They have observed the course of a mighty torrential river with rapids and cataracts marked Descartes, Hume, Berkeley, Kant, Hegel and Frege crashing into every field of thought and endeavor over the past one hundred years, submerging scientific empiricism and fundamental sanity beneath a rising tide of linguistic mysticism and mental navel gazing, and bringing back to life the tribal headman, dressed up now as a professor of philosophy. They have read with feelings of shock and dismay and with fear and trembling for the future of the West what these latter day headmen have to say, and have released their findings to concerned citizens throughout the world in the hope they may see and know the monster advancing toward them, the monster rampaging across the arts, sciences, politics and journalism, and be able to protect themselves against it as best they can. Their report is entitled Analytic Philosophy: Climax Of Faustian Insanity and if it had not been amply corroborated and documented, it would scarcely be believed by the dwindling community of mentally sound, stable, balanced, wholesome individuals. Here are the voices of the analytic philosophers described in the report, whose views are as far removed from the world of Classical Greco-Roman philosophy, the world shaped not by Faust but by Apollo, as heaven is removed from hell. The analysts have proclaimed that all philosophical problems are problems in language and can only be solved by an analysis of language. They have proclaimed that philosophy must throw off the superstitions of empiricism that thought is a representation of physical reality, for no such reality can be held to exist, and must effect a turn into pure linguistic analysis and deduction from the contents of consciousness. They have proclaimed that the world of physical bodies is not really real but only apparently real and true existence resides in the forms and categories of language. They have proclaimed that the doctrine of naturalism is a prejudice of the Age of Enlightenment and must be replaced by the recognition made by sophisticated philosophers that the only things which are real are just our own words and propositions. They have proclaimed that philosophy is nothing more than language and cannot be conceived as the study of anything existing outside of language. They have proclaimed that legitimate philosophy is the study of thought independently of reality and is the study of language independently of reality, because there is no meaningful way in which we can talk about such a thing as a physical world. They have proclaimed that philosophy must reject the unwarranted belief in the existence of physical objects, the philosophy of realism and common sense, and adopt the position of Kant and Wittgenstein that the sole objects of knowledge are just the forms and structures of human thought. They have proclaimed that philosophy must abjure all theorizing about the nature of a putative physical world because we cannot speak intelligibly about the relations between language and nonlanguage. They have proclaimed that the belief that language is a medium of knowledge which refers to an extralinguistic realm has no place in sound, proper, reason based philosophical investigations. They have proclaimed that there are no such things as external perspectives on language and there are only internal, subjective perspectives. They have proclaimed that the notion that philosophers can propound theses about the nature of physical reality, theses based upon experience, and then back up these theses by proof and evidence, is rank nonsense and must be immediately expunged from textbooks and courses on philosophy. They have proclaimed that the forms of reality are nothing more than the forms of our language and proceed from the depths of our soul. Listen to the words of Ludwig Wittgenstein which proclaim that there is no relation between a word and its object because the notion of an external, physical object is without sense or meaning. Which proclaim that the notion that language provides a picture or mirror of reality has no rational, philosophic warrant. Which proclaim that words cannot properly be called names because they name nothing real. Which proclaim that the notion that words define objects and tell us about the natures of things is mystical and supernatural and has no role to play in modern scientific philosophy. Which proclaim that there is no point in looking at objects in order to verify the definitions of words because there are no such objects to look at, for our perception of physical objects is purely subjective and structured by the forms of our own language and consciousness. Which proclaim that the acts of naming, defining, pointing to and referring to things in the world are strange, occult acts of the mind which are reminiscent of the practices undertaken during the Dark Ages: "37. What is the relation between name and thing named?—Well, what is it? Look at language game 2 or at another one: there you can see the sort of thing this relation consists in. This relation may also consist, among many other things, in the fact that hearing the name calls before our mind the picture of what is named; and it also consists, among other things, in the name's being written on the thing named or being pronounced when that thing is pointed at. 38. But what, for example, is the word this the name of in language game 8 or the word that in the ostensive definition 'that is called...'?—If you do not want to produce confusion you will do best not to call these words names at all. Yet, strange to say, the word this has been called the only genuine name; so that anything else we call a name was one only in an inexact, approximate sense. This queer conception springs from a tendency to sublime the logic of our language—as one might put it. The proper answer to it is: we call very different things names; the word name is used to characterize many different kinds of use of a word, related to one another in many different ways;—but the kind of use that this has is not among them. It is quite true that, in giving an ostensive definition for instance, we often point to the object named and say the name. And similarly, in giving an ostensive definition for instance, we say the word this while pointing to a thing. And also the word this and a name often occupy the same position in a sentence. But it is precisely characteristic of a name that it is defined by means of the demonstrative expression 'That is N' (or 'That is called N'). But do we also give the definitions: 'That is called this', or 'This is called this? This is connected with the conception of naming as, so to speak, an occult process. Naming appears as a queer connection of a word with an object.—And you really get such a queer connection when the philosopher tries to bring out the relation between name and thing by staring at an object in front of him and repeating a name or even the word this innumerable times. For philosophical problems arise when language goes on holiday. And here we may indeed fancy naming to be some remarkable act of mind, as it were a baptism of an object. And we can also say the word this to the object, as it were address the object as 'this'—a queer use of this word, which doubtless only occurs in doing philosophy." (Philosophical Investigations by Ludwig Wittgenstein). From pools of Faustian blackness gathering in the ancient Germanic soul, there arose a dark river. This was the river of subjectivism and it commenced its insane course one thousand years ago when the West was born. The assertion that consciousness is conscious of nothing but itself is a contradiction in terms and represents the negation of consciousness. Consciousness is primarily conscious of physical reality; man is not blind when he sees but sees what he sees. Yet this subjectivism has been the philosophic leitmotif of the West since its inception and has brought forth a dark flowing river of mental illness. This river has run its course in the present day. The mind has presently ceased operating and has collapsed. Listen to its death rattle. Philosophy is an analysis of propositions and not a study of reality. No factual propositions are true and no true propositions are factual. There are no objective standards of meaning or definition. Words are arbitrary, causeless, meaningless sounds. The so-called physical world is the product of a language game and has no reality. The definitions of words may be either stipulative, or the product of individual decision, or reportive, or the product of collective decision as ascertained by polls, and on no account are they real or referential. Ultimate reality consists of words which can mean anything people want them to mean. Thus concludes the book Analytic Philosophy: Climax Of Faustian Insanity. It has been laid at the grave of Western civilization.

THE MARXIST FINAL FRONTIER

Skin cancer is one of the most common forms of cancer and is caused by excessive exposure to radiation from the sun. For the past one hundred years, the West has been exposed to the radiations of red ideologies and has been stricken by a moral cancer which has proved impossible contain or eradicate and has presently brought down the culture. Driven by the demons of envy, jealousy, victimhood, frustration, shiftlessness and indolence, the masses turned their backs on a free society at the dawn on the twentieth century, they turned their backs on the life of human liberty, human production, human purpose and human achievement, as the masses have always done throughout history, and embraced ideologies which promised the leveling down of the producers and achievers within a swampland of equality, solidarity, service and sacrifice. The twentieth century marked the descent of the masses through the rungs of socialism, below which there was no further place to descend in human degradation and human immolation, and this socialist evil has in the present day assumed control over every aspect of life and society and composed the final, fiery chapter of the West. The symptoms of the socialist malignancy of the masses lie all around us and form a blinding light of moral and political war from which civilized people have run for their lives. Sweeping across the world and slaughtering hearts and minds in every town, city, state and region, the red cancer on the West has galvanized the masses with its program and manifesto and brought forth a rampage which has crushed all forms of human flourishing and human dignity. This is a program and manifesto originating from the universe of Marxism and it blazes white hot with the flames of race and gender politics, both fronts for Marxism, both covers and representations of a movement which during the Cold War was controlled by the Soviets, and both dedicated to the destruction of the liberal, capitalist democratic order. No longer members of an international movement and conspiracy controlled by Moscow, the gender, race and class crusaders on behalf of Marxism have continued the Soviets' quest, relentlessly pursued by the latter for seven decades after the Russian Revolution, and have set forth their aims and plans for a new Bolshevization of the planet. Achieved without the aid and support of a Soviet empire now fallen, their resounding successes have been made possible simply by the disturbed psychology of the masses themselves, a disturbance diagnosed two thousand years ago by ancient Greek philosophers, and the masses have shown that they can accomplish the destruction of civilization all by themselves, without help from their former Soviet friends and allies, and can drive the voices of reason, liberty, virtue and good government to the point of absolute extinction. The masses have proclaimed that liberal capitalism is systemically racist and must be replaced by a people's black communist dictatorship. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose workforce is dominated by women and nonwhites and white males have been reduced to the level of subalterns, clerks and cleaning staff taking orders from blacks, hispanics, Asians and Native Americans. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has mandated race and gender quotas for all employers and has brazenly violated the civil rights of white males. They have proclaimed that in all hiring and promotion decisions, race and gender are of paramount importance and a progressive workforce is one whose ranks reflect the racial, ethnic and gender composition of society. They have proclaimed that a progressive employer is one which actively and affirmatively discriminates against candidates because they are the wrong race and gender and has excluded white males from the application process. They have proclaimed that a progressive management is one which has abandoned the liberal, bourgeois system of meritocracy and reward on the basis of excellence and adopted a regime of preferential treatment on the basis of race, gender and political persuasion and will only hire job applicants who are women, nonwhite and Marxist. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is an egalitarian, collectivist society which is in revolt against individual talent, individual merit, individual ability and individual rights. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has defunded and shut down all schools which fail to admit black and latino students simply because they are black and latino, whether or not they happen to be academically qualified. They have proclaimed that in any choice between equally qualified whites and nonwhites and between equally qualified men and women for a job, a promotion, an academic placement or a political office, the selection should be for the woman or the nonwhite because women and nonwhites form a new master class and a new Aryan nation which has the right to rule the world. They have proclaimed that meritocracy is a system of white, male privilege and must be smashed by a campaign of massive resistance launched by women and nonwhites. Look at the religion of the reds and see how it promotes race and gender politics as a cover for Marxist revolution. See how it has declared war against capitalism in the name of tribalism, identity politics and opposition to white supremacy. See how it condemns the capitalist system as a tool of oppression and exploitation and vilifies the liberal doctrines of human rights as racist propaganda. See how it has built a mighty, towering church of Satan, one whose hymns, liturgies, shrines, saints, murals and stained glass windows promote hatred in place of benevolence, woke values in place of liberty, agitation in place of argumentation, activism in place of reasoned reform, and blind fanaticism in place of empiricism and common sense. See how it has placed journalists, professors, lawyers and statesmen in the service defending and carrying out its program of communist subversion, communist chaos, communist revolution, communist militarization and communist destruction. See how it has unleashed winged specters from the depths of hell, ideological fiends crowned with halos of darkness, and remorseless psychopaths ready to crucify the innocent and has set them upon the noblest culture which has ever existed on the face of the earth, the liberal, European order of individual rational flourishing, with the command that this order must be brought down, and brought down immediately, and brought down by any means necessary: "These days, the current belief of Wokeness—the zealous thinking animating many of the protesters and statue destroyers—seems a lot like a new religion. That is, Wokeness has its own version of sacred words, shrines, and saints; for instance, at the funeral of George Floyd, the deceased was depicted as an angel, complete with wings and halo, and murals of him in a saintly or heavenly pose have sprung up all around the world. Yet these appearances notwithstanding, most Wokesters say that they reject Christianity. In fact, one of the Woken, Shaun King, a journalist-activist currently employed at Harvard Law School—when he isn't raising money for his many causes—tweeted recently, 'I think the statues of the white European they claim is Jesus should also come down. They are a form of white supremacy.' Lest King be misunderstood, he added, 'All murals and stained glass windows of white Jesus, and his European mother, and their white friends should also come down. They are a gross form [of] white supremacy. Created as tools of oppression. Racist propaganda. They should all come down.' " (Welcome To Year One—All Prior History Is Canceled by Virgil). During the Cold War, a communist front was defined as a political organization under the control of the communist party and the Soviet Union. The Marxist organizations active today, such as Black Lives Matter and Antifa, would have been communist fronts during the Cold War. Statues and street names in honor of Karl Marx abound throughout the West, from London to Berlin to Chemnitz. Statues of Lenin are present in New York City, Seattle, Connecticut, Berlin, Potsdam, Finland, Denmark, Netherlands, Norway, France, Italy and Greece. In the present revolution sweeping across the world, statues, street signs and building names honoring figures ranging from Columbus to Washington to Jefferson to Lincoln to Davis to Grant to Roosevelt to Gandhi to Churchill to Leopold to Wilson have been removed. The statues and street signs in honor of Marx have been left untouched. The statues and names removed were those of nonMarxists; their crime was residing outside the communist pantheon of saints and heroes. In the revolution sweeping across the world, products have been rebranded and Aunt Jemima, Uncle Ben's, Cream of Wheat and Land O'Lakes have disappeared in their usual form. The Washington Redskin's name and logo have been retired. The crimes of these brands, names and logos were that they were noncommunist and symbolized, in one form or another, modern, Western capitalist culture. In the German federal elections held in March 1933, 40 million Germans turned out to vote and 21 million of them gave their support to the two parties of the totalitarian left: the neoMarxist party of race hatred, the national socialists, and the original Marxist party of class hatred, the communists. The accession to power of the national socialists was the first time a major Western nation had voted in free and fair elections, by peaceful, democratic means, to abolish its freedom. The cancer spreading across the world today is Germany 1933 redivivus. It is a popular mass movement. Removing, rebranding, renaming, expunging, censoring, canceling and enforcing totalitarian lockstep and regimentation, the red masses in control of the West today have closed the story of civilization.

THE RAWLSIAN SWAMP

The time is 1790. The place is France, a nation blazing with red revolutionary fervor and fanaticism. In a speech delivered before the National Assembly entitled On The Organization Of The National Guard, Maximilien Robespierre, leader of the Jacobins and initiator of the Reign of Terror, proclaimed that all soldiers must wear uniforms engraved with the motto, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity, and that the nation's flag must as well be inscribed with this motto. Equality and Fraternity: these words soon leaped out of France's uniforms and flags, took on a fearsome and terrifying life of their own, exploded down the corridors of history, lit up the skies of Marxist campaigning and agitation, loaded the rifles of the Red Army, and defined the form which mass politics would assume in the twentieth century when majorities throughout the world definitively and conclusively rejected the world of liberty and embraced the cause of socialism, statism and red totalitarian tyranny. These words, equality and fraternity, incendiary sounds designed to cause fires in the cities of achievement and production and to stir up conflict between the producers and achievers and the riff raff who sought to dispossess and expropriate them, fashioned an academic quill by which they could be written down and defended in a scholarly treatise, placed this quill into the hands of one John Rawls, and made him the most influential political philosopher of the past one hundred years, the most famous, the most illustrious and the most prestigious expositor of the masses' chosen system of equal distribution of wealth, the system of egalitarianism. Shot out of the cannons of modern red revolutions commencing with the French Revolution is a program and manifesto of mass leveling composed by distinguished Harvard philosopher John Rawls. The professor's latter day version of Robespierre's philosophy of terror has proclaimed that a just society is one which enforces a duty incumbent upon every individual to share his wealth with those who are worst off. It has proclaimed that a just society is one which enforces a duty incumbent upon every individual to raise the material standards of those who are incompetent and provide for their medical care. It has proclaimed that a just society is one in which nobody is rewarded for his merit or achievement or for actualizing by dint of his work, effort and initiative his natural capacities. It has proclaimed that those who are talented have not earned anything because potential talents and abilities magically and mystically actualize themselves without the agency of the subject. It has proclaimed that those who are favored by nature do not deserve to keep their wealth because they have done nothing and fortune, circumstances and society have done everything. It has proclaimed that the producers in society have not in fact produced anything and have an obligation to support the class of parasites. It has proclaimed that the fact that some people were born with higher intellectual capacities than others and proceed to actualize their higher capacities possesses no meaning or significance whatever in a just society, which recognizes that all people are absolutely equal and all achievements are absolutely unearned. It has proclaimed that human potentials are self developing and self actualizing and those who are intelligent, dynamic, ambitious, innovative and creative did not build their own businesses or make their own way and do not deserve to reap the rewards of their own talents and abilities. It has proclaimed that a just society is one which grants to the incompetent, the inept, the unskilled and the unqualified the right to the limitless enjoyment of things which they have never produced. It has proclaimed that successful people are merely the winners of a natural lottery and do not deserve their success and must be enslaved and expropriated for the benefit of all. It has proclaimed that those who are naturally more intelligent than others must be made to atone for their sins by renouncing and giving away all their wealth. It has proclaimed that a just society is one in which human beings are treated as a collective resource and are put to work to advance the common good. It has proclaimed that nobody deserves to have his greater natural capacities and therefore the wealth which proceeds from them must be taken away. It has proclaimed that a just society is one which has established a state of equality, sameness, undifferentiation, identity, uniformity and universal sacrifice. It has proclaimed that the fact that some people are born with superior talents and abilities is an injustice which must be corrected by preventing these people from enjoying the fruits of their labor. It has proclaimed that the system of universal enslavement, sacrifice and equal distribution of goods, services, benefits and advantages, the system in which justice, merit, worth and desert have been sacrificed upon the altar of social equity and social responsibility, is the most reasonable, rational, dispassionate and strategically defensible choice of a social system for individuals to make. It has proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has sacrificed the rights of the individual to the interests of the majority and promotes the greatest happiness of the lowest, basest, most contemptible and least deserving members of society. It has proclaimed that the world of separateness and multiplicity is an illusion; all individuals are in substance and reality one and same individual; and in consequence, the only just social system is one which enforces the enslavement and sacrifice of all to all. Listen to the Rawlsian philosophy of the moral swamps as it declares war on individual rights and liberties in the name of helping the least advantaged and the most despicable members of society. As it opens up the positions, offices and centers of power to the scum and refuse of the earth in the name of fairness and equity. As it drags the voices of freedom out onto the streets, the voices in defense of freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of conscience, freedom from arbitrary arrest and seizure, freedom from cruel and unusual punishment, freedom to own property, and freedom to vote and hold public office, and marches them off to a slaughterhouse marked Justice As Social Fairness. As it seeks to effect a redistribution of the world's wealth in order to satisfy the basic needs of the most unworthy classes of society and guarantee a social minimum to the specimens of depravity who grow and reproduce in the waste matter conduits of cultural degeneration. As it swings open the gates of civilization to a raging monster, a creature on a relentless crusade of cruelty and injustice, a satanic beast run amok who restricts rights, regulates distribution, breathes the scorching heat of market socialism upon liberal democratic institutions, and stalks the earth for victims with its forearms and cavernous jaw dripping with the violence of the people's one party state, the people's Soviet state, and the people's red totalitarian tyranny: "Rawls explained his theory (which he called 'justice as fairness') by contrasting it with utilitarianism (the view that society should secure 'the greatest good for the greatest number of people'). Utilitarianism, he reasoned, is insufficient for a theory of rights and an account of the public good. Under utilitarianism, the greater good can always be invoked to supersede fundamental rights and liberties, and maximizing average utility said nothing about what is owed to the least advantaged, who may end up worse even if utility rises in the aggregate. These concerns motivated the two principles of Rawls's theory of justice: 1) Each person is to have an equal right to the most extensive total system of equal basic liberties compatible with a similar system of liberty for all. 2) Social and economic inequalities are to be arranged so that they are both (a) to the greatest benefit of the least advantaged and (b) attached to positions and offices open to all under conditions of fair equality of opportunity. The basic liberties protected by the first principle included the right to vote and hold public office; freedom of speech, assembly, and conscience; protection from arbitrary arrest and seizure; and 'the right to hold (personal) property.' The second regulated distribution once these rights were guaranteed, and since no citizen can be said to benefit from an arrangement that leaves their basic needs unsatisfied, many argue that it implies a guaranteed social minimum. Because Rawls wanted to guide rather than settle contentious debates, his theory left the door open for socialism. He speculated that a kind of market socialism with liberal-democratic institutions could realize 'justice as fairness' (unlike, he said, a single party, Soviet style system)." (John Rawls, Socialist? By Ed Quish). The tricolor flag of Liberty, Fraternity and Equality was worn by the soldiers of the French Revolution, painted on the house fronts of Paris, emblazoned on the walls of the Paris Commune, and held aloft by every leader of the reds who galvanized the hordes to kill and destroy, from Marx to Lenin to Trotsky to Stalin to Mao to Pol Pot. It adorned the office of Harvard Professor John Rawls who wrote a scholarly book formally and systematically defending it. In his book, Rawls fabricates every possible pseudoargument in defense of the system of universal enslavement and equalitarian looting. He states that such a system is the system of choice for all those who are reasonable, rational, responsible, prudent, judicious, disinterested, unbiased, neutral, guided by the precepts of strategic intelligence, masters of mathematical game theory, adherents of the maximin principle, and skilled at running the most ingenious thought experiments. Proclaiming the primacy of socialism over liberty, equality over merit, welfare over justice, and mob government over the rights of man, Rawls composed the closing arguments, papers, books and lectures in the reds' two century war to wipe out the liberal order.

POSTMODERN: POSTENLIGHTENMENT

In 1755, an earthquake struck Lisbon and destroyed the city and adjoining areas. Known as the Great Lisbon Earthquake, it had a magnitude of 8.4 on the Moment Magnitude Scale, it killed 30,000 people in Lisbon alone, and was one of the deadliest earthquakes in history. Civilized people saw in this event a fearsome and terrifying symbol of the intellectual developments taking place all around them, for they saw their own age about to quake and explode, and they knew that its days were numbered. They saw the shape of things to come and in fifty short years, their fears and forebodings were corroborated and the Age of Enlightenment, the Age of Reason, the age in which they had flourished as a community devoted to the pursuit of truth and knowledge and to the maintenance of mental health and well being, would be swept away by the surging, onrushing tides of romanticism. The proponents of the new romanticism often referred to their movement as postmodern, meaning by this term that it was opposed to the values and ideals of the Enlightenment, and they proclaimed that it was a postEnlightenment movement of human emancipation. The term postmodern was soon abandoned because it was understood that romanticism was just as modern as the Enlightenment and that the essential characteristic of modernity was nothing more than the rejection of Christianity. The term postmodern came back into currency in the middle of the twentieth century as the battle cry for an intensifying and accelerating assault against reason, and a movement of violent, brazen primitives began marching under its flag and holding homes, schools, offices and neighborhoods in the grip of fear. The following are the signposts of the age which descended upon the West in the nineteenth century and dominates the present day. The rejection of the belief that there is a world of physical objects which exists independently of consciousness and is perceived by consciousness. The rejection of the belief that truth exists independently of consciousness and can be discovered by means of empirical reasoning. The rejection of the belief that things are as they are and that to be is to be something. The rejection of the belief that the self is stable, coherent, and independent of culture, society or the will. The rejection that reason and science provide an accurate, objective, reliable foundation of human knowledge. The belief that reason and science are myths and ideologies created by man as vehicles for his will to power, such as the class will to power, championed by Marx, and the superman's will to power, championed by Nietzsche. The rejection of the belief that reason transcends existential, historical, cultural, racial, national, gender and class contexts and reveals universal, objective truth. The belief in cultural relativism that reason is a Western bourgeois ideology which possesses no greater validity than faith, feeling, instinct, intuition or other socially sanctioned means of knowing. The rejection of the statement: "We hold these truths to be self evident: that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness". The belief that individuals possess no intrinsic, absolute, inalienable rights. The belief that the liberal democratic order is an instrument of oppression of nonWestern cultures and is a behemoth trampling over the rights of women, nonwhites and the poor. The belief that there are no eternal truths, no universal human experience, no universal human essence, no universal human rights, and no universal human progress and enlightenment. The rejection of the belief that language is a reflection of reality and that words are signifiers which signify things or properties in the world. The belief that language is fluid, arbitrary, nonreferential, and rooted in relations of power and domination. The belief that words have no fixed meanings and things have no fixed essences. The belief that gender is changeable and not rooted in biological reality and is culturally constructed, ideologically constructed or changeable by medical intervention. Look at the world of the postmodernist and see the dark, churning currents of psychosis, the raging waters of an unsound mind which commenced their journey six centuries ago on the pages of Descartes. Look at an Enlightenment thinker named Descartes who planted the seeds of destruction of his own age by proclaiming that man can perceive nothing beyond the world of own ideas and can be certain about nothing beyond the existence of his own consciousness and laid the basis for the postEnlightenment era which has lasted up to the present day. Look at an insane philosopher of pure consciousness who sought to nullify all forms of empiricism, to discredit all claims to have knowledge about reality, and to fill people's minds with skepticism and doubt concerning the possibility of directly knowing anything outside themselves. Rejecting the precepts of sound mental health which informed the philosophies of Plato, Aristotle and the Apollonian noonday world of Classical culture, Descartes was the father of postEnlightenment philosophy. Denying that our perceptions are the perceptions of material objects, and targeting for total destruction man's ability to think in a normal, rational manner, Descartes ushered in the next five centuries of the decline and fall of the West: "In his Meditations, Descartes gives birth to modern philosophy by asking what he can know with certainty. In doing so, he reordered the questions that the outstanding philosophers that preceded him had asked. Plato, Aristotle, Augustine, Thomas Aquinas, and others of the philosophical tradition asked first, 'What is real?' then 'How do I know reality?' and finally, 'How can I be certain of what I know?' By asking 'What is real?' before asking 'How do I know reality?' one suggests that there may be a reality about which we can have beliefs, opinions and knowledge, but about which we may be, at least in part, ignorant. By asking 'How do I know reality?' before 'How can I be certain of what I know?' one suggests that we can know things even if we are not absolutely certain of them. Ordering the questions in that manner permits us to suppose that there is a knowable though not fully understood reality that we can discuss even without the benefit of certainty. But Descartes put the third question first and considered it identical to the second. Although he thought that he had answered both sufficiently, later philosophers, especially empiricists, thought that he had failed. But, if the questions are ordered as Descartes ordered them, the failure to attain certainty, and thus the failure to answer the first of his questions, nullifies all claims to knowledge. In turn, the inability to assert knowledge claims precludes discussion of the once primary but now tertiary issue of what constitutes the real. Descartes' quest for certainty has thus given us a fixation with doubt and skepticism. It is in this important sense that I consider Rorty modern rather than postmodern and a Cartesian rather than an antiCartesian. He is led to his so-called postmodernism by adopting the context of Descartes, the father of modern philosophy. David Hall, among others appears to agree with the characterization of Rorty as modern rather than postmodern, citing Rorty's own more recent attempts to distinguish himself from the postmodern movement, though perhaps for reasons different from mine." (Richard Rorty And The Postmodern Rejection of Absolute Truth by Dean Geuras). When postmodernists condemn modernism for its alleged adherence to the principles of reason, empiricism and objective reality, they pay it a compliment it does not deserve. For in the six centuries of modernism in the West, only the one hundred and fifty years known as the Age of Enlightenment, which commenced in the mid seventeenth century, saw adherence to these principles. Postmodernism is not postmodern but is postEnlightenment. Postmodern philosophy is postEnlightenment philosophy and commenced when the Cartesians active during the Enlightenment were finally allowed to destroy their own age. When postmodern architects condemn modern architecture for its alleged rationalism, they likewise pay it a compliment it does not deserve. For postmodern architecture is not a rejection of the alleged rationalism of modern architecture but is a continuation of the irrationality of modern architecture. Modern architecture, in true Western Faustian fashion, is an architecture of pure space, an architecture which denies the existence of mass and weight as it rejects the first principle undergirding all true architecture: that buildings be usable, comfortable and functional. So-called postmodern architecture is a continuation of the volumetric, antiphysical, antifunctional architecture of modernism, the only difference being that the nonusable, uncomfortable, nonfunctional spaces created by modernism are divided up in a random, nonlinear manner rather than in an orderly, linear manner. The difference between a modern building and a postmodern building is the difference between the Seagram's Building in New York, designed by Mies van der Rohe, with its single, soaring linear space, and the Cabinet of Dr Caligari, with its twisting, slanting, curving, nonlinear spaces. The postmodernists offer no condemnation of modern art or modern literature because their exaltation of formalism, disorder, nonrepresentation, and streams of consciousness are completely congruent with the postmodern universe. Rejecting the values cherished by the Greeks and Romans, the values created by the light defined world of Apollo, the postmodernists have championed the dark, indeterminate, Faustian world of the postEnlightenment and have brought the Faustian West to its tragic conclusion in the destruction of rational man.

MODERN MATHEMATICS: THE ART OF MADNESS

One evening at the start of the twentieth century, a prominent professor of mathematics in Norway named Herr Munch was walking down a city street. Suddenly he saw the sky turn blood red. He saw jets of fire leap out of a nearby river. He placed his hands on his face and began to scream. He heard a scream pass through all of nature. He was taken to an insane asylum where in a room with padding on the walls he commenced a diary describing his universe of delirium and delusions, a maelstrom which projected the fearsome and terrifying state of his beloved profession. On the pages of this diary was a history of the past and a history of the future. It was a history of five centuries of subjectivist development in the field of mathematics, leading up to a history of the developments which would soon take place in books, articles and lectures delivered throughout the world, but which had already taken place in his mind, in his thoughts, in his imagination, in his dreams, in his fancies and in his perceptions, as he lay stricken and dying in high voltage currents of psychosis. The diary made for gripping reading and the doctors who first turned its pages could scarcely believe what they read, but knew in their hearts that it was all true, and had to read on to find out the ending. What follows is the diary of the feverish outpourings of a twentieth century mathematician as he reports on the feverish reality of modern mathematics and watches it descend into its doom. Given a mighty hammer by our master Faust, we Western mathematicians have smashed the false idols of the world ruled by Apollo and recorded in the treatises of Apollo's favorite philosopher, Aristotle. We reject the Classical view that mathematics is an empirical science which studies the physical world. We reject the Classical view that numbers number physical magnitudes and geometry describes physical shapes. We reject the Classical view that nonphysical numbers such as zero and negative numbers are numbers in a metaphorical sense only and are not real, actual numbers and that nonEuclidean geometries only describe two dimensional surfaces and have no relation to the three dimensional world of sense perception. We reject the Classical view that there are only three physical dimensions and no fourth nonEuclidean dimension into which three dimensional bodies could curve. We believe that mathematics can be grasped apriori and analytically by means of pure intuition. We believe that mathematics consists in the manipulation of sequences of empty symbols in accordance with arbitrary manipulation rules. We believe that the fact that mathematics can be applied to reality furnishes no proof whatever that it refers to reality or is objectively true. We believe that mathematics is not about physical numbers, physical sets or physical shapes, and is not about anything at all, but is a body of syntactic forms without meaning or possibility of objective interpretation of any kind. We believe that mathematical expressions refer to symbols and not numbers and that the symbols symbolize nothing. We believe that mathematics is a game whose signs are empty, whose definitions are arbitrary, whose content is contentless, and whose rules of combination are pure conventions. We believe that mathematics is a system of arbitrary axioms together with the theorems derived from them. We believe that complete mathematical systems are those which contain contradictions and that if a mathematical system did not contain contradictions, it would be an incomplete subsystem. We believe that there are as many mathematical systems as there are sets of arbitrary axioms, no one of which may be studied as more true or more meaningful or more applicable to reality than any others. Listen to the words of a philosopher of modern mathematics as he proclaims that mathematics is purely invented and consists in arbitrary structures. As he proclaims that the rules of mathematics were devised out of whole cloth by human beings and theories of numbers or sets are on par with chess or golf. As he proclaims that the world of nature is chaotic, contingent, indeterminate and ruled by pure chance and the rules of mathematics are certain only by virtue of the fact that we ourselves created them: "This historical view of fallibilism also partly answers the challenge that John Barrow issues to inventionism. He asks if mathematics is invented how can it account for the amazing utility and effectiveness of pure mathematics as the language of science? But if mathematics is seen as invented in response to external forces and problems, as well as to internal ones, its utility is to be expected. Since mathematics studies pure structures at ever increasing levels of abstraction, but which originate in practical problems, it is not surprising that its concepts help to organize our understanding of the world and the patterns within it. The controversy between those who think mathematics is discovered and those who think it is invented may run and run, like many perennial problems of philosophy. Controversies such as those between idealists and realists, and between dogmatists and skeptics, have already lasted more than two and a half thousand years. I do not expect to be able to convert those committed to the discovery view of mathematics to the inventionist view. However what I have shown is that a better case can be put for mathematics being invented than our critics sometimes allow. Just as realists often caricature the relativist views of social constructivists in science, so too the strengths of the fallibilist views are not given enough credit. For although fallibilists believe that mathematics has a contingent, fallible and historically shifting character, they also argue that mathematical knowledge is to a large extent necessary, stable and autonomous. Once humans have invented something by laying down the rules for its existence, like chess, the theory of numbers, or the Mandelbrot set, the implications and patterns that emerge from the underlying constellation of rules may continue to surprise us. But this does not change the fact that we invented the game in the first place. It just shows what a rich invention it was. As the great eighteenth century philosopher Giambattista Vico said, the only truths we can know for certain are those we have invented ourselves. Mathematics is surely the greatest of such inventions." (Is Mathematics Discovered Or Invented? by Paul Ernest). Listen to the words of a modern mathematician as he proclaims that mathematics is nothing more than a form of play or a sport whose rules are as arbitrary as its relation to reality is zero: "A central idea of formalism is that mathematics is not a body of propositions representing an abstract sector of reality, but is much more akin to a game, bringing with it no more commitment to an ontology of objects or properties than ludo or chess." (Formalism In The Philosophy Of Mathematics by Alan Weir). Thus are our beliefs and thus is our rejection of the realm of external reality. In faithful obedience to our master Faust, we modern mathematicians of the West have banished the Classical Apollonian mathematics of the natural world, the mathematics of experience and induction, from our field of study, and have plunged headlong into the violent, uncontrollable waters of human art. We signal our happy, permanent departure from the system of mathematics as known and understood by ordinary, limited people for thousand of years. Thus ends the diary of a delusional artist who rose to the front ranks of his profession of mathematics. When he finished his diary, he looked out of his asylum room. He saw a starry night madly swirling with stars and a yellow moon sinking into oblivion and taking the world of reason, the world he sought to subvert, down with it. In the corridors of modern mathematics, the red flags of mental illness have formed a torchlight procession of cultural degeneration. Antirealism. Logicism. Formalism. Fictionalism. Conventionalism. Psychologism. Intuitionism. Constructivism. Complete mathematical systems held to contain contradictions. Noncontradiction viewed as the sign of an incomplete system. These are the symptoms of a terminal stage cancer which commenced its frightening course of development five centuries ago. It is the cancer of subjectivism and the cancer of the West. It has spread into every branch of mathematics and rendered the field unrecognizable to sane, sound, stable people. The present day mathematics of consciousness, conventions, constructions and contradictions has shown the distance and direction into the collapse of civilization and made it happen in an instant and right around the corner.

FDR'S NEW DEAL FOR THE REDS

A volcano is a rupture in the crust of a planet which results in violent outflows of lava, ash and gases from a magma chamber below the surface. Volcanoes are preceded by underground tectonic plate movements, and when the plates diverge or converge, an explosion occurs. In 1932, after a development which had commenced at the dawn of the twentieth century, a development which had seen statism promoted over the decades as progressivism, the political tectonics of America effected a significant movement and the nation erupted into open class war, and the general who led the charge was Franklin Roosevelt. Upon accepting the Democratic Party nomination for president, Roosevelt issued a call to arms to the seething riff raff throughout the nation who were growing restive by the hour and by the minute and demanded that they receive a new deal from the government in the form of socialist redistribution, statist regulation, and the abolition of freedom and liberty: "Throughout the nation men and women, forgotten in the political philosophy of the government, look to us here for guidance and for more equitable opportunity to share in the distribution of national wealth. I pledge myself to a new deal for the American people. This is more than a political campaign. It is a call to arms." In 1933, two months after Roosevelt's inauguration, the reds were on the march, demanding a new dispensation of pervasive state orders, state regulation of labor and industry, and a state corporation of totalitarian tyranny: "The atmosphere in Washington is strangely reminiscent of Rome in the first weeks after the march of the Blackshirts, of Moscow at the beginning of the Five-Year Plan. America today literally asks for orders. The Roosevelt administration envisages a federation of industry, labor and government after the fashion of the corporative State as it exists in Italy." (Anne O'Hare McCormick, The New York Times). At this time, the masses throughout the world were demanding statism and an end to freedom and caesar figures such as Stalin, Hitler, Mussolini and Roosevelt were giving it to them, and in America, Roosevelt issued a program and manifesto of statist control which nullified the American Revolution and repudiated one thousand years of Anglo-Saxon liberty. Roosevelt proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has established a powerful and intrusive government and promoted totalitarianism under the banners of fascism, communism and national socialism. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one which manifests red power and red authority and has crushed the enemy of the people, the liberal democratic order established during the Age of Enlightenment, beneath the hulking, bombastic architecture of social responsibility. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose parks and squares are adorned with the people's preeminent national monument, entitled The State Controlling Man. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one which is governed by a single red party, is managed by a national red regulatory apparatus, is patrolled by a red police force, runs red public works camps, and with its red jackboots has stampeded across the Enlightenment institutions of individual rights, free markets and decentralized power, and ground them into dust. He proclaimed that government is a positive force in people's lives and must not be constrained by constitutional checks and balances of any kind, and must be used to achieve social justice by confiscating the wealth of the producers and regulating their enterprises as a form of nationalization. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one which has rejected the Enlightenment precepts of liberalism and their esteem for reason, progress and the dignity of man, and has flooded streets, homes, neighborhoods, schools and offices with the people's flowing sewage of class theories and class slogans. He proclaimed that a progressive society is a planned society, a militarized society, a society without the encumbrance of a liberal constitution, and a society which has passed beyond the liberty of the individual, the liberty to own property and to live, work and flourish for oneself, and impressed the individual into the service of the people' state and community. He proclaimed that a progressive society is one governed by a superstrong state which has rejected the antisocial, anarchic principles of liberalism, declared war against the class of achievers, dynamos, innovators and entrepreneurs, and enforced order, discipline and planning to bring wealth to the inept, security to the incompetent, and absolute power into the hands of the people's commissars. He proclaimed that the market has failed the working class, freedom has brought impoverishment to the masses, capitalism has created inequality between the producers and the nonproducers, and the time for statism and the repeal of human rights has arrived which will transport the exploited and the marginalized into total liberation upon the social justice wings of the red totalitarians. He proclaimed that a progressive America is one which is sympathetic to the international communist movement and conspiracy, exalts the Soviet Union as the model and guide for establishing justice for the working class, extends full diplomatic recognition to the Soviets, allows and encourages communists and their friends and allies to work at the highest and most sensitive levels of the government, and forms a military alliance with the Soviets in a campaign to defeat the anticommunist, antiSoviet regimes of Germany, Italy and Japan. Listen to the encomiums launched by the masses and intelligentsia of America in praise of the New Deal. Look at their exaltation of fascism, communism, dictatorship, state cartelization, state monopolization, and the fearsome ministries of Stalin, Lenin, Hitler and Mussolini, and watch a nation founded in the creed of liberty commit philosophic treason and descend into the arms of the red haters of mankind: "In the North American Review in 1934, the progressive writer Roger Shaw described the New Deal as 'Fascist means to gain liberal ends.' He wasn't hallucinating. FDR's adviser Rexford Tugwell wrote in his diary that Mussolini had done 'many of the things which seem to me necessary.' Lorena Hickok, a close confidante of Eleanor Roosevelt who lived in the White House for a spell, wrote approvingly of a local official who had said, 'If [President] Roosevelt were actually a dictator, we might get somewhere.' She added that if she were younger, she'd like to lead 'the Fascist Movement in the United States.' At the National Recovery Administration (NRA), the cartel creating agency at the heart of the early New Deal, one report declared forthrightly, 'The Fascist Principles are very similar to those we have been evolving here in America.' " (Hitler, Mussolini, Roosevelt by David Boaz). Look at an American caesar and the fascist state he established. Look at an American fuhrer and his fireside tub thumping on behalf of collective sacrifice, collective service, collective equalization and the collective good. Look at the nation's red commander in chief and the mob stampede he led against the economic and social policies which marked a free nation. Look at an American Stalin, Hitler, Mussolini and Mao Zedong and observe his mission to transport his nation backward through the eons of time and into the primitive jungles of prehistory when bestial tribes ruled the kingdom of life and the individual was the property of the headman. Look at an American president's unbounded admiration for the alien voices of an authoritarian state, for the national socialist knock on the door, and for the red totalitarian planners of Soviet Russia who had declared holy war against the American way of life and against everything it meant to be an American. Look at the socialist press of the 1930s and the headlines screaming across their front pages: Roosevelt: Hero Of The Working Class. Brave Assassin of Bourgeois Liberty. The People's Philosopher Who Exposed The Full Horror Of The Liberal State With Its Exaltation Of The Self, Soul, Dignity And Right to Life Of The Individual: "Roosevelt himself called Mussolini 'admirable' and professed that he was 'deeply impressed by what he has accomplished.' The admiration was mutual. In a laudatory review of Roosevelt's 1933 book Looking Forward, Mussolini wrote, 'Reminiscent of Fascism is the principle that the state no longer leaves the economy to its own devices. Without question, the mood accompanying this sea change resembles that of Fascism.' The chief Nazi newspaper, Volkischer Beobachter, repeatedly praised 'Roosevelt's adoption of National Socialist strains of thought in his economic and social policies' and 'the development toward an authoritarian state' based on the 'demand that collective good be put before individual self interest.' " (Hitler, Mussolini, Roosevelt by David Boaz). The volcanic eruption known as the New Deal ejected a lava flow of class politics across America and reduced the people's constitutional liberties to smoke and ashes. There were several ejections through the vent which the mobs had created and on which Roosevelt rode to power. These were rock fragments marked race and gender politics and they were sent high up into the atmosphere. In the 1960s, they landed and further reconfigured the American political landscape. Today a triple headed monsters marked gender, race and class politics, a monster breathing the fires of mob rule and the combustion of Roosevelt's New Deal, stalks the nation and has smashed and incinerated its liberal democratic order.

PROPHETS OF THE PRIMITIVES

In August 1970 in San Francisco, Professor Red of the University of California at Los Angeles entered a pawnshop and bought a shotgun. He sawed off the barrel to make it concealable. He entered the Marin County Courthouse with the shotgun concealed beneath his raincoat. He produced the weapon and opened fire on the judge, the jury, attorneys and court officials. He fled California and was pursued by John Law across the country. He was granted asylum by the communist bloc and went on a speaking tour across Cuba, East Germany and the Soviet Union. During his lectures, he extolled two thinkers who more than any others he said had guided and shaped his war against civilization, and held them up as the prophets of a new progressive, people's religion of bestial license and mass destruction. These thinkers were Karl Marx and Sigmund Freud and his lectures were read enthusiastically by the reds back home and served as the basis of their violent attacks against the nation. His most famous lecture was entitled Eros And Civilization and here following are its words. We are proud to wear the black rose of the Devil and gleefully proclaim that we are subverters of young and old alike. We believe that man is governed by instinctual drives and a complete satisfaction of these drives requires the overthrow of civilized society. We believe that all social systems must be subordinated to man's highest goal of achieving instinctual gratification. We believe that civilization is evil and oppressive because it represent an enforced deflection of instinctual needs into rational ends. We believe that human tension and frustration are caused by refraining from satisfying our instinctual desires and supporting law, order and civilization instead, and this unnatural and unhealthy tension can only be eliminated by a joyful return to pure animality. We believe that capitalism is a system of domination, exploitation and constraint and must be smashed by a revolution of proletarian tribes representing brute muscular labor. We believe that man's primary psychological category is instinct; his primary political category is revolution; and a progressive society is one which combines and promotes these two categories and leads a revolution of instinct to sunder the fetters of rational civilization. We believe that a progressive society is one which interprets all aspects of human thought and activity, from literature and the arts to the social sciences to physics and mathematics, in terms of animal instincts and class war and unites these two in its war against reason. We believe that man is an irrational animal and only bourgeois fantasists and fabulists imagine otherwise, and we believe that this irrational animal is controlled in all its thoughts and actions by disturbed impulses and instincts, by the impulse to kill its father, kill its mother, kill everybody in sight, copulate with plants and animals, vandalize other people's wealth and property, steal from others and distribute the loot to itself, its friends and its allies, and rip up the streets and squares of industrial civilization, and that any attempt to suppress these impulses and make man decent and well doing will lead to neurosis and unhappiness and must be avoided at all costs. We believe that the good person is not one who adjusts to the demands of reason but actively opposes the demands of reason and is a revolutionary who marches under banners headlined with primal screams and proletarian terror. We believe that the Enlightenment psychology of reason and consciousness denies the fundamental reality that man is an unconscious, irrational being controlled by the material forces of labor violence and the immaterial forces of the instinct to gratification, and this demon of muscular energy and cosmic will must be allowed to explode across society and bring down the walls of bourgeois institutions. We believe that normal, rational, responsible, prudent behavior is a symptom of a deep sickness of the soul and requires the radical therapy of political violence and animal indulgence. We believe that the good person is a revolutionary innovator who seeks to overthrow present day rational society and replace it with the rule of perpetual war in the name of animal biology and the people's socialist republic. We believe that a progressive society is one which has unleashed the twin founts of primordial savagery: the gratification of libidinal drives and domination by the dirt, squalor and waste conduits of humanity. Listen to the words of Marx which justify mass murder and the destruction of private property in the name of a new religion of matter. In the name of the commodification of the working class. In the name of smashing the exploitation of labor by capital. In the name of eliminating the injustices of competition and the caprice of the market. In the name of making the true sources of all wealth, the muscular laboring class of the proletariat, the masters of the offices and factories. In the name of empowering the vast majority of mankind, the lowest, basest and noblest stratum of human refuse and scum, and ensuring that its oppressors and victimizers, those who work with their minds and start their own businesses, have been blasted into the air forever "The weapons with which the bourgeoisie felled feudalism to the ground are now turned against the bourgeois itself. But not only has the bourgeoisie forged the weapons that bring death to itself; it has also called into existence the men who are to wield those weapons--the modern working class--the proletarians. In proportion as the bourgeois, ie capital, is developed, in the same proportion is the proletariat, the modern working class, developed--a class of laborers, who live only so long as they find work, and who find work only so long as their labor increases capital. These laborers, who must sell themselves piecemeal, are a commodity, like every other article of commerce, and are consequently exposed to all the vicissitudes of competition, to all the fluctuations of the market. All the preceding classes that got the upper hand sought to fortify their already acquired status by subjecting society at large to their conditions of appropriation. The proletarians cannot become masters of the productive forces of society, except by abolishing their own previous mode of appropriation, and thereby also every other previous mode of appropriation. They have nothing of their own to secure and to fortify; their mission is to destroy all previous securities for, and insurances of, individual property. All previous historical movements were movements of minorities, or in the interest of minorities. The proletarian movement is the self conscious, independent movement of the immense majority, in the interest of the immense majority. The proletariat, the lowest stratum of our present society, cannot stir, cannot raise itself up, without the whole superincumbent strata of official society being sprung into the air." (The Communist Manifesto by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels). Listen to the words of Freud which justify mass murder and the destruction of private property in the name of a new religion of the unconscious. In the name of the secret impulses held to control all human thought and behavior. In the name of satisfying instinctual demands and liberating man from the tyranny imposed by reason and reality. In the name of the strivings of the id, the struggle for self expression, and victory over the enslavement of man to the spurious claims of conscience and morality: "The only trustworthy antithesis is between conscious and unconscious. But it would be a serious mistake to think that this antithesis coincides with the distinction between ego and id. All that is true is that everything that happens in the id is and remains unconscious, and that processes in the ego, and they alone, can become conscious. But not all of them are, nor always, nor necessarily; and large portions of the ego can remain permanently unconscious. If the id's instinctual demands meet with no satisfaction, intolerable conditions arise. Experience soon shows that these situations of satisfaction can only be established with the help of the external world. At that point the portion of the id which is directed towards the external world--the ego--begins to function. If all the driving force that sets the vehicle in motion is derived from the id, the ego, as it were, undertakes the steering, without which no goal can be reached. The instincts in the id press for immediate satisfaction at all costs, and it that way they achieve nothing or even bring about appreciable damage. It is the task of the ego to guard against such mishaps, to mediate between the claims of the id and the objections of the external world." (The Essentials of Psychoanalysis by Sigmund Freud). We are crusaders of human authenticity and will never waver in our struggle to free man from the crushing weight imposed by science, civilization and the world of the Enlightenment. Thus concluded the lecture delivered by Professor Red to his students and followers throughout the world. Appearing on the wanted fugitive lists and in the galleries of evil doers compiled by decent people are the reds of the world. Ferried into the souls of the dead by Marx and Freud, the reds have lowered the curtain on a free and orderly society.

REDS REPEAL POPULAR CULTURE

In 1967 in Pasadena, California, the first Trader Joe's store was opened. It was a pioneer in the discount food industry, offering the highest value products at the lowest possible prices. It was so successful that in 1979 the German supermarket chain Aldi purchased it and it became a star performer in the latter's portfolio. Today Trader Joe's lies in ruins, along with the entire Western product establishment, victims of the red mania sweeping the West and expunging the brands and images of capitalist power and success. In the shards of glass of the smashed culture of Trader Joe's is the story of a red revolution which has upended the world, a revolution which has been fueled and led by people from every walk of life, and has lowered the curtain on capitalist culture and civilization. In these shards can be read a program and manifesto for the destruction of five centuries of liberal progress and development and the Sovietization of society. Comprised of the masses and their intelligentsia, the new cultural revolutionaries have proclaimed that all commercial brands and packages in the West are racist and must be immediately removed from stores. They have proclaimed that all products with ethnic sounding names are racist and must be immediately removed. They have proclaimed that the use of American Indians in mascots and logos is a racist objectification of indigenous culture. They have proclaimed that all indigenous representation in popular culture is racist. They have proclaimed that images of Indians on product labels are harmful to Indian self esteem. They have proclaimed that products which record, recognize and celebrate Indians are offensive. They have proclaimed that images of Indians on products represents a tokenization, misrepresentation and exploitation of Indians. They have proclaimed that the image of Mia on Land O' Lakes packages is an objectification of an Indian woman. They have proclaimed that the label Trader Ming's is offensive to the Chinese, the label Trader Jose's is offensive to the Mexicans, and the label Arabian Joe is offensive to the Arabs, and the label Trader Joe San is offensive to the Japanese. They have proclaimed that the Aunt Jemima brand is a symbol of vicious plantation racism and presents a retrograde image of black womanhood. They have proclaimed that the Eskimo Pie brand contains a derogatory reference to the indigenous people inhabiting northern Canada and Alaska and promotes racial inequality. They have proclaimed that the Cream of Wheat brand containing a black chef image is a symbol of systemic racism. They have proclaimed that the Mrs Butterworth's brand is a symbol of racial bias. They have proclaimed that the Uncle Ben's brand is a symbol of racial injustice. They have proclaimed that all ethnic sounding product labels are racist. They have proclaimed that all product labels which contain images of women, nonwhites or nonWestern peoples render impossible a welcoming and rewarding experience for customers. They have proclaimed that supermarkets must establish a timetable for the removal of products with ethnically themed labels or face a campaign of vandalism the likes of which they have never experienced before. They have proclaimed that the Washington Redskins name is a racist slur against American Indians and shows denigration and disrespect toward indigenous peoples. They have proclaimed that Disneyland's Splash Mountain attraction features racist imagery, racist tropes and is a racist song of the South. They have proclaimed that Disneyland's Jungle Cruise attraction features unfair stereotypes of native cultures as backward, cruel and vicious simply because they reject the Western superstitions of reason, science, law and human rights. Listen to the voices of the red cultural revolutionaries who publicly denounce the products of consumer capitalism as the pitiless faces of racist branding. Who have condemned the grocery stores, chain stores and product labels of the capitalist world as shameless advertisements of racist themes. Who have condemned Western liberal imperialism, the greatest force of progress and enlightenment in the history of mankind, while they have glorified and idealized the savage, nonWestern cultures which the West has liberated: "We demand that Trader Joe's remove racist branding and packaging from its stores. The grocery chain labels some of its ethnic foods with modifications of Joe that belies a narrative of exoticism and that perpetuates harmful stereotypes. For example, Trader Ming's is used to brand the chain's Chinese food, Arabian Joe brands Middle Eastern foods, Trader Jose brands Mexican foods, Trader Giotto's is for Italian food, and Trader Joe San brands their Japanese cuisine. Furthermore, the Trader Joe's company takes pride in the fact that the founder, Joe Coulombe, took inspiration in building the Trader Joe's brand from a racist book and a controversial theme park attraction, both of which have received criticism for romanticizing Western Imperialism and fetishizing nonWestern peoples." (Trader Joe's: Remove Racist Packaging From Your Products by Briones Bedell). Listen to the voices of today's Sovietists who condemn Western capitalists on the high seas who brought the blessings of freedom and liberty to the savage shores of the world. Who condemn the Western introduction of private property and individual rights in distant lands as a scourge of exploitation and enslavement. Who condemn the institutions set up by the West promoting human flourishing, economic development, technological progress, and the rule of constitutional government as a legacy of unmitigated horror which has forever blackened and blighted pristine lands. Who condemn the Western pacification of fierce, violent nations in the far reaches of the world as an abuse of power and a laying waste to noble cultures. Who exalt devils in distant jungles who reduced human beings to the level of tribal resources as the highest embodiments of human virtue and righteousness, and condemn the companies, traders, imperialists, soldiers, statesmen and the systems of the West which defeated them as the running dogs of racism and oppression: "We learn directly from the Trader Joe's website that the first Trader Joe's store: 'had a nautical theme and it was run by people who were described as 'traders on the high seas.' At the time, Joe had been reading a book called White Shadows in the South Seas, and he'd been to the Disneyland Jungle Trip ride, and 'it all just coalesced'. To this day, Trader Joe's Crew Members consider themselves 'traders on the culinary seas' and are known for their bright, tropical patterned shirts.' The book White Shadows in the South Seas was also made into a silent film. This work demonstrates the horrific legacy of trading companies as they exploited and enslaved the South Pacific in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Many of these regions are still at a disadvantage today because of how traders ravaged their peoples, their societies, and their natural resources. Even though the story calls out the abuses of trading companies, (although it perpetuates other racist tropes such as that of the 'noble savage' and 'white god' narratives common during this period), 'Trader' is still part of the grocery chain's name. It leaves the question: What in particular about this book inspired the company?" (Trader Joe's: Remove Racist Packaging From Your Products by Briones Bedell). Listen to the voices of today's red headhunters roaming the West who condemn any and all commercial images of indigenous cultures, any and all depictions of indigenous arts, customs, manners and dress, as acts of capitalist cultural misappropriation. Who condemn people who tell the truth, unshackled to the demands of political correctness, and identify primitives and savages as primitives and savages. Who condemn alien, hostile, violent, nonWestern cultures as alien, hostile, violent, nonWestern cultures. Who condemn as racist all those who perceive cultures which deprive people of their fundamental rights and freedoms as zoos of squalor unfit for human habitation: "Likewise, the Disneyland Jungle Cruise Ride has received criticism for misappropriating Indigenous culture and perpetuating stereotypes of native people as primitive and savage. The ride features animatronic people only identified as headhunters and natives dressed in some sort (of which culture it is unclear) of traditional dress, performing a dance, and playing music--and threatening violence toward visitors. It has been criticized as exoticism at its worst due to its exhibition of humans as an attraction that otherwise focuses on animals. Given the extensive history of 'human zoos' in the United States, this attraction is unacceptable. In addition, these animatronic people only seem to serve as the punchline of jokes as part of the ride's experience. This particular display of exoticism is especially confusing in the context of Trader Joe's because it again leaves the question: What in particular about this theme park ride inspired the company?" (Trader Joe's: Remove Racist Packaging From Your Products by Briones Bedell). In communist societies, goods and services emanating from the West were strictly prohibited. Any logo, mascot, image or depiction which in any way, shape or form had a connection to the West was kept out and could not be found. Under the cover and pretext of fighting racism, the people of the West today are engaged in a campaign to rename popular commercial and sports brands as a prelude to a dismantling of the capitalist system. If it is true that these brands, ranging Aunt Jemima to Land O' Lakes to the Washington Redskins to Splash Mountain, are one and all nothing more than billboards of racism and fascism, then Western capitalism is itself nothing more than a billboard of racism and fascism, which is the slander the reds have been broadcasting for one hundred years. Survey after survey of public opinion has shown that people throughout the West believe that popular commercial and sports brands are racist brands, that capitalist countries are racist countries, and that capitalism itself is a racist system. They have followed the Soviet line and their corporate henchmen have done their bidding and effected a rolling wave of brand renaming and removal. The red masses of the West have commenced a revolution to overthrow Western capitalist culture and reconstruct society as a Soviet camp. The campaign against Trader Joe's brands is a campaign against capitalist brands in general and is a campaign against the capitalist system itself, and will not cease until the people have unfurled the red star across the capital cities of the West.

EXPERIMENTAL NOISE

Urban living is noisy living. Day and night without surcease, the denizens of cities are assaulted by the rush of traffic, the clanging of construction, the blasts of car horns, the thunder of airplanes, the hissing of trains and the clamor of pedestrians. Civilized people who love the arts see in these harmful and annoying levels of noise a tragic and terrifying portrait of the state of so-called serious music today; they see an art form which has rejected the traditional requirements of music and descended into a wasteland of pure formalism. The progenitors of modern music were Faust and Kant, the first the guiding spirit of the West and the second the West's leading academic philosopher. As diametrically opposed to the music of the Greeks and Romans, whose guiding spirit Apollo taught that the essence of music is melody, as heaven is opposed to hell and nothingness is opposed to existence, the music which commenced in the twentieth century was the culmination of a development which could only have taken place in the West and only took place in the West. The Faustian view of music as subjectivity, expression, inspiration and the primacy of feeling, and the Kantian view of music as the free play of pure forms and sensations without reason or order, led in the twentieth century to an explosion of nonmusical sounds which were paraded as the apex of musical progress, enlightenment and sophistication. The new heirs and successors of Faust and Kant issued a program and manifesto for the production of a dark, nightmarish tonal universe, a jungle of unpleasant, disturbing, confused anticompositions which screeched out the destruction of vocal and instrumental beauty, and the ascendancy of psychotic themes and variations. The end stage Faustians and hyper Kantians have proclaimed that there is no objective definition of music and what is noise to one person can be music to another. They have proclaimed that music can be any distortion or disturbance of a signaling system. They have proclaimed that music can be any unwanted noise. They have proclaimed that music can be any intrusive sound. They have proclaimed that music requires no special skills to compose and can consist in utter emptiness. They have proclaimed that music can consist in incidental sounds and undesirable tonal combinations. They have proclaimed that a musical masterpiece can consist in four minutes and thirty three seconds of total silence. They have proclaimed that there are as many genres of music as there are genres of noise, no one of which can be valued over any other. They have proclaimed that noise is the highest medium of music and enables the listener to scale peaks of mystical enlightenment which he would otherwise be unable to do by listening to ordinary, rational melodies. They have proclaimed that musical noise is an agent of social and political transformation which empowers the oppressed, victimized, marginalized scum of the earth. They have proclaimed that progressive music is one which consists in random signals coming equally from all frequencies. They have proclaimed that the highest definition of music is that of a sound based creative practice whose primary aspect is noise. They have proclaimed that music can be acoustically generated noise. They have proclaimed that music can be electronically generated noise. They have proclaimed that music can be digitally generated noise. They have proclaimed that music can consist of machine sounds, stochastic processes, field recordings, processed sound recordings, manipulated audio media, static, hiss and hum, and nonmusical vocal techniques involving screaming and screeching. They have proclaimed that the highest form of music involves improvisation, cacophony and indeterminacy. They have proclaimed that progressive music is one which dispenses with melody and harmony and is indistinguishable from ambient, environmental sounds. They have proclaimed that progressive music is an antisymphony and antiesthetic of pure noise. They have proclaimed that progressive music is a sound sculpture sculpting nothing and an exercise in creating loud, piercing, unending volume. They have proclaimed that the highest type of musician is an artist of noise who has made use of factories and industry in order to collect and present the most complex machine sounds. They have proclaimed that ordinary music, which is based upon and defined by the presence of melody, keeps the musician and the listener restricted to soulless, arbitrary mental limits and must be superseded by the liberating power of noise. They have proclaimed that progressive music is created by the sounds of airplanes, automobiles and orchestras of noise. Listen to the words of a philosopher of antimusic who exalts the silence of noncompositions. Who proclaims that supreme musical form is achieved by means of chance operations. Who proclaims that the highest and most liberating type of musical art is created when the composer is free to produce noise and the performer is free to produce noise, and to produce noise different from that produced by the composer: "In the Music of Changes, structure, which is the division of the whole into parts; method, which is the note to note procedure; form, which is the expressive content, the morphology of the continuity; and materials, the sounds and silences of the composition, are all determined. Though no two performances of the Music of Changes will be identical (each act is virgin, even the repeated one, to refer to Rene Char's thought), two performances will resemble one another closely. Though chance operations brought about the determinations of the composition, these operations are not available in its performance. The function of the performer in the case of the Music of Changes is that of a contractor who, following an architect's blueprint, constructs a building. That the Music of Changes was composed by means of chance operations identifies the composer with no matter what eventuality. But that its notation is in all respects determinate does not permit the performer any such identification: his work is specifically laid out before him. He is therefore not able to perform from his own center but must identify himself insofar as possible with the center of the work as written. The Music of Changes is an object more inhuman than human, since chance operations brought it into being. The fact that these things that constitute it, though only sounds, have come together to control a human being, the performer, gives the work the alarming aspect of a Frankenstein monster. This situation is of course characteristic of Western music, the masterpieces of which are its most frightening examples, which when concerned with humane communication only move over from Frankenstein monster to Dictator." (Silence: Lectures and Writings by John Cage). Listen to the words of a philosopher of formalism who exalts the random sounds of nature as guides and inspirations for the production of great music. Who proclaims that the highest form of music is created when the performer is free to act in an unpredictable manner and to act in any way he desires. Who proclaims that the highest type of music involves the creation and preservation of acts of pure consciousness. Who proclaims that the highest type of musician is a lifeless, unconscious automaton which randomly generates noise. Who proclaims that the supreme musical performance is the performance of nothing and a deranged exercise in meaningless acoustics. Who proclaims that the source and ground of the highest type of music is disorganization, mysticism, unconsciousness, a dark, flowing river of mental destruction, and the tonal silences and brushstrokes of those who are spiritually and morally inactive, inert, slumbering, frozen and dead: "One evening Morton Feldman said that when he composed he was dead; this recalls to me the statement of my father, an inventor, who says he does his best work when he is sound asleep. The two suggest the deep sleep of Indian mental practice. The ego no longer blocks action. A fluency obtains which is characteristic of nature. The seasons make the round of spring, summer, fall, and winter, interpreted in Indian thought as creation, preservation, destruction, and quiescence. Deep sleep is comparable to quiescence. Each spring brings no matter what eventuality. The performer then will act in any way. Whether he does so in an organized way or in any one of the not consciously organized ways cannot be answered until his action is a reality. The nature of the composition and the knowledge of the composer's own view of his action suggest, indeed, that the performer act sometimes consciously, sometimes not consciously and from the Ground of Meister Eckhart, identifying there with no matter what eventuality." (Silence: Lectures and Writings by John Cage). Noise pollution is a major public health menace which afflicts urban centers throughout the West. Guided by the specters of Faust and Kant, which exalt music as pure emotional experience and music as pure, contentless form, today's formalist musicians have blasted noise pollution through the airwaves and into the concert hall and called it serious music. Western culture is the only culture in the history of mankind which has produced formalist music. No other culture, not Egyptian, Babylonian, Indian, Chinese, Greco-Roman, Arabian or Mexican culture, has defined a random, nonmelodic combination of sounds to be a form of music. The raucous din and the endless void spaces of formalist music are a composition of the decline and fall of the West.

EMPTY CANVASES

People suffering from schizophrenia have a difficult time expressing their thoughts and feelings unaided. Art therapy has been devised by psychiatrists as a way to enable them to do so and attempt thereby to purge this sickness from their souls. The paintings and drawings produced by schizophrenics in mental hospitals tell a story of a mind fragmented, broken down, out of control, unable to perceive physical objects, withdrawn into a fantasy world and dissociated from all reality. Civilized people who have studied the character and development of the West have seen in the art work of schizophrenics the tragic and terrifying story of their own culture, and have seen in the arts which developed in the twentieth century the final chapter of a one thousand year dark ride and descent into open, bold, brazen psychosis. One thousand years of Faust whose spirit of romanticism with its emphasis upon emotion first took hold of the German evening lands in 1000 AD and commenced the course of the culture. Four hundred years of Immanuel Kant who proclaimed that art consists simply in the free play of pure forms without reason, order or reference of any kind and that the judgment of beauty is purely subjective, being a response of pleasure which is independent of the properties of the object. One hundred and fifty years of impressionism and expressionism with their emphasis upon sensations, impressions, perspectives, moods and psychological states of being without faithful reference to the objects depicted. Then in this satanic relay race toward the finish line, the torch is finally passed to the formalists who ascended to influence at the dawn of the twentieth century. The formalists broke through the finish line broadcasting a program and manifesto for the total destruction of painting and for the replication of acute schizophrenia in the ateliers, art houses and art galleries of the world. The new formalists have ruled the art world for the past one hundred years and have called their representations of unmitigated madness Modern Art and Abstract Painting and have made every civilized person who ever admired genuine works of beauty, and celebrated the charm and delight these works produced, head for the hills and run for his life. The formalists successors of Faust and Kant have proclaimed that the highest type of painting consists in the arrangement of shapes, forms, colors and lines independently of all visual references in the world. They have proclaimed that progressive painting has nothing whatever to do with showing perspectives on objects or creating idealizations of visible reality but is nonfigurative, nonobjective and nonrepresentational. They have proclaimed that progressive painting has dispensed with bourgeois verisimilitude and effected a total departure from natural reality. They have proclaimed that progressive art has turned its back on the world of natural entities and bears no trace to anything which is recognizable. They have proclaimed that progressive painting has eliminated distance, lighting and single points of view and consists in arrangements of simple geometrical shapes, interlocking planes and collage. They have proclaimed that progressive art is an exercise in pure thought, pure mysticism and the pure inner life with no content whatever provided by natural phenomena. They have proclaimed that progressive painting depicts neither persons nor places nor things in reality and has as its subject colors, shapes, sizes, scales, brushstrokes and the process of painting itself. They have proclaimed that progressive painting has bid farewell to the external world and made form and color the subject and focus of its works. They have proclaimed that progressive painting requires no technical skill whatever for its execution and is pure art unshackled to visual perception and proceeding from the feverish, disordered imagination of the artist. They have proclaimed that the highest type of painting expresses emotion and subjectivity and rejects all concern with objective experience. They have proclaimed that the highest type of painting features patterns and designs which are the patterns and designs of nothing. They have proclaimed that the highest type of painting depicts motion and energy speeding through disturbed states of mind. They have proclaimed that the highest, the most enlightened and the most skilled type of painter produces paintings which are paintings of nothing. They have proclaimed that the highest type of painting is action painting whose drips and splashes of paint are the gestures and rhythms of a mind unhinged. They have proclaimed that the highest type of painting is a color field painting which depicts the unmodulated blackness of mental breakdown. Listen to a description of a cultural disease without precedent in the history of mankind. This is the disease of formalism and no other culture in the world except the West has been afflicted with it. This Faustian and Kantian based intellectual malfunction, which would have repelled the Greco-Roman world of Apollo, produced mural sized canvases of spontaneous, improvised nothingness. It produced paintings without subjects and paintings without techniques. It produced nonobjective nonpainting which screamed into caves and jungles of primitive nontalent. It produced vast, monstrous expanses of motion, energy, dynamism, drips, splashes, actions, relations, processes, colors, lines, gestures, landscapes, rectangles, verticles and horizontals which had no relation whatever to reality and was spewed out like sewage water from the thoughts, emotions, personalities and psyches of cultural degenerates who worshiped insanity as the highest emotional and religious experience. It produced a multiplying viral community which reached and expanded into every studio and museum in the world, and traveling under the names of Jackson Pollock, Willem de Kooning, Franz Kline, Robert Motherwell, Mark Rothko, Barnett Newman, Adolph Gottlieb, Richard Pousette-Dart, Clyfford Still and Lee Krasner, made culturally and morally acceptable what had been taboo centuries before: the persecution of reason, the fleeing from reality, the escape into derangement, the contemplation of nothingness and the destruction of beauty. From Cubism, Surrealism, Impressionism and Expressionism, the spirit of Faust and Kant brought forth Abstract Painting in the twentieth century which mirrored the moral and political disorder of the times and established schizophrenia as a household word: "In the 1940s and 1950s, the United States made its first major contribution to the international art world with a painting style that would fundamentally change twentieth century art. In a New World translation of ideas from European modernism, the Abstract Expressionist combined the flatness and geometry of Cubism, German Expressionist gesture and color, and Surrealist spontaneity and improvisation into their often mural sized canvases. New York City was fertile ground for the beginnings of the style in the late 1930s. European artists were fleeing Europe to escape the predations of fascism and found themselves working alongside exiles from the Great Depression. The classic modern artworks that could be viewed at the Museum of Modern Art, founded in 1929, and the Guggenheim Foundation's Museum for Non Objective Painting, which opened in 1939, had a deep impact. The Abstract Expressionists, sometimes called the New York School, were never a formal association, but they shared a desire to break away from conventional subjects and techniques and, significantly, to produce a completely abstract art that reflected in dynamic, gestural form the unique personality, psyche and emotions of the artist. Painters including Jackson Pollock, Willem de Kooning, Franz Kline, Robert Motherwell, Mark Rothko, Barnett Newman, Adolph Gottlieb, Richard Pousette-Dart, Clyfford Still and Lee Krasner saw the individual process of art making as equal to or more important than the final result, and art critic Harold Rosenberg coined the phrase 'action painting' to refer to this overriding significance of the act of painting. Jackson Pollock became a household name in 1949 when Life magazine published an article featuring photographs of him in action as he created his drip paintings. Franz Kline's bold and monumental black and white gestures captured the dynamism of New York's changing landscape. Willem de Kooning caused controversy with his monstrous Woman series, for despite his active mark making, figurative work had been taboo since the ascendancy of pure abstraction. Barnett Newman painted large expanses of color punctuated by a series of vertical zips. Mark Rothko generally worked within a format of two or three horizontal rectangles within a larger vertical support. Both artists experimented with the emotional, even spiritual power of color and invited slow, contemplative looking. In Rothko's words: 'The people who weep before my pictures are having the same religious experience I had when I painted them. And if you are only moved by their color relationships, then you miss the point!' " (What Was Abstract Expressionism? A Paint Splattered Primer On America's First Major Art Movement by Artspace Editors). The prognosis for schizophrenia is gloomy, giving no cause for hope or optimism, with the vast majority of those afflicted permanently unable to lead normal, human, functioning lives. The career of the West's own sickness of the soul, being inherent, intrinsic and rooted in the foundations of the culture, is similarly irreversible. Exalted as the leading lights of Abstract Painting, Robert Delauney, Francis Picabia, Henri Matisse, Frantisek Kupka, Wassily Kandinsky, Kazimir Malevich, Kurt Schwitters, Theo van Doesburg, Jackson Pollock, Barnett Newman, Mark Rothko, Willem de Kooning and Franz Kline are the signposts of a nightmare of a cultural implosion whose fragments have buried every man, woman and child alive.

STREAMS OF CONSCIOUSNESS

James is a schizophrenic inmate at the State Mental Hospital. He hears voices, has lost touch with reality and is out of his mind. Confined to his cell twenty four hours per day, he keeps a voluminous diary which extends into thousands of pages. The doctors who have read these massive outpourings of high voltage madness have seen in them the story not merely of one man's sickness of the soul but the story of a cultural sickness which they are afraid to name out loud because it defines the actual, present day world in which they live and implicates each and every one of them. Uttered under their breath, this is the sickness of subjectivism and they know that it has defined the West since the West first emerged from the dark lands of ancient Germany one thousand years ago. This is the sickness of the German Faust and his romanticists who exalted will, emotion, endless striving and the pleasures of the infinite over reason, noonday and determinate reality. This is the sickness which they never observed in the Classical culture of the Greeks and Romans, guided as it was by the sane, rational spirit of Apollo. Lovers of beauty and the arts, they saw this sickness revealed in all its frightfulness and horror in a literary movement born in the twentieth century, and they saw it as the culmination of ten centuries of Faust's schizophrenia, and they saw its immediate progenitor in the work of the most influential philosopher in the West who lived in the eighteenth century. This philosopher was Immanuel Kant; the twentieth century literary movement his work founded is Modernism; and from Kant's theory that the highest form of art consists in the free play of formal elements without reason, purpose, content or reference of any kind, they saw the result on the disturbed pages of the James Joyces, the Virginia Woolfs, the Alfred Jarrys, the Samuel Becketts and the T. S. Eliots of literary Modernism. Transfixed in fear and terror, they read the pages of inmate James's diary and saw the feverish effluvium of literary Modernism and the program and manifesto of the movement Faust and Kant had created. Composed by an inmate confined to a padded cell, this program and manifesto proclaimed that the highest type of literature consists in a stream of consciousness, a flow of thoughts and feelings, without the bourgeois restrictions of logic or grammar. It proclaimed that the most authentic form of literature is produced by a disordered mind. It proclaimed that the finest writers live and work in a constant state of madness and give expression to the forms and shapes of a mind withdrawn from normal perception and experience. It proclaimed that progressive literature is composed in a shadowy, indistinct, hallucinatory style in which persons and things undergo multiple transformations. It proclaimed that progressive literature features sentences without end, monologues without sense, strange and mysterious landscapes, characters with multiple personality disorder, and antiheroes in a state of anxiety and disorientation. It proclaimed that progressive literature is an unpunctuated, free association of ideas. It proclaimed that progressive literature consists in interior monologues and associative leaps of thought unbound by grammar or punctuation. It proclaimed that progressive literature abandons linear time and is a record of the internal consciousness of the characters. It proclaimed that the highest type of literature focuses upon the the psychic reality of the protagonists and ignores their external surroundings. It proclaimed that progressive literature is antiliterature which rejects plot construction, character construction, focuses upon subjective points of view, and is composed in obscure, unintelligible language. It proclaimed that progressive literature is a book of the night and a journey into the unconscious. It proclaimed that progressive literature is a sequence of actions without story or plot of any kind. It proclaimed that the highest type of literature is replete with neologisms and complex puns and is impossible to read. It proclaimed that the highest type of literature is a series of dream sequences and a product of somnambulism. It proclaimed that progressive literature is a record of psychotic episodes in which blood and gore are spewed out into homes and offices. It proclaimed that progressive literature is meaningless, absurd, purposeless and irrational and in its wild wanderings has sunk to the bottom of the river of mental illness. It proclaimed that progressive literature exalts the schizoid personality and its aloofness from the realm of reason and existence. It proclaimed that progressive literature is a description of events without narrative structure or relation of action and reaction. It proclaimed that the highest form of literature is a transcription of illogical speech and communicates nothing. It proclaimed that progressive literature is a description of a nightmare universe and is a succession of harrowing, horrific images, characters performing meaningless, repetitive actions, dialogues replete with nonsense, and plots which are cyclical, expansive and lead nowhere. Look at the formalist universe of literary modernism and see how the world exalts it. See how the world avidly reads novels without plots, without rational sequential development, without a beginning, middle or end, without without characters, and without normal use of language. See how the world experiences unmitigated joy in novels whose time frame is minutes and describe no action or development and describe only random flows of thoughts. See how the world shows deep and abiding appreciation for novels which are about nothing beyond themselves and are gloomy pages of psychotic self reference and narratives which are narratives of nothing. See how the world ecstatically worships novels with missing chapters, unrelated chapters, missing plots, missing actions and missing characters which are tales of themselves, tales of their readers and tales about nothing happening in the world: "1. Multiple Choice by Alejandro Zambra. A novel must have A) plot B) characters C) setting D) a beginning, middle, and end. Unless you're Alejandro Zambra, in which case the answer is E) none of the above. Zambra's brilliant 2016 novel is both simple and impossible to describe. Simple to describe because the novel is composed entirely of a series of multiple choice questions (based on the Chilean Academic Aptitude Test of Zambra's childhood). Impossible because that description hardly captures the emotion, humor, and mystery that Zambra is able to create out of what seems like a gimmick. Multiple Choice is a slim volume, but it contains multitudes. Zambra revels in the joys of language while also pulling surprising feeling from his fictional test questions. 3. The Mezzanine by Nicholson Baker. Most novels cover more time than they take to read. We experience a month or a year or an entire life of a character over the course of a few hundred pages. Baker's joyful 1988 novel The Mezzanine takes the opposite approach, covering the time it takes a man to walk across a mezzanine and take an escalator. A few minutes at most. Instead of anything resembling a plot, Baker dives deep into the thoughts of his character, from his observations of the objects around him on the escalator to musings about everything from paper towels to life. Maybe nothing happens, but Baker somehow covers everything. 6. If on a winter's night a traveler by Italo Calvino. A member of the experimental Oulipo group, Calvino's novels play by their own invented rules. Invisible Cities is almost entirely composed of descriptions of invented cities. The Castle of Crossed Destinies is structured around the tarot deck. If on a winter's night a traveler might be his most inventive book though. The novel tells the tale of you (i.e., the reader) trying to read Italo Calvino's If on a winter's night a traveler. Yes, it's meta. In the novel's narrative, the reader discovers that the copy of his book only contains the first chapter. As you hunt down the missing chapters, you end up reading wholly unrelated chapters from completely different books (each of which parodies a different literary genre). Basically, the novel is as postmodern as postmodern can get, but it's also a complete joy to read." (Ten Novels That Break All The Rules by Lincoln Michel). For centuries, the locks and chains of Faust and Kant had rattled. Then in the twentieth century, these jailers of the mind succeeded in their mission and placed literature into a snake pit. In an open room in which schizophrenics roam about and talk incoherently are the writers of literary modernism. On pages of self reference, meaningless reference, zero story lines, ungrammatical constructions, sentences without end and streams of pure consciousness have appeared a tragic, imagination defying genre of literature. It a genre which the world prior to the West had never seen before. It is the literature of disorder and psychosis and it has written the final chapter of the West.

BIG TECH REDS PRESENT THE INTERNET

A presenter is the host of a television or radio program. In this capacity, he introduces reporters, interviews guests, links segments, offers commentary and holds the program together. In the global computer network known as the internet, the presenters are five companies, Amazon, Google, Facebook, Twitter and Apple, and listening to the demands of consumers, these companies have instituted a regime of leftist political censorship which has abolished the free and open exchange of ideas and opinions and has mimicked the policies and practices of history's communist totalitarian states. Becoming more socialist and more statist with every passing decade since the turn of the twentieth century, the American people have designated these technology companies as their censors in cyberspace and tasked them with the responsibility of controlling the nation's political thought and discourse. Handed a quill pen and parchment by the people, who over the course of a century have voted a Marxist, national socialist, gender, race and class dispensation into power and called it progressivism, these five companies have composed a declaration of independence of the internet from the realm of truth and objectivity and declared its total subservience to the tenets of the red party line. Their declaration is a program and manifesto for the transformation of news and information agencies into weapons of cultural and political war to overthrow the liberal democratic order. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has established a thoroughgoing system of digital suppression and prohibition of politically incorrect viewpoints. They have proclaimed that social justice demands that conservatives enjoy no freedom of speech on the internet. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has weaponized the internet to attack all those who uphold the rule of law and the right of free speech. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet deploys the tools of demonetization, deplatforming and shadow banning to drive libertarians and Trump supporters offline. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet is one whose social media platforms aid, abet and encourage the defamation of anticommunists. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet is a voice and platform of communications indecency which hosts a billion post community of haters of capitalism, constitutionalism and antiextremist political order. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet has ceased to be a neutral platform for the expression of opposing ideas and has become an active, partisan publisher of one set of ideas and one set of ideas only: the plans and designs for the overthrow of individual rights and the establishment of a race and gender dictatorship. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet suppresses all political speech which offends the sensibilities of women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders and Muslims. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet has rendered voiceless political opinions which conflict with the reigning socialist orthodoxy. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet is an election interference organization which seeks to ensure that no candidate is ever elected who espouses the ideas of meritocracy and judging people on the basis of their character and ability and not their race or gender. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet purges conservative news sources from its search results and eliminates their search visibility. They have proclaimed that a progressive society routinely prohibits the expression of conservative views and has canceled President Trump's social media accounts. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet has established one hundred percent red control over the online search market and uses this power to harm Republican political candidates in the name of promoting the public interest. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet deletes all posts which are favorable to President Trump and seeks to ensure that he is not reelected. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet removes videos of press conferences held by doctors who challenge with facts and evidence the World Health Organization's politically correct view of the origin, prevention and treatment of covid 19. They have proclaimed that a progressive internet removes scientifically credible, peer reviewed but politically incorrect research reports which discuss the potential efficacy of hydroxychloroquine as a treatment for covid-19. Look at the reds in action and see how they have assumed control over the internet. See how they have prevented public exposure to antired content. See how they have blocked search traffic to antired sites. See how they have abandoned all pretense to truth and objectivity in their brazen support for far left political candidates. See how they have by their pervasive and relentless hand of censorship placed the liberal democratic order under existential threat. Taking down posts, videos, commentaries, analyses, reports and news information which does not adhere slavishly to the red ideological orthodoxy, the big tech giants in control of the internet have taken down the West: "Tuesday during an appearance on Fox News Channel's Tucker Carlson Tonight, Breitbart News editor in chief Alex Marlow discussed how Big Tech, including Google, Facebook and Twitter, has limited exposure to Breitbart content, which is an apparent effort to promote the candidacy of Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden. According to Marlow, Google has cut off his outlet's search traffic, which is a way the tech giant is controlling the news narrative as a way to support the Biden campaign. MARLOW: We started looking at our traffic, and gradually since the 2016 election, Google has been diminishing our search results, and then all of a sudden, in May of this year virtually, we virtually lost all Google traffic, all search traffic altogether. Let me give you some specific pieces of data—a Google track, sometimes called a visibility index— this is sort of like the Nielsen score. That's when your content shows up on one of their pages. Breitbart is down 99.7%. Overall our Google traffic is down nearly two thirds. If you want to search for Joe Biden or Biden, the chances of you getting a Breitbart article are virtually zero, Tucker. Virtually no opportunity for you to get it unless, of course, you add the word Breitbart, which explains the lack of Google traffic. Naturally, we looked at other outlets to see if there's a pattern. Of course, we have more access to our own data, but we compared the top 50 or so publishers, and we found that eight out of the bottom 10 when it comes to Google search are right of center outlets. That includes Fox News and even The Daily Caller, which is one of the two outlets that actually somehow performed worse than Breitbart. I don't feel like the Republican Party feels the existential threat that you and I have been trying to convey to them. This is it. Freedom of speech in the united states right now is controlled by Google, controlled by Facebook, and it's controlled by Twitter. Remember, Google controls YouTube, Tucker. This is exactly why we saw these videos memory holed from the internet yesterday. And guess what explanation we got from [Facebook] when they took down our videos? Vague pablum, nothing specific, they wouldn't cite a specific piece of misinformation, and now all of a sudden Google, Mark Zuckerberg, et cetera, they apparently know more about hydroxychloroquine and the coronavirus than board certified doctors." (Marlow: Google Has Diminished Breitbart Search Results 99.7 %—Big Tech Will Do 'Anything In Their Power' To Get Trump Elected by Jeff Poor). The most powerful voices on the internet today are the voices of the reds. Under their aegis, the internet has abandoned political objectivity and become an unabashed weapon of red partisan politics. The political manipulation of search engines. The concealment of antired news outlets from internet users. The elimination of antired traffic and visibility. The suppression of antired news content. Digital censorship employees purging antired information under the guise of protecting public health. The internet reserved exclusively for the red mainstream media and red fake news media. Antired commentators suspended and banned from social media pages. Such are the plans and policies of a new clerical class which has assumed command over cyberspace at the behest of the masses. These clerics of red totalitarian revolution have placed freedom and liberty on an index of forbidden ideas and ushered in an age of social, political and moral regression.

WAR

Fall In: Answer Now In Your Country's Hour Of Need. So ran a British recruitment poster in the First World War. This was a war which defeated a red ideology of militarism, authoritarianism and collectivism promoted by Germany and made the world safe for freedom and liberty. No other war fought since that time against red ideologies has been as morally clear and unambiguous. Every other war fought by liberal allies against the reds has been fought with red sympathizers in the ranks of the allies. The Allied Powers in World War II were the Big Three comprised of Churchill, Roosevelt and Stalin. This alliance of treason and evil was celebrated by the Western masses who saw in the Soviets a progressive force for the advancement of the working class. One hundred years of steadily increasing radicalization of the West has culminated in the twenty first century in a state of actual, physical war waged by the masses against their own liberal democratic culture and has brought about the final victory of Marxism and its race and gender offshoots. This war has seen statues of nonMarxists toppled, removed and sprayed with graffiti. It has seen buildings named after nonMarxists such as Woodrow Wilson renamed. It has seen autonomous zones of resistance zones set up in Portland, Seattle and Denver and spreading red revolution through violence, threats and intimidation. It has seen white people forced to kneel and apologize in public for the crime of being white. It has seen Black Lives Matter commit acts of looting, arson, takeovers of stores and occupations of streets in the name of Marxism and racism, in the name of proletarian power and black power. It has seen the end of meritocracy and the establishment of a regime of preferential treatment on the basis of race and gender in the name of diversity, inclusion and reparations. It has seen a regime of hiring, promotions, admissions, grading and graduation favoring blacks and women and discriminating against white males. It has seen the defunding and dismantling of police departments and the emptying of jails. It has seen commercial products featuring nonMarxist names and images, from Aunt Jemima to Land O'Lakes to Trader Joe's to Uncle Ben's to Cream of Wheat, names and images which are symbols of the capitalist system, rebranded, renamed and effectively removed from the shelves. It has seen nonMarxist sports teams, such as the Washington Redskins, symbols of Western liberal culture, renamed and effectively shut down. It has seen internet search engines concealing search results for antiMarxist news sites such as Breitbart News and The Daily Caller and effectively removing them from the internet. It has seen corporations donating tens of millions of dollars to Marxist and black power hate organizations in the name of combating systemic and endemic racism. It has seen red demands for a lockdown and shutdown of people and economies in the name of protecting public health but in point of fact to abolish personal freedom and shut down the capitalist system. It has seen the street violence of Antifa, a Marxist, red fascist, proletarian terror organization, founded in the 1920s in Germany as the paramilitary wing of the German Communist Party. It has seen chaos, pandemonium and street brawling conducted by the red guards of Antifa and Black Lives Matter. It has seen the rise of a global MeToo movement with its demands that men accused of committing sex crimes against women be presumed guilty as charged and be convicted on the basis of an accusation or a mass of accusations without independent evidence of any kind. It has seen thugs and warlords patrolling the streets and enforcing red law and red order which demands the dismantling of constitutional government. Listen to the red voices of war as they bring violence, rioting, anarchy, disturbance and agitation to the world. As the communist Antifa and Marxist militi groups battle the voices of liberal counterprotest and dissent and storm the courthouses and authorities of law and order. As red crowds and red mobs form into bombs and mortars of red totalitarian politics and become the new officials in charge of the people's departments of gender, race and class dictatorship. As innocent people are killed, streets are torn up, police precincts are broken into, and cities are placed under occupation in the name of social equity and racial justice. As cyclones of chaos and riots smash through the walls and fences of civilization. Night after night of red destruction, red attacks, red protests, red demonstrations, red arson, red vandalism, red terror, and outbursts of red energy and red anger have loaded gunpowder into a cannon. This is the cannon of bloody revolution. The masses have ignited the fuse and sent forth a spectacular explosion of mayhem and gore in every nation in the West. Marching under the banners of black lives, black communities and rights of those oppressed and exploited by the capitalist system, the red majorities in control of the West are Satan's officers, emissaries and riders of an apocalypse: "Several cities across America are bracing for more demonstrations and violent rioting this weekend after another night of lawlessness and unrest boiled over into the early hours of Sunday morning, as Antifa and militia groups prepare for further battle against police officers and counter protesters. Tensions have been heightened at recent demonstrations against racial injustice since federal officials were sent to quell riots in Portland, Oregon, that have continued for more than 50 straight days since the May 25 death of George Floyd while in police custody in Minneapolis. While opposing, heavily armed militia groups in Louisville, Kentucky, avoided violence during demonstrations, riots were declared in Portland and Seattle, following a familiar pattern of peaceful protests devolving into destruction and attacks on police. The chaos in Portland saw rioters break through a reinforced fence surrounding the Mark O. Hatfield US Courthouse in the city's downtown, police said. The courthouse has been a target for rioters, who have repeatedly vandalized and damaged the building over multiple nights. Federal officers have recently been assigned to the building. The huge crowd outside the courthouse included the Wall of Moms and the Wall of Vets. Meanwhile, a Portland resident told Fox News last week that Antifa also has been present at the protests. Gabriel Johnson, a 48 year old Black man and retired Marine, said that after he went to protest outside the courthouse with his American flag in hand on July 19, he was called racial slurs and members of Antifa followed him home. 'These people have nothing to do with Black lives. Our Black community leaders need to stand up and lead because what's happening is they're letting a group of terrorists that don't represent me use me, and that's not right,' said Johnson. People in the crowd Saturday night threw rocks, bottles, and unknown liquids over the fence, and were shining lasers and launching fireworks at the building, police said. As officers tried to disperse the crowd, police said they were hit with bottles and paint balloons. People also shot mortar style fireworks at officers from the ground and from parking garages. Portland police said CS gas and other munitions were used to help disperse the crowd. However, many people wore gas masks and wielded makeshift shields, umbrellas, and leaf blowers to try and thwart police attempts to break up the groups. The crowd dissipated just before 2:30 AM, police said. Several arrests were made. In Seattle, thousands of protesters had initially gathered peacefully near downtown in a show of solidarity with fellow demonstrators in Portland. Those protests also turjed violent leading into Saturday night. Protesters broke through a fence where a youth detention facility was being built, with some people setting a fire and damaging a portable trailer, Seattle police said. At least one rioter broke through a fence line at the police department's East District precinct and threw an explosive device that left an eight inch hole in the side of the building. Rocks, bottles, fireworks, and mortars were thrown at officers as they attempted to clear the area, authorities said. Police deployed sponge rounds, OC spray, and blast balls." (American Protests: Demonstrations, Violent Riots Expected To Continue Throughout The Country by Stephen Sorace). One hundred years of social, political and cultural fermentation have brought forth a cataclysm in the twenty first century. Unleashed by the masses, the red dogs of war have run amok in the courts, in the legislatures, in the civil service, in officialdom, in the media, in Hollywood, in academia, in private foundations, in the entertainment industry, in professional sports and in the Never Trump movement. Clamoring for socialism and tribalism of one variety or another, and agitating for an end to the liberal order of personal achievement and personal flourishing, the masses are in full cry and have smashed through the doors of every home, school and office on the planet. Civilization has had to end in this manner. It has had to end as it has always ended throughout history. It has ended in moral decadence and degeneration because the masses are by their own intrinsic nature morally decadent and degenerate. Their enduring passion is to achieve slavery, security and solidarity, which they venerate as the highest ends known to man, and to abolish human freedom and responsibility. Declared, fought and organized by the masses, the red war against civilization has claimed the West as its latest victim.

HISTORY AS HE SAW IT

Typhus is an infectious disease characterized by fever and delirium. Transmitted by lice, ticks, mites, and rat fleas, it causes mass death during times of war and famine. The dawn of the twentieth century brought the onset of a red ideological typhus the likes of which mankind had never seen before, and during the war and the famine of the soul caused by the decline of civilization, this typhus destroyed nations and states and brought vast swaths of the planet's surface under the control of a red slave empire. During the early decades of the West's decline, when the war and famine of the soul were first rising and gathering speed, one of the most effective transmitters of the red typhus was a journalist from America. Born in Portland, Oregon into an upper class family and a graduate of Harvard College, he was the nation's most famous communist activist and helped to spread the red typhus from coast to coast and around the world. When this world renowned rat flea of the reds died, his activities had infected the masses in every nation and led to the formation of clubs named in his honor and dedicated to the forcible overthrow of the United States government and the abolition of the liberal democratic order. His name was John Reed and his spirited defense of communism and incessant volleys of red propaganda sent shock seismic waves coursing through cities and states and shook the foundations of decent, civilized, law based social order. A defense of the red totalitarian tyranny which took control over Russia in 1917, his book Tens Days That Shook The World sold tens of millions of copies and ignited a firestorm of communist agitation and an epidemic of red fever which would make free societies morally and spiritually unrecognizable. Published by the Communist International, Reed's book is a program and manifesto for the destruction of human achievement in the name of the rights of the working class and the abolition of human freedom in the name of proletarian liberation. The book proclaims that a progressive society is one in which Bolsheviks seize the reins of state power and place freedom and liberty into the jail cells of the Soviets. It proclaims that the rays of human emancipation emanate from a mighty sun called Red Petrograd, the heart and capital of Marxist insurrection. It proclaims that the bourgeois defenders of individual rights and free economic life are corrupt reactionaries who must be swept off the stage of history by the people's army of red assassins. It proclaims that after the communist revolution in Russia, 160 million people who had been oppressed by capitalism achieved liberty through enslavement in the people's order of totalitarian combat. It proclaims that a progressive society is an industrial and agrarian democracy which has abolished the right to own private property, the right to be governed by a constitutionally bound and delimited government, and the right to live life like a human being in freedom and dignity, and has placed every man, woman and child under the relentless, pervasive power of the people's totalitarian revolution. It proclaims that a progressive society preaches class war and asserts the supremacy of brute force. It proclaims that a progressive society has eliminated the propertied classes, nationalized the individual, and reduced the relation between man and state to that between chattel slave and feudal lord. It proclaims that a progressive society has replaced the bourgeois system of free government by the socialist system of class government and spread a reign of class religion, class dogmatism, and class rule by violence and terror. It proclaims that a progressive society has manned the trenches and barricades of class envy and united the workers of the world in a war against civilization. It proclaims that the people's worst oppressor is the capitalist class because this class defends the right of the individual to live, work and flourish for himself, and it must be exterminated and its institutions blown up. It proclaims that a progressive society is one whose citizens are ready, willing and eager to kill innocent people in the name of liberation for the marginalized scum of the earth who acquire wealth by strikes, sabotage and occupations and do not earn it by the sweat of honest labor. It proclaims that liberal political institutions represent the despotism of human freedom and are opposed to rights and interests of the proletariat and must be swept away. It proclaims that a progressive society shoots down, executes and imprisons private entrepreneurs, innovators, industrialists and wealth producers and exiles them to deserts, archipelagos and Arctic regions, so that the people's social, political, cultural revolution and Marxist revolution may triumph throughout the world. Listen to the words of communist leader Vladimir Lenin as he launches encomiums to Reed. A voice in print for the dross and refuse of the world. A reporter in the service of ideologues in their campaign of world destruction. A journalist spilling red ink for the cause of proletarian violence. A newsman peddling false information and seeking to stir up the world with red propaganda. A correspondent whose favorite subject is the justice of despotism and dictatorship, whose favored countries are the sewers and gutters of the world, and whose favorite cause is the promotion of crime and conspiracy under the guise of an international labor movement. A writer selling books by the millions peddling hatred and rage toward the liberal democratic order: "With the greatest interest and with never slackening attention I have read John Reed's book, Ten Days that Shook the World. Unreservedly do I recommend it to the workers of the world. Here is a book which I should like to see published in millions of copies and translated into all languages. It gives a truthful and most vivid exposition of the events so significant to the comprehension of what really is the Proletarian Revolution and the Dictatorship of the Proletariat. These problems are widely discussed, but before one can accept or reject these ideas, he must understand the full significance of his decision. John Reed's book will undoubtedly help to clear this question, which is the fundamental problem of the international labor movement." (Introduction by Vladimir Lenin to Ten Days That Shook The World by John Reed). Reed's book spread a red spotted fever across America which traveled under the name of John Reed Clubs. Established in 1929, these clubs sought to expand the influence of red artists and intellectuals across the nation and across the world and in 1930 they fell under the control of the Communist Party USA. With chapters situated coast to coast, from New York to Chicago to Detroit to San Francisco to Boston, the clubs were centers of agitation, stations of subversion, and cells of an international revolutionary movement staffed by those who were socially conscious, lobotomized by the reds, and hated the world of freedom and liberty. The clubs' galleries, exhibits, seminars, discussion events, literary evenings, and activities in literature, films and the arts served to advance a campaign directed by Moscow, a campaign reaching into every corner of the world, a campaign dedicated to the destruction of Western liberal civilization: "The radical artists and writers of New York have organized the John Reed Club. The group includes all creative workers in art, literature, sculpture, music, theater, and the movies. The purpose of the Club is to bring closer all creative workers and to maintain contact with the American revolutionary labor movement. In cooperation with workers' groups and cultural organizations, discussions, literary evenings, and exhibits will be organized. Hopefully, the organization will be national in scope. For the first time, a group of socially conscious creative workers has been organized in America to compare with existing groups in Europe. Steps have been taken to make immediate contact with writers, artists, and all creative workers in France, Germany, Russia, and Japan." (Workers Art, New Masses, November 1929). When the communists seized power in Russia in 1917, clocks throughout the world marked the event and began spinning backward into the year zero. Reed celebrated this moral and spiritual regression of mankind in his book, and when he died three years later, he was buried in the Kremlin Wall Necropolis in the Red Square, near the Lenin Mausoleum, one of only three Americans to enjoy this highest of red honors. While his body lay in state in Moscow, reds throughout the world paid their last respects to this preeminent symbol of international communism and American treason. A domestic radical raised in the most privileged precincts of the nation, Reed brought journalism down into new depths of proselytizing and partisanship. He resides in the pantheon of reds whose depredations have composed the final chapter of the West.

LIGHTS OUT

Darkness and silence descend upon the hall as the curtain rises. The audience stares transfixed at the images on the silver screen it sees. It is bombarded by a succession of sights and sounds signifying nothing, by a projection of forms without content, story, narrative, cast or meaning of any kind, and it praises this as the highest expression of cinematic art. Devoid of all narrative structure, this genre of cinema is a uniquely made in the West genre; it is Western cinema par excellence; and the masses' enthusiastic reaction to it is part and parcel of the contemporary stage of cultural degeneration. From the pages of the Satanist, theologian and necromancer Faust, and from his romanticist hikers, climbers and wanderers through the centuries, and from his chief professor and academician Immanuel Kant, who proclaimed that the highest form of art consists in the free play of pure forms and sensations without reason or content of any kind, has come the art of formalist cinema and its mind bending, avantgarde, experimentalist screening of the decline and fall of the West. Produced by commercial studios, distributed through mainstream channels, and enjoying vast popular and critical success, the Western Faustian Kantian cinema of formalism has issued from the psychotic frames of its void spaces a program and manifesto for the destruction of human motion picture endeavor. This is a program of romanticist subversion of the true art of cinema and the dwindling community of civilized filmgoers and filmmakers have found it fearsome, terrifying, dismaying and incomprehensible. It proclaims that progressive films are nonnarrative sequences of high voltage electricity. It proclaims that progressive films are science experiments which reject all forms of cinematic grammar and narrative art. It proclaims that progressive films are montages combined without rhyme or reason. It proclaims that progressive cinema is pure cinema which focuses exclusively upon movement, rhythm and composition and rejects all forms of storytelling and narrative. It proclaims that progressive films are studies of mechanical principles and machines in motion. It proclaims that progressive films are surreal combinations of images without rational explanation and sequences of symbols which symbolize nothing. It proclaims that progressive films are pure feasts for the eyes without purpose or meaning. It proclaims that progressive films are devoid of all causal relations connecting events. It proclaims that progressive films reject rational methods of working and are Abstract paintings on celluloid. It proclaims that progressive films are devoid of all narratives, both linear and nonlinear, are out of focus, and feature painting and scratching on film, and asynchronous sound. It proclaims that progressive films are moods of the sea, murmurs in the forest, sounds of keys falling and images of flowers on roads. It proclaims that progressive films are fantastic, surreal, incoherent and without stories. It proclaims that progressive films have nothing whatever to do with events transpiring in reality and are studies of the film medium itself and focus upon grain, photosensitivity and color saturation. It proclaims that progressive films are random juxtapositions of film footage and random collections of physical materials, such as found objects and pieces of other films, pasted onto the film stock. It proclaims that films which are devoid of plots exhibit an intelligence and subtlety which are not present in old fashioned plotted films. It proclaims that progressive films are texts of light refracted in ashtrays. It proclaims that progressive films are explorations of landscapes, investigations of thought processes, and studies of the nature of light. It proclaims that progressive films are moving images of visual thinking and sequences of photographic abstractions. It proclaims that progressive films are compositions of industrial dyes painted directly onto the film. It proclaims that progressive films are compositions of superimposed images set to electronic music. It proclaims that progressive films are compositions of scratched emulsions, painted stock, rapid cutaways and bursts of light. It proclaims that progressive films are devoid of narratives, devoid of sound, and revelations of mystical truths through the subjective act of perception. It proclaims that progressive films are first person experiences, recorded with hand held cameras, of life in the sewers and gutters. It proclaims that progressive films are presentations of autopsies in city morgues. It proclaims that progressive films are assemblages of moths wings and flower petals pasted between strips of mylar. It proclaims that progressive films are explorations of man, nature and the universe through multiple superimpositions, distorted lenses, rapid cutting, rhythmic repetitions, shots out of focus, the use of film negatives, and painting on film. Look at the work of a prophet of formalism who painted psychosis directly onto film stock, frame by frame, a dozen frames per second. Who promoted derangement and delirium as the highest forms of motion picture production in art schools and art institutes throughout the world. Who hand scratched his madness onto endless rolls of emulsion and celluloid. Who helped spread a disease called disorder and make it a vital element of popular broadcasting. Who sought to blank out human consciousness, put the soul to sleep and destroy the mind in the darkness of the theater by reels of collages, titles, sequences, footage and rapid cuttings forming a kaleidoscopic whirl of pure nothingness. Who preached and photographed schizophrenic breakdown and called it experimentalism, avantgardism, formal innovation, and the best offerings of the independent film movement. Enjoying canonical status in CVD collections, art museums, ivy league universities international film festivals and the National Registry of the Library of Congress, the works of Stan Brakhage represent a dance of death and total implosion of cinematic art. Lauded as a hero of the arts by the masses, the critics, the biographers, the hagiographers and the culture at large, Brakhage left a legacy of cinematic wreckage which has buried the seventh art in the twenty first century: "Like Jackson Pollock, one of his earliest painterly heroes, as Brakhage's career progressed he began moving away from representational imagery altogether. During the latter half of his career, he largely stopped using a camera and instead painted directly onto film, an incredibly painstaking process when one considers as many as 24 separate 16 or 35mm paintings would be needed to for each second of screen time. Brakhage taught film at both The Art Institute of Chicago and later the University of Colorado, and would live to see many of the formal innovations of the avant-garde film movement coopted--found footage collage and rapid cutting becoming a staple of MTV, for instance, or the hand scratched titles he'd pioneered appearing in the credit sequence of Seven--while the impetus behind such techniques went largely unnoticed by the culture at large. Honored as the central figure of American experimental film in the 20th century ('experimental' being a term he detested, as did he descriptions of his films as 'hypnotic') with regular MoMA and international film festival showings, a handful of biographies and critical appreciations in print, and a collection of his works given the canonical Criterion DVD treatment and Dog Star Man included in the Library of Congress National Film Registry, Brakhage still seemed unsure of his legacy. 'I have no certitudes,' he said in a 1997 interview, some six years before his death of bladder cancer. 'I'm often in the deepest doubt that maybe everything I've done, and the whole independent film movement, or the entire idea of film as an art, is just a passing madness. If that's so, I have come to an age and a time in my life where that would certainly be bearable, because I would still have left an extraordinary number of beautiful and wonderful people that have given themselves to this possibility. And we have had our dance, whether we were right or wrong.' " (Stan Brakhage: The Art of Seeing by Legacy journal). The film has ended, the lights have returned, the credits roll and the audience gives a standing ovation. The names which appear fill volumes and libraries devoted to the history of cinema. The figures named are united in the view that in films, content, story and cast do not matter, that cinema is an art which is concerned with the how and not with the what, that cinema is an art of means to the exclusion of all ends, and that film director is not an artist but a trick photographer. Robert Altman, Stan Brakhage, Andy Warhol Stanley Kubrick, Ingmar Bergman, Jean Cocteau, David Lynch, Federico Fellini, Werner Herzog, James O'Brien and Simone Casanova. These are the directors of the Faustian formalist Grim Reaper's campaign which has claimed the life of the cinema.

THE TRIUMPH OF LENI RIEFENSTAHL

The film begins with a smooth, continuous movement of the camera through the ruins and statues of ancient Greece, which are surrounded, covered and encircled in smoke. The statues change into athletes and dancers and the film sails through space and time, sails through torch relays linking the nations of Europe, until it reaches the lighting of the Olympic cauldron in Berlin. After the opening ceremony, colossal in size and scale, the film races through dramatic events and spectacular scenes, and the speed never diminishes, the enthusiasm never flags, the commentary never weakens, the music never ceases to rouse the soul, and the viewer is exposed to a world which he has never experienced before in the twenty first century. He is exposed to a world of beauty, form, order, perfection, precision, clarity and clockwork. The film is Olympia and its director was an anachronism of anachronisms, a director who championed Classical Greco-Roman esthetic values in a culture, the culture of the West, which rejected these in toto and during the period of its downfall commencing in the twentieth century, exalted a hyperFaustian, hyperromanticist esthetic of subjectivism, formalism and disorder. The director was Leni Riefenstahl and the world she created in her films was the sunlit idyll of Apollo and it captivated, and has never ceased to captivate, the community of civilized people who yearn to behold pure, unadulterated beauty, defined as a state of rational order, harmony, combination and complementarity. The world of Riefenstahl is a world of Olympic high diving presented as an aerial ballet and fireworks display. It is a world which celebrates the individual body and individual physical perfection. It is a world in which athletes are presented as human physical ideals. It is a world which glorifies Greek antiquity and human forms purged of all failings and imperfections. It is a world which celebrates beautiful bodies sculpted by sports. It is a world of strong, young bodies photographed against a clear blue sky. It is a world imbued with power, achievement and the victory of the intellect. It is a world in which people are staged as angels of bodily purity. It is a world of picturesque towns and cities bathed in noonday light. It is a world of chiseled faces and pantheons of ancient heroes. It is a world of heroic mountain people scaling summits of dizzying peaks. It is a world of moral purity, individual heroism, and perfect natural landscapes. It is a world bathed in pure ennobling light shining down from mountain sides. It is a world in which films are like musical compositions, featuring a build up and crescendo, and leading to a dramatic climax. It is a world which celebrates resolved, determined faces lit up by torchlights and defeating the darkness. It is a world in which columns of men form monuments and march in perfect precision. It is a world which man struggles with nature and achieves victory. It is a world which celebrates the survival of the best, the brightest and the morally fittest. It is a world which stages festivals of beauty and celebrates the esthetics of athletic bodies. It is a world which celebrates the young, male, muscular body. It is a world which celebrates people who are beautiful, strong and self confident. It is a world which launches cinematic peans to ancient Greek mythology. It is a world which celebrates the days of ancient Greece, Myron statues and deities who accomplished death defying feats. It is a world of mortal men who are god like figures, larger than life, and battle the enemies of civilization and prevail. It is a world in which cinematic techniques, such as cranes, tracking rails, slow motion and multiple cameras, are utilized to celebrate the esthetics of human perfection and sports competition. It is a world in which dreamy mists and fast running brooks exhibit beauty, elegance, stylization and grace. It is a world which celebrates physical training and physical strength. It is a world which celebrates people who possess presence, charisma, compelling attractiveness and vision. It is a world in which heroes evoke images of the sun and impose their will upon the masses. It is a world which takes delight in the ideal human form and records the flawless triumphs of disciplined athletes. It is a world which celebrates diving competitors as swooping birds. It is a world which celebrates how people might look and ought to look and not how they happen to look as the neighbors next door. Behold the world of Leni Riefenstahl with its exaltation of strength, order, harmony and excellence. With its singers, orchestras, instruments and spectacles in the service of human greatness and human achievement. With its exaltation of reason and intellect as the salvation of humanity. With its use of bridges, towers and tracks for cameras to record and raise man to a position of supreme power and efficacy. With its high angle shots and low angle shots exalting leaders inspiring the masses with visions of human glory and magnificence. With its crowds roaring admiration for heroes and warriors in the service of liberal reason and humane culture, and its citizens, soldiers and ordinary people marching in formation to hail the triumph of man as a god of purpose, flourishing and thriving. With its rallies cheering and saluting the sentries and statesmen protecting the advance of civilization. With its images and symbols of the human will conquering space and time and human energy harnessing the forces of nature. With its iconography of human force as invincible, human progress as inevitable, and man as the master of the world. Riefenstahl's use of national socialist content in some of her films stands in diametrical opposition to her consistent exaltation of Classical forms and themes. Her rational sense of life and worship of human ideality have inspired freedom fighters, antisocialists, anticollectivists, lovers of beauty and opponents of the reds for decades. Those who dream about the rebirth of art from the sewers and swamplands of formalist psychosis and its portrayal of ugliness and incoherence dream of the soaring flights, the cloud epiphanies and the airplane descents of Leni Riefenstahl: "In May 1934, five months before Hitler and his accomplices held their second Nazi Party Congress in Nuremberg, Germany, Leni Riefenstahl traveled to the city to prepare for the film she would make about this spectacle. She had already impressed Hitler and his minister of propaganda, Joseph Goebbels, with her documentation of the first Nazi Party Congress, Sieg des Glaubens (Victory of the Faith), celebrating Hitler's rise to power. They saw in her style the ability to create an operatic image of a Germany imbued with an overwhelming might, order, and beauty that matched their own vision. So they provided Riefenstahl unstinting cooperation and resources, and, together with her, choreographed the Congress to optimize her film making. She was given a company of cameramen and guards and freedom to construct elaborate bridges, towers, and tracks for her cameras. The result was Der Triumph des Willens (Triumph of the Will)—a Nazi propaganda film widely considered to be among the most effective of its kind. Screens of text open the film, framing Hitler as a savior whose coming began 'the German Rebirth.' The text fades to the first scene: Hitler's airplane flying above clouds, which part to reveal Nuremberg, its streets filled with citizens marching in formation. In fact, the marches had not yet begun. Riefenstahl created the illusion of simultaneity by intercutting footage shot later with that of Hitler's arriving airplane. As the plane lands, Riefenstahl cuts to throngs of admirers, forests of arms raised in the Nazi salute. Their dictator emerges, like a god descended to earth. The classical music overlaid onto these scenes swells to a triumphant crescendo as the crowds roar, 'Heil! Heil!' From its ecstatic beginning sequence, Triumph of the Will moves into the thick of the events of the Congress in scene after scene—staged for the camera—of rallies, speeches by Hitler and other key Nazi Party leaders, and masses of workers and soldiers standing or marching for Hitler's review as crowds of Aryan onlookers cheer and salute. Riefenstahl cunningly shot and edited her footage to scramble the viewer's perspective: she made crowds appear bigger, spaces seem vaster and more complex, and time itself feel alternately elongated or compressed. Extreme high and low angle shots of Hitler delivering his histrionic speeches position him as master of a world of impeccably ordered subjects. Swastikas and other Nazi iconography fill nearly every scene. The cumulative effect is a sense of the Nazis' invincibility and the inevitability that they will remake Germany in their image." (Triumph des Willens by MOMA Learning). In an age of cultural disintegration marked by formalism in the arts with its streams of subjective perceptions and total disorder, Leni Riefenstahl stood a universe apart. The content of some of her popular films presented national socialist propaganda but her fundamental view of man was rationalist and thus opposed to the tenets of national socialism. Her films are flames of Classical greatness amidst a desert of Western Faustian, end stage romanticism. In an art world buried beneath a Kantian tidal wave of formalist manipulation, her work is conspicuous by its championing of the Greco-Roman values of existence, order and perfection. Her work is vilified both because of its Classical themes and its national socialist associations, while the work of her communist counterpart Sergei Eisenstein is lauded. Director of red propaganda classics such as The Strike, October: Ten Days That Shook The World and Ivan The Terrible, Eisenstein is praised as one of the greatest directors in the history of motion pictures. His works have received the highest honors and awards, while the works of Riefenstahl are regularly condemned, ignored and removed from public view. This double standard reveals the dominance of formalism in the arts and the Marxist political tilt of the planet and is proof positive of the character and integrity of Riefenstahl in an age of collapse.

THE AGITATOR

He stands in a downtown square, hatless and drenched in rain, under flickering street lamps, before a cheering mob, and spews out filaments of aggression and fire. He proclaims the need for community organizers to achieve leadership and power and to remake all of society. He proclaims that the owners and creators of businesses did not create their businesses and should not in fact own them but society created them and society should own them. He proclaims that the profit motive is evil and all profits should be abolished, and the owners of businesses should not be paid for their work and should work for nothing like slaves. He proclaims that wealthy people should give back their wealth to society because society is the source of all wealth. He proclaims that people who are successful did not get there on their own but were made successful by society. He proclaims that business success is not the result of intelligence, initiative or hard work but is the result of the contributions and investments made by society and society must receive one hundred percent of the profits. He proclaims that society makes the roads, bridges, inventions, innovations and infrastructures of the world and individuals do nothing. He proclaims that when we succeed, it is not by virtue of our own enterprise but the enterprise of society. He proclaims that nothing is ever accomplished on our own and everything is always accomplished together. He proclaims nobody is on his own and individuals do not actually exist and only society actually exists, and we rise and fall together as one mystical nation, state, community and people. He proclaims that there is something bigger, better, greater and more noble than the self, and that is the nation, the community and the mystical totality. He proclaims that the highest duty of the individual is the duty to serve the nation, state, the hemisphere and the world. He proclaims that the good man is a communitarian and not an individualist and he acknowledges that we are created and constituted by our social relationships. He proclaims that the community is not a mere abstraction or figure of speech but is the highest reality which brings into being the identity of the individual. He proclaims that the individual can never find meaning or fulfillment in his life without belonging to social groups and networks. He proclaims that individuals have a social responsibility to provide for each other's health care and the government has a right to force people to buy health care in order to subsidize the health care of others. He proclaims that a progressive society outlaws living and flourishing for oneself and enforces an obligation to serve and work for sake of the totality. He proclaims that welfare is a natural, inalienable right and every producer of wealth is bound by the duty to support the indolent and the incompetent. He proclaims that a progressive society has abolished individual choice and responsibility and transferred all private areas of life into the public sector. He proclaims that a progressive society has repealed freedom of contract and market exchange and sacrificed the individual to a leviathan marked Collective Decision Making and the Collective Good. He proclaims that a progressive society is predicated upon the belief that the individual is his brother's keeper, that the individual's dreams and aspirations have no moral importance, and that everybody must unite and immolate himself within a single, mystical, global family. He proclaims that the individual is not a free born agent but is born shackled to the chains of social responsibility and society has a right to demand that the individual work to advance the common good and work until he is no longer able to work. He proclaims that the individual's highest concerns must be for the needs of others and interests of the community. He proclaims that the individual is born with both rights and responsibilities: the rights to receive health care, education, food and housing from the wealth earned by others, and the responsibility to offer himself up as a sacrificial lamb to the higher good of the state and community. He proclaims that economic fairness and justice demand that the individual relinquish his rights and become an abject slave in the service of the national purpose. He proclaims that a progressive society is one in which everyone is responsible for creating a universal health care system which will support the class of leeches and parasites. He proclaims that the purpose of the government is not to protect individual rights but to achieve the collective good and burnish the glory of the global village. He proclaims that the individual is nothing more than a cell in the social organism; his rights are nothing more than licenses and franchises granted by society, which can be revoked at any time; and every aspect and detail of his life must be managed by the central office of the people's totalitarian social state. Listen to the words of the agitator which reject the American system of individual rights and proclaim the servitude of the individual to the nation and state. Which elevate duty to others above duty to oneself. Which advocate totalitarian government in the name of love, charity, patriotism and social responsibility. Which promote collective thought, collective work, collective achievements, collective undertakings and the abolition of individual freedom and responsibility. Which proclaim the right of all people to receive health care and a college education on the backs of the creators and producers of wealth. Which proclaim the right of the state to violate property rights and regulate private businesses for the sake of the common good and the welfare of the masses. Which proclaim the right of the state to abolish personal freedom and the private ownership of property and reduce the individual to an asset, a resource, a holding and a chattel slave of the state and community: "We, the people, recognize that we have responsibilities as well as rights; that our destinies are bound together; that a freedom which asks only, what's in it for me, a freedom without a commitment to others, a freedom without love or charity or duty or patriotism, is unworthy of our founding ideals and those who died in their defense. As citizens, we understand that America is not about what can be done for us. It's about what can be done by us together, through the hard and frustrating but necessary work of self government. That's what we believe. So you see, the election four years ago wasn't about me. It was about you. My fellow citizens: You were the change. You're the reason there's a little girl with a heart disorder in Phoenix who'll get the surgery she needs because an insurance company can't limit her coverage. You did that. You're the reason a young man in Colorado who never thought he'd be able to afford his dream of earning a medical degree is about to get that chance. You made that possible. The family business in Warroad, Minnesota, that didn't lay off a single one of their 4,000 employees when the recession hit, even when their competitors shut down dozens of plants, even when it meant the owner gave up some perks and some pay, because they understood that their biggest asset was the community and the workers who had helped build that business--they give me hope." (Second Democratic Presidential Nomination Acceptance Speech by Barack Obama). Listen to the word of the agitator which proclaim the duty of the state to guarantee cradle to grave economic security to all. Which proclaim the duty of diligent, industrious people to support those who are shiftless and without energy, ambition, commitment or responsibility. Which proclaim the right of the state to force businesses to hire unqualified workers in the name of social hiring, open hiring and fair hiring. Which proclaim the necessity to replace the liberal order with a new state and a new economy which rain down health insurance, wage insurance, unemployment insurance, old age insurance, ubiquitous social protection and red totalitarian tyranny day and night upon the individual: "Now, I'm guessing we won't agree on health care anytime soon. (Applause.) A little applause right there. (Laughter.) Just a guess. But there should be other ways parties can work together to improve economic security. Say a hardworking American loses his job--we shouldn't just make sure that he can get unemployment insurance; we should make sure that program encourages him to retrain for a business that's ready to hire him. If that new job doesn't pay as much, there should be a system of wage insurance in place so that he can still pay his bills. And even if he's going from job to job, he should still be able to save for retirement and take his savings with him. That's the way we make the new economy work better for everybody." (State Of The Union Address by Barack Obama, January 2016). The agitator was the forty fourth president of the United States. Before seething, hate filled crowds, upon the battered walls of inner cities, and in homes and offices running through the length and breadth of the land is the shadow of a firebrand hero of the red masses named Barack Obama. Disparaging and diminishing the role of the individual in the creation of wealth and proclaiming the fundamental responsibility of every man, woman and child to advance the needs and interests of the state, Obama brought a century of class war in America to a blazing, apocalyptic conclusion. Voted into power twice by the American people and enjoying their overwhelming support and approbation, Obama has been America's preeminent political arsonist over past seven decades. Rejecting individualism and championing communitarianism, he manufactured accelerants marked Gender, Race and Class Politics, fed them into a red American inferno, and watched his mobs burn down the nation.

AMERICAN JEWS FRONT FOR THE REDS

In science fiction, a time machine transports people backward or forward through time. Traveling at the speed of light, time machines can move in an instant into the very distant past or the very distant future. A walk among Jews in America today is a walk into a time machine in which one is transported back into an age, decades ago, when Jews everywhere supported socialism. American Jews are an anachronism because Jews today outside America are vocal supporters of the cause of freedom. Jews everywhere were once socialist because they were adherents of the Reform movement initiated in Germany by the Enlightenment philosopher Moses Mendelssohn. This movement rejected Orthodox Judaism and in practical terms embraced atheism. It is a sad fact that since the Enlightenment, atheists have supported socialism. During the Enlightenment, to be an atheist meant to uphold the primacy of reason and to reject any and all forms of religion. During the Enlightenment, Jews under the influence of Mendelssohn rejected their own religion and embraced the world of reason and capitalism. With the decline of the Enlightenment, these Reform Jews, like all other atheists, became adherents of a new religion. Rejecting the primacy of reason, these postEnlightenment atheists flew into the arms of another religion which was rising. This was a secular religion which substituted society for God and was the religion of socialism. Instead of demanding the enslavement of the individual to God in heaven, the new socialists demanded the enslavement of the individual to society on earth and demanded the crushing of the individual beneath a leviathan of red totalitarian tyranny. This new class of Jewish socialists, as different from the Enlightenment Jewish capitalists as night is opposed to day, set forth a program and manifesto of socialist enslavement designed to abolish forever the Western liberal democratic order which the Enlightenment Reform Jews had so fervently supported. But this postEnlightenment development of Jews into socialists was halted in the twentieth century and there occurred a deep division within the Jewish ranks. The century saw the division of Jews into two fundamentally opposed philosophical camps: Jews in America and Jews outside America. Jews outside America saw firsthand the cruelty and horrors wrought by socialism. They saw the gulags, the gas chambers, the firing squads, the secret police, the midnight knocks on the door, and the total collectivization of the individual perpetrated under the banners of social obligations and the duty to serve others. They saw all these evils and they recoiled in fear and revulsion and were soon disabused of their socialism and went back to the ways of the Enlightenment Jews and became stalwart supporters of liberal democracy. Insulated from the direct physical attacks and depredations staged by socialists and members of the communist bloc, American Jews underwent no such philosophical transformation and remained dogmatically attached to socialism and continued the Jewish opposition to a free society. American Jews have up to the present day served as faithful defenders of red totalitarianism and they have in consequence cut themselves off from the thinking of Jews outside America. American Jews are dyed in the wool reds and like reds everywhere they are dedicated to the destruction of Enlightenment civilization. Their program and manifesto is the traditional manifesto of the reds and has not changed in essentials in over a hundred years, while the political sympathies of Jews outside America have moved on, and seeing the monstrous reality of socialist practice and the intrinsic evil of socialist theory, have gone over to the side of human liberty and championed the dignity of the human person. American Jews have proclaimed that capitalism is a system of police brutality which targets blacks and the poor. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system of rank injustice because it creates wealth disparities between those who, by virtue of their initiative and intelligence, create wealth, and those who are shiftless and indolent and are prepared to beg, borrow or steal for their sustenance. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has abolished individual rights and industrial civilization and established the interdependence all people with each other and with the earth. Listen to the words of a prominent American Jewish red who promotes communism as the highest form of theism and the supreme expression of humanistic thinking. Who exalts self immolation as the quintessence of human spirituality and the embodiment of political progressivism. Who seeks to establish a network and dialogue connecting reds of all stripes and varieties, from Jewish reds to Christian reds to Marxist reds to national socialist reds, who are united by their hatred of capitalism and its emancipation of the producers and achievers of the world. Who proclaims that a spiritual person transfers the worship of God to the worship of society and campaigns for the enslavement of the individual to society in the name of love, kindness, righteousness and justice. Who proclaims that the construction of a world in which human rights have been eliminated and the self has been abased beyond recognition represents the highest values of the best and highest type of person. Who proclaims that civil rights means the destruction of individual rights and the segregation and extermination of the class of innovators and entrepreneurs. Who proclaims that virtue and good character demand that we reject the present world of freedom and capitalism and blast it away with the bombs and missiles of red terror. Who proclaims that a progressive society has raised the consciousness of its citizens to fight for feminism, black nationalism and proletarian supremacy and disenfranchise white, successful males and expel them from the human race. Who proclaims that the liberal order is a system in which homosexuals are not allowed to marry each other and a woman can never get elected president and it must be replaced by the red equalitarianism of the jungles and the steppes. Who proclaims that the good man never accepts what is, the world of bourgeois freedom and liberty, but always strives to achieve what can be, the world of socialism and servitude. Who proclaims that a progressive society preserves, protects and defends the interests of the working class by ensuring that the media are red, the universities are red, the political leaders are red, and all wealth and power are concentrated into the hands of the people's red commissars. Who proclaims that the best and highest political system is one which foments class war, race war and gender war, turns back the clock on modern industry and technology, and accomplishes all these goals in the name of peace, social justice and ecological sensitivity. Who proclaims that a progressive society is a red democratic dictatorship which has transformed the attitudes and outlook of people young and old to accept slavery as a natural, normal and necessary way of life, and unleashed the people's red guards to oppress, victimize and marginalize those who fight for the rights of man: "Most people yearn for a different kind of world, but they think it is unrealistic to struggle for what they really believe in, since they are convinced that nobody else shares that desire with them. This is part of the reason we've created our interfaith as well as secular-humanist-and-atheist-welcoming Network of Spiritual Progressives—you'll see that you don't have to believe in God or be a spiritual person in any respect except believing in the possibility of a world based on love, kindness, and justice). Please join us to support each other in building a world that really does reflect our highest values. If peace, social justice, ecological sensitivity, full implementation of human rights and a society based on love is unrealistic, then we say 'screw realism'—being realistic in a deeper sense is not accepting reality as it is presently presented to us. Most people dismissed the civil rights movement when it began as unrealistic in its attempts to end segregation, dismissed the early consciousness raising feminists in the second wave of women's liberation when it began in the 1960s, dismissed the struggle against apartheid, dismissed the idea that gays and lesbians could achieve the right to legally recognized marriage in the US, dismissed the possibility that a black man or a woman could ever get elected president. The truth is that the realists have almost always been proven wrong when people fight for their highest ideals and ignore the messages from media, political leaders, and the elites of wealth and power as they preach to us to accept what is as the criterion of what can be. As many have said in the past, democracy is the best possible political system if you can keep it, but we want to add that even democratic forms can serve oppressive purposes if enough people get misled into believing that others deserve to be victimized. Only a full democratization of our economic lives coupled with a sustained multigenerational transformation of consciousness away from every form of othering of those with less power can make democracy survive. (A Guide For How Progressives Can Transform July 4th Into Interdependence Day by Michael Lerner). American Jews and Jews outside America confront each as strangers and enemies. They confront each other as members of the communist bloc confronted the defenders of the free world. The differences between them are stark and unequivocal and leave nothing in common remaining beyond the word Jew. While Jews outside America support deregulation, privatization, tax reductions, Donald Trump, Benjamin Netanyahu, the Likud Party, and the right of Israel to exist, expand, conquer and eliminate the Arab lands of terror, savagery, superstition and regression, American Jews support none of above. While Jews outside America are battling to save Western liberal civilization, American Jews are giving aid and comfort to its mortal enemies: the twin monsters of Marxism and Islam. Small in number but loud in volume, American Jews are working assiduously to lower the curtain on the progress and enlightenment of mankind.

GOTHAM CITY REDS

A cesspool is an underground container used for the storage of sewage. Physicians throughout history have attributed a primary cause of disease to the miasmas emanating from the sewage in cesspools. Situated on the Atlantic coast at the mouth of the Hudson River is a major city and port called New York. Consisting of five boroughs, Manhattan, Brooklyn, Bronx, Queens and Staten Island, and boasting a population of over 8.5 million, New York City was taken over by an ascendant red majority in the 1960s and over the past seven decades has become the preeminent cesspool of the nation, storing a concentration of moral sewage put there by the mobs and their agitators without precedent in the history of the nation. Sending up an oppressive, unpleasant, unhealthy cloud of mass politics whose foul odor can be perceived from coast to coast, New York City is a symbol and embodiment of all that is sick in America and is the nation's loudest, clearest and most recognizable signpost pointing to its irreversible decline and fall. Look at the waste water gathering, collecting, rising and igniting in the precincts of a city whose culture, politics and residents exemplify, as nothing also does in America or the West, the mental, spiritual and social deterioration wrought by adherence to the tenets of today's ruling religion: the gender, race and class religion embraced by the radical left. Look at a city ravaged by accelerating levels of crime, taxation and disease. Look at a city whose social distancing regulations have been designed to shutter businesses and have succeeded in doing just that and have led to the closures of JC Penney, Kate Spade, Subway, Le Pain Quotidien, Nieman Marcus, Victoria's Secret and the Gap. Listen to the words of Michael Weinstein, chief executive officer of Ark Restaurants, which have publicly denounced the ruling red dispensation and its hostility toward private enterprise, its program of confiscatory social taxation, its asphyxiative social regulations, and the epidemic of anarchy and violence which it has unleashed upon the streets, the squares and the business centers of the city: "There's no reason to do business in New York. I can do the same volume in Florida in the same square feet as I would have in New York, with my expenses being much less. The idea was that branding and locations were important, but the expense of being in this city has overtaken the marketing group that says you have to be there." Look at a city whose shops have no customers. Look at a city whose business districts have been laid waste to by riots and looting. Look at a city whose shutdowns and lockdowns have prevented people from shopping, visiting and going to work. Look at a city whose residents are terrified to leave their homes. Look at a city whose mass transit system is comprised of trains and buses haunted by the ghosts of vanished riders. Look at a city locked in a vice grip of fear and trembling by the red guards of Antifa and Black Lives Matter. Look at a city in which murder statistics have skyrocketed, black racist agitators break into shops, Marxist revolutionaries take over blocks, and far left political leadership has brought civilized people to their knees. Look at a city whose radical mayor has reduced police funding by one billion dollars, removed public statues of nonMarxists such as Theodore Roosevelt, and sprayed black racism and black power across the streets. Listen to a description of a city which has spiraled into moral and economic collapse fueled by red policy prescriptions. Which has enacted socialist policies and nationalized the life activities of the individual. Which has enacted communist policies and increased the size of the state sector to infinity. Which has taxed and borrowed money to finance an everexpanding state leviathan. Which has declared war against private enterprise and prevented businesses from flourishing and employing people. Which has dismantled and defunded the apparatus of law and order and cheered when crime statistics sprayed death and destruction across streets and neighborhoods. Which has robbed Peter to pay Paul and repainted homes in the sickly colors of social welfare. Which has fed the cancer of totalitarian government and padded its offices and payrolls by confiscating the wealth earned by the producers and achievers. Marching under the banners of a progressive agenda, the reds in command of New York have constructed a bankrupt poorhouse and den of iniquity inhabited by vagrants, vandals, beggars, thieves, marauders, psychopaths, drug addicts and degenerates incapable of performing honest labor or engaging in legitimate economic enterprise. Occupied by human scum which refuses to live anywhere or work anywhere, a cesspool called New York is speeding on a satanic subway ride into the year zero and into the implosion of the West: "When Bill de Blasio took office as the new Mayor of New York City back in 2014, many on the right looked at his policy prescriptions and predicted the rapid reversal of the City's economic revival, potentially followed by rapid economic collapse. But not me! As I had originally written in this post of April 16, 2013, the consequence of bad—even disastrous—economic policy is not immediate economic collapse, but rather what I called 'gradual relative decline.' That post looked particularly at Venezuela, then 15 years into the rule of Hugo Chavez, and far into the process of adopting over the top socialist policies that a Comsymp NYC Mayor could only dream about—everything from nationalization of most of the economy, to doubling the size of the state sector, to government deficit of 15% of GDP, and so forth. And yet, in its official (fraudulent) statistics, Venezuela was still showing economic growth, just not as fast as the growth in countries that allowed private enterprise to flourish. But could de Blasio, through the magic of destructive progressive policies, actually turn New York City around from the strong growth that it was experiencing when he took office, and bring back the decline of the 1960s through 1993? If you don't follow New York City statistics closely, it can be hard to keep in mind just what a great situation de Blasio got handed by his 20 years of at least nominally Republican predecessors (Giuliani and Bloomberg). To rattle off just a few numbers, over the course of the Giuliani/Bloomberg years (1994 to 2013), annual murders declined from 2245 in the peak year of 1990 and 1946 in 1993, to 322; people on welfare declined from nearly 1.2 million to about 357,000; and population (after declining from 7.9 million in 1970 to about 7.3 million in 1993) grew quickly to a new record of almost 8.5 million in 2013. Employment and economic activity had also advanced strongly. And then you have the fact that a New York City mayor only has limited policy levers at his command. For example, since the day he started his mayoral campaign, de Blasio's biggest priority has been to increase the local income tax on the rich by some unspecified amount, allegedly to finance one or another item on the progressive agenda. For that he needs the cooperation of the State Legislature, which so far has not gone along. Nationalization of industry is also not within a New York City mayor's purview. But de Blasio has managed to find several ways to let the cancer of unproductive government grow on his watch. For example, during his now 5+ year tenure, the City budget has ballooned from $68.7 billion in 2013 to $88.7 billion this year; the headcount of City employees has comparably ballooned about 14%, from 296,000 to 338,000 (nobody knows what they do); the City agreed to huge retroactive pay increases for the workforce that had been resisted for years by Bloomberg; spending on the homeless has more than doubled, which has only led to the number of homeless soaring; subway service and publicly owned housing have badly deteriorated despite greatly increased funding; and so forth." (Mayor de Blasio Sets Out To Accelerate New York City's Decline by Francis Menton). On blood stained streets, the moral sewage rises, advances and carries bullet ridden bodies down into an ocean of national degeneration. The victims of crimes wail and shriek as they collapse to the ground. Random gunshots and stabbings pierce the night air. A gang of youths spray paints security cameras before it robs a corner store. The police sit imprisoned in their patrol cars while howling wolves hurl glass bottles at them. Its citizens are enamored of chaos and condemn law and order as the shackles of bourgeois gentrification. Its citizens condemn capitalism as a system of plutocracy, patriarchy and white privilege and applaud the onset of Marxist revolution and dictatorship. Communist immigrants and communist hipsters crawl across the boroughs like a plague of rats and devour decent, law abiding people. Once the glittering crown jewel of America, New York has descended into a cesspool filled, occupied and set on fire by the reds. This cesspool holds a burning malarial fever swamp of lawlessness, mob rule, tribal identity politics, and the decline and fall of the West.

SATAN'S MISSION TO MASSACHUSETTS

A tornado is a mobile vortex of violently rotating winds whose centers are cold, dark and airless. People trapped in the eye of a tornado are trapped in a zone of death and can die of asphyxiation or exposure. In the early decades of the twentieth century, a red majority achieved ascendancy in America and brought the lightning storms and funnel clouds of socialist revolution sweeping across the land. Civilized people trapped in the center of these fearsome columns of social chaos were trapped in a whirling madness of moral darkness, moral void and moral winter and saw society around them begin to die. They saw apparitions of the Grim Reaper who had come to claim as his prize victim the liberal democratic order which had defined America since its founding. On April 15, 1920 in the town of South Braintree, Massachusetts, the Grim Reaper sent two of his most loyal henchmen to commit a daring crime in broad daylight. Their names were Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti and their task was to rob the Slater and Morrill Shoe Company. On that day, they shot and killed the company paymaster Frederick Parmenter and his guard Alessandro Berardelli. They robbed these men of the payroll they were carrying, totaling over 15,000 dollars, and directed the stolen money to finance the communist campaign of terror bombing which was laying waste to the nation. In June 1921, the trial of Sacco and Vanzetti, charged with murder and robbery, commenced. The case presented against the reds was overwhelming and only the red masses and their intellectual voices rejected it and proclaimed the innocence of Sacco and Vanzetti, and have proclaimed their innocence up to the present day. Civilized people who heard the case and looked at the evidence came to a different conclusion and supported the findings of the jury which condemned the accused. They heard that seven eyewitnesses placed Sacco at or near the scene of the crime around the time of the robbery and murders. They heard ballistics experts testify that the bullets came from Sacco's pistol and their certainty was based upon examinations of barrel riflings and bullet scratches. A bullet possessed a scratch made by a defect present in the rifling of Sacco's pistol. They heard that a cap found at the scene of the crime was a cap owned by Sacco. They heard that four witnesses placed Vanzetti at or near the scene of the crime around the time of the acts. They heard that the gun found on Vanzetti at the time of his arrest was the gun which the paymaster guard Barardelli had carried at the time he was shot; they saw the identification made through the repaired hammer. They heard the testimony of an eyewitness who saw Sacco kill both Baradelli and Parmenter: "Q. What had you heard before you opened that window? A. I heard about three shots before I opened the window. Q. Did you look out of the window? A. Yes, sir. Q. And what did you see when you looked out? A. I seen this fellow shoot this fellow. It was the last shot. He put four bullets into him. Q. You saw this fellow shoot this fellow. Who was the man that was shot? A. Berardelli. Q. Did you know him by sight or to speak to before that? A. No, sir. Q. You have learned since his name was Berardelli? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where was he, the man who was shot, with reference to your window as you looked out? A. Right in the front window where the stuff is. Q. You were in that window space? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you were looking down towards Pearl Street? A. Yes, sir. Q. What did you see there? A. I saw him lying down. Q. Who? A. Berardelli, after the shooting. Q. How was he lying, do you remember? A. He was lying on his left side, and then he rolled over on his back Q. Now, what did you see that man on the street do after he shot, as you say, the fourth shot? You said it was the fourth shot? A. Yes. Q. Then what did you see him do? A. He ran towards the automobile. The automobile was coming up slowly. Q. Where was the automobile when you first saw it? A. It was a few feet away from Berardelli. Q. What did you see happen when the automobile came? A. He started to fire. He put a bullet over towards where Parmenter fell. Q. Who did? A. The fellow that was doing the shooting. Q. That same fellow? A. Yes. Q. What did Parmenter do? A. He fell there in the lot where the restaurant is now. Q. Did you see him fall? A. Yes, sir. Q. After he put a bullet over there, what did you see him do? A. Then he flashed a gun over towards the factory. Q. What factory? A. Rice & Hutchins. Then he jumped into the automobile, and put two bullets right over the window where I was standing. Q. Then what did he do? A. He went away." Civilized people heard a ballistics expert testify that the bullets recovered were fired from Sacco's Colt pistol: "Q. Have you an opinion as to whether bullet 3 was fired from the Colt Automatic which is in evidence? A. I have. Q. And what is your opinion? A. My opinion is that it is consistent with being fired by that pistol. Q. Is there anything different in the appearance of the other five bullets--A. Yes. Q. Just a minute, I had not completed. --the other five bullets to which I have just referred, which would indicate to you that they were fired from more than one weapon? A. There is not. Q. Are the appearance of those bullets consistent with being fired with the same weapon? A. As far as I can see. Q. Captain, did you understand my question when I asked you if you had an opinion as to whether the five bullets which you say were fired from an automatic type of pistol were fired from the same gun? Q. Well, have you an opinion? A. I have. Q. What is your opinion as to the gun from which those four were fired? A. My opinion is, all five were fired from the same pistol. Q. What is the basis of your opinion? A. By looking the marks over on the bullets that were caused by the rifling of the gun. It didn't seem to cut a clear groove; they seemed to jump the lands, and seemed to make a different mark than the lands would make. Q. Will you select two bullets, I don't care which, so that I can show the jury what you mean by that mark? (The witness picks out two bullets.) Q. You referred to what, Captain? What is the irregularity of the different bullets that you refer to? A. There is marks there other than what it would make if it stayed in the lands all the time. It would make six cuts there. You see there are a whole lot of cuts there. Q. Do you find that same peculiarity in all those? A. I do. Some don't go so far, but there is a similarity. Q. How many lands are there to a Savage automatic? A. Six. Q. And by the lands again you mean the raised-the ridges in the barrel? A. Yes. Q. So, I take it, it must necessarily be that there are six grooves in the bullet? A. Yes. Q. Caused by those lands? A. Yes. Q. And you find additional marks other than those six grooves? A. Yes, I do." In 1921, Sacco and Vanzetti were convicted of first degree murder. In 1927, they were sentenced to death. Civilized people heard the opinion of United States Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes in his denial of a stay of execution for the defendants. They heard Holmes state that the accused had received a fair and impartial trial and were found guilty as charged on the basis of proof presented beyond a reasonable doubt. They heard the judge state that despite the violent pressure exerted by mobs and the corrupt verdict handed down in the frenzied, insane, red court of public opinion, the ends of justice must be served and the accused must pay the ultimate price for the murderous deeds they committed: "It is asked how it would be if the judge were subsequently shown to have been corruptly interested or insane. I will not attempt to decide at what point a judgment might be held to be absolutely void on these grounds. It is perfectly plain that although strong language is used in the present application, the judgment was not void even if I interpret the affidavits as proving all that the petitioners think they prove--which is somewhat more than I have drawn from them. I do not consider that I am at liberty to deal with this case differently from the way in which I should treat one that excited no public interest and that was less powerfully presented. I cannot say that I have a doubt, and therefore I must deny the stay." Sacco and Vanzetti came to America from Italy in 1908 and settled in Massachusetts. They were members of a domestic communist group headed by Luigi Galleani, another Italian immigrant. Galleani advocated the violent overthrow of the capitalist system and the establishment of a communist dictatorship in its place. In the Boston area, there were hundreds of Galleanists and Sacco and Vanzetti were among the most active and prominent.

Listen to Sacco's words as he dissembles, pretends and falsifies, and advocates communism under the guise of anarchism. As he defines anarchism, not as a system of no government, no police, no judges, no bosses and no authority, but as a system of communist government, communist police, communist judges, communist bosses and communist authority. As he advocates a system in which red mobs, their red parties and their red warlords control everything and everyone and enforce universal sacrifice, immolation and enslavement under the banners of justice, equality, cooperation and comradeship: "Anarchism means no government, no police, no judges, no bosses, no authority. The people own everything—work in cooperation—distribute by needs—equality, justice, comradeship." True anarchists reject all forms of government because they reject all forms of morality, and they advocate moral subjectivism. Advocating social responsibility and a social form of morality, Sacco and Vanzetti necessarily advocated government, expansive government, confiscatory government, omnipotent government and red totalitarian tyranny, to enforce their social morality. One day in California in the new millennium, a man was browsing through boxes at an auction and unearthed a live bomb which promptly exploded in the faces of the reds. He discovered a letter dated 1929 from Upton Sinclair. The author had just published a book called Boston about the trial of Sacco and Vanzetti. In the letter, Sinclair describes a meeting he had with Fred Moore, Sacco and Vanzetti's defense lawyer. The meeting was in a hotel room in Denver and Sinclair states: "Alone in a hotel room with Fred, I begged him to tell me the full truth. He then told me that the men were guilty and he told me in every detail how he had framed a set of alibis for them." In a desperate attempt to save their comrades, the reds descended to the depths of fraud and dishonesty. They proffered confessions of the Sacco and Vanzetti murders made by Celestino Medeiros, a convict in jail for murder, and by the Morelli crime family, both of which were dismissed by the courts as unreliable, untrustworthy and untrue. In a finale to the red campaign to exonerate Sacco and Vanzetti, Massachusetts Governor Mike Dukakis, in the face of ballistics and eyewitness evidence which had been reviewed and rereviewed by Massachusetts state courts and commissions and by the United States Supreme Court, issued a proclamation. On the fiftieth anniversary of the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti, he declared the date to be Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti Memorial Day, and stated that Sacco and Vanzetti had not received a fair trial. Civilized people were shocked at these actions and asked themselves what outrages were next in store in the red campaign to exonerate the guilty. In 1927, Sacco and Vanzetti were executed for their crimes. But they did not die. They were alive in the bombings and riots staged by the reds which soon engulfed America and Europe. They were alive in the red menace which spread like a cancer across the soul of the West. They are alive in the present day, stalking the earth, fueling tornadoes of political violence, frightful symbols of the age of terror.

1917: AMERICA JOINS THE REDS

In November 1917 in Russia, the earth opened up into a mighty chasm, a chasm called mass politics, and swallowed up human civilization. At this time, the Bolsheviks led by Vladimir Lenin seized power in a coup and put an end to all pretense and semblance of social order which had existed in the country. This event had been years in the making; it was the climax of a fever called cultural degeneration which had gripped the world at the dawn of the twentieth century; and the nations of the West were stung by it and tumbled, one by one, into the abyss. In America, the decline and fall of freedom and liberty was particularly tragic because at the entrance to the nation stood the Statue of Liberty, the symbol and embodiment of a constitutional republic which for over a century had been the guide, inspiration and shining City Upon A Hill for freedom fighters throughout the world. In 1917, after the Russian Revolution, the seething red masses of America finally burst into flames and burned down the house of American liberal democracy. A nation forged from the Boston Tea Party of 1773, the signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1776, and the surrender of the British Army at Yorktown in 1781 now went up in smoke and out of the smoke emerged a clenched fist holding a red flag, and this fist and this flag told a story of the fearsome and terrifying future of the republic. Besmirching every chapter of the nation written with the hero's quill of blood and tears up to that point, this story commenced with the activities of Luigi Galleani and his followers. Emigrating to America in 1901, Galleani attracted attention in communist circles throughout the nation and was praised as an effective and spellbinding tub thumper from the gutter. He became editor of La Questione Sociale, the leading Italian communist journal in America. He advocated subversion, direct action, and the "propaganda of the deed", or the use of violence and terror to eliminate the creators of wealth and overthrow the free institutions which protect them. His followers celebrated his ability to incite people to commit acts of violence: "You heard Galleani speak, and you were ready to shoot the first policeman you saw". (Anarchist Voices: An Oral History Of Anarchism In America by Paul Avrich, quoting Carl Boda). Galleani founded and edited Cronaca Sovversiva (Subversive Chronicle), a communist newsletter which had thousands of subscribers. It published the names, addresses and personal details of businessmen whom it condemned as tyrants, oppressors and enemies of the people and advocated their assassination. He published a booklet entitled La Salute E In Voi! (Health Is In You!). Described as a "must have for any proletarian family", the booklet was a manual for bomb making which provided the chemical formula for making nitroglycerine. In 1914, he published Faccia a Faccia Col Nemico (Face To Face With The Enemy) in which he praised communist bombers and assassins as heroes and martyrs of the working class. In 1917, the Galleanists commenced a reign of terror which garnered accolades from the American people and made the nation sign up for communism. In that year, Galleanist Mario Buda constructed a black powder bomb with an acid delay detonator which exploded at a Milwaukee police station. Police had brought it there after it was discovered in a church basement. The explosion killed nine policemen and a female civilian. In 1918, Galleanists bombed the Philadelphia homes of the president of the Chamber of Commerce, the Acting Superintendent of Police, William Mills, and Judge Robert von Moschzisker. The homes suffered heavy damage and at each site, the Galleanists scattered leaflets which stated: "The priests, the exploiters, the judges, the police and the soldiers: your time is coming to an end." In February 1919, the Galleanists distributed a flyer throughout the nation which announced the coming of a communist cyclone whose waves, floods, squalls and storms would pulverize and scatter the American institutions of liberty and law: "Deportation will not stop the storm from reaching these shores. The storm is within and very soon will leap and crash and annihilate you in blood and fire. We will dynamite you!" (quoted in Sacco and Vanzetti: The Anarchist Background by Paul Avrich). In June 1919, Galleanists exploded eight bombs simultaneously in major American cities. The targets were the homes of judges, politicians businessmen, a mayor, an immigration inspector and a church. The bombs contained thirteen kilograms of dynamite together with metal slugs to act as shrapnel and were housed in steel pipes. Among the targets was Attorney General Mitchell Palmer, who had supervised nationwide police raids which led to the deportation of 556 communists to Soviet Russia. The reds condemned the Palmer raids as illegal because they were warrantless. In point of fact, the state did not require a warrant to arrest an individual caught in flagrante delicto. The reds who were apprehended were caught in the act of planning to overthrow the United States government by force and violence. The bomb blast detonated by the communists destroyed Palmer's house and hurled neighbors from their beds. The bombs were accompanied by a flyer which justified mass murder, mass bloodshed and universal destruction in the name of class war. Which condemned liberal democracy as a tyrannical institution and sought to replace it by the dark power of socialist dictatorship: "War, class war, and you were the first to wage it under the cover of the powerful institutions you call order, in the darkness of your laws. There will have to be bloodshed; we will not dodge; there will have to be murder: we will kill, because it is necessary; there will have to be destruction; we will destroy to rid the world of your tyrannical institutions." (Sacco And Vanzetti: The Anarchist Background by Paul Avrich). In 1920, Galleanists placed forty five kilograms of dynamite together with 239 kilograms of cast iron sash weights and a timer set detonation on a horse drawn carriage on Wall Street during lunchtime. The explosion killed thirty eight people, severely wounded 143, caused today's equivalent of 26 million dollars in property damage, and destroyed the interior of the J. P. Morgan Building across the street. In January 1919, 35,000 communist shipyard workers in Seattle went on strike and appealed to other local workers to join them in a general strike. In February, 100 communist unions joined them and 60,000 workers staged a general strike which shut down the city, bringing commerce, schools and streetcar service to a halt. The Chicago Tribune described the Sovietization of Seattle: "It is only a middling step from Petrograd to Seattle." In the summer of 1919, communists instigated race riots across the nation, from Arizona to Chicago to South Carolina to Washington DC, and called upon blacks to overthrow the government. Targeting black neighborhoods and communities, they advocated totalitarian dictatorship in the name of racial equality and labor rights. They extolled the Soviet Union as an equalitarian monster and oppressor whose proletarian people's party rounds up and lynches the voice of liberty without respect to race or color: "Contrast the violence in America with the Soviet Russia, a country in which dozens of racial and lingual types have settled their many differences and found a common meeting ground, a country which no longer oppresses colonies, a country from which the lynch rope is banished and in which racial tolerance and peace now exist." (Reds Are Working Among Negroes, in The New York Times, October 19, 1919, quoting a communist publication). The communists sought to organize black workers in a race and class war to overthrow the liberal democratic order and bring civilization to its knees: "Negroes must form cotton workers' unions. Southern white capitalists know that the negroes can bring the white bourbon South to its knees. So go to it." (Reds Are Working Among Negroes, in The New York Times, October 19, 1919, quoting a communist publication). In September 1919, communists led the Boston police force on an illegal strike. Days of lawlessness ensued until members of the State Guard supported by thousands of volunteers restored order. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge described the lengthening shadow of the reds over the police, the labor movement and America: "If the American Federation of Labor succeeds in getting hold of the police in Boston it will go all over the country, and we shall be in measurable distance of Soviet government by labor unions." The Ohio State Journal condemned the red policemen as deserters to America, a disgrace to their badge, and unfit to enjoy the benefits of citizenship or office: "When a policeman strikes, he should be debarred not only from resuming his office, but from citizenship as well. He has committed the unpardonable sin; he has forfeited all his rights." The red policemen's war against public safety and security was condemned by Massachusetts Governor Calvin Coolidge: "There is no right to strike against the public safety, anywhere, anytime." In January 1919, general strikes organized by the reds paralyzed the nation. In June 1919, Attorney General Mitchell Palmer's house lay in ruins after a bomb attack staged by the reds. In the summer of 1919, black communist gangs roamed the nation and beat up whites. In January 1920 on Ellis Island, hundreds of communist awaited deportation to the Soviet Union. These are scenes from an exhibition of degenerate mass politics called America. Red strikes, red walkouts, red disorder, red riots and red murders committed by Bolshevik standard bearers. Step by step, the world's arsenal of liberal civilization descended into national chaos and dissolution. Denounced by communists as a phantom created by red hysteria and a red scare, the red menace which accelerated across America soon after the Russian Revolution announced in words and deeds unpleasantly clear and impossible to avoid, the beginning of the end of the West.

KILLERS IN THEORY, KILLERS IN PRACTICE

The Black Death was the deadliest disease in the history of mankind. Originating in Asia and carried by the fleas of black rats, this epidemic of bubonic plague killed sixty percent of the population of Europe in the fourteenth century. At the dawn of the twentieth century, civilization was stricken by an invasion of moral and spiritual black rats which represented the collectivist branch of Western culture. This was the German branch and in the nineteenth century, it brought forth Marxism, and the evil harvest of this philosophy would be reaped a century later when the masses embraced it as their philosophy, and it set the culture upon a path of irreversible decline. Every page written by Marx was put into practice by Marxists in the twentieth century as they took over and enslaved one third of the world's population and sought to take over Europe and America. The world of Marxist theory has over the past one hundred years become the world of Marxist practice and has lowered the curtain on the progress and development of mankind. Look at the theory and look at the practice of Marxism and one will see a fearsome and terrifying equivalence and congruity. One will see a banner embroidered out of word and deed and held aloft by storming red shirts who have scrawled upon it a message transcribed from the thunder of Satan himself: In Marxist Theory And Marxist Practice: Murder Helter Skelter. The pages of Marx proclaim that a progressive society establishes rule by the lowest, the least intelligent and the least competent classes of society, which are the classes of the proletariat. They proclaim that the proletariat has a right to employ force, terror and direct action in a campaign to seize control over the management, control and ownership of everything in society. They proclaim that people who are ignorant, cruel and without productive capacity are entitled to take over the offices, the factories and the reins of government. They proclaim that utopia is a world without toil, work, effort or strength of character in which wealth drops from the clouds and milk flows through the water mains. They proclaim that truth is a social construct and is relative to class and the truths manufactured today can be overthrown by the party decrees and the Soviet resolutions of tomorrow. They proclaim that a progressive society is a class government in the hands of the unable, the unskilled, the untrained, the scum, the failures and the dregs of the earth. They proclaim that in a progressive society freedom has disappeared, liberty has been deported, decency has been discredited, progress has ground to a halt, fair dealing has been swept aside, and the human personality has been crushed beneath the dead weight of a red leviathan ruling from its degenerate throne of masses, mobs, majorities and numbers. They proclaim that the progress of history will bring about the withering away of the state which is to be followed, not by a condition of anarchy, but by the rise to power of a private gang, a private monopoly, a private government, the dictatorship of the proletariat, the communist party, which is unbound by the minimal strictures of adherence to fixed rules and procedures. They proclaimed that a progressive society is ruled by red czars, red fuhrers, red emperors and red arsonists who have burned down the house of the Western, liberal, Anglo-Saxon, constitutional government and reduced the individual to the level of a chattel slave of a god called Social Responsibility. They proclaimed that a progressive society has transferred ownership and control over the means of production into the hands of proletarian unions and is a syndicate of class politics and class filth. They proclaimed that a good man promotes violence of every description in the name of the marginalized and the victimized and has unlocked the psycho wards to commence a people's revolution against law and order. They proclaimed that the good man is a red revolutionary who recruits nihilists and psychopaths to his cause and trains them in the arts of conspiracy in the darkness, sabotage in the shadows and mass murder in the open square. They proclaimed that the good man is a defender of life and liberty for the lowest and most squalid sectors of society, and calls these sectors the working class, and in the name of the working class sets wheat fields on fire, places dead rats in canned food, spikes logs to destroy machinery, ignites forest fires, burns down mills and logging camps, and spoils farmlands and vineyards. They proclaimed that that the good man is a red activist whose purpose is to overthrow rational order and rational government and to transform society into a raging autocracy of the mob which has mauled all things of value and excellence with its bloody claws. Listen to the description of a red plague which struck America in the early decades of the twentieth century. Look at unassimilated immigrants promoting dissatisfaction and disturbance. Look at ignorant crowds rejecting orderly procedures and the rule of law. Look at red employers and red employees, red capital and red labor, joining hands in a campaign to overthrow liberal democratic government. Look at adventurers exalting political violence as exciting and sensational and smashing up schools and neighborhoods. Look at psychopaths exalting mass murder with sweetness and tenderness and viewing the prehistoric past with longing and affection. Look at the class of the malcontented, the frustrated, the incompetent, the misfits, the aimless, the purposeless, the nonachievers and the troublemakers rejecting reason, virtue and the wisdom of the ages, and enacting the laws of the jungle and steppes as the new laws of the land, and agitating for the establishment of a people's syndicate of thievery and confiscation directed at the decent, righteous people of the world. Look at the citizens in Satan's kingdom who seek to take over the government and turn the universe upside down and install vengeance and sadism upon the throne of power. Look at the volcanic red masses active everywhere in America spewing out class envy and class hatred and burying the City Upon A Hill beneath a rubble heap of oppression, misrule, cultural regression and totalitarian tyranny: "As time has swept on in its endless flight, the people of this nation, in legal and orderly manner, have changed the Constitution, and by amendment added to the fundamental law of the land those things which they, in their combined wisdom, considered necessary improvements. To this plan of continuous and never ending improvement all American citizens worthy of the name, and worthy of citizenship, have in the past and must in the future give undivided and unstinted support. But now, everywhere in this country, thousands refuse to abide by the orderly and legal procedure, time honored and century tried, and advocate a reign of lawlessness and the overthrow of that government which to this date has functioned more successfully for all the people than any other yet devised and tried. We all realize that thousands are against our government, but few of us have stopped to analyze the reasons why this is so. It is very easy to understand how the syndicalists of France in 1848 gained power. The government repressed the workers and France was not a free, self governed republic. It is also easy, knowing of the previous centuries of misrule and tyranny in Russia, to understand the revolution there. But the reasons for Bolshevism in the United States are more complex and not so easy to define and understand. In my best judgment, the following are the major causes of this unrest and anarchy in our own country: 1st. Unassimilated aliens. 2nd. Ignorant Americans. 4th. Red employers. 5th. Unthinking and dishonest adventurers and red misleaders of labor, 7th. Sickly sentimentalists. 8th. Discontented failures and delinquents." (Americanism Versus Bolshevism by Ole Hanson). Black rats seek out the company of people for the purposes of plunder and destruction. The bacterial fleas which they carry kill their victims by the millions. Revolutionary criminals, political criminals, criminal criminals, Marxists in theory and Marxists in practice, the reds commenced an attack on free institutions in the twentieth century. They were the masses, they were the black rats, and they launched a rampage across human civilization. Promoting the commission of crime, entailing the use of force, violence, sabotage, direct action and strike after strike, as the highest calling of the good man, the reds emerged in the nineteenth century from the dark matrix of Marx and have over the past century become the unchallenged masters of the world. These Marxists together their friends, allies, offshoots and derivatives, the Islamists, the multiculturalists, the social constructionists, the moral relativists, the radical feminists, the radical environmentalists, and the supporters of Antifa, Black Lives Matter and the United States Democratic Party, have put forth a frightful program. It is a program which has been met by weakness, conciliation, pandering and capitulation by the voices of liberty on the other side. It is a program of social legislation, business regulation, confiscatory taxation, welfare entitlement, antiindustrial regression and unchecked immigration. The specter and ghost of Marx which haunts and stalks the world has composed a mental placard which encapsulates this program. His black rats have carried it into the sewers and cellars of every soul on the planet. The placard reads: Chaos First! Order Last!

LOCK THEM UP

American Gothic is a 1930 painting by Grant Wood and an icon of American art. It depicts a farmer and his daughter standing in front of their wooden farmhouse. The figures embody the traditional American virtues of resilience, fortitude, steadfastness, empiricism and common sense. These were the virtues which mandated that morality and politics proceed on the basis of facts and logic and that statecraft be defined as soul craft, as the promotion of human flourishing and the punishment of human vice. These were the virtues which affirmed that the ends of justice are not served when liberty is conflated with license and moral vermin are allowed to agitate on the streets and spread poison throughout society. Clear eyed, discerning, perceptive and astute, the figures celebrated in Wood's painting knew in an instant the Devil when they saw him; they knew at a glance the mortal enemies of human civilization; and they knew, with their unshakable level headedness and their solid, sound, good judgment, exactly how these avatars of evil should be dealt with. The farmer and his daughter in Wood's painting, symbols of traditional America which affirmed the precepts of mental health, psychological maturity and wholesome good character, knew that the greatest threat to the progress and well being of mankind were the promoters of socialism who denied the primacy of the individual with his rights, freedoms, dignity and worth and proclaimed that, over and above the individual, stands a mystical, supernatural, unperceivable entity called Society, which has the right and the duty to maul and masticate the individual within its monstrous jaws. The figures in Wood's painting, symbols of the class of right thinking, fair minded Americans who were numerous and respected across the land, knew that the only way to deal with the reds in a manner which was consistent with the principles of justice and morality was to remove them from society and ensure that they never again be allowed to circulate in the company of civilized people. These figures, representing decent, upstanding, law abiding, one hundred percent Americanism, heard the reds say that those who perform unskilled, muscular labor do not receive sufficient wages, and sufficient wages equal all the profits of industry, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that the good man foments class hatred, class suspicion, class discontent and ignites the flame of class revolution, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that the good man calls general strikes, sets up soviets of sewers and gutters, agitates for the overthrow of the government, and enacts his plan of class terror and tyranny, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that the good man teaches employees to hate their employers and to refuse to work unless the employers are removed, expropriated, nationalized and enslaved, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that the system of free enterprise is a system of oppression and exploitation of untrained animals called the proletariat and must be abolished, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that public ownership of the means of production is superior to private ownership of the means of production because the state is superior to the individual, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that the defense of private action, private initiative, private property and private spheres of thought and being has no place in a progressive society, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that the virtues which define the highest type of individual in capitalist society, the virtues of independence, courage, ambition, energy, ability and intellectual capacity, must be discredited and repudiated because they are without social meaning and significance, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that those who have risen through the ranks of society and achieved great success through their own effort must be reduced to chattel slaves of the marginalized and victimized and transformed into cogs in the machinery of the social organism, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that industrialists and entrepreneurs did not achieve what they achieved, but are villains, crooks, robber barons and cheats because society built their wealth for them and society has the right to their wealth away from them, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that the good man smears and slanders all those who live and flourish for themselves and seeks to organize communities and brotherhoods to make the world receptive to the cause of communism. They heard the reds say that an individual has no right to keep the result of his labor and effort but must give it all away to the totality of the people as his social responsibility, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that the state has a right to loot and plunder the wealth created by the achievers so that the proletariat may become rich, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that in a progressive society the individual is not free to work for his own benefit because his life and property are not his but belong to the people, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that people who work for private gain and profit and seek to be compensated for their risks and effort are fire breathing monsters and enemies of the people and must be wiped out, and they said: lock them up. They heard the reds say that the good man innovates, invents and produces wealth without reward, in the manner of a slave, for the benefit of the state and community, and they said: lock them up. They heard a description of the reds who agitated in the sewers and counseled the masses to strike and sabotage. Who declared war on work and production and sought to eliminate goods and services from society. Who unleashed criminals against law-abiding citizens and planned the destruction of the government. Who ruined the lives and sullied the reputations of those who opposed them, those who stood up for the cause of human liberty and fought for the survival of constitutional order. Who preached a creed of class aggression and class combat which sought to turn back the progress and evolution of mankind and make liberal peace a distant memory. Who peddled the deception that such a thing as the community exists as an actual being and promoted the use of force to make people obey its edicts. Who promoted a program of wealth equalization and the universalization of poverty. When they heard these proclamations of the reds issued from the depths of mental illness and moral treason, they sought to round them up and place them where justice demanded they be placed and where they could do no harm: "The strikes in July and August were twice as many as in July and August 1918. Officials of the American Federation of Labor estimate that there are at this writing 2,000 strike situations, meaning strikes going on or imminent. The above figures were taken from Stanley Frost's article in the New York Tribune of September 15, 1919. He agrees with my statement that there has been a 'progressive and pronounced decline in the actual quantity of goods produced.' One of the causes of these strikes is the spread of the Bolshevik beliefs, and the consequent practices thereof. These teachings have destroyed in the minds of thousands the desire to work and produce. They have made criminals of the law-abiding. Bolshevik leaders have planned the destruction not only of government, law and order, but also the destruction of the lives and reputations of all who oppose them. Bolshevism preaches violence, hatred, and revolution instead of peace, progress, and evolution. Lies, crimes, and force are the tools used. Under one name or another it has impregnated the minds of a great number of the workers of our country with its doctrines of sabotage. It has taught the false doctrine that the less you do the more you should have; It has restricted production in many instances 50 per cent. It has taught men to loaf on the job and defraud not only their employer, but civilization and themselves, and it is my belief that it will put to the test our present form of government. All this, and much more, has taken place in a few years in a country where the people themselves govern and where the majority are able, by the exercise of their political rights, to do as they wish. Perhaps the greatest crime of all that it has committed is the teaching of the false doctrine that restricted production means more wealth, whereas the most elementary student must realize that restricted production is premeditated poverty for all." (Americanism Versus Bolshevism by Ole Hansen). American Gothic is housed in the collection of the Art Institute of Chicago. The ideals for which it stands are buried deep underground in the black pools of cultural nonexistence. Were the figures in the portrayed in the picture alive today, they would be aghast at the degeneration of the culture and would see their worst nightmares come true. They would see the reds rising and galloping from all directions and carrying a black gospel of class war, race war and gender war. The police defunded, the jails emptied, the borders dissolved, the law abolished, the government subverted, civilization swept away, revolution raging white hot, and the reds at liberty to roam the land. An ugly, unpleasant, frightening dream experienced a century by simple, ordinary Americans and now transposed onto the plane of reality at the end of the age.

THE ANTIDISCRIMINATION JACKBOOTS

On the night of November 9-10, 1938 in Germany, a pogrom was carried out against the Jews by SA paramilitary forces and civilians. Called Kristallnacht, it left shards of broken glass throughout the streets after the windows of Jewish stores, buildings and synagogues had been smashed. Without precedent in the history of modern Western nations, this mass public attack against private establishments told a fearsome and terrifying story in its shards of glass and set forth a picture of the future which would blacken every nation in the West. This was the picture of an invasion of private spaces conducted by the government in the name of society. The instigator of Kristallnacht, Satan the Statist picked up a shard of glass on the night of the attacks and beheld with glee the future which lay in store for the liberal democracies of the free world. Commencing in the 1960s, a generation after Kristallnacht, the state would smash through the doors and windows of private business establishments and sweep away the fundamental rights of the person which for centuries had formed the basis of decent, civilized societies: the right of the person to freely associate with those of his own choosing and the right of the person to manage his own property as he sees fit. Satan saw in the shard of glass, beyond the background of the smoking rubble and ruins of the Jewish shops, the script and scenario of the decline and fall of the West into the savannahs and swamplands of totalitarian subjugation, and feelings of pride and satisfaction surged through his heart. He saw his agents and henchmen, the reds, the communists, the fascists and the socialists of all stripes and varieties, proclaim that a progressive society calls places of private accommodation places of public accommodation and outlaws racial discrimination in every private restaurant and hotel in the land. They proclaimed that a progressive society forces people to surrender the rights guaranteed to them as free born agents and place their property, their shops and stores, in the service of the state. They proclaimed that a progressive society rejects the principles of freedom and liberty and lines them up before the people's firing squads because it rejects the principle that a private business owner has a right to select his own associates and to serve those whom he wishes to serve. They proclaimed that a progressive society worships at the altars of the state and its antidiscrimination commissions and constructs monuments commemorating the death of private property. They proclaimed that the notions of property rights, privacy rights and associational rights have been completely discredited by the moral and political progress achieved by mankind which recognizes only the legitimacy of social rights and the rights of the state. They proclaimed that there is no right of individuals to discriminate on their own property because there are no individual rights of any kind and what are called rights are nothing more than gifts from the community which can be revoked at any time. They proclaimed that the notion of a general, abstract principle of liberty which includes economic liberty and the right of private enterprise is a bourgeois fiction which is as illegitimate as it is incomprehensible. They proclaimed that a progressive society places no limits on the reach of antidiscrimination laws because it recognizes no principle of individual liberty and no principle of private life. They proclaimed that there exists no sphere of individual choice which should be protected against government interference and no place to draw the line against the people's progressive march to outlaw discrimination. They proclaimed that those who fight for the cause of freedom, and include in this cause the freedom to discriminate in one's own sphere of private existence and activity, are mortal enemies of the people's progressive statist society and must be dismissed, shunned and condemned without reservation. They proclaimed that the fight for associational freedom is the fight for a racist, bourgeois right and has no ground or legitimacy in the tradition of progressive constitutionalism. They proclaimed that the right to discriminate in a private business is a meritless legal claim because it conflicts with the masses' inalienable right to be served by private businesses and the masses' inalienable right to regulate all private economic activities. They proclaimed that a progressive society has eliminated the right to privacy and personal freedom and established government imposed antidiscrimination norms on private businesses in order to protect the civil rights of women and nonwhites. Looking at the shard of glass during Kristallnacht, Satan saw the libertarian opponents of antidiscrimination laws argue their case and saw their arguments dismissed out of hand by the red majority which controlled the culture. Satan heard the libertarians argue that private business owners have the right to select their own clientele and associates: "Private business operators have the liberty to select their own associates and the persons with whom they will do business and such liberty is guaranteed by the due process clause of that Amendment." (Browder versus Gayle, District Court, Alabama 1956). Satan heard the libertarians argue that the right of discrimination in private business establishments proceeds from the existence of private spaces, private affairs, economic privacy, free choice, fundamental freedom and the right to exclusion: "This right of discrimination in private businesses is a constitutional right. Discrimination is but another word for free choice. Both the clientele and the business operator have a constitutional right to discriminate in their private affairs upon any conceivable basis. The right to exclusiveness, like the right to privacy, is essential to freedom." (Dissenting opinion by Joseph Mallery in Browning versus Slenderella Systems, Washington State 1959). Satan heard the libertarians argue that antidiscrimination laws violate a business owner's right to his liberty and his property. They are in breach of the substantive, constitutional, civil right of a business enterprise to refuse relations with any person for any reason it chooses: "Title II [United States Civil Rights Act, 1964] infringes upon business owners' rights to their property and their liberty to use it as they choose—rights which are expressly included within the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. The due process clause protects the freedom of a business enterprise to select its patrons and customers. It is a part of a man's civil rights that he be at liberty to refuse business relations with any person whomsoever, whether the refusal rests upon reason, or is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice, or malice." (Brief for Appellees, Katzenbach versus McClung, United States Supreme Court, 1964). Satan heard the libertarians argue that antidiscrimination laws establish a spurious right to be served in private business establishments and thus impress and commandeer private business owners into involuntary servitude: "To deprive a person of this basic right to pursue his calling unless he furnishes labor or services for certain individuals for whom he does not desire to work is obviously coercion if not outright punishment. When an individual is either coerced into working for another or punished for failure to do so, the inescapable conclusion is that such employment amounts to involuntary servitude." (Brief for Appellee, Heart of Atlanta Motel versus United States, United States Supreme Court, 1964). Satan heard the libertarians argue that antidiscrimination laws promote slavery and offend the principles of liberty by their requirement that private business operators provide services to the public against their will as rightless servants of the community: "This provision [the Thirteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution] bans absolutely, and in the most express terms, the claim of any person to force any other person to serve him, for any reason whatsoever. As originally envisioned by its drafters, the Thirteenth Amendment promotes liberty, not equality. A waitress can no more be required to wait on all persons who come into her shop without discrimination than can a cotton picker be required to pick cotton for all who want his services without discrimination." (Maybe It's Time To Look At The Antislavery Amendment: Is it Unconstitutional to Require a White Employee to Serve Negro Customers in 'Places of Public Accommodation'? In US News & World Report, 1964). The spirit of Kristallnacht stalks the planet as the monster of the age. Proclaiming that the state must have total control over the social and economic affairs of the individual, this monster was manufactured in the moral jungles of the masses and its fire breathing statism represents the high water mark of cultural degeneration. In the mid twentieth century, the masses definitively turned against the traditional liberal capitalism established in the Anglo-Saxon world and championed a level of state intrusion into personal affairs without precedent in the history of free nations. In this regime, the owners of businesses have no right to choose their own customers or their own employees as they see fit. Rejecting the right of privacy, the right of free association, the right of property and the civil rights of private business owners, the Kristallnacht monster fueled by the reds has imprisoned the West in a cage called antidiscrimination.

REDS BANG THE GAVEL IN THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY

In the year 2020, eleven years after the election of Barack Obama to his first term as president, forty eight years after the nomination of George McGovern to run for president, twenty six years after the inauguration of Lyndon Johnson's Great Society, seventy six years after the inauguration of Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, and one hundred and twenty four years after William Jennings Bryan delivered his Cross of Gold speech, the reds definitively, conclusively and irrevocably took control of the United States Democratic Party and cast it forever as the party of totalitarian socialism. This final evolution was over a century in the making. The trend commenced with the presidential campaigns of William Jennings Bryan beginning in 1896, which demanded "free silver", the unlimited coinage of silver into money on demand. This policy was opposed by the Republican Party, which supported adherence to a fixed money supply established by the gold standard. From Jennings' first campaign to the nomination of Joe Biden in 2020 to run for president, a steady, unbroken crescendo of red politics in the party has faithfully mirrored the rise and intensification of red politics among the American masses, and the final catastrophic explosion of the reds in the party in 2020 was ignited by the masses' own repudiation of the founding principles of the nation and their enthusiastic embrace of Marxism and its race and gender offshoots. The Democratic Party is the party of America, the party of the majority, the party of the reds, and its rise to predominance over the past century, its command over the nation's political mainstream and establishment, and its nomination in 2020 of the most radical presidential candidate in American history have served as tragic signals and signposts of the self destruction of America and the suicide of the West. One hundred and twenty four years after William Jennings Bryan's first run for president, the Democratic Party has issued a program and manifesto for the establishment of the first socialist government in the nation's history, a regime which will march under the banners of gender, race and class politics and effect radical changes to the American constitution and system of law, economy and society. The new reds in charge of the party have proclaimed that a progressive society has adopted a health care plan called Medicare for All which eliminates all private health insurance. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has established a people's wealth tax which confiscates the wealth of the most successful Americans and distributes the proceeds into the hands of the lowest, filthiest, most squalid and most incompetent members of society. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has raised taxes to one hundred percent, ended the use of fossil fuels, and established a primitive, egalitarian, antiindustrial swampland where once there stood factories and skyscrapers soaring into freedom. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has opened its borders to the dregs of the earth, to the enemies of civilization, and given them free health care for life. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a democratic socialist society whose members have raised their hands and voted unanimously to nationalize every man alive and place his body and soul in the service of the state. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system which serves the interests of an idle class of billionaires who oppress, exploit and steal from the toiling proletariat who creates the billionaires' wealth. They have proclaimed that a capitalism is a system under which working class people suffer in misery and hardship in a bourgeois land called Freedom and Opportunity and cannot succeed or survive for a moment. They have proclaimed that American society exists in a state of dilapidation and disrepair owing to the ruthless plundering and depredations carried out by private capitalists and must be replaced by a regime of public ownership of the individual and public opulence built by the chattel slaves of the state and community. They have proclaimed that America has placed the Mark of Cain upon the planet because it is the only industrialized nation which still upholds the principles of personal freedom and personal responsibility and refuses to provide a cradle to grave welfare for its citizens or reduce them to the level of wards of the state. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is an authoritarian socialist society which has abolished the bourgeois system of individual rights, human flourishing and equal protection under the law without regard to gender, race or class. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has abolished the liberal order of meritocracy and established a regime of social rights, tribal rights, affirmative action, diversity, inclusion and preferential treatment given to women and nonwhites. Listen to the reds who now control the Democratic Party hear them declare war against America and against one thousand years of liberal political order. Hear them condemn capitalism as an inherently, intrinsically, ineradicably, systemically racist system. Hear them proclaim that the class of producers has an obligation to provide housing for the class of nonproducers in mansions encrusted with diamonds and laid with solid gold. Hear them deny the right of free people to work freely unshackled to red criminal syndicates dressed up as labor unions. Hear them seek to abolish the secret ballot at the workplace and allow union organizers to frighten workers into joining the red revolution. Hear them seek to raise taxes on the most productive members of society and penalize ambition and industriousness by a red code of wealth confiscation. Hear them proclaim a universal right to health care to be financed by the honest toilers of the world who are the keepers, guardians, protectors and slaves of those who consume without producing and those who feast in dens of foulness and filth. Hear them seek to defund, dismantle and disband police forces and unleash a terrifying, nationwide wave of red violence. Hear them seek to disarm decent, law abiding citizens and place them at the mercy of rampaging red mobs. Hear them seek to extract money from the white population and redistribute the spoils to the black population in the name of tribal rights, tribal responsibilities and tribal reparations for slavery. Hear them seek to repeal the First Amendment and abolish the free speech rights of private organizations. Hear them seek to dissolve the borders of the nation and submerge civilization within sewers and septic tanks blooming with the alien waste of Islam, Marxism, and cartels of vice and degeneracy. Hear them seek to bring the internet under the control of the government and force internet service providers to supply the public with red content and communications in the name of net neutrality: "1. Systemic racism. The platform begins from the premise that the United States suffers from 'systemic racism in our economy and our society.' Having condemned the country they seek to govern, Democrats offer their radical solutions. 3. Declaring housing a right. Providing housing for everyone is a worthy goal, but declaring it a right is a socialist ruse that creates massive problems. Just ask South Africa, which has a right to housing—and millions living in shacks. 4. Repealing right to work laws. These laws protecting the rights of workers not to join a union have fueled the manufacturing boom in the South, which has prospered while heavily unionized states have lost jobs and population. 5. Card check. This system eliminates the secret ballot in union elections and allows organizers to intimidate workers until they agree to form a union. Even left wing George McGovern oppose card check last time Democrats tried it. 6. Raising taxes. Democrats want to raise taxes in the middle of a recession, falsely describing the 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act as a giveaway to the wealthy, when in fact the middle class benefited most. Higher taxes mean fewer jobs. 7. Medicare for All. Though the platform adopts a public option—too leftwing for Democrats under Barack Obama—it welcomes those who support a Medicare for All approach, paving the way for government-run health care later. 8. Cutting police. Though it is careful to avoid the actual words defund the police, the Democratic draft platform describes minority communities as overpoliced, meaning they will cut police in the areas that need the most help. 9. Gun control. Democrats have not wavered in their determination to restrict firearms ownership—even though the recent unrest made it clear there is no other option for Americans when political leaders refuse to restrain the mob. 11. Reparations for slavery. We fought a bloody Civil War to end slavery. Democrats want to study reparations, even though it would be impossible to determine who should pay and who should benefit, or how it would help anyone. 14. Restricting political speech. Democrats are reviving Hillary Clinton's proposal to pass a constitutional amendment to restrict political speech to overcome the Supreme Court's ruling in Citizens United—overturning the First Amendment. 16. Stopping the border wall. Democrats would abandon the construction of the wall on the US-Mexico border, leaving it vulnerable to illegal immigration and to cartels. They describe the border itself as a manifestation of systemic racism. 20. Net Neutrality. Our economy functions remotely during coronavirus because the FCC repealed Net Neutrality, which regulated the Internet like an old style utility and discouraged investment. Democrats want to restore their failed policy." (23 Extreme Leftwing Ideas In The Democrats' Draft 2020 Platform by Joel Pollak). In 1896, William Jennings Bryan spoke before the Democratic National Convention and condemned the system of sound currency established by the gold standard. Proclaiming "you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold", Bryan transformed the party into a faction of red revolution and ensured that the party of Andrew Jackson and Grover Cleveland would never rise again. Since that speech, one hundred and twenty four years have rolled by in a temporal flash. The distance from Bryan in the late nineteenth century to Joseph Biden in the present day is the distance from incipient socialism to fully developed socialism. America's masses have traversed it in the blink of an eye and in their journey into treason, they have halted the progress of civilization.

REDS BEGET A NEW ARYAN CLASS

On eleven square meters of land in southeast Nuremberg, between 1933 and 1938, the German National Socialist Party staged annual rallies to showcase the power and might of the Third Reich. At these Nuremberg rallies, banners, bonfires, martial songs, goose step marches, swastika formations, torchlight processions, fireworks displays and Wagnerian overtures were orations of race hatred which shouted down the defenders of liberal democratic order as they drowned out the cries for human freedom and human dignity. Almost a century later, the orations have continued unabated; they have not subsided for a moment and have increased in violence and intensity; and the virus which national socialism unleashed upon the world has reorganized itself into a new Aryan class composed of women and nonwhites. The political scientists of hate politics, from the Hitlerites to the MeToo organizers to the agitators in charge of Black Lives Matter, learned about hatred at the feet of their master, Karl Marx, and modified their master's class politics into ideologies of race and gender, and generated a race and gender identity monster which has rampaged across the West and brought civilization to a finish. To the cheers and adulation of the Nuremberg rallies staged in homes, offices, neighborhoods, city streets and college campuses throughout the world, the reds today have ventured into the Marxist final frontiers of black racism, hispanic racism and feminist hatred of men and launched a war of exclusion, segregation, discrimination and elimination directed against white males. The neoMarxist Nuremberg activists of today have issued a program and manifesto of tribal politics which has lowered the curtain on one thousand years of Western Anglo-Saxon liberty with its fundamental ethos of equal protection under the law and advancement on the basis of merit and achievement without respect to race, color, ethnicity or gender. The new Marxists and the new national socialists of today have proclaimed that a progressive society is an affirmative action society which deliberately discriminates against whites in hiring practices and in admissions to colleges and universities. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a blatantly racist and sexist society which has exposed white males as the universal enemies of virtue, justice, decency and righteousness. They have proclaimed that a progressive society rejects the primacy of the individual and promotes a group oriented approach to social affairs which judges people on the basis of their race and gender. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a people's textbook on discrimination and distributes rights and privileges on the basis of race, color and national origin. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is one whose student body is constructed by race and gender quotas and not by academic excellence. They have proclaimed that a progressive university admits black and brown students whose test scores are far lower than those of whites in the name of racial inclusion. They have proclaimed that a progressive university is institutionally racist and discriminates against white applicants whose test scores are far higher than those of black applicants in the name of racial diversity. They have proclaimed that a progressive society rejects the liberal myth that all persons are created equal and gives preferential treatment to Chinese, Koreans, Filipinos and Vietnamese. They have proclaimed that a progressive society demands equality of outcomes and results and demands that the racial and gender composition of student bodies and workforces reflect the racial and gender composition of the general population. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a social justice society which has overturned liberal proscriptions on unequal treatment and undeserved advancement and grants special treatment to people in employment, education and contracting on the basis of race, sex, color, ethnicity and national origin. They have proclaimed that in a progressive society the phrase no discrimination does not mean no discrimination but simply means no discrimination against women and nonwhites and sanctions active, never ending, unlimited discrimination against white males. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is one whose street mobs have torn down the principles of liberal equality and raised monuments to racial and gender privileges in their place. Listen to a description of the race politics of the reds and see how it has subverted the liberal system of law. See how it discriminates against those who work harder and do better than blacks. See how it justifies race discrimination under the banner of civil rights. See how it divides people into racial and ethnic coalitions and fosters war and rancor between them. See how it traffics in the words and images of hatred and rage and has painted the Jewish Badge and the people's social justice bullseye on the back of every white person. See how it has eliminated personal rights and ignored personal credentials and established race as the exclusive, controlling, determinative factor in the distribution of success and achievement. See how it prioritizes race, color and national origin above academic qualifications in university admissions processes. See how it hunts white people to extinction with programs and activities which revolve around race and blood. See how it disregards the liberal principle of merit and achievement and effects a process of racial balancing in the workforce and the classroom. See how it lavishes public money on institutions of discrimination and has smashed the liberal shield of equal protection in a color blind, character based society with the hammers of collective, tribal rights. Rejecting the liberal principle that all people must be treated with decency and respect without regard to their tribal identity or to the color of their skin, the red fuhrrers of today are the riders of an apocalypse. Rejecting the liberal principle of universal civil rights, they have lowered the curtain on the society and government which civilized people have known, understood and fought for since the time of the Magna Carta: "The Department of Justice today notified Yale University of its findings that Yale illegally discriminates against Asian American and white applicants in its undergraduate admissions process in violation of Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. The findings are the result of a two year investigation in response to a complaint by Asian American groups concerning Yale's conduct. 'There is no such thing as a nice form of race discrimination,' said Assistant Attorney General Eric Dreiband for the Civil Rights Division. 'Unlawfully dividing Americans into racial and ethnic blocs fosters stereotypes, bitterness, and division. It is past time for American institutions to recognize that all people should be treated with decency and respect and without unlawful regard to the color of their skin'. In 1890, Frederick Douglass explained that the 'business of government is to hold its broad shield over all and to see that every American citizen is alike and equally protected in his civil and personal rights.' The Department of Justice agrees and will continue to fight for the civil rights of all people throughout our nation. As a condition of receiving millions of dollars in taxpayer funding, Yale expressly agrees to comply with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, a cornerstone civil rights law that prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, color, or national origin in programs and activities that receive federal financial assistance. The Department of Justice found Yale discriminates based on race and national origin in its undergraduate admissions process, and that race is the determinative factor in hundreds of admissions decisions each year. For the great majority of applicants, Asian Americans and whites have only one tenth to one fourth of the likelihood of admission as African American applicants with comparable academic credentials. Yale rejects scores of Asian American and white applicants each year based on their race, whom it otherwise would admit. Although the Supreme Court has held that colleges receiving federal funds may consider applicants' race in certain limited circumstances as one of a number of factors, the Department of Justice found Yale's use of race is anything but limited. Yale uses race at multiple steps of its admissions process resulting in a multiplied effect of race on an applicant's likelihood of admission, and Yale racially balances its classes. The Department of Justice has demanded Yale agree not to use race or national origin in its upcoming 2020-2021 undergraduate admissions cycle, and, if Yale proposes to consider race or national origin in future admissions cycles, it must first submit to the Department of Justice a plan demonstrating its proposal is narrowly tailored as required by law, including by identifying a date for the end of race discrimination." (Justice Department Finds Yale Illegally Discriminates Against Asians and Whites In Undergraduate Admissions In Violation Of Federal Civil-Rights Laws, United States Department of Justice, August 13, 2020). Decades after the Nuremberg rallies were staged, the spirit of Nuremberg has never been more alive than it is today as homes, schools, offices and neighborhoods are festooned with the flags and insignia of race and gender politics. On their badges and emblems are the messages of a new Aryan dispensation. Nonwhites are to be given preferential treatment over whites. Women are to be given preferential treatment over men. Nonwhites are to be granted impunity to commit crimes and the right to resist arrest. Women are to be granted the power to place men behind bars on the basis of their accusations or series of accusations of sexual assault. Woven from the satanic looms of Marx and Hitler, the uniforms of today's master class of women and nonwhites are tattered standards of primitivism and regression which shroud the walking dead on the last day of the West.

THE BONFIRES OF THE REDS

The time is the night of May 10, 1933. The place is the Opera Square in Berlin. Truckloads of confiscated books and writings arrive and are handed over to students and storm troopers. A bonfire rages as the works are hurled into it. National socialist salutes and anthems accompany the smoldering ashes. This was the most famous book burning in modern times, an event not witnessed in Europe since the Christian Dark Ages, and organized by the German government, it consigned to the flames all literary works which were deemed to be unGerman and politically incorrect. Ignited and stoked by reds of all stripes and varieties, by the communist reds, the fascist reds, the feminist reds, the social democratic reds and the national socialist reds, the flames of intellectual purges have been raging for a century now since the time of the German book burnings, during a period when the reds have assumed total control over the culture, and they have reached a climax in the present day and brought about the total banishment of Western Enlightenment, liberal capitalist thought. Leaping up to the heavens and shining a black, satanic light across the length and breadth of the land, the flames of leftist ideas have burned down the glorious, five century old house of reason and science and fashioned a primitive temple of mysticism and collectivism in its place. Spreading with violent, uncontrollable intensity across the nations and communities of the twenty first century, the white hot combustion emanating from the religion of the reds has blasted out a program and manifesto for the destruction of civilized, law abiding social order. It has proclaimed that mathematical equations such as two and two equal four are the products of white supremacist patriarchy and must be classified as such for the education and enlightenment of university students. It has proclaimed that the notion that mathematical truths and scientific data are culturally neutral is an Enlightenment myth. It has proclaimed that so-called objective truths are social constructs and physical objects do not exist. It has proclaimed that the notion of absolute truth has no place in a progressive society which is focused upon nurturing people and protecting the planet. It has proclaimed that the so-called science of mathematics must be reevaluated because it was developed by white males and serves white male interests. It has proclaimed that enlightened students understand that subjectivism is the only intelligible, progressive philosophy and that mathematics is only a Western science and not a universal science. It has proclaimed that there are no such things as stable meanings or fixed references and all so-called objectively true statements are nothing more than accidents of culture. It has proclaimed that such engineering accomplishments as digital processing and space travel have nothing whatever to do with objective truth or scientific certitude but are made possible by the conjurings and incantations of witch doctors and voodoo priests. It has proclaimed that the notion of objective truth is a white, male, capitalist construct which is used to marginalize and victimize women, nonwhites, indigenous peoples and the poor. It has proclaimed that a progressive society has eliminated freedom of speech and tolerance of opposing points of view and confined the defenders of truth to the Siberian wastelands of cultural nonexistence. It has proclaimed that those who uphold the Western liberal view of free speech serve only to keep alive a regime of repression and exploitation of women and nonwhites and must be prevented from airing their views and speaking out in public. It has proclaimed that a progressive society forces all its citizens to publicly acknowledge that the capitalist system places insuperable barriers to the advancement of women and nonwhites and must be abolished. It has proclaimed that a progressive university has rejected the requirement that students take a core curriculum of academic subjects and requires that they take a core curriculum of race and gender diversity courses in its place. It has proclaimed that the requirement that university students understand and accept grammatically correct English is racist and sexist and must be replaced by writing programs which teach social justice and critical grammar. It has proclaimed that liberal democracy is the product of a white male world conspiracy and must be replaced by national socialist dictatorships presided over by women and nonwhites. It has proclaimed that there are as many different world views as there are cultures, no one of which may be valued more than any other, and if a certain culture believes that rain dances make crops grow and that diseases are caused by evil spirits, then these beliefs must be accepted as possessing equal legitimacy to all others. Listen to the reds as they denounce the right of free speech and seek to abolish the unregulated marketplace of ideas and opinions. As they disrupt speakers who defend law and order and smash up college campuses with the hammers of Marxist revolution. As they declare war on the security of free societies in the name of social justice and black nationalism. As they reject the discovery of truth, the development of knowledge, the collaboration of free people and the betterment of mankind in favor of stagnation through nameless eons and regression into the fever swamps of tribal politics. As they denounce public order as a hegemonic institution which marginalizes and oppresses the hoodlums of the world. As they denounce objective truth as an instrument of white supremacy and strangle the intellect with the people's garottes of race and gender subjectivity. As they denounce white males as a subhuman species and place them behind bars in the people's progressive jailhouses of race and gender bigotry. As they reject the idea of scientific objectivity, the equality of all before the law, and the wide open spaces of human flourishing and seek to establish a regime of black, brown, women's and proletarian supremacy, imperialism, colonization and totalitarian tyranny. As they peddle a religion of gender, race and class intersectional politics which has branded successful, white males with the Jewish Badge of enemies of the people. As they sign statements, draft letters, give speeches, deliver lectures and stage nationwide rallies calling for the rejection of the Enlightenment, the dissolution of the European West, the overthrow of America and the destruction of human civilization: "Students at the Claremont McKenna Colleges argued that objective truth is a social construct devised by 'white supremacists' to 'attempt to silence oppressed peoples' in a letter to the Pomona College president. The letter came in response to Pomona College President David Oxtoby's affirmation of commitment to free speech and intellectual diversity following the chaos that ensued during a lecture featuring Manhattan Institute scholar Heather MacDonald. Student protesters derailed her lecture on the rise of antipolice attitudes by banging on windows and shouting, 'Fuck the police,' and 'Black Lives Matter.' Campus security ultimately forced MacDonald to livestream her lecture from a near empty room across campus. 'Protest has a legitimate and celebrated place on college campuses,'" Oxtoby wrote, offering a condemnation of the conduct of the students who disrupted the event. 'What we cannot support is the act of preventing others from engaging with an invited speaker. Our mission is founded upon the discovery of truth, the collaborative development of knowledge and the betterment of society.' Students at Pomona College, one of the schools in the consortium of Claremont McKenna Colleges, took issue with Oxtoby's statement and drafted a letter in response that was signed by students at the other colleges as well. 'Free speech, a right many freedom movements have fought for, has recently become a tool appropriated by hegemonic institutions. It has not just empowered students from marginalized backgrounds to voice their qualms and criticize aspects of the institution, but it has given those who seek to perpetuate systems of domination a platform to project their bigotry. Thus, if our mission is founded upon the discovery of truth, how does free speech uphold that value?' Immediately dismissing the possibility that listening to MacDonald's lecture could widen their perspective, the students went on to explain how objective truth is a concept devised by white supremacists in an 'attempt to silence oppressed peoples': 'Historically, white supremacy has venerated the idea of objectivity, and wielded a dichotomy of subjectivity vs. objectivity as a means of silencing oppressed peoples. The idea that there is a single truth—the Truth—is a construct of the Euro-West that is deeply rooted in the Enlightenment, which was a movement that also described Black and Brown people as both subhuman and impervious to pain. This construction is a myth and white supremacy, imperialism, colonization, capitalism, and the United States of America are all of its progeny. The idea that the truth is an entity for which we must search, in matters that endanger our abilities to exist in open spaces, is an attempt to silence oppressed peoples.' The students go on to claim that Heather MacDonald is 'ignorant of interlocking systems of domination that produce the lethal conditions under which oppressed peoples are forced to live,' which is an explicit reference to the concept of intersectionality, an increasingly popular theory of oppression which conservative columnist Andrew Sullivan recently called a religion". (Students Claim Objective Truth Is A White Supremacist Myth by Tom Ciccotta). One hundred years before the book burning in Berlin, the German poet Heinrich Heine stated:"Wherever books are burned, human beings are destined to be burned too." In cities and neighborhoods across America, far left riot machines known as Antifa and Black Lives Matter are burning human beings and reducing the West to smoke and ashes.

MATHEMATICAL PHYSICS: PREDICTION, YES, EXPLANATION, NO

An inverse relation exists between two quantities when one increases in proportion as the other decreases. In the realm of science, there is an inverse relation which exists between predictive capacity and explanatory power, and the more mathematical a science is and the greater its predictive capacity, the less complete is its picture of reality. A complete description of an object entails a description both of its quantitative and qualitative aspects and is guided throughout by the principles of common sense. The complete description of an electron consists in a description both of its measurable properties, such as its size, mass, spin and shape, and its nonmeasurable properties, such as its color. While the colors of macroscopic entities such as clouds and trees are purely subjective, being nothing more than electron frequencies, the colors of microentities, such as electrons and protons, are necessarily real, because whatever is extended must have a color or else be absolutely transparent and identical to space itself. Common sense recognizes that whatever is colored is extended, and conversely, that whatever is extended is colored. The colors of microentities, being real, are necessarily unperceivable because the perception of macroscopic colors, such as the white in clouds or the green in trees, being caused by electron frequencies, are unreal. Because we perceive colors by means of electron frequencies, they must on that account be purely subjective. No conceivable experiment could ever disclose the colors of microentities because experiments involve measurements, and the colors of microentities, being real and not caused by frequencies, are not measurable. The colors of microentities, although a necessary part of the description of these entities from an ontological point of view, are completely irrelevant to the description of microentities valued by mathematical physics, because such knowledge contributes nothing whatever to the advancement of man's predictive power. The advancement of man's predictive power requires a completely mathematical approach to physics and the exclusion of all concern with nonmathematical properties, such as the colors of microentities. From the point of view of mathematical physics, knowledge of the colors of microentities is completely useless knowledge, while from the point of view of knowing what a microentity fully and completely is, knowing its full nature and essence, such knowledge is just as necessary as knowledge of the entity's measurable properties. Theories of mathematical physics are nothing more than algorithms for predicting the course of events in nature. Being derived from experience by observations and measurements, they do provide descriptions of reality, but only partial descriptions, because they ignore such properties as the colors of microentities. Any attempt to visualize them in a nonmathematical manner results in contradictions. They cannot be visualized but only utilized as means of calculation in the manner that a voodoo priest or witch doctor utilizes incantations to make predictions while not knowing what he is doing. The incantations of the witch doctor are not grounded in empirical facts, while the models and equations of the physicist are, but the models and equations of the physicist make predictions at the price of achieving a full and complete description of reality. The attempt to visualize relativity theory results in the contradiction that all motion is relative. The measured equivalences between a state of rest and a state of uniform motion, and between a state of upward acceleration and a state of rest on the surface of a planet, and between a state of free fall and a state of rest, do not betoken any real equivalence between these states, because appearance is not reality, and reality does not consist in a series of measurements but in objects which are measured, and what is moving is moving and what is at rest is at rest. The attempt to visualize relativity theory results in the contradiction that fields and not objects are the primary existents. The measured equivalence between mass and energy does not betoken any real equivalence existing between the two. Individuals carry energies, and fields no more exist as independent entities than walking exists independently of legs which walk. If objects were really equal to motions, and mass was really equal to energy, then nothing would exist to be in motion or to possess energy. Objects exert force or are forced; they exhibit energy or are energized; force and energy do not exist in or by themselves as actual physical objects. Every force in nature is carried and created by an object: the force of electricity is carried by electrons; the force of electromagnetism is carried by photons; the force of gravity is carried by gravitons; the force which binds quarks together to form protons and neutrons, and binds protons together in an atomic nucleus, is carried by gluons; and the forces which carry nuclear emissions and decays are called W bosons and Z bosons. The equation $E=mc^2$ expresses an apparent, measurable equivalence and not any real, ontological equivalence. The attempt to visualize quantum theory results in the contradiction that motion is not motion but is quantized or composed of discrete, motionless states. It is a fundamental fact of experience that objects act and move and motion is real, and the notion of a quantum of action denies this fundamental reality. If action is quantized, then there is no action and reality is static. The attempt to visualize quantum theory results in the contradiction that objects move by chance and their actions are unrelated to their natures and essences. The fact that we cannot determine both the position and speed of an object with unlimited accuracy results from the fact that we perceive by means of light. When we perceive an object, we expose it to photons which alter its state and prevent us from determining its original, undisturbed state. Objects possess determinate positions and speeds, although these cannot be known at the same time because of the disturbing influence of photons. If objects did not possess determinate positions and speeds at one and the same time, they would have no natures and would be nothing and would not exist, for to be anything is to be something. The attempt to visualize quantum theory results in the contradiction of a system called three valued logic, a system which purports to reject ordinary, common sense, bivalent logic and to project values which indicate true, false and indeterminate. This system contradicts itself in its very claim to being true and to possessing a truth value which excludes both falsity and indetermination. Listen to the words of an eminent mathematical physicist who rejects the world of common sense and ordinary experience and promotes an ontology of mathematics and measurements. Who rejects the notion of physical objects and projects reality as an emanation and abode of marks and symbols. Who rejects the notion of real colors as a fiction and deceit and projects reality as an underworld of pure shadows. Who rejects the laws and conceptions of human sanity and projects reality as an unperceivable, unconcrete plane comprised of numerical esoterica. Who rejects the principles of sound human consciousness and projects reality as a function, relation, expression and outcome of pure, mystical, apriori thought: "It is difficult to school ourselves to treat the physical world as purely symbolic. We are always relapsing and mixing with the symbols incongruous conceptions taken from the world of consciousness. Untaught by long experience we stretch a hand to grasp the shadow, instead of accepting its shadowy nature. Indeed, unless we confine ourselves altogether to mathematical symbolism it is hard to avoid dressing our symbols in deceitful clothing. When I think of an electron there rises to my mind a hard, red, tiny ball; the proton similarly is a neutral gray. Of course the color is absurd—perhaps not more absurd than the rest of the conception—but I am incorrigible. I can well understand that the younger minds are finding these pictures too concrete and are striving to construct the world out of Hamiltonian functions and symbols so far removed from human preconception that they do not even obey the laws of orthodox arithmetic. For myself I find some difficulty in rising to that plane of thought; but I am convinced that it has got to come." (The Nature Of The Physical World by Arthur Eddington). Mathematical physics is the application of mathematics to problems in physics, the development of mathematical methods in the formulation of physical theories. It is a uniquely Western Faustian science, being concerned with the achievement of power and prediction at the expense of complete knowledge and explanation of reality. One of the founders of the New Science of mathematical physics, Galileo stated that "the book of nature is written in the language of mathematics". Because nonmathematical properties such as color are just as real as mathematical properties at the level of microentities, this statement is false. But the book of Western Faustian physics is written in the language of mathematics. A complete book of physics has yet to be written. It would consist of two chapters. Inspired by Aristotle, the first chapter would be devoted to a qualitative, common sense investigation of nature and would recognize the reality of colors at the level of microentities. Inspired by Galileo and Newton, the second chapter would be devoted to mathematical physics and would call its theories simply algorithms, and no further names, and would refrain from any type of visualization of them. Combining two views of physics spanning two cultures, Classical and Western, which stand opposed to each other as day is opposed to night, this book of total physics would be the crown and perfection of the human scientific undertaking.

RED BRIEFS FOR THE ARABS AND THE INDIANS

There is an ancient proverb which says that "the enemy of my enemy is my friend". Discovered in a Sanskrit treatise on military strategy called the Arthashastra dating back to the fourth century BC, the proverb says that two parties should bury their differences and work together to defeat a common enemy. Beginning in the twentieth century, this proverb has guided the policies of the international leftist movement in its campaign to overthrow the liberal democratic order. Surveying the field of freedom's enemies, the reds have fastened onto two cultures with which to form alliances in their sinister campaign. These are the two best known nonWestern cultures in the world today, and the national socialist reds in the 1930s and 1940s, and the Marxist reds for the past one hundred years, have formed coalitions with them and sought to advance their interests in a global war to eradicate Western Anglo-Saxon liberty. These two cultures are the Arabs and the preColumbian nations, and accurately viewing them as negative reversals of everything Anglo-Saxon liberty represents, the reds have adopted these cultures as their very own and championed the world of the Arabs and the world of the preColumbian Indians as the progressive world of the people's liberation republic and the people's social justice state. The reds support the Arabs because they rule over economically unsuccessful states and closed societies. The reds support the Arabs because their culture is nomadic and primitive. The reds support the Arabs because they are opposed to modern science and capitalist civilization. The reds support the Arabs because they run statist economies and hoist banners aloft for socialism. The reds support the Arabs because they pitch tents in desert wastelands and are opposed to the development of industry. The reds support the Arabs because they are savages who have rejected the use of their minds and worship at the temples of faith and zealotry. The reds support the Arabs because they possess a premodern ethos, an antimodern world view, and hate secular ways of acting and thinking. The reds support the Arabs because they oppose tolerant societies and the unfettered exchange of ideas and opinions. The reds support the Arabs because they promote ethnic tribalism and reject liberty for all. The reds support the Arabs because they saw Israelis in the 1950s make deserts flower into beauty and health through industriousness, ambition, purpose and the exercise of reason, and said to the Israelis: "We want to destroy you." The reds support the Arabs because they organize terror networks and imprison law abiding communities in vice grips of fear. The reds support the Arabs because they commit mass murder and justify psychopathic violence by a political and religious program. The reds support the Arabs because they reject the Enlightenment ideals of nonideological thought, individual rights, and equal protection under the law without regard to gender, race, class or creed. The reds support the Arabs because they reject liberal equality of social and political rights and recognize only the rights of special, favored tribes. The reds support the Arabs because they reject the precepts of civilized conscience and promote education for fanatics and extremists and speak the language of revolution and upheaval. The reds support the Arabs because their goal is to kill all the Jews and drive what the Jews stand for, reason, science and liberal civilization, into the sea. The reds support the Arabs because they seek the destruction of modern, free societies and their lone outpost in the Middle East: Israel. The reds support the Arabs because they seek to ghettoize, murder and organize pogroms against the voices of liberty, enlightenment and capitalist progress. The reds support the Arabs because they live in conditions unchanged for a millennium and refuse to adopt modern agricultural techniques. The reds support the Arabs because they have exiled the promoters of rationalist humanism, sent forth invading armies against liberal modernity, and planned the destruction of human civilization. The reds support the Arabs because they have rejected modernist principles in favor of religious principles and crushed their people by a leviathan of strict adherence to the clerics of submission. The reds support the Arabs because they hate the friends of freedom in America and Israel and have launched a global jihad against one thousand years of Anglo-Saxon law whose boundaries, settlements, annexations, territories and resources have crowned the progress of mankind. Look at the reds and see how they have joined forces with the Arabs in a campaign of boycott, divestment, sanctions, harassment and extermination directed against Israel and the Jews. See how they have restarted the gas chambers and staffed them with Arabs and sought to round up the Jews of the world for execution. See how they have peddled the language of violence and revolution to the Arab streets and sewers and set up crematoria for freedom in Arab homes, schools, offices and governments. See how they have established the capital cities of the Arabs as the world headquarters of a global movement of antisemitism, antizionism and the destruction of capitalist civilization. See how their communist parties, fascist parties, labor parties, worker's parties and national socialist parties have made Muslim extremists their friends and allies and proclaimed a people's progressive jihad to eradicate fundamental human rights and construct institutions of hatred and fanaticism upon the ruins of liberal societies: "Recently, the State Department revised its definition of antisemitism to include 'drawing comparisons of contemporary Israeli policy to that of the Nazis'—an apparent response to the rise of the anti-Israel BDS (Boycott, Divest and Sanctions) movement whose supporters routinely make such comparisons. That is a good thing. Just a few days ago, I sat in the former SS headquarters of the Auschwitz concentration camp with Piotr Cywinski, director of the Auschwitz-Birkenau State Museum. Speaking beside a window overlooking the gas chamber and crematorium where countless souls perished, he explained that there is no difference between hatred of Israel and hatred for Jews. In December, the European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights asked European Jews who was responsible for the most serious incident of antisemitic harassment they had experienced: Only 13 percent said it was someone with a far right political view, while 30 percent said it was an 'extremist Muslim' and 21 percent said it was someone with left wing views. The fact is antisemitism is a growing problem on the left. In Britain this year, three members of the Labor Party resigned after accusing the party and its leader, Jeremy Corbyn, of being—as a former Labor general secretary put it—'institutionally antisemitic.' In Washington, congressional Democrats have struggled to confront antisemitism within their own ranks. Cywiński said the rise of leftwing antisemitism is not surprising. 'Do not forget that the Nazi Party in Germany was a party of workers,' he said. 'We are many times thinking about the Nazis as far right. They were also very deeply speaking to the left, using some leftist language.' " (The Rise Of Antisemitism On The Left by Marc Thiessen). At the other end of the world, oceans away from the deserts and wastelands of Arabia are the plains and jungles of the preColumbian nations to whose culture the reds have reached out in their campaign to eliminate freedom from the world. The reds support these indigenous nations because they could neither conceive of nor utilize individual rights. The reds support these nations because they worshiped earth as untouched, undeveloped, unused and untrod. The reds support these nations because they lived like animals with no concept of property. The reds support these nations because they exalted primitive existence as the highest form of nobility. The reds support these nations because for countless millennia they remained unproductive, anticapitalist, antitechnological and antiindustrial. The reds support these nations because they were tribalist, warlike and had no concept of liberal peace or benevolent governance. The reds support these nations because they were comprised of hunter-gatherers who wandered and fought across the land, and lived from hand to mouth, from day to day, and from moment to moment. The reds support these nations because they had no permanent settlements, no written language, and subsisted at the level of prehistoric savages. The reds support these nations because they glorified mysticism and saw spirits and ghosts where sane people saw the laws and logic of nature. The Indian proverb about building coalitions to confront a common enemy has been expressed by every culture in the world. Its Arabic version runs as follows: "My brother and I are against my cousin. My brother, my cousin and I are against the outsider." The reds have made the Arabs and preColumbian nations their brothers and cousins, and together these three have confronted an outsider: the Western liberal capitalist order. The outsider is in flames, set on fire by the reds and their allies, in the hour of midnight of civilization.

MONSTER FROM THE STEPPES

In the novel Frankenstein by Mary Shelley, Baron Frankenstein is a scientist who creates a monster which turns on him and destroys him. The word frankenstein has come to refer to anything which has developed into a terrifying force of destruction against its creator. In the early decades of the twentieth century, the Russian masses brought Marxism to life in their country and created a monster from its pages and chapters, and this monster turned on its makers and wiped them out. He was a perfect embodiment of Marxism and has been a hero to the reds throughout the world since the late 1920s when he assumed power. He translated the Marxist theory of class war into practice, and into the purest, bloodiest practice in the one hundred year history of Marxist governments, and guided by the words of Marx, he established psychopathic violence as the official religion of the Soviet Union and the international communist movement and conspiracy. The chief stimulus, inspiration and motivating force to the psychopaths who came after him, to the Maos, the Pol Pots, the Sungs, the Castros, the Guevaras and the bosses of Eastern Europe, Joseph Stalin was the greatest, the cruelest, the most frightful and the most destructive Marxist leader who ever lived and his satanic achievements have earned his name an identification among historians, philosophers and political scientists which has filled the hearts of his votaries with the utmost satisfaction: the identification that Stalinism is Marxism. The creed of Stalin was the creed of Marx and the crimes carried out by Stalin were the crimes planned and theorized by Marx. Promoting in true Marxist fashion the mass killing of innocent people and a reign of terror in the name of the proletariat, Stalin issued a program and manifesto for the establishment of an antisociety and antistate ruled by a system of antigovernment and antilaw forged in the negative universe governed by the Devil. He proclaimed that a progressive society is marked by the growth of socialist industry which has instituted mass production by means of slave labor. He proclaimed that a progressive society has reduced human beings to the level of tractors and machines in the service of the people's proletarian equity and justice. He proclaimed that a progressive society has taken vigorous measures against private farmers and eliminated them as a class in the name of brotherhood of the victimized and the marginalized. He proclaimed that a progressive society has habituated its citizens to state farming, collective agriculture and universal enslavement. He proclaimed that a progressive society has collectivized homes, villages, districts, regions, states and hemispheres and collectivized the innermost precincts of the human mind. He proclaimed that a progressive society promotes the use of brute force to bring about an order of solid, irreversible redistribution of the wealth and regimentation of the soul. He proclaimed that a progressive society has eliminated private spaces and spheres of existence and placed all property into the hands of the people's, revolutionary, working class state. He proclaimed that a progressive society has expropriated and dispossessed the defenders of liberty, arrested them, evicted them, driven them from the land, expelled them from the human race, and set them on fire in the dustbins of history. He proclaimed that a progressive society is governed by red authorities whose leading policies are to break the resistance of the fighters for freedom who start businesses and create wealth and grind them into the dust with the machinery of the people's police apparatus of proletarian authority. He proclaimed that a progressive society has assumed control over all private economic life and crucified human rights upon the cross of class power, class politics, class interests and class revolution. He proclaimed that a progressive society has confronted the defenders of Western liberal Enlightenment values with the people's rifles blasting out a message of restriction, confiscation, regimentation and eradication. He proclaimed that a progressive society has taxed the producers of private wealth out of existence, required them to sell their soul to the state, pressured them into confessing their sins, and limited the scope of their ideas, thoughts, functions and activities to a vanishing point. He proclaimed that a progressive society has prohibited private contracts and private employment, reduced free citizens to the level of chattel serfs of red feudal masters, and destroyed the economic foundations of a civilized social order. Look at the world created by Marx's chief hangman and henchman. It was a world which repealed laws protecting freedom of enterprise, work, contract and the freedom to own property and launched a campaign without precedent in the annals of political crimes. It was a world which transformed free born agents into rightless comrades of the working class and made the cause of liberty disintegrate, vanish and tumble into the abyss. It was a world which smashed the fortresses of constitutional government and hewed a path of socialism, egalitarianism, collectivism, and the restoration of primitive tribal existence and nations of blood and sacrifice. It was a world in which the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual were crushed beneath the dead weight of socialist construction, socialist farming, socialist industry, socialist bondage, socialist means of production, the socialist economic system, socialism from above, socialism from below, universal collectivization, a soviet socialist government of workers and soldiers, and the people's red totalitarian tyranny. It was a world which set into motion a mass movement of failures and incompetents who set on the fire the banners of free exchange, voluntary cooperation and peaceful coexistence and held aloft above the flames the people' sacred principle of might makes right and rule by brute force. It was a world which targeted the class of agricultural entrepreneurs and private producers of wealth from the land and declared them to be oppressors, exploiters, parasites and enemies of the people. It was a world which introduced a new concept into moral and political discourse, the concept of group extermination, and made this class of private farmers its first victims. It was a world which expropriated them, confiscated them, collectivized them, fed them into the voracious maws of the state and collectivity, reduced them to cattle, machinery and manure in the service of the proletariat, and wiped them out, every last man, woman and child among them. It was a world which made a fearsome and terrifying moral and political leap which history had never before witnessed. This was a leap from class revolution, collective farms, mob envy, mass frenzy, street corner agitation, million man marches against capitalist freedom, and the commissars' bureaus of popular liberation and social justice, and into a mighty, torrential river flowing with mass murder under the rubric of political, cultural and socioeconomic genocide: "At the end of 1929, with the growth of the collective farms and state farms, the Soviet Government turned sharply from this policy to the policy of eliminating the kulaks, of destroying them as a class. It repealed the laws on the renting of land and the hiring of labor, thus, depriving the kulaks both of land and of hired laborers. It lifted the ban on the expropriation of the kulaks. It permitted the peasants to confiscate cattle, machines and other farm property from the kulaks for the benefit of the collective farms. The kulaks were expropriated. They were expropriated just as the capitalists had been expropriated in the sphere of industry in 1918, with this difference, however, that the kulaks' means of production did not pass into the hands of the state, but into the hands of the peasants united in the collective farms. This was a profound revolution, a leap from an old qualitative state of society to a new qualitative state, equivalent in its consequences to the revolution of October 1917. The distinguishing feature of this revolution is that it was accomplished from above, on the initiative of the state, and directly supported from below by the millions of peasants, who were fighting to throw off kulak bondage and to live in freedom in the collective farms. This revolution, at one blow, solved three fundamental problems of Socialist construction: a) It eliminated the most numerous class of exploiters in our country, the kulak class, the mainstay of capitalist restoration; b) It transferred the most numerous laboring class in our country, the peasant class, from the path of individual farming, which breeds capitalism, to the path of cooperative, collective, Socialist farming; c) It furnished the Soviet regime with a Socialist base in agriculture—the most extensive and vitally necessary, yet least developed, branch of national economy. This destroyed the last mainsprings of the restoration of capitalism within the country and at the same time created new and decisive conditions for the building up of a Socialist economic system. Explaining the reasons for the policy of eliminating the kulaks as a class, and summing up the results of the mass movement of the peasants for solid collectivization, Comrade Stalin wrote in 1929: 'The last hope of the capitalists of all countries, who are dreaming of restoring capitalism in the USSR—the sacred principle of private property—is collapsing and vanishing. The peasants, whom they regarded as material manuring the soil for capitalism, are abandoning en masse the lauded banner of private property and are taking to the path of collectivism, the path of Socialism. The last hope for the restoration of capitalism is crumbling.' " (Leninism, Vol. II, A Year of Great Change by Joseph Stalin). " (History Of The Communist Party Of The Soviet Union, Short Course, commissioned and edited by Joseph Stalin). When Vladimir Lenin spoke at the First All Russian Congress of Soviets in 1917, Stalin was at his side. Exalted by reds throughout the world as a Man of Steel, a Man of Marx and a Man of Mass Murder committed in the name of the people. Stalin has been at the side of Marxists everywhere, East and West, for the past one hundred years. Peddling mass murder in a variety of programs and platforms, from gender politics to race politics to class politics, Marxists today have appointed Stalin general secretary in their war against civilization.

MARX'S MASTER BUILDER

An architect is a person who plans and designs buildings. When he completes his work, he gives his design to the builder who commences and supervises construction. In 1917, the Germans sent a train into Russia which contained the most dangerous political builder in the history of mankind. He had received his plans from the pages of Marx, the world's first architect of a totalitarian society. When he disembarked from the train, he proceeded, with Marx's plans in hand, to establish the Soviet Union and set up the apparatus of a red totalitarian police state. In strict adherence to Marx, he abolished the rule of law and established the monopoly of a private gang which ruled lawlessly without the semblance of a traditional government. He combined Marx's notion of the withering away of the state with Marx's notion of the dictatorship of the proletariat and organized a stateless, lawless society ruled by a private dictatorship, which he called the proletariat and which he named the communist party. His communist party was Marx's proletariat and it possessed a monopoly on the use of force and operated outside the constraints of states, governments and laws as civilized people have known and understood these for centuries, and operated in the manner of a prehistoric band of savage cave dwellers. This first builder of Marx's lawless, stateless society worshiped violence as the highest and noblest instrument of the people's revolution. Under his rule, there were 30,000 executions annually which punished innocent people for social, political and ideological crimes. Marx's builder instigated the Red Terror which saw rivers of blood flow across the land and marked out a program of genocide through the extermination of the talented, successful, flourishing classes of society, called the bourgeois. Marx's builder created the Cheka, the first secret police organization in the history of mankind, as a natural adjunct and enforcer of Marx's dictatorship of the proletariat. Its use of violence and torture was unprecedented and included crowning its victims with barbed wire, stoning its victims to death, submerging its victims in boiling water, and scalping its victims and skinning them alive. In January 1918, Marx's builder dissolved Russia's democratically elected Constituent Assembly and assumed control over the government. Carrying out, in true Marxist fashion, the will of the mob, Marx's builder abolished private ownership in land and private ownership of the means of production, banned all political parties except the communist party, abolished freedom of speech and the press, and ruled, in a society in which the state had been abolished and a private dictatorship of the proletariat had taken over, "directly by means of force and unrestricted by any laws". The name of this builder, the first Marxist dictator in history, was Vladimir Lenin, and following Marx's plan and design, produced the model and template for all subsequent red dictatorships. Galvanizing the sewers, swamps and cesspools of Russian society in rallies and marches festooned with the hammer and sickle and red star of mob rule, Lenin shouted out a program and manifesto for the dissolution of rational, civilized, organized human existence. He proclaimed that a progressive society has abolished the rule of lawful procedures and institutions and oppressed and crushed the people by a dictatorship of red gangs commanded by demagogues. He proclaimed that a progressive society has repackaged state criminality and the official repeal of personal freedom and sold it as a Republic of Soviets of Workers and Deputies to the failures and incompetents who swim in the sewers. He proclaimed that a progressive society has condemned those who produce wealth through their intelligence and initiative as exploiters of the proletariat and has subjected them to state violence and repression. He proclaimed that a progressive society has regimented the mass of the people and pressed them into service to support a socialist economy. He proclaimed that a progressive society is a regime of ruthless terror which has gunned down the voices of resistance to consolidate its dark victory. He proclaimed that a progressive society is an apparatus of pervasive repression backed by a political police force whose agents have blanketed every home, school and office and arrested, imprisoned, tortured and executed the voices of human liberty and mental health and well being. He proclaimed that a progressive society is a proletarian autocracy, a revolutionary presidium, a communist congress, a communist council, and a permanent, standing, executive committee comprised of the people's commissars. Look at the world created by Lenin, a world which brought Marxism into power. A world which targeted people who owned land and worked and produced on their land, and worked as human beings ought to work in freedom and dignity, and resisted the onslaught of red collectivization, and marked them out for total destruction. A world which empowered red dictators, red committees, red councils and red troikas to become hangmen and fashion a fearsome and terrifying noose. This was a noose woven out of the Devil's fabric of mass terror, mass shootings, mass deportations and mass confiscations. In this noose, the reds placed the moral pillars of traditional Russian society, the farmers, entrepreneurs, soldiers, officers and intellectuals who defended the cause of freedom, and placed one thousand years of human progress and civilization, and pulled the trap door: "In the summer of 1918 the Bolsheviks faced a rebellion by the Kulaks, peasants from Ukraine and the Caucasus, who owned their own land and opposed Communist collectivization policies and the massive confiscation of their grain productions. Lenin sent a written order to the Penza Bolsheviks to publicly hang at least 100 renowned kulaks, to use as a lesson against the others, and to take hostages to force the others to submit to the Communists. In another order Lenin was even clearer: 'A dictatorial troika (yourself, Markin and one other) must be formed immediately, implant mass terror, shoot or deport the hundreds of prostitutes who make soldiers drink, all the former officers, etc. There is not a minute to lose.' " (Lenin: Numbers, Data and Images Of The Crimes Of The First Communist Dictator by Outono.Net). Look at the world created by Lenin, a world which transformed a peaceful, civilized society into a fearsome and terrifying system of repression. A world which paved the streets with official decrees sweeping up the population into concentration camps. A world which rounded up all those who were opposed to slave labor and to the sacrificial altars operating in the name of social justice and liberation for the downtrodden, and turned them into political prisoners and cowering inmates. A world which replaced lawful government by a regime of communist directors, communist dictators, communist guardians and communist wardens whose victims, numbering in the millions, were tortured, starved and killed as enemies of the working class. A world which out of the magnificent pageantry of mankind's nations and states, with their arts and sciences and edifices of law and culture, carved a black island flaming with evil and cruelty. This was an island of gulags, gas chambers, red administrations, red czardoms, red directorates, political surveillance, show trials, detention centers, corrective camps, forced labor camps, mass killing camps, internal security forces to silence the voices of liberty, and border security forces to shoot them down if they try to escape. This was an island, a nightmare, a house of unmitigated horror constructed by Lenin from a plan set forth by Marx. This was an island created in the mirror and image of Satan himself. This was an island called communism: "In April 1919 Lenin signed a decree to create a concentration camp system copied by the Tsarist Katorga, which in 1916 numbered almost 20,000 inmates, according to figures published by Stephen G. Wheatcroft. The new network of concentration camps was named Glávnoie upravlenie ispravítelno-trudovyy laguerèi i koloni (Directorate-General for Labor Camps). It was the birth of the Gulag, the largest Soviet system of repression. The first of those camps had been established in 1918 at Solovki, on the Solovetsky islands of the Black Sea. Again the figures of the communist dictatorship ended up far exceeding those of tsarism in a short time: at the end of 1920 there were already 84 camps with some 50,000 political prisoners. In October 1923 there were already 315 camps with 70,000 prisoners. Those detained there were used in forced labor as slave labor. The prison population had very high death rates, due to the harsh conditions in these brutal detention centers, where prisoners were often starved or killed by their guardians." (Lenin: Numbers, Data and Images Of The Crimes Of The First Communist Dictator by Outono.Net). At a rally held in Moscow in March 1918, four months after the Russian Revolution, Lenin set forth Marx's plan and vision. He exalted the new dictatorship which had arisen, a dictatorship of the proletariat and the communist party, which now ruled over a society in which the state and law had been swept away. He exalted a band of private, nonstate actors which had become the new controlling powers, displacing the government, and enacted lawlessness as the supreme law of the land. At his side was his second in command, Leon Trotsky. As the decades rolled by, this rally would increase exponentially in size and those at Lenin's side would come to include every red dictator and every red organizer, from Joseph Stalin to Saul Alinsky to Barack Obama, who ever waved a red flag of class hatred and class politics before the charging bulls of the sewers, swamps, cesspools and containers of society. In the present day, this rally has grown into a global mass meeting held in every home, school, office and parliament. Guided by the spirit of Lenin, it demands the destruction of human flourishing and civilized order.

BARD OF THE REDS

The time is the 1920s. The place is Germany. On a theater stage in Berlin during a performance, a playwright, producer and poet steps forward and tells the audience that an earthquake has struck the world of theater and that it will never be the same. This earthquake is the advent of communist propaganda on stage and the figure who has announced its arrival is the father of this trend, the instigator of this earthquake, and the author of the play which the audience is currently watching. His name is Bertolt Brecht and to the cheers and adulation of the audience, comprising a tragic cross section of the red mobs which had assumed control over the country, he declaims a program and manifesto for the politicization of the theater, the didacticization of the thespian arts, the perversion of the eloquence of Mercury into the fluency of street corner rabble rousing, and the transformation of dramatic composition into the theory and practice of red agitation and propaganda. Occupying center stage, with images of Marx, Lenin and Stalin arranged behind him forming a triptych of unmitigated evil, Brecht delivered in impassioned, rhetorical tones a speech announcing the red destruction of a five thousand year old performing art and the invasion of a profession, the profession of producing, directing, writing and acting in plays, by a class of totalitarians who sought to justify human enslavement in body and soul under the banners of social justice and the rights of the working class. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces red morality plays which can be performed in schools and factories by nonprofessional actors and make the people themselves, in their ordinary settings, the voices of violence and destruction. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces plays which are socially committed, peopled with realistic characters who swim and multiply in the red sewers, and are dramatically effective in whipping up the layers of dirt and froth crawling on the streets into a fever pitch of hatred toward their moral betters and superiors. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces plays which are vehicles of red learning and red entertainment which expose the social abuses committed by capitalism and help to make the world a better place by bringing to realization the Marxist goal of a class extermination and class genocide. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces a revolutionary form of drama which seeks to argue the case for the abolition of individual rights. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces plays which show how human nature can be altered to eliminate the impulse toward freedom and how human behavior can be altered to make the masses raise their fists in clenched salutes to the hammers and sickles, red stars and tub thumping commissars, of a new red leviathan. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces plays which make people aware of the social evils inherent in liberal democracy and makes them yearn for the day when freedom and dignity will be swept away by the surging tides of proletarian power. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces plays which demonstrate that there are no universal values but only class values and that the world must be changed to eliminate the legacies of the Western Age of Enlightenment. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces plays which promote optimism about mankind's potential to immolate and enslave before a god called Society. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces plays which lay bare the oppression of the working class by the capitalist power structure and the pressing need to transform society into a marsh, bog and quagmire of totalitarian tyranny, without borders, without sea bottom, without possibility of postponement or reprieve, and from which there is no means of deliverance or escape. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces plays which speak from the standpoint of the failures and incompetents of society and condemn the liberal system of individual responsibility as the greatest injustice which has afflicted mankind. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces plays which reveal that reason and capitalism are the sources of the social problems which frame the age, and these plays give the working masses a religious representation of life which exalts mystical tribalism above the perceived separateness of individuals. He proclaimed that a progressive theater produces plays which appeal to the widest possible audience of nonachievers, vengeance seekers, professional victims, moral arsonists, and obsessive enthusiasts of violence and destruction, and it utilizes red folk sayings, red parables, red street ballads and red biblical allusions to stir up and stoke their hatred of civilization, and it gets them to kill every decent, righteous, law abiding, freedom loving soul they can find. Look at the world of Bertolt Brecht and seem how it exalts red ideological creatures which are large, ugly and frightening. See how it vilifies rational goodness and humane ways of solving problems with the inkpots of red misinformation, communist prejudice and class hatred. See how it transformed the theater and stage into a pulpit and proscenium for hectoring the audience with blasts of propaganda for a movement of global terror. See how it performs plays written by Moscow which parroted the latest twists and turns of the red party line. See how it shines the spotlights on the Stalins and Hitlers of the reds and lights up the darkness of the auditorium with beams, lamps and arcs of light glorifying the Devil of class violence and class chaos. See how it offers praise and worship to red fascists and red collaborators in their pacts and campaigns to divide up the world and sweep liberal civilization into the dustbin of history. See how it delivers orations about the majesty and splendor Marxist aggression and embraces the cause of revolutionary destruction. See how it abuses truth, falsifies history, counterfeits reality and showcases red views, red books, red lectures, red actors, red directors, red writers, red critics, red arguments and red discussions whose sole aim and purpose is to peddle proletarian conformism, proletarian repression, proletarian stultification, proletarian filth and proletarian war. See how it distresses civilized people with harrowing scenes of red bombs exploding in public places and red gangster families gunning down the voices of reason and dissent: "There are three possible responses to an artist who dedicated his life to a monstrous cause. The first is to deodorize him by pretending he was really a liberal humanist, which Brecht certainly was not. The second is to do what the British theater never does and have an adult argument. The actor on stage at the Young Vic might have said that propaganda for a totalitarian ideal can nevertheless be art that is worth seeing, and explained why the company thought it was. Similarly, Deborah Warner and Fiona Shaw, who are reviving Mother Courage at the National Theater next year, could discuss the oddity of Brecht--the refugee from nazism, the leading enemy of fascism in the theater of the Thirties--writing an antiwar play in 1939 when Britain, France and Poland were preparing for a war to the death against Hitler. Is it significant, they might ask, that while Brecht and one of his many abused and unacknowledged women collaborators were at work, Hitler and Stalin signed a nonaggression pact and agreed to divide Poland between them? As a part of the deal, the Soviet Union instructed the world's communists to stop criticizing nazism and embrace the cause of peace instead. Brecht, predictably, made no public objection. Coincidentally or not, Mother Courage embraced the cause of peace. The knowledge that it comes from the lowest point in the history of communism wouldn't stop the audience at the National seeing a harrowing antiwar play. But talking about Brecht's complicity would break the stultifying conformism of British political theater; the unquestioned assumption that directors, audiences, writers, critics and actors share the same views and read the same books, and would be as horrified by the discussion of inconvenient facts as a Victorian family with dirty secrets to hide." (Time For Curtain To Fall On Brecht by Nick Cohen). Packaged in the form of teaching plays, learning plays, political plays, dialectical plays, formalist plays, unplotted plays, nonnarrative plays, nonsequential actions, interrupted actions, songs and actions which are incongruent, montages of films, photographs and captions, and epic theater which rejects the rule of reason and order and on a vast scale assembles, disassembles and reassembles words, music, acts and scenes before the eyes of the audience, a container filled with red explosives was detonated by a dramaturg and theater theorist named Bertolt Brecht. Its fire, smoke, heat and ashes have scorched and buried the world of theater forever.

RED CENTRAL AT WEIMAR

Babylon was the capital city of Babylonia, a kingdom in ancient Mesopotamia, between 1700 and 500 BC. During this time, it was the largest city in the world, both in population and in extent, but its vastness was the vastness of a disease which made a luxuriant home in its precincts. This disease spread across the land without surcease and descended into the souls of each and every one of its inhabitants. This was the disease of degeneracy and the city's terraced gardens were watered by its pumps for a thousand years. In August 1919 in the city of Weimar, in the state of Thuringia, German President Friederich Ebert signed a pact with the Devil to pluck the ghosts of Babylon from their catacombs and make them rulers over the German people. This pact was the Weimar Constitution and it gave birth to the Weimar Republic, and in a land 360,000 square kilometers in extent, situated between the Baltic and North Seas to the north and the Alps to the south, it brought back the spirit and the sickness of Babylon. These ghosts from the distant past transformed Germany into a leading center of cultural degeneration and made it a blazing signpost, situated in the heart of Europe, of the decline and fall of the West. In the cells, tissues and organs of the West, a loss of function brought about by the irradiations of irrationalism commencing in the twentieth century saw a spreading cancer of the soul which the new voices of Weimar aided, abetted, nurtured and nourished. As vultures attack and gorge themselves upon the decaying flesh of dead animals, the avatars of Weimar picked apart a dead human soul and fed on its remains. They then soared above the mountains and forests of Germany and showed the world the monster they had created. This monster had a thousand heads which represented the myriad symptoms of degeneration which afflicted the West and it stalked the lives of every man, woman and child on the planet, breathing the fires of a spiritual sickness which rejected reason and enlightenment and placed menticide in a vial labeled Made in Germany. The monster of Weimar was the Institute for Social Research, code name for a Marxist advocacy organization founded in Frankfurt am Main in 1923. Associated with Goethe University at Frankfurt, the institute peddled its Marxism under two other code names, the Frankfurt school and critical theory. These red explosives detonated in the underworld of Weimar proclaimed that the highest form of philosophy consists in a critique of capitalism which will bring about radical social change and emancipation from the yoke of freedom. They proclaimed that capitalism justifies and legitimizes the domination of people and must be overthrown. They proclaimed that capitalists have achieved cultural hegemony in the present day; they control the narratives, stories, beliefs, explanations, perceptions, norms, values, mores and the entire ideological superstructure of society; and these ruling class ideas must be swept away by a revolution of the material base of society, the machines and the means of production, which will bring into power the proletarian hoodlums who will liberate the world. They proclaimed that there are no such things as real empirical facts because all such facts are created by politics and ideology and all so-called scientific theories revolve around the subject and not around an alleged outer experience. They proclaimed that the scientific method is a bourgeois illusion because it is the ideas of the researcher and not any alleged facts of reality which are the determinants of all conceptions and explanations. They proclaimed that there is no such thing as an empirical scientist or a knowing individual because all facts are social constructs and the only universal, absolute truth is that which affirms the class relativity of all truths. They proclaimed that there is no such thing as a universally binding system of logic, a system which is true independently of practical, economic activity, and mankind can only be liberated from the chains of capitalist exploitation by the proletarian logic of class conflict, class contradiction, class war and brute force. They proclaimed that reality is pure movement and change, pure interrelation and interaction, without any entities which move, change, relate or interact, and this pure flux of conflict and contradiction will realize human freedom to the highest degree by storming the citadels and ramparts of the liberal democratic order. They proclaimed that reality unfolds in accordance with a special dialectical logic in which contradictions are synthesized, the impossible occurs, and war becomes peace, ignorance becomes knowledge, and universal enslavement becomes universal freedom. They proclaimed that the Age of Enlightenment, with its pillars of liberalism, capitalism, science, rationality, industry, technology and the progress of mankind, is an instrument of capitalist mastery and domination. It must be swept away by an opposing, dialectical movement of proletarian thugs who will bring the people's reign of terror to the doorsteps of civilization and blast the hands of time back into the nameless eons before the year zero. Look at the Weimar reds who exploded an ideological bomb and buried the republic in its shrapnel and debris. Who proclaimed that what the ignorant call physical objects are in point of fact social constructs and arise from the activity of society. Who proclaimed that perception is not a passive, receptive, objective process, and the world which we see and hear has been manufactured by the forms and categories of human consciousness. Who proclaimed that there are no such things as real, natural, sensory facts and all so-called facts have been formed and shaped by social, political and ideological interests and can change hour by hour and moment by moment as interests change and evolve. Who proclaimed that man possesses no organs of perception but only organs of creation which give rise to the illusion of a solid, stable, determinate universe. Who proclaimed that perception and understanding are subjective processes, that perception is the perception of nothing and understanding is the understanding of nothing, and that these acts of consciousness are mechanisms of fabrication of a world in accordance with the class will to power and domination. Who proclaimed that to be is to be nothing real or substantial because social life is the determinant of all existence. Who proclaimed that society is a mystical organism and is the highest form of existence, and subordination to its edicts alone can free the individual from the oppression and injustice brought down by the bourgeois system of personal liberty and private enterprise: "The world which is given to the individual and which he must accept and take into account is, in its present and continuing form, a product of the activity of society as a whole. The objects we perceive in our surroundings—cities, villages, fields, and woods—bear the mark of having been worked on by man. It is not only in clothing and appearance, in outward form and emotional make up that men are the product of history. Even the way they see and hear is inseparable from the social life process as it has evolved over the millennia. The facts which our senses present to us are socially preformed in two ways: through the historical character of the object perceived and through the historical character of the perceiving organ. Both are not simply natural; they are shaped by human activity, and yet the individual perceives himself as receptive and passive in the act of perception. The opposition of passivity and activity, which appears in knowledge theory as a dualism of sense perception and understanding, does not hold for society, however, in the same measure as for the individual. The individual sees himself as passive and dependent, but society, though made up of individuals, is an active subject, even if a nonconscious one and, to that extent, a subject only in an improper sense. This difference between the existence of man and society is an expression of the cleavage which has up to now affected the historical forms of social life. The existence of society has either been founded directly on oppression or been the blind outcome of conflicting forces, but in any event not the result of conscious spontaneity on the part of free individuals. Therefore the meaning of activity and passivity changes according as these concepts are applied to society or to individual. In the bourgeois economic mode the activity of society is blind and concrete, that of individuals abstract and conscious." (Traditional And Critical Theory by Max Horkheimer). The Weimar monster was the movement of expressionism, which proclaimed that art must portray the world from the standpoint of moods, emotions and subjectivity and without concern for the nature and essence of the objects portrayed. The monster of Weimar was the theater of Bertolt Brecht, which hurls Marxist propaganda at the audience in the form of Molotov cocktails of formalist disconnection, discontinuity, detachment, montage, medium fixation and mental illness. The monster of Weimar was atonal music, which lacks melody, harmony, direction, center and key and bombards the audience with orchestral blasts of pure noise. The monsters of Weimar, the reds and the avantgardists, the Horkheimers, the Brechts and the Schoenbergs, joined hands, went forth and marched upon the capital cities of reason and enlightenment. Their tribal politics, whose progeny today hoist the swastika banners of gender, race and class, and their antiart of formalism and disorder, have lowered the curtain on Western civilization.

RED ALERT AT HAYMARKET SQUARE

A red alert is an urgent warning of a imminent danger and provides instructions on how to prepare and defend oneself. The term originated during World War II and designated the highest level in a spectrum of combat readiness, above the color yellow for low and orange for medium. In the evening of May 4th, 1886, at the Haymarket Square in Chicago, Samuel Fielden, Methodist pastor and red agitator, was speaking to the denizens of the sewers who had gathered by the thousands to hear him. A bomb went off, rioting and bloodshed ensued, and civilized people across America and across the world sounded the red alert of a communist attack against free institutions which had never before been witnessed in the annals of modernity. Wild, vengeful and ferocious, Fielden's words made the rains of revolution fall upon the mob and detonated an explosion which made the city tremble and was heard around the world. Killing seven police officers and four civilians, and wounding dozens of others, the shrapnel, debris, fire and blast of the explosion were letters in a satanic alphabet which spelled out a program and manifesto of a new politics of the reds which sought to halt the progress and development of mankind. As the groans of the dead and the dying arose above the trampling of people fleeing for their lives, and blood flowed in streams down the city streets, this manifesto was a great roaring beast of red revolution which bellowed across the earth, grabbed the innocent by their necks, and dragged them down into a swampland called collectivism. The text was as clear and unequivocal as it was fearsome and terrifying and struck all those who heard it and read it like a fusillade of rifles and cannons razing a city and reducing it to rubble and shattered glass. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system run by police bloodhounds who are ever on the hunt for the workingman. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system which reduces the working class to poor wretches who must obey the supreme will of their bosses. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system which murders the working class by unending hours of toil. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system in which the working class is not free and is exploited and decimated by the day and by the hour to feed the voracious maw of the ruling class. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system which humiliates the working class, subjects it to rank injustice and iniquity, forces it to endure want and hunger, and makes its children and its children's children's sacrifice their freedom and dignity before the thrones of the factory lords, It proclaimed that capitalism is a system which compels the working class to satisfy the insatiable greed of their idle, thieving masters and to fill their coffers to overflowing. It proclaimed that capitalism is a hideous monster which seeks to crush the working class and it must be swept away by a call to arms. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system in which the working class begs and prays to its masters for scraps of subsistence and a reduction of their burdens. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system in which entrepreneurs who perform no work and create no wealth are granted ownership over the muscles, bones and brains of the working class. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system in which the victimizers and oppressors of the working class have become the lords and masters of the earth and reduced the working class to wandering poverty and vagabondage. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system which has disinherited the real producers of wealth, the class of unskilled laborers called the proletariat, and made their lives unbearable before the plutocrats of plunder and exploitation. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system in which shylocks and extortionists have grown rich and powerful upon the flesh and labor of the proletariat. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system in which nonworking entrepreneurs amass astounding fortunes while those who brought these fortunes into existence, the proletariat, are made to suffer from deprivation and impoverishment. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system in which illicit rulers have seized the lives of the working class, made dollars and gold out of the working class, and poured the ill gotten wealth into their fortresses and vaults. It proclaimed that capitalism is a system in which the armies and police forces of the ruling class have silenced the people's defenders, those who have declared war against the illegitimate institutions of private property and constitutional rights. Listen to the voices of red terror at Haymarket Square as they condemn those who are talented and successful as marauders and plunders of the working class. As they condemn the real producers of wealth, the talented and intelligent members of society, as a class of parasitical idlers and seek to confiscate their wealth and hurl it to the wild animals of the urban jungles in the name of the proletarian revolution. As they condemn capitalism as an oligarchy ruled by senates and councils of plutocrats who rob and exploit the honest wage workers who create all the wealth. As they condemn the liberal order of freedom and opportunity as a lash endlessly breaking against the incompetent millions and a flaying scourge which forces them to live and work in privation and wretchedness. As they condemn capitalism as a system of wage slavery which is based upon the bourgeois myth of freedom of contract and freedom of choice. As they promote class violence and totalitarian tyranny under the banners of justice for the proletariat and power for the international labor movement. As they descend into whirlpools of psychosis and hallucinate global capitalist conspiracies, try capitalists on the charge of witchcraft, and burn capitalists at the stake. As they condemn capitalism as a system presided over by factory lords and who grow fat and wealthy from the unpaid labor of their wage slaves. As they condemn capitalism as a system which crushes the peasants and the proletariat beneath the multiplying fortunes of landlords who engorge themselves upon their illicit gains. As they seek to stamp out the world of the modern capitalist age, the world of global industry, scientific agriculture, mass production, gross domestic products, the technical marvels of machines which conquer time and distance and project human power to the ends of the universe, and everything which lives and breathes the spirit of reason and enlightenment, and to do so in the name of social justice and the people's liberation. As they throw fiery particles of class envy and class hatred onto jet fuel labeled the masses and celebrate as the flames expand into every home, office and school, and blaze up in front of them, above them, behind them and the ground on which they stand, and scorch every man, woman and child alive, and consume one thousand years of Western liberal civilization: "Grinnell [State's Attorney Julius Grinnell] has repeatedly stated that our country is an enlightened country. The verdict fully corroborates the assertion! This verdict against us is the anathema of the wealthy classes over their despoiled victims—the vast army of wage workers and farmers. If your honor would not have these people believe this; if you would not have them believe that we have once more arrived at the Spartan Senate, the Athenian Areopagus, the Venetian Council of Ten, etc, then sentence should not be pronounced. But, if you think that by hanging us you can stamp out the labor movement—the movement from which the downtrodden millions, the millions who toil and live in want and misery, the wage slaves, expect salvation—if this is your opinion, then hang us! Here you will tread upon a spark, but here, and there, and behind you, and in front of you, and everywhere, flames will blaze up. It is a subterranean fire. You cannot put it out. The ground is on fire upon which you stand. You can't understand it. You don't believe in magical arts, as your grandfathers did, who burned witches at the stake, but you do believe in conspiracies; you believe that all these occurrences of late are the work of conspirators! You resemble the child that is looking for his picture behind the mirror. What you see, and what you try to grasp, is nothing but the deceptive reflex of the stings of your bad conscience. You want to stamp out the conspirators—the agitators? Ah, stamp out every factory lord who has grown wealthy upon the unpaid labor of his employees. Stamp out every landlord who has amassed fortunes from the rent of overburdened workingmen and farmers. Stamp out every machine that is revolutionizing industry and agriculture, that intensifies the production, ruins the producer, that increases the national wealth, while the creator of all these things stands amidst them tantalized with hunger! Stamp out the railroads, the telegraph, the telephone, steam and yourselves—for everything breathes the revolutionary spirit." (Courtroom Address of August Spies, October 7, 1886). The perpetrators of the Haymarket attacks, August Spies, Rudolph Schaubelt, Adolf Fischer, Albert Parsons and Samuel Fielden, were members of an international network of red terror which worshiped at the altars of bloody violence and radical social change. Together they plotted murder and mayhem at Haymarket. They used the trial as a stage for political theater and justified mass killing in the name of justice for the working class. Surveying the fallen victims of the deadly bomb attack and the mobs exulting in the cruel deed, civilized people sounded a bell, tolled an alarm, sent dispatches to communities throughout the world, and telegraphed a warning to the West. But the West did not hear them or read them and has not heard them or read them since. The bomb which went off at Haymarket Square on May 4th, 1886 ignited a wave of red attacks which have grown in violence and intensity over the past century and a half. The human missiles spreading death and destruction at Haymarket Square stalk the precincts of the reds in the present day. They have propelled their successors, the hooded figures of Antifa and Black Lives Matter, onto victory and lowered the curtain on the republic of free people and the cities of law and order.

REDS' NIGHT OUT AT THE OSCARS

In May 16, 1929, at a private dinner held at the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel in Los Angeles, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences presented its first Academy Award and honored the best films of 1927 and 1928. Measured from the standpoint of historical time, one hundred years are the blink of an eye and in this nanosecond, the principles of Western liberal order, the principles of individual rights and selection on the basis of merit, tumbled down into an abyss, pushed there by a blazing mass of reds who had assumed control over the culture. In one hundred short years, in a flash of light racing down the corridors of history, the West abandoned the principles of liberalism and crashed headlong into a malarial fever swamp of tribalism which sullied its arts and sciences forever. The process of cultural decline is preceded by a development which lasts for centuries, a development which creates a state of rising pressure and temperature and leads to a final explosion, and this explosion, this cultural fall, happens in an instant on a historical timeline, and in this instant, the curtain is lowered on the culture and its glorious ages and epochs recede into a distant, dim, obscure, ghostly past. In a split second, the West hurled itself into a moral sewer and luxuriated in its dirt and smeared the dirt all over its creations and made them unrecognizable to civilized people. This was the dirt which said that individuals should not be treated as individuals but as members of tribes and that all social and cultural institutions must be marked by tribal sponsorship, representation, advancement and control. Civilized people saw an Academy Award floating in the new cultural dirt and retrieved it. They were unable to cleanse it of the dirt which had penetrated through it and had to resign themselves to simply staring at it and trying to remember what it once had stood for. This outstanding symbol of popular culture and emblem of an industry which had entertained millions of people and brought joy into their lives, this token of achievement and recognition reached by merit and not by tribe, was now covered and blackened to its core with the dirt manufactured by the reds, the dirt of gender, race and class identity theory which the reds taught in their homes, schools and offices, and it told a story in a poignant, moving vandalized figurine of the corruption and subversion of the motion picture arts. This story proclaimed that in order for a film to be eligible to win the award for Best Picture, it must meet an extensive list of diversity standards. It must feature one lead actor or significant supporting actor who is either Asian, hispanic, black, American Indian, Middle Eastern, North African or is a Pacific Islander. It must feature actors in supporting roles who are at least two of the following: women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders, the mentally handicapped, the physically handicapped, or people who are deaf or hard of hearing. It must feature a storyline, theme or narrative which focuses upon women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders, the mentally handicapped, the physically handicapped, or people who are deaf or hard of hearing. It must have at least two of the following positions, casting director, cinematographer, composer, costume designer, director, editor, hairstylist, makeup artist, producer, production designer, set decorator, sound, VFX supervisor, writer, filled by women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders, the mentally handicapped, the physically handicapped, or people who are deaf or hard of hearing. It must have at least one of these positions filled by a person who is black, hispanic, American Indian, Middle Eastern, North African or is a Pacific Islander. This film's senior executives in the marketing, publicity and distribution departments must include women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders, Native Americans, North Africans, Pacific Islanders, people from the Middle East, the physically handicapped and people who are deaf or hard of hearing. The film's production, distribution and financing companies must offer training and work opportunities to women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders, people with cognitive or physical disabilities, and people who are deaf or hard of hearing. The film's production and financing companies must provide paid apprenticeships and internships to women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders, people with cognitive or physical disabilities, and people who are deaf or hard of hearing. Listen to the voices of the reds as they write, produce, direct, star in and distribute a fearsome and terrifying film. It is a film which justifies tribal preferences in the name of representation and inclusion. It is a film which justifies racial, ethnic and gender discrimination in the name of the diversity of the film going audience. It is a film which justifies awards of achievement distributed on the basis of sex and skin color in the name of a diverse global population. It is a film which advocates the politicization of the entertainment industry, the tribalization of the entertainment industry, the racialization of the entertainment industry, the genderization of the entertainment industry, and the overthrow of the liberal, meritocratic order of the modern age. It is a film which is entitled The Decline And Fall Of The West and deep underground at Satan's Academy Award ceremonies, it has been named Best Picture of the Century: "Today, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences announced new representation and inclusion standards for Oscars eligibility in the Best Picture category, as part of its Academy Aperture 2025 initiative. The standards are designed to encourage equitable representation on and off screen in order to better reflect the diversity of the movie going audience. Academy governors DeVon Franklin and Jim Gianopulos headed a task force to develop the standards that were created from a template inspired by the British Film Institute (BFI) Diversity Standards used for certain funding eligibility in the UK and eligibility in some categories of the British Academy of Film and Television (BAFTA) Awards, but were adapted to serve the specific needs of the Academy. The Academy also consulted with the Producers Guild of America (PGA), as it presently does for Oscars eligibility. 'The aperture must widen to reflect our diverse global population in both the creation of motion pictures and in the audiences who connect with them. The Academy is committed to playing a vital role in helping make this a reality,' said Academy President David Rubin and Academy CEO Dawn Hudson. 'We believe these inclusion standards will be a catalyst for long lasting, essential change in our industry.' For the 94th Oscars (2022) and 95th Oscars (2023), submitting a confidential Academy Inclusion Standards form will be required for Best Picture consideration, however meeting inclusion thresholds will not be required for eligibility in the Best Picture category until the 96th Oscars (2024)." (Oscars, American Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences). Scene: Moscow, Russia, 1919. Comrade Lenin addresses a human sewer spilling out onto the streets, swirling with class envy and class hatred, and exhorts it to storm the ramparts of civilization and set it to blazes. Scene: Nuremberg, Germany, 1935. Soldiers form rows of glistening steel columns and listen with rapt attention as their fuhrer declaims about the centrality of race and war in the life of man and the universe. Scene: Hollywood, California, in the present day. The motion picture industry's casts, crews, productions, themes, scripts, content and apprenticeship and training programs are regimented in accordance with tribal categories and preferential treatment is granted to women, blacks, ethnic minorities, the disabled and LGBTQ people. Three scenes which form a frightening triptych of red politics which greets every filmgoer in every cinema in the world today. Three scenes which are sequences of a revolution which has taken place in the twinkling of a historical instant and in the calendar span of a century. At the first Academy Awards ceremony in 1929, the film Wings was named Outstanding Picture. A moment later in the present day, in the wake of Moscow, Nuremberg, campus riots, gender, race and class identity theory, and the rampages of Antifa and Black Lives Matter spreading across cities and nations, the acrid smoke of burnt celluloid and the red miasma of primitive tribal politics hangs over the ruins of the motion picture industry. These poisonous clouds have mandated a regime of corporate diversity quotas and corporate diversity initiatives which have brought forth a new exclusive, racist, sexist, swastika order of nonwhite, female actors, storylines, departmental heads, crew compositions and leadership positions, and paid apprenticeships, internships and training programs reserved for women and nonwhites, and nonwhite, female control over audience development, publicity, marketing and distribution. Rejecting the meaning and significance of individual character, merit, advancement and achievement, these clouds have suffocated civilized people in the final scene of the West.

REDS OPEN FIRE

A fire command is given to military personnel to deliver effective fire on a target. There are six elements of a fire command: get alert, ready weapons and ammunition, identify the target, provide the direction to the target, set the range of the weapon, and finally, strike the target. After the target is struck, civilized commanders give the order to ceasefire and terminate the engagement. At the beginning of the twentieth century, the commanders of the international red movement and conspiracy gave their assassins an order to open fire on the West and their first target was the president of the United States, William McKinley. On September 6, 1901, civilized people across America were shocked and dismayed by the news that McKinley had been shot down by a red assassin while attending the Pan American Exposition in Buffalo, New York. The bullets of the assassin had been aimed not only at McKinley, but at legitimate government, at authority and law, and at the institutions of society which protected the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual. When they rang out and felled the president, they were heard throughout the nation and throughout the world as the opening shots of a red campaign of violence and destruction whose targets reached up to the highest levels and sought to turn back the progress and development of mankind. Washing the blood from his face, the officers of the law asked the assassin, Leon Czolgosz, why he had committed his deed. When he answered, a peal of thunder, a play of lightning and a heavy downpour came out of the sky and civilized people knew at that moment that the red attack against the West had commenced and that their fight against it was a fight for their lives. The assassination of McKinley was the assassination of the liberal, capitalist order, and Death, Thanatos, the Pale Horseman and the Grim Reaper began feasting on the deceased soul of human advancement, and civilized people understood that if the hours of a day could symbolize the passing of a century, and if the march of a century could be telescoped down to the passing of a day, the West would scarcely last through the night and would be dead and buried before sunrise. Death composed the words of the red assassin Czolgosz and Death carried his words far and wide, carried them into homes, schools and offices throughout the world, carried them so that they filled the hearts and minds of the masses everywhere, and carried them so angrily, noisily, unceasingly and relentlessly that they convinced civilized people, reduced now to sorrow and weeping, that the furious cyclones of cultural collapse would raze everything in their path and ensure that the rays of dawn would never break. The words of Czolgosz comprised a program and manifesto of the disaffected, dissatisfied, disgruntled and disturbed classes of the world, the classes which had now assumed control over society, and were a declaration of war against everything cherished and held dear by decent, honest, virtuous, intelligent, flourishing people, by people who lived as people ought to live, in freedom, dignity, order and peace. Shot out of the barrel of a red assassin's gun, these words proclaimed that a progressive society is a regime of insurrection, bombings and assassination directed against the ruling capitalist class. They proclaimed that the highest type of human action is the red propaganda of the deed; it is the deed which commits acts of violence and destruction; and the deed which brings about a movement of repression of the voices of civilized reason. They proclaimed that a progressive society advocates mass murder of the representatives of liberal capitalism and constitutional government and places the voices of dissent in the grip of fear. They proclaimed that a progressive society massacres as enemies of the people all those who choose to live, work and flourish for themselves. They proclaimed that a progressive society is a nonstop factory of revolution, war and explosions which seeks to kill the industrialists of achievement and blast their cities, the cities of free people, to the ends of the earth. They proclaimed that a progressive society pulses with the energy of constant, indiscriminate violence and is a call to arms to slay the beast of law which ever stalks and preys upon the working class. They proclaimed that capitalist society is based upon cruelty and injustice because it refuses to confiscate the wealth earned by the doers and achievers to support the millions who are incompetent and purposeless. Listen to the words of McKinley's assassin as he promotes socialist tyranny over man. As he promotes totalitarian regimentation in the name of freedom and anarchy. As he promotes the confiscation of honest wealth in the name of the envious, the embittered, the enraged, the vengeful, and the bad tempered proletarian bacteria which color the sewers of society. As he pours the jet fuel of class hatred drawn from tanks filled by the Emma Goldmans of the world and sets on himself on fire. As he blazes across the land, frenzied in heart and soul, and pulls the triggers of extermination at every talented and successful producer of value he can find. As he hatches a plan, formulates a design and steels his determination to shoot down the government of free people and blow up the capital cities of the world. As he loads a pistol with Death, Destruction, Disorder and Dissolution and opens fire at the decent and the righteous, at the forces of law and order, at the leaders of free nations, and at the mighty pillars of human civilization. As he rides in Satan's carriage, enters Satan's church, steps up to Satan's altar, receives Satan's sacraments, and is crowned by the Prince of Darkness as the hero and champion of the hoodlums and delinquents who are the new rulers of the age: "I was born in Detroit nearly twenty-nine years ago. My parents were Russian Poles. They came here forty two years ago. I got my education in the public schools of Detroit and then went to Cleveland, where I got work. In Cleveland I read books on socialism and met a great many socialists. I was pretty well known as a socialist in the West. After being in Cleveland for several years I went to Chicago, where I remained seven months, after which I went to Newburg, on the outskirts of Cleveland, and went to work in the Newburg wire mills. During the last five years I have had as friends anarchists in Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, and other Western cities, and I suppose I became more or less bitter. Yes, I know I was bitter. I never had much luck at anything and this preyed upon me. It made me morose and envious, but what started the craze to kill was a lecture I heard some little time ago by Emma Goldman. She was in Cleveland and I and other anarchists went to hear her. She set me on fire. Her doctrine that all rulers should be exterminated was what set me to thinking so that my head nearly split with the pain. Miss Goldman's words went right through me and when I left the lecture I had made up my mind that I would have to do something heroic for the cause I loved. Eight days ago, while I was in Chicago, I read in a Chicago newspaper of President McKinley's visit to the Pan American Exposition at Buffalo. That day I bought a ticket for Buffalo and got there with the determination to do something, but I did not know just what. I thought of shooting the president, but I had not formed a plan. I went to live at 1078 Broadway, which is a saloon and hotel. John Nowak, a Pole, a sort of politician who has led his people here for years, owns it. I told Nowak that I came to see the fair. He knew nothing about what was setting me crazy. I went to the Exposition grounds a couple of times a day. Not until Tuesday morning did the resolution to shoot the president take a hold of me. It was in my heart; there was no escape for me. I could not have conquered it had my life been at stake. There were thousands of people in town on Tuesday. I heard it was President's Day. All these people seemed bowing to the great ruler. I made up my mind to kill that ruler. I bought a 32 caliber revolver and loaded it. Yesterday morning I went again to the Exposition grounds. Emma Goldman's speech was still burning me up. I waited near the central entrance for the president, who was to board his special train from that gate, but the police allowed nobody but the president's party to pass where the train waited, so I stayed at the grounds all day waiting. During yesterday I first thought of hiding my pistol under my handkerchief. I was afraid if I had to draw it from my pocket I would be seen and seized by the guards. I got to the Temple of Music the first one and waited at the spot where the reception was to be held. Then he came, the president—the ruler—and I got in line and trembled and trembled until I got right up to him, and then I shot him twice, through my white handkerchief. I would have fired more, but I was stunned by a blow in the face—a frightful blow that knocked me down—and then everybody jumped on me. I thought I would be killed and was surprised the way they treated me." (The Complete Life Of William McKinley And The Story of His Assassination by Marshall Everett, quoting Leon Czolgosz). Civilized military commanders understand that in every fire command, after the target has been struck, the engagement terminates and the hostile action comes to an end. The red commanders who are presently attacking the West do not know the meaning of the term ceasefire. It is not present in the pages of their satanic dictionary. Their campaign to destroy civilization is a night wind which will not subside, a raging storm which will not abate, and an earthquake which will not dissipate. Its latest manifestations, the assassins and arsonists in charge of Antifa and Black Lives Matter, have fulfilled the dream of Mckinley's killer. They have reduced the world to smoke and ashes.

HEAD CHEF AT THE RED CAFE

A head chef is a professional cook who oversees the operations of a restaurant. He is responsible for the food which is produced, from its conception to its execution. In the first half of the twentieth century, a red activist and writer planned, prepared and served up the food of violence and revolution to the masses in America and Europe who eagerly devoured every heap and scrap of it. Carrying a bag full of hatred and rage, she made her home in New York City and became the chief purveyor of red politics and dished out sewer grease from the city's cafes, tenements and bohemian dens and called it nutrition and sustenance for the soul. Exalting murder and assassination as the "propaganda of action", and taking her place as the chief radical among radicals and as a radical's radical, Emma Goldman expounded the black gospel of socialism and communism and left a trail of carnage in her wake. This was the gospel which commanded the destruction of property, the killing of capitalists, the fomenting of riots, and round the clock agitation at every street corner and in every sewer in the land. This was the gospel which promoted totalitarian tyranny in the name of anarchism and deprived the individual of all his rights in the name of freedom and liberation. Anarchism has nothing to do with the gospel expounded by Goldman. The anarchist rejects all forms of government because he rejects all systems of morality. According to the anarchist, there is no basis for government because moral judgments are relative to the individual and are nothing more than expressions of individual feeling, will, whim and fancy. Goldman advocated a universal, absolute system of morality: the morality of service to others, sharing with others, equalization with others and sacrifice for others. Advocated by Goldman, this is the morality which states that the immolation of the self before the dark altars of a mystical god called Society and the Proletariat is the supreme life of the good person. Like every moral system which claims to be universal and absolute, social morality requires, implies and sanctions the use of force and provides the ground and justification of government to compel compliance with its commands. A moral system which claimed to be universal and absolute but which abjured the use of force would be a contradiction in terms, for it would be a moral system which commanded nothing, which contained no obligations, and which said that no action is in fact moral or immoral, right or wrong, good or evil. Holding a red flag of class envy in one hand and a blazing red torch of class hatred in the other, Emma Goldman issued a program for the establishment of a governmental leviathan to enforce the imperatives of her universal, absolute system of social morality. Racing through the tempestuous winds and cold night air of red revolution,

Goldman issued a program for the destruction of life as civilized people imbued with the traditions of Anglo-Saxon liberty have known it for one thousand years. Declaiming on soap boxes constructed out of the slogans of the disaffected and the discontented, and with murder and mayhem ever on her lips, Goldman issued a manifesto for the overthrow of human liberty and the Sovietization of the planet. She proclaimed that the good person possesses a social soul and is driven by social instincts and has renounced his right to life. She proclaimed that the doctrine of individual self interest is the most pernicious doctrine known to man because it denies the mystical, religious, social character of existence. She proclaimed that the essence of life is social and the individual is the receptacle and carrier of this social essence and must do everything in his power to conserve and maintain it and must declare war against the capitalist system which ever threatens it. She proclaimed that the institution of private property is the wellspring of human exploitation and enslavement and must be swept away by a revolution of social power and the domination of public space over the private sector. She proclaimed that the institution of private property is the legalization of robbery because it steals from the classes of the idle, the squalid, the filthy and the criminal all that is rightfully theirs. She proclaimed that the land and resources of the planet are the birthright of every person, and the landless, propertyless, unskilled, unsuccessful, proletarian swine have a right to seize land and resources from those who own and distribute the spoils among themselves. Look at the career of a red monster as it stalked a free society and exhorted its cesspools to kill and destroy. As it advocated communism in the name of anarchism, violence in the name of deliverance, and consumed the rule of law within the its voracious maw of license and chaos. As it shouted the slogans of bloody revolution and sought to hang the producers of wealth in the public square. As it wrote, lectured, thundered and fulminated on the necessity of razing cities, smashing factories, bombing public places and gunning down the voices of reason and did not tire or weaken. As it incited the mobs to strike and riot and imprisoned decent citizens in cages of fear. As it imbued the cultural air and water with the principles and philosophy of hurting, damaging and inflicting physical force and feasted on the dead bodies of its innocent victims. As it breathed the fires of radicalism, a religion without pity, mercy, benevolence, compassion or conscience of any kind, and darkened the lives of civilized people with the horror that their cherished way of life had come to an end and that they would nevermore be free. A graduate with honors from the school of the Devil and sullied by rank criminality down to its essence and core, this monster of the reds named Emma Goldman lowered the curtain on rational inquiry, thought, discussion and debate. The leading voice of the orthodoxy of the reds, it was eager and intense in its desire for a regime of class enslavement and class extermination. Born and raised with the reds in Russia, and paralyzing in abject terror decent people who beheld its hate filled soul and visage, it was implacable and unyielding in its campaign to eliminate the system of order and enlightenment which had for centuries had glorified the lands of liberal capitalism: "Miss Goldman's contempt for the present system of law is pronounced, bitter, and unrelenting, yet she never fails to deny that she is an advocate of violence. 'I have never advocated violence,' she asserted some time ago, in an interview, 'but neither do I condemn the anarchist who resorts to it. I look behind him for the conditions that made him possible, and my horror is swallowed up in pity. Perhaps under the same conditions I would have done the same.' Miss Goldman says she was born a revolutionist, but that her belief in anarchy was not actually crystallized until after the hanging of the Chicago anarchists in 1887. Then she became what she describes as an active anarchist, and her activity has never flagged since then. She has been a prolific writer for all publications in this country that would give space to her articles upon anarchy, and has devoted much of her time to lecturing. Miss Goldman had frequently lectured in Chicago, but until the attack on President McKinley, the police found no reason to arrest her. The lectures in Chicago attracted little attention, seldom having been announced in an obtrusive manner. Her reputation was such, however, that the management of Hull House refused to permit her to speak in that establishment. In 1893 New York police arrested Miss Goldman on a warrant charging her with inciting to riot. The arrest was a result of her activity during the famous Debs strike, and it was followed by her imprisonment on Blackwell's Island for a term of one year, which was shortened to seven months on account of good behavior. She formerly had led a strike of the Waist and Shirt Maker Girls' union in New York, but without attracting much attention. In an extended interview which Miss Goldman gave out a few months ago while in New York she told many things about her life and her views on social and political questions which have a special interest at the present moment. She said: 'I am a Russian through and through, although little of my life was spent there. I was born in Russia, but was brought up in Germany and graduated from a German school. All that didn't make a German of me. I went back to Russia when I was 15 years old, and felt that I was returning to my home. My family was orthodox. None of my revolutionary tendencies was inherited—at least my parents were not responsible for them and were horrified by them. While I was in Germany I did not think much about anarchy, but when I went back to St. Petersburg my whole attitude toward life changed, and I went into radicalism with all my heart and soul. You see, things are different in Russia from what they are here or anywhere else. One breathes a revolutionary thought with the air, and without being definitely interested in anarchy one learns its principles. There was discussion and thought and enthusiasm all around me, and something within me responded to it all.' (Complete Life Of William McKinley And Story of His Assassination by Marshall Everett). In 1919, a ship loaded with dangerous cargo sailed from the United States Army's Port of Embarkation in New York bound for Russia. This was the Soviet Ark of deported reds and Emma Goldman was chief among them. Friend and ally of Bolshevik leader Lenin, and high priestess of communism in America whose speeches incited the assassin of President William McKinley, Goldman left behind a specter which has stalked the nation up to the present day. This was the specter of red chaos and criminality. Its fierce, hooded figures in charge of Antifa and Black Lives Matter have placed the nation in the twenty first century under a state of siege. They are the disciples of Goldman in the reds' final campaign of victory.

MARKET PRICES, SOCIAL PRICES AND FAIR PRICES

As the science concerned with the production, consumption and distribution of wealth, economics recognizes the fundamental difference between the exchange value of a commodity and its actual value. An economic system which does not recognize such a difference and equates market value with real value is a pseudoscience because it denies the different power of commodities to advance the objective human good. An economic system which equates market value with real value denies that there exists an objective human good and such a system, predicated upon moral subjectivism, has no basis in fact or reality. If there is no objective human good, then man has no nature or essence and is pure indetermination or nothingness, which is impossible, for to be is always to be something.

The market value of a commodity has no necessary connection to its real value because the market decisions of the masses are not necessarily rational. The goods and services which are in high demand on the market, and which can therefore command high prices, are not necessarily the goods or services which can advance the good life of man. This good life of man is the life of reason, for reason is man's unique and distinguishing means of survival. The definition of man as a rational animal was first made by Classical philosophers, such as Socrates, Plato and Aristotle, and it was these philosophers who understood that the real value of a commodity resides in its moral use value, its value to advance rational human perfection, and that this real value is not necessarily reflected in its market determined price. They understood that a fair, just, reasonable and moral price of a commodity is one which reflects its real value and that a commodity's market price is nothing more than that, and is not necessarily a price which is fair, just, reasonable or moral. They understood that there are three different views about the nature of commodity valuation, which correspond to three different views about the nature of man: the market theory, which derives the real value of a commodity from its market value and views man as possessing no intrinsic, universal good or perfection; the social theory, which derives the real value of a commodity from its usefulness in advancing the good of society and views man as being a purely social animal without individuality or concreteness of any kind; and the objective theory of commodity valuation, which derives the real value of a commodity from its usefulness in advancing the rational good of the individual in the the recognition that individuals and only individuals exist, and not groups, and that the human individual is an animal whose good and perfection resides in the achievement of rational goals. Listen to the voice of reason which emanated from the academies, temples and bright noontday fields of the Classical world. It proclaimed that the world of production, trade, income and wealth must have a moral dimension and serve the good life of man which resides in the rational perfection of the individual. It proclaimed that commodities possess value only insofar as they are necessary for rationally living, acting and doing well. It proclaimed that the market value of a commodity does not necessarily represent its real value and the latter alone is the concern of decent, virtuous, civilized people. Disseminated by Socrates, Plato and Aristotle, it proclaimed that the proper end of economics, without which it has no ground or justification, is the moral and spiritual welfare of the rational human person: "Aristotle taught that economics is concerned with both the household and the polis and that economics deals with the use of things required for the good (or virtuous) life. As a pragmatic or practical science, economics is aimed at the good and is fundamentally moral. Because Aristotle saw that economics was embedded in politics, an argument can be made that the study of political economy began with him. For Aristotle, the primary meaning of economics is the action of using things required for the Good Life. In addition, he also sees economics as a practical science and as a capacity that fosters habits that expedite the action. Economics is a type of prudence or practical knowledge that aids a person in properly obtaining and using those things that are necessary for living well. The end of economics as a practical science is attaining effective action. Aristotle explains that ontologically the operation of the economic dimension of reality is inextricably related to the moral and political spheres. The economic element is integrated in real action with other realms relating to the acting human person. The various domains mutually influence one another in an ongoing dynamic fashion." (Aristotle And Economics by Edward Younkins). Listen to the voice of capitalism which proclaims that there are no intrinsic values of commodities, no values which can be determined outside the marketplace. Which proclaims that value is never anything more than an arbitrary market phenomenon because there exists no universal human good or perfection by reference to which the value of a commodity could be measured. Which proclaims that prices cannot be established on the basis of a commodity's usefulness in advancing virtue because all definitions of virtue are private and capricious. Which proclaims that the prices of the market are the sole, ultimate and primary determinants of value. Which proclaims that economic calculations can never become moral calculations because it is impossible to establish an absolute, universal system of morality. Which proclaims that there are no moral terms in economics but only monetary terms. Which proclaims that money prices are determined by the market and by nothing but the market because all values are random, subjective and based upon mere whim. Which proclaims that the process of pricing is always a social process and a majority rule process and is never a rational or moral process. Which proclaims that the goods which consumers want produced and the services which consumers want offered are on that account possessors of real value because there exist no higher, rational, moral standards of consumer choice. Which proclaims that desires are matters of subjective taste and preference and the values of commodities are grounded in these and in nothing else. Which proclaims that the price structure of the market, established by consumer demand, establishes the value structure of goods and services because it is impossible to objectively define the good life of man and thus to establish a real moral value of goods and services. Which proclaims that the process of demand satisfaction can never be rationally grounded and therefore the irrational, amoral jungle and den of iniquity called the market is the sole determinant of all worth: "Prices are a market phenomenon. They are generated by the market process and are the pith of the market economy. There is no such thing as prices outside the market. Prices cannot be constructed synthetically, as it were. The very idea of cost prices is unrealizable. The reason why the price of Burgundy is higher than that of Chianti is not the higher price of the vineyards of Burgundy as against those of Tuscany. The causation is the other way around. Because people are ready to pay higher prices for Burgundy than for Chianti, winegrowers are ready to pay higher prices for the vineyards of Burgundy than for those of Tuscany. Prices of the market are the ultimate fact for economic calculation. Attempts to eliminate monetary terms from economic calculation are delusive. No method of economic calculation is possible other than one based on money prices as determined by the market. The pricing process is a social process. It is consummated by an interaction of all members of the society. All collaborate and cooperate, each in the particular role he has chosen for himself in the framework of the division of labor. Competing in cooperation and cooperating in competition, all people are instrumental in bringing about the result, viz, the price structure of the market, the allocation of the factors of production to the various lines of want satisfaction, and the determination of the share of each individual." (Praxeology by Ludwig von Mises). The recognition that there exist fair, just, reasonable and moral prices of commodities, prices which reflect the value of the commodities in promoting the achievement of rational goals, is not accepted in Western culture. But it is the recognition which prevailed in Classical culture, defined as it was by the Apollonian spirit of reason. In the Faustian culture of the West which exalts the will above reason, there have been two prevailing theories of commodity valuation: the market theory and the social theory. Rejecting both the market theory of valuation which equates market prices with real values, and the social theory of valuation which equate the prices established by government planners and price schedulers with real values, the Classical theory of valuation places economics upon a rational, moral, human plane. It is the key to the salvation of man and the rectification of economics.

THE KILLING MACHINE

It is entitled the Heroic Guerrilla Fighter and it was taken by Alberto Korda in 1960 in Havana, Cuba. It is the world's most famous photograph. Painted, printed, digitized, embroidered, tattooed, silk screened, sculpted and sketched on every conceivable surface in every nation in the world, this photograph is a fearsome and terrifying symbol. Reproduced more times than any other photograph in history, it a symbol of the radicalization of social and cultural institutions which commenced in the twentieth century and the victory of red totalitarian politics over the liberal order which ruled the West for centuries. This photograph, image, symbol and icon is that of Che Guevara, Marxist revolutionary and guerrilla leader who advanced bloody revolution in Cuba under Fidel Castro and spread bloodshed around the world. Civilized people who stand aghast at the red takeover of the world see in the picture of Guevara the story of a psychopathic killer who gravitated to Marxism because it gave him a license to satisfy his deepest longings and to kill as many people as he could. His target was the target which Marx had set forth for the use of people just like him; this class was called the bourgeois and it embraced artists, scientists, writers, academics, managers, executives, craftsmen, traders, bankers, financiers and entrepreneurs; and Marx's targeting of the bourgeois gave the green light to psychopaths to fulfill their foulest dreams and kill one hundred percent of humanity. The portrait of Guevara is a portrait of the age and the words of Guevara compose a program and manifesto of social upheaval, the collectivization of man, and the destruction of freedom and dignity which define the core and essence of communism. Voted unanimously as one of the one hundred most influential figures of the twentieth century and a prime mover of contemporary red terror, the author of this manifesto proclaimed that the good person is driven by a level of class hatred whose intensity has pushed him beyond the limits imposed by conscience and morality and transformed him into a cold blooded, perpetual motion, killing machine. He proclaimed that the good person savors the odor of moral acidity, the odor of gunpowder after a day's mass killing, and the odor of blood after a night's random slaughter. He proclaimed that the process of social change unaccompanied by mass murder is unfulfilling, unsatisfying and meaningless. He proclaimed that throwing bombs and killing people is necessary to break the monotony of ordinary day by day living. He proclaimed that a progressive society is a jungle of class war which throbs with the pulse of political violence. He proclaimed that the people's state of social justice and proletarian liberation maintains itself in power by executing as many people as possible. He proclaimed that a progressive state marches triumphantly through the gates of the people's republic by murdering, executing and subjecting to summary trial all those who come out in opposition to communism and choose to live, work and flourish for themselves. He proclaimed that members of the bourgeois class deserve to die by virtue of their very existence and the only way to solve the problem of capitalism is to shoot a bullet into the brain of every capitalist. He proclaimed that a progressive society is a prison house which places every citizens in chains and shackles in order to guard him against infection by capitalists. He proclaimed that a progressive society is a fortress and barracks in whose midnight darkness trials, convictions and executions of the enemies of the people are carried out faster than speed of light and leave the hands of the clocks ticking far behind. He proclaimed that in a progressive society the judicial process is a political process and is unbound by the rule of law and seeks to execute as many people as possible in the name of the people's theology of liberation. He proclaimed that a progressive society is governed by a revolutionary tribunal in whose prisoners' docks sit journalists, professors, merchants, doctors, and anybody and everybody who has been condemned as a violator of class justice, and they are made to confess their sins before they are led away and butchered by the friends, voices and guardians of the people. He proclaimed that a progressive society imprisons and executes people for acting in a human fashion and desiring to live as human beings ought to live, as sovereign, self acting, rational agents, uncontrolled and unprogrammed by the party line set forth by the people's commissars. Listen to the words of a communist devil and callous executioner of innocent people. Who advocates mass murder in the name of the people's liberation from American oppression. Who seeks to dismantle and destroy the nations and territories governed by liberal democracy. Who advocates a campaign of total war and unspeakable cruelty to annihilate decent, honest, law abiding people. Who exhorts his followers to struggle until they die to defeat the capitalist order of freedom and dignity. Who exalts those who plant bombs in public places and torture and kill by the thousands as the lionhearted heroes of the working class. Who exhorts the armies of red imperialism to overrun every civilized land on the planet, set up encampments and strongholds throughout them, spread fear and insecurity among the people, and inform them that they now inhabit enemy territory and will soon be shot down in cold blood. Who seeks to bring the class struggle to the doorstep of every man, woman and child in the world and blacken their lives with tragedy and sorrow. Who seeks to reprise the red attacks launched against Korea and Vietnam in every nation in the West and to place entire Western populations under the shadow of death. Who seeks to fan the flames of mob hostility toward those who are talented and successful, unite the failures and incompetents of the world into a ruthless, merciless, invincible fighting force, and lower the curtain on the future of mankind: "Let us sum up our hopes for victory: total destruction of imperialism by eliminating its firmest bulwark: the oppression exercised by the United States of America. To carry out, as a tactical method, the peoples gradual liberation, one by one or in groups: driving the enemy into a difficult fight away from its own territory; dismantling all its sustenance bases, that is, its dependent territories. This means a long war. And, once more we repeat it, a cruel war. Let no one fool himself at the outset and let no one hesitate to start out for fear of the consequences it may bring to his people. It is almost our sole hope for victory. We cannot elude the call of this hour. Vietnam is pointing it out with its endless lesson of heroism, its tragic and everyday lesson of struggle and death for the attainment of final victory. There, the imperialist soldiers endure the discomforts of those who, used to enjoying the US standard of living, have to live in a hostile land with the insecurity of being unable to move without being aware of walking on enemy territory: death to those who dare take a step out of their fortified encampment. The permanent hostility of the entire population. All this has internal repercussion in the United States; propitiates the resurgence of an element which is being minimized in spite of its vigor by all imperialist forces: class struggle even within its own territory. How close we could look into a bright future should two, three or many Vietnams flourish throughout the world with their share of deaths and their immense tragedies, their everyday heroism and their repeated blows against imperialism, impelled to disperse its forces under the sudden attack and the increasing hatred of all peoples of the world! And if we were all capable of uniting to make our blows stronger and infallible and so increase the effectiveness of all kinds of support given to the struggling people—how great and close would that future be!" (Message To The Tricontinental by Che Guevara). Che Guevara is a global brand. His image is marketed by major corporations, small businesses and shops around the corner and appears on mugs, hoodies, lighters, wallets, hats, bandannas, key chains, baseball caps, tank tops, club shirts, couture bags, denim jeans, T shirts and herbal tea packages. Afflicted by a chronic mental disorder which led to violent social behavior, Guevara was a Marxist fundamentalist who worshiped Marx because Marx told him that he could do what he deep down, in his wicked heart and soul, wanted to do: murder thousands of people. Over the past half century, he has become the preeminent symbol of the red majority which rules the world. His spirit plagues and haunts the present day and animates the activists in charge of today's two major red fronts: Antifa and Black Lives Matter. Through them, his disciples and progeny, he has kindled the braziers which have subverted and set fire to civilization.

ATTILA TAKES COMMAND OF PSYCHOLOGY

Attila was the leader of an ancient nomadic people called the Huns. His armies swept through the regions of Germania, plundered Roman cities and towns, decimated the inhabitants in their path, and made their leader's name synonymous with terror. The spirit of Attila is the spirit of reductive materialism, the attitude which denies the existence of the human mind, and views man as a savage beast of prey unbound by the principles of reason or morality. Civilizations in a state of decline have opened their gates to the spirit of Attila and let the philosophy of materialism run rampant throughout their precincts. In the mid twentieth century, Western psychology, after decades of domination at the hands of the Freudians, who proclaimed that man is a jungle of supernatural drives and instincts which comprise the foundation of all existence, opened its gates to the Attilaists, who proclaimed that the notion of mind represents a form of supernaturalism and has no place in science. They taught that man is nothing more than an animal who is governed by the laws of action and reaction, stimulus and response, and pure physiology. Over the past half century, psychology has been under the spell of materialism and this religion of animalization and dehumanization of man has become the unshakable profession of faith of psychologists and transformed them into the riders of an apocalypse which has engulfed the culture in a moral conflagration and sent it swirling upwards in columns of spiritual and intellectual smoke. The new high priests of matter and latter day disciples of Attila have issued a program and manifesto for the subversion of scientific psychology and the reduction of human behavior to the level of animal and machine transactions. They have proclaimed that psychology must restrict itself to the realm of observable behavior because introspection is a doorway which leads into a realm of rank fiction. They have proclaimed that human behavior and learning can be explained in terms of nonmentalistic intervening variables which are stimulus and response connections inside the brain. They have proclaimed that bodily movements are nothing than discriminative responses to stimuli, and memory is nothing more than a process of verbal learning, the relating of words on lists, which are stimuli, to words which are written down later by a subject, which are responses. They have proclaimed that mental processes can be explained in terms of mathematical models of information load and channel capacity. They have proclaimed that there is no such thing as intelligent behavior because all mental processes can be digitized and explained in terms of computer science. They have proclaimed that human learning can be investigated in rat and pigeon laboratories and is nothing more than the reinforcement of spontaneous behavior. They have proclaimed that freedom and dignity are prescientific superstitions which only serve to obstruct the implementation of the people's, progressive behavioral control technology. They have proclaimed that socalled mental states are measurable like physical states because they are in fact nothing more than physical states, and intelligence and emotion are nothing more than material capacities and intensities. They have proclaimed that the human psyche consists of molecular patterns, functions and relationships and is without thoughts or feelings of any kind. They have proclaimed that the task of scientific analysis in psychology is to demonstrate that physical factors are the sole causes of human behavior. They have proclaimed that the notions of reason, mind and will are a throwback to primitive beliefs in gods and demons and have no ground or justification in the modern, empirical science of psychology. They have proclaimed that the common sense belief that the mind exists has been proved to be mistaken by the findings of neuroscience, and words such as think, intend, believe and desire do not refer to anything real and can be replaced by terms derived from the study of the nervous system and the brain. They have proclaimed that the mind is a digital processing machine which can be mass produced in artificial intelligence laboratories. They have proclaimed that the notion of mind refers to a grammatical fiction, an unverifiable private object and a hobgoblin from the pages of folk psychology and is without empirical warrant. They have proclaimed that the only scientific way to understand human behavior is with the terminology of voltage outputs, computer chips and transistor electronics. Listen to the words of today's Attilaists who have razed and leveled the house of psychology. Who have denied the existence of the human mind in the name of experimental science. Who have reduced human behavior to the level of electrical reactions and muscular reflexes. Who have proclaimed that the mind is a material entity which can be measured by recording blood flows and pressing buttons on computers. Who have proclaimed that human cognition is animal cognition and can only be studied by means of neuroscience. Who have proclaimed that man is a mindless beast of the jungle and the only measure of human behavior is a neurological measure. Who have proclaimed that the laws of human behavior are the laws of animal behavior and can be discovered in animal laboratories by studying the levers, keys and runways utilized by rats and pigeons. Who have proclaimed that the notion of a mind/brain system is a supernaturalist fiction and there are only brain systems, neural systems and animal systems. Who have proclaimed that experimental investigations and analyses have conclusively proven that the human mind does not exist and that human behavior is governed solely by the principles of matter. Who have proclaimed that the internal workings of the mind are nothing more than the workings of a molecular system and what are called cognitive researchers are nothing more than physics researchers and chemical researchers. Who have proclaimed that the only valid theories in psychology are behavioral theories, animal theories, chemical theories and physical theories. Who have proclaimed that the notion of the mind is untestable, unverifiable, empirically false and has no relation whatever to the data of reality. Who have proclaimed that all cognitive functions are physical, chemical and physiological functions, and the notion of the mind is a product of mystical, religious and theoretical flights of imagination. Who have proclaimed that the only way to describe man is to describe a forest of instincts and reflexes; the only way to study human behavior is through a study of the habits and routines of animals; and the only way to achieve scientific enlightenment is to categorically reject the moral, spiritual and intellectual traditions and foundations of human civilization: "In a very real sense, all psychologists today (at least those doing empirical research) are behaviorists. Even the most cognitively oriented experimentalists study behavior of some sort. They might study effects of variables of pushing buttons on computers, or filling out checklists, or making confidence ratings, or patterns of blood flow, or recalling words by writing them on sheets of paper, but they almost always study objectively verifiable behavior. (And even subjective experiences, such as confidence ratings, can be replicated across people and across conditions). This step of studying objectively verifiable behavior represents a huge change from the work of many psychologists in 1904. Today the fields of cognitive psychology and cognitive neuroscience are highly behavioral (if one includes neural measures of behavior). True, there is nothing necessarily inherently interesting about pushing buttons on computers, but on the other hand, the basic laws of behavior in the animal lab were worked out on rats pushing levers and navigating runways, or pigeons pecking keys—not exactly riveting behaviors in their own right. In all these cases, the scientist's hope is to discover fundamentally interesting principles from simple, elegant experimental analyses. The cognitive researcher goes further and seeks converging evidence from behavioral observations on internal workings of the mind/brain systems. But as experimentalists, both cognitive and behavioral researchers study behavior. Behaviorism won. Behaviorism is alive and most of us are behaviorists. That may be truer of me than many. My theorizing is often rather functional in nature. Some reviewers complain that I don't have real theories or that I am redescribing the data; some have argued that my ideas are too descriptive to be testable; yet others, undercutting the previous point, have busily tested them and found them empirically wrong. It is true that I feel comfortable sticking closer to the data and engaging in fewer flights of theoretical fancy than many of my cognitive colleagues, having been partly raised in the functional intellectual tradition of John McGeoch, Arthur Melton, and Robert Crowder." (What Happened To Behaviorism? By Henry Roediger). The Attilaists in control of present day psychology peddle a religion which is incoherent. Their religion of materialism is a mental judgment and formulation. Proclaiming that matter is the sole reality in the universe, they appeal to immaterial mental processes when they ask for assent to their doctrine. Supplanting the Freudians who proclaimed that man's mental processes are controlled by unconscious impulses and desires, the Attilaists proclaim that man has no mental processes whatever and is nothing more than a walking aggregate of muscles and reflexes. Rejecting Freudian spiritualism and witch doctor philosophy, the barbarians of matter have delivered the death blow to reason, psychology and the progress of civilization.

HEAD BANKER FOR THE REDS

In gambling and board games, the banker runs the table, controls the play and acts as the dealer. On the great game of world politics, the banker, dealer, and financial controller and organizer is an American citizen, born in Hungary, who is the 190th richest person in the world. Having transferred 18 billion dollars to his organizations, he is the head banker of the global far left establishment and his dollars have funded every major cause of the reds and ensured that the enemies of liberal democracy will never run short of cash. His name is George Soros and his career as the officer and owner of the reds' bank of treason and subversion has spanned nations and continents, leaped across oceans and hemispheres, as it has lowered the curtain on five centuries of Western Enlightenment progress, tradition and civilization. The globe hopping, jet setting trajectory of George Soros's career is that of a radioactive comet hurtling through the Western evening lands and blazing a trail of cultural devastation. Look at the particles which have fallen to the earth and read in them the story of the premier financier of world revolution. It is the story of a man who condemns the system of freedom and capitalism and seeks to reconstruct modern society on the basis of universal leveling, equality and enslavement. It is the story of a man who seeks to smash the edifice of law and morality and construct in its place the models, paradigms and exemplars of red totalitarian tyranny. It is the story of a man who rejects the institution of private property and agitates for the collectivization of industry and the abolition of markets in the name of new social and economic thinking: "The entire edifice of global financial markets has been erected on the false premise that markets can be left to their own devices. We must find a new paradigm and rebuild from the ground up. I decided to sponsor the Institute for New Economic Thinking to facilitate the process." It is the story of a man who condemns the citadels of human liberty and champions in their place a religion of red fundamentalism. It is the story of a man who propagandizes on behalf of European decadence and its socialist swamplands and marches under the banners of government activism, government intervention and government regimentation: "European style socialism is exactly what we need now. I am against market fundamentalism. I think this propaganda that government involvement is always bad has been very successful--but also very harmful to our society." (Der Spiegel, interview with George Soros, 2008). It is the story of a man who has promulgated a red program and platform whose points define what it means to hate one thousand years of Anglo-Saxon liberty. Point one: America is an institutionally oppressive nation because it is the bulwark of global capitalism. Point two: far left political candidates must be financed throughout America. Point three: all measures enacted by the United States government to combat terror and protect national security must be opposed. Point four: all American military actions undertaken in defense of freedom throughout the world must be opposed. Point five: America must dissolve its borders and allow mass immigration and become the sewer and cesspool of the planet. Point six: social welfare programs must be expanded to provide comprehensive cradle to grave security to all people and this expansion must be financed by a taxation rate of one hundred percent. Point seven: illegal aliens must be granted unconditional amnesty and comprehensive social welfare benefits. Point eight: antiAmerican saboteurs and their aiders and abettors must be defended and acquitted in court. Point nine: the recruitment and training of far left political activists must be financed. Point nine: America must abolish its military and unilaterally disarm. Point ten: people convicted of premeditated murder must never be executed or sentenced to life imprisonment and must be released after serving a few years in jail. Point eleven: all medical services must be placed under the control of the government and health care must be extended to the scum of the earth as an inalienable human right. Point twelve: a regime of racial, ethnic and gender preferences must be established and women, nonwhites and people of nonEuropean ancestry must be granted special privileges in business and academia. Point thirteen: American foreign policy must be placed under the control of the United Nations and serve the interests of a new global socialist superstate. Point fourteen: Israel must be subjected to a global campaign of boycott, disinvestment and sanctions because it has committed the most heinous crime imaginable against humanity: it is a Western style, liberal, capitalist democracy. Point fifteen: the tenets of radical environmentalism must be enacted and technological-industrial civilization must be swept away in the name of the animals, the trees, clean air and clean water. Point sixteen: a Green New Deal must be enacted. This program proclaims that a progressive society is a radical environmentalist movement combined with a socialist welfare state. It proclaims that the planet must be saved from total destruction at the hands of greenhouse gases by bringing human progress to a halt and by dismantling of human civilization. It proclaims that individual freedoms must be repealed in the name of combating the global climate crisis. It proclaims that people who refuse to work are entitled to receive cradle to grave economic security including a fixed basic income. It proclaims that beef and dairy products must be outlawed and people must be forced to adopt a vegan diet. It proclaims that gasoline powered vehicles and the airline industry must be prohibited in order to reduce carbon emissions to zero which and prevent the planet from burning up. It proclaims that gender can be changed at will and transgender people must be treated as members of their chosen sex. Listen to the career of the reds' premier financier working overtime to overthrow the liberal democratic order. Look at his funding of district attorneys dedicated to defunding the police, dissolving the rule of law, and granting leftist rioters immunity from prosecution. Look at his funding of procriminal, antipolice forces which have declared total war against America. Look at his funding of rampant criminality and the leftist hoodlums who have seized control over cities and towns. Look at his funding of enforcers of the people's red party line who pressure Republicans to stop conversing and muzzle the voices of reasoned dissent. Look at his funding of agitators and rabble rousers whose mission is to overthrow the capitalist system, disrupt the course of everyday life, and make life impossible for decent, hardworking, law abiding citizens: "Former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich said Monday that billionaire left wing disrupter George Soros is actively working to undermine the American political system. Radio host Eric Metaxas asked Gingrich to explain the bizarre incident that occurred on Fox News last Wednesday, when Fox News cut Gingrich off after he brought up the role of Soros in funding the election of left wing district attorneys in local races over the past several years. Gingrich was arguing that the rise in crime in many Democrat governed cities was partly the result of the presence of antipolice, procriminal district attorneys who had been elected thanks to substantial funding from Soros. On the Wednesday edition of Outnumbered, cohost Melissa Francis and contributor Marie Harf attempted to silence Gingrich, telling him he did not need to bring Soros into the conversation. 'I know that it looked very strange on television. I think part of it was because we were all remote so we weren't on the couch, which is the normal pattern for Outnumbered. Look, one of the members—Marie Harf—was actually John Kerry's press person so her visceral reaction made perfect sense. If you are a left wing Democrat, you know that if the country learns how much George Soros is doing to undermine and destroy America that is a huge and indefensible position. We checked back channel and there is no Fox pressure against mentioning George Soros. I think people need to realize that this is a billionaire who actively works every day to undermine the American system and who has spent millions of dollars electing district attorneys who are antipolice and procriminal, And it's a major part of why, for example in New York, they had a 107 percent increase in shootings in August over last year, because the system is just breaking down.' " (Newt Gingrich: George Soros Actively Working To Undermine the American System by Thomas Williams). The dean of red money givers, George Soros commands a fleet of ten thousand ships, each with a different name, but all spelling out the same message: the destruction of the values and ideals of the Western liberal Enlightenment. Priorities USA Action, Campus Progress, Center for American Progress, Center for Community Change, Center for Economic and Policy Research, Color Of Change, Democracy Alliance, Democracy 21, Democratic Party, Drum Major Institute, Earthjustice, Free Exchange on Campus, Gamaliel Foundation, Green For All, Human Rights Campaign, I'l'am, Independent Media Center, Joint Victory Campaign 2004, Media Fund, Media Matters for America, MoveOn.org, NewsCorpWatch, Open Society Foundations, People Improving Communities Through Organizing, Psychologists for Social Responsibility, Tides Foundation, Tides Center, US Public Interest Research Group, Center for Progressive Leadership, Moving Ideas Network, New Organizing Institute, Think Progress, Vote for Change, and Working Families Party. This is the fleet whose captain is the dean of the red money givers, the Godfather of the far left, and the man behind the scenes whose millions have flooded into every home, school and office in the world. Commanded by George Soros, the fleet has landed ashore and set up a global financial establishment which is paying out revolution by the minute.

BALLOT STUFFING, COURT PACKING, COURTESY OF THE REDS

The march of history provides warning signs to those who cherish the tree of liberty and seek to nourish it and make it grow tall and mighty. Those who will not learn from the lessons of history are doomed to descend into the churning fever swamps of subjection to tyranny. History has demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt that when the reds seize power, they do so employing two main tactics: rigging elections and shutting down institutions. In Russia, when the elections to the Constituent Assembly were held in November 1917, the communists won 175 seats out of 715. The assembly was scheduled to convene for its first session in January 1918. After its first session, it was dissolved by the communists who thereafter ruled in a one party state. In the Polish legislative elections of 1947, the communists jailed opposition candidates and their supporters and struck the supporters' names from the voting lists. The communist party was the only party allowed to campaign. The election results were falsified. Official ballot boxes were either destroyed without being counted or were exchanged with boxes filled with prepared votes. These monsters from the past have returned to present day America and composed the playbook of the Democratic Party and its supporters and activists. The reds are seeking to rig the coming presidential election by means of mail in ballots, and are seeking to shut down the Supreme Court by packing it. Instances of electoral fraud by mail in ballots have mounted and formed a surging current of electricity which has reanimated a threatening force from the reds' treasonous past. Item: United States Postal Service workers who oppose Donald Trump will throw mail in ballots from Republican neighborhoods into garbage dumps. Item: United States Postal Workers will sift ballots cast for President Trump and give them to Democratic Party operatives. Item: Democratic Party operatives will pay homeless people to vote for Joseph Biden. Item: Democratic Party operatives will print up fake ballots. Item: United States Postal Workers will discard mail in ballots cast by members of the military for President Trump. Item: Democratic Party operatives will photocopy ballots and cast them for Joseph Biden. Item: Democratic Party operatives will steam open sealed envelopes and replace authorized ballots cast for President Trump with counterfeit ballots cast for Joseph Biden. Item: Democratic Party operatives will pose as nurses in old age homes and trick incompetent and ill residents into voting for Joseph Biden by casting the ballots for them. Item: Democratic Party operatives will sign in at polling stations, forge signatures and impersonate registered voters. Item: Democratic Party operatives will place special markers on fraudulent ballots as a signal to Democratic Board of Election counters not to object to them. Item: Democratic Party operatives will mail Democratic voters an additional ballot to cast. Item: Democratic Party operatives will collect absentee ballots cast for President Trump and tamper with or discard the ballots. The reds' plan to shut down the Supreme Court by packing it is a malignancy which made its first appearance in America under President Franklin Roosevelt, who sought to pack the court in order to eliminate a constitutional restraint on the New Deal. Today's reds have proclaimed that conservative judges who respect the text of the constitution and the plain meaning of words have been illegitimately appointed and must be counteracted by red activist judges who will make law from the bench. They have proclaimed that a Supreme Court which upholds the constitution and nullifies statist laws is an impediment to the realization of progressive goals and must be stolen, packed and shut down by the people. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a radical society which is completely unmoored to reason, facts and reality and the only way to safeguard its radical fantasies is expand, radicalize and neutralize the Supreme Court as a constitutional check and balance. They have proclaimed that in a progressive society recognizes that a system of constitutional checks and balances serves only to hinder the will of the people and that the government is not bound to play by the rules. They have proclaimed that in a progressive society, the people have taken back the Supreme Court, packed it with partisan reds masquerading in judicial robes, and institutionalized popular despotism unrestrained by the strictures of fairness or justice. Look at the campaign launched by the reds to steal the coming presidential election. Look at the ballot tampering, the ballot harvesting, the organized fraud, the illegal voting, the mail in cheating, the false application forms, the unlawful possession of documents, and the counterfeiting of government records. Look at the reds' felonious efforts to thwart the will of Republican majorities and observe the first stage of a movement to seize power, dissolve truth and integrity, sweep away free and fair elections, and lower the curtain on the liberal democratic order: "Texas law enforcement officials arrested four individuals Thursday for their alleged involvement in an illegal ballot harvesting scheme in the state's 2018 Democrat primary election. Among those apprehended and facing some of the 134 felony voter fraud charges was the Democrat who claimed the primary race. 'The four individuals—Charlie Burns, Dewayne Ward, Marlena Jackson and Jackson's husband Shannon Brown, a Democrat who was serving as Gregg County's Precinct 4 commissioner—collectively stand accused of 134 different felony charges of election fraud and ballot tampering,' Newsweek reported. 'If found guilty, each individual could face six months in jail to 99 years in prison.' The charge list against the individuals was long and inclusive. It included engaging in organized election fraud, illegal voting, fraudulent use of an application for a mail in ballot, unlawful possession of a mail in ballot, tampering with a governmental record, and election fraud." (Democrat Primary: Arrests Made In Illegal Ballot Harvesting Scheme by Simon Kent). Look at the rise of a large, ugly, frightening creature and see its evil program and tactics. Look at a political cancer which seeks to shut down the United States Supreme Court by packing and stuffing its ranks. Which seeks to explode the constitutional system of checks and balances and transform the court into a ventriloquist act filled with puppets manipulated by the reds. Which seeks to transform the United States government into a three horse team in which all members, the President, the Congress and the Supreme Court, pull in unison and gallop together at lightning speed to smash through the ramparts of constitutional restraint and construct upon the ruins an unlimited, uncontrolled, red totalitarian leviathan. Which defends, exalts, advocates and spreads violence against America, violence against the rule of texts, constitutions and moral law, and violence against the academies of legal standards, virtue, and good conduct and character, and seeks to replace the Supreme Court by rampant, unadulterated mob rule: "Frustrated by President Trump moving forward on his Supreme Court pick, CNN anchor Don Lemon announced Monday that 'We're going have to blow up the entire system.' What he meant, of course, is blowing up a system of democracy, a representative republic that protects the rights of the minority—and what I mean by 'minority' is not a racial minority. Lemon is furious over what's happening with the Supreme Court. He's furious that democracy isn't going his way, so he wants to put an end to it—by any means necessary. Something else to keep in mind as you review the clip below is that, when it comes to political violence, when it comes to encouraging, validating, justifyingm normalizing, celebrating, dismissing, defending and openly calling for political violence, CNN has led this malignant charge going back years. So when a CNN anchor says during a prime time hour that 'We're going have to blow up the entire system', only a fool would wrist flick the threat of violence. Only a fool would not take a CNN anchor at his word. Yes, CNN staffers are all liars, but when it comes to threats of violence, you can count on them to keep their word. If you watch the clip, you can hear the rage and frustration in Lemon's shaky voice (not to mention his ignorance of how constitutional amendments work), you can also see the rage in his watery eyes. He's furious that a duly elected president and a duly elected US Senate—a man and a governing body elected by the people—are about to do their constitutional duty and replace a Supreme Court Justice. These people are evil. They are monsters, and God help us in November if their evil and monstrous tactics are validated." (CNN's Don Lemon Says 'We're Going To Have To Blow Up The Entire System' by John Nolte). History has repeated itself and written red seizure of power and red totalitarian rule across the dark, gloomy face of the present. The mobs of America have brought back the monsters of the past and the sought to steal the 2020 presidential election, nullify the constitution by packing the Supreme Court, and lower the curtain on the life and liberty of the nation.

THE LEGACY OF A RED JUDGE

On September 18, 2020, in Washington DC, thousands of people gathered in front of the United States Supreme Court building to lay flowers, light candles and leave messages following the announcement of the death of Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg. Civilized, law abiding Americans were not present in this crowd. They did not mourn the death of the judge because they knew that their nation had been rendered less safe for the forces of freedom and less hospitable to the cause of constitutionalism as a result of her career. They knew that her judicial opinions and her pronouncements on politics, jurisprudence and constitutional law had stamped her as a stalwart red and consistent exponent of totalitarian government. They knew that she had compiled a record of rulings which declared war against the constitutional infrastructure of the nation and championed the rights of the state and the privileges of race and gender tribes over the freedom and dignity of the individual which had been protected for one thousand years under Anglo-Saxon law. Ginsburg's special occupation was to preserve, protect and defend her own chosen constitution, the constitution of the reds, the constitution of collective rights and privileges, against the corrosive acid of logic, language, textualism, common sense and empirical analysis. Composed in the dark, satanic reading rooms of red agitation, and in the libraries and bookshops of red conspiracy, this constitution was as far removed from the American constitution, which she swore to uphold, as antimatter is removed from matter and the netherworld from the bright, noonday fields of reason and sanity. Ginsburg's vocation, calling, profession of faith, and instrument of treason, this constitution was a body of principles and precepts by which the government would grind the individual into dust and reverse the progress achieved over the centuries by Western man. This constitution proclaimed that a progressive society has renounced the bourgeois illusions of individual rights and made a legally sanctioned transition into the fever swamps of mystical group prerogatives. It proclaimed that a progressive society has overthrown the dictatorship of private rights and private interests, shredded the bourgeois constitutions of human liberty, and achieved a people's democracy of public encroachment and state regimentation. It proclaimed that a progressive society is a government which is no longer in the service of right, but a government in the service of power, and is a government of, by and for the mob. It proclaimed that a progressive society establishes election commissions which protect the public interest by averting the danger posed by holding free and fair elections and ensuring that elections are rigged in favor of red candidates. It proclaimed that a progressive society has suppressed the unwholesome and antisocial yearning for freedom and liberty and programmed the people to march in lockstep to the slogans of social justice and welfare entitlement. It proclaimed that a progressive society has renounced the concern for fundamental human rights and promoted the spirit of self sacrifice and submission to the community. It proclaimed that the United States Constitution is morally and politically illegitimate because it is predicated upon the bourgeois assumption that liberty means the right of the individual to be free from governmental coercion and restraint. In point of fact, this purely negative, bourgeois conception of liberty has no basis in reality because individuals do not exist; only groups exist; and they exist in the form of gender, race and class tribes. The true meaning of liberty is rather a positive, socioeconomic meaning and denotes the right of the individual to receive housing, education, food, clothing and health care, from cradle to grave, from wealth confiscated by the government on the mystical, religious premise that every person is his brother's keeper. Ginsburg's red constitution proclaimed that a progressive society has rejected the notion of an independent judiciary and made judges subservient to the will of the majority as it has invaded every sphere of private existence and taxed and regulated the individual out of existence. It proclaimed that a perfect social union is a conglomeration of racial, ethnic and gender tribes, each with its own system of law, morality, manners and mores. It proclaimed that a progressive society has rejected the liberal system of equal protection under the law and advancement on the basis of individual achievement, and enacted a regime of racial and gender preferences which have disenfranchised white males in the name of diversity, inclusion, and We the People. Listen to the words of a red theologian masquerading as a judge as she promotes racial groups and racial programs and rejects the liberal ideal of meritocracy. As she promotes racial development and racial protection at the expense of human rights and fundamental freedoms. As she promotes separate rights for different races and the racial balkanization of society. As she promotes the use of race in employment and admissions procedures. As she promotes discrimination on the basis of race in the name of social equity and proportional representation. As she promotes race conscious attitudes and a racially segregated facilities. As she advocates the repeal of the Constitution and the establishment of an official, law enforced regime of racial castes. As she advocates a system of racial bias and the disempowerment of whites. As she advocates a system of discrimination on the basis of race and ethnicity the exclusion of European descended whites from primary schools, secondary schools, colleges and universities. As she proclaims that public education should be confined to education for blacks and hispanics and should exclude white students. As she proclaims that a system of racial and ethnic discrimination is the only way to ensure that blacks and hispanics receive equal rights and opportunities. As she proclaims that a progressive society is a black and brown society which has expelled whites from the precincts of the human race. As she proclaims that the key to establishing excellence in undergraduate and graduate educational institutions is to lower admissions requirements for nonwhites and give them preferential treatment over whites. As she rejects the values and ideals of the liberal order and advocates a system of racial affirmative action, racial slavery and the extermination of whites which is as foul and offensive as it is immoral and unconstitutional: "The Court's observation that race conscious programs must have a logical endpoint accords with the international understanding of the office of affirmative action. The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, ratified by the United States, endorses special and concrete measures to ensure the adequate development and protection of certain racial groups or individuals belonging to them, for the purpose of guaranteeing them the full and equal enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. But such measures, the Convention instructs, 'shall in no case entail as a consequence the maintenance of unequal or separate rights for different racial groups after the objectives for which they were taken have been achieved.' The Court further observes that 'it has been 25 years since Justice Powell first approved the use of race to further an interest in student body diversity in the context of public higher education.' For at least part of that time, however, the law could not fairly be described as settled, and in some regions of the Nation, overtly race conscious admissions policies have been proscribed. Moreover, it was only 25 years before Bakke that this Court declared public school segregation unconstitutional, a declaration that, after prolonged resistance, yielded an end to a law enforced racial caste system, itself the legacy of centuries of slavery. It is well documented that conscious and unconscious race bias, even rank discrimination based on race, remain alive in our land, impeding realization of our highest values and ideals. As to public education, data for the years 2000 and 2001 show that 71.6% of African-American children and 76.3% of Hispanic children attended a school in which minorities made up a majority of the student body. And schools in predominantly minority communities lag far behind others measured by the educational resources available to them. However strong the public desire for improved education systems may be, it remains the current reality that many minority students encounter markedly inadequate and unequal educational opportunities. Despite these inequalities, some minority students are able to meet the high threshold requirements set for admission to the country's finest undergraduate and graduate educational institutions. As lower school education in minority communities improves, an increase in the number of such students maybe anticipated. From today's vantage point, one may hope, but not firmly forecast, that over the next generation's span, progress toward nondiscrimination and genuinely equal opportunity will make it safe to sunset affirmative action." (Grutter Versus Bollinger, Concurring Opinion by Ruth Bader Ginsburg, United States Supreme Court, 1986). As Ginsburg's body lay in state at the Court and at the Capital, columns of reds from across the nation walked past her casket to pay their last respects. They mourned the passing of one of their most famous icons. But they knew she was not dead. Whenever a woman or a nonwhite was treated as if he or she was the member of an Aryan master race, whenever the hooded figures of Antifa seized control over a city and spread terror in the streets, and whenever the klansmen of Black Lives Matter plundered a neighborhood and placed people's homes in the grip of fear, they saw and celebrated the spirit of Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

MANCHURIAN CANDIDATES MASS PRODUCED BY THE REDS

Ignatius of Loyola was a Spanish theologian and founder of the Society of Jesus. The Catholic Church's most important missionary, proselytizer and patron saint of Christian soldiers, he is remembered by political indoctrinators throughout the world for his precept: "Give me a child until he is seven and I will show you the man." In their campaign to manipulate the minds of young people and distort their beliefs and attitudes for life, the reds have been guided by the spirit of Loyola and have created a curriculum for kindergarten, primary and secondary school students designed to program them to be dedicated assassins of reason and enlightenment and dyed in the wool ideologues on a mission of destruction. Today's educational establishment is the reds' Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith and like its predecessor its aim is to churn out minds scrubbed clean of all awareness of reality and minds charged with the dark electricity of radicalism, revolution and rejection of the present order. Critical of everything which is rational, virtuous, decent, liberal and law abiding, the reds' program of study for young people is the very essence and definition of child abuse and is an exercise in menticide which has left children's moral madness, children's psychological disfigurement, and children's hatred and rage at the world in its wake. Taught to students aged five to eighteen, the reds' catechism masquerading as a modern course of study is a body of principles, precepts, sloganeering and shouting whose fearsome philosophy rests upon Satan's four pillars of faith, force, fear and submission and is a pall draped over a coffin, a hearse and a tomb marked: Social Justice For The Sewers of Society. Churning out child monsters by the millions, the reds' syllabus for the public schools proclaims that in a progressive society objectivity is an illusion, facts which contradict the people's party line do not exist, and deliberate falsehoods are permissible if they serve the people's social and political interests. It proclaims that a progressive curriculum is a far left, race obsessed program of study which teaches students that white people are a blight upon humanity and are complicit in oppressing nonwhites and must be exterminated. It proclaims that a progressive school system recruits every student to the cause of Antifa and Black Lives Matter and hands him a rifle and ammunition to gun down whites and riddle the capitalist system with bullets. It proclaims that a progressive school system teaches students that the American colonists revolted against England to preserve slavery because the fight for liberty is a white man's fight and capitalism is the mortal enemy of the black man. It proclaims that capitalism is a slave system directed against blacks and the proletariat and must be overthrown by an intersectional unity of Marxists and black swastika formations. It proclaims that a progressive society is a movement for immigrant justice, social justice, racial justice, feminist justice, homosexual justice, transgender justice and environmental justice which will submerge the liberal capitalist order in a rising tide of rank antiscience, mystical collectivism, prehistoric tribalism, terror and fear, vice and crime, unabashed degeneracy, totalitarian lockstep, and blood and soil politics. It proclaims that a progressive school curriculum is a program of racial and ethnic studies which teaches students that skin color matters above the qualities of individual character and gives students readings taken from the *Mein Kampf*s of black, yellow and brown racism and the homework assignment to invent arguments in favor of racism and against the liberal order. It proclaims that a progressive curriculum consists of antiliberal, antiwhite course material which peddles its propaganda under the rubric of critical race theory. It proclaims that a progressive school system has established a far left slant to its curriculum and trains its students to become social justice hoodlums who will smash the capitalist system and the homes and schools of its defenders. It proclaims that a progressive curriculum teaches the virtues of socialism, communism and Marxism and conditions impressionable minds to promote an ideology of violence, intimidation, bullying and the total loss of freedom in the name of social responsibility and the rights of women, nonwhites and the poor. It proclaims that a progressive school system mandates that students demonstrate proficiency in the tactics of slander, disruption, disturbance and convulsion in the service of far left as a requirement for high school graduation. Listen to the voice of the reds in charge of the schools and hear its swastika goose stepping under the torch lights of ethnic studies. Hear its rejection of truth and objectivity and its politicization of the study of history, literature, economics, sociology and anthropology. Hear its corruption of political science into a profession of faith in the black gospel of violence and destruction. Hear its rejection of the traditional liberal curriculum and its drive to recruit students to the cause of social, political and cultural revolution and overthrow of the world of freedom around them. Hear its mission to empower the rabble from the sewers and give them unchecked control over the state and a license to spread panic in the streets in the name of women, the poor and people of color. Hear its program to promote counterfactual narratives of Western civilization, narratives which portray the struggle for liberty and the progress of enlightenment as the closing of the jaws of white racist capitalism, devouring women, nonwhites and the poor. Hear its denial of human universality and its reduction of human experience to the level of racial and ethnic based perceptions and the will to power. Hear its advocacy of preferential treatment for nonwhites in the name of diversity and inclusion. Hear its mission to overthrow the liberal democratic order and the rule of universal moral law and raise aloft the banners of gender politics, class politics, sexual politics, and the politics of communities of color. Hear its advocacy of racism against whites, discrimination against whites, oppression against whites, and permanent inequality between a black master race and a white subaltern race. Hear its plan to annihilate the age of modernity and the achievements of science and freedom with the bombs, bayonets and bows and arrows of race, ethnicity and indigenous rights. Hear its plan to foment a social, political, cultural, economic, psychological and emotional revolution against reason and organize power structures and forms of repression directed against successful white males and the liberal system of race blind, class blind and gender blind law. Hear its advocacy of collective action and communal violence to destroy a free society in every possible way. Hear its plan to rewrite the history books and fabricate contributions made by women, nonwhites and native tribes in the interests of advantaging these Aryan nations and advancing their seizure of power: "The History Social-Science Framework for California Public Schools: Kindergarten through Grade 12 defines ethnic studies in the following passages: 'Ethnic studies is an interdisciplinary field of study that encompasses many subject areas including history, literature, economics, sociology, anthropology, and political science. It emerged to both address content considered missing from traditional curriculum and to encourage critical engagement. As a field, ethnic studies seeks to empower all students to engage socially and politically and to think critically about the world around them. It is important for ethnic studies courses to document the experiences of people of color in order for students to construct counternarratives and develop a more complex understanding of the human experience. Through these studies, students should develop respect for cultural diversity and see the advantages of inclusion. Because of the interdisciplinary nature of this field, ethnic studies courses may take several forms. However, central to any ethnic studies course is the historic struggle of communities of color, taking into account the intersectionality of identity (gender, class, sexuality, among others), to challenge racism, discrimination, and oppression and interrogate the systems that continue to perpetuate inequality.' At its core, the field of ethnic studies is the interdisciplinary study of race, ethnicity, and indigeneity, with an emphasis on the experiences of people of color in the United States. People or person of color is a term used primarily in the United States and is meant to be inclusive among nonwhite groups, emphasizing common experiences of racism. The field critically grapples with the various power structures and forms of oppression that continue to have social, emotional, cultural, economic, and political impacts. It also deals with the often overlooked contributions to many areas of social life made by people of color and provides examples of how collective social action can change society in positive ways. Beyond providing an important history of groups underrepresented in traditional accounts and an analysis of oppression and power, ethnic studies offers a dynamic inquiry based approach to the study of native people and communities of color that encourages utilizing transnational and comparative frameworks." (Ethnic Studies Model Curriculum, California Department of Education). Subjecting young people to their preschool, primary school and secondary school agenda, the reds have constructed a fearsome and terrifying educational factory. With endless strips of tapes and film allowing for continuous repetition of their slogans and catchwords, the reds have hypnotized millions of subversive agents and assassins of civilization. Ensnared in their snipers' nests throughout the world, these graduates of the schools of the reds have triggered a global conflagration.

A GREEN NEW DEAL FOR THE TOTALITARIAN REDS

Intersectionalism is a term used in present day identity politics to refer to the reds' act of crossbreeding to create larger alliances against the West. The most menacing intersectional unity created by the reds today is between the Marxists and the environmentalists and it has brought forth a communist totalitarian plan to destroy modern capitalism called the Green New Deal. Introduced into the 116th Congress by the Democratic Party and enthusiastically supported by presidential candidate Joe Biden, who named it the Biden Plan, the Green New Deal is a declaration of war against American freedoms whose battle cry is opposition to global warming and the protection of the rights of the working class. Exalted in Marxist sloganeering and Marxist academic terminology, a two headed monster stalks America, the monster of class hatred and hatred of industrial civilization, and it has composed a program and manifesto for the elimination of modern capitalism and modern progress and the reversion of humanity to the nameless eons of primitive tribalism which pitched tents and made war upon the land light years before the year zero. The reds' hatred of the present order wears many forms and faces; the forms are interconnected, interdependent and overlap; and the intersectional hatred compounded out of anticapitalism and radical environmentalism has set its sights upon every man, woman and child today who breathes the air of freedom and liberty and flourishes in the mansions of science and technology. Composed in the Marxist sewers of proletarian mob rule and in the national socialist forests of antitechnological thought, the program and manifesto of the Green New Deal is a public declaration of the policies and aims of the envious, vengeful, frustrated, disaffected, discontented, nihilistically driven underclasses of society whose problems in living have descended into the depths of violent, uncontrollable anger, deprived them of their rational, moral agencies, and engulfed them in a pall of psychosis and insanity which will never lift so that they may see the rational light of day. Shouting slogans blaring through the bullhorns of hammer and sickle megavoltage and swastika amplification, these parties, candidates and coalitions of the reds have proclaimed in their Green New Deal that a progressive society is a single payer, medicare for all society which has abolished private medicine, private health insurance and individual responsibility. They have proclaimed that the only way to save the planet from imminent destruction at the hands of greenhouse gases is through a program of deindustrialization and regression to bestial Luddite existence. They have proclaimed that modern civilization has created a climate crisis which will incinerate the planet in ten years unless the following measures are adopted: the elimination of internal combustion automobiles; the elimination of jet fueled airplanes; the prohibition of beef and dairy products and the mandatory adoption by all Americans of a vegan diet; and the elimination of high rise buildings and skyscrapers. They have proclaimed that capitalism is a system of rampant polluters and avaricious financial speculators and must be replaced by a regime of green socialism and public service dictatorship. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a savage, preindustrial society which treads lightly on the earth and defines human flourishing in terms of unconditional service to the tribe. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is a leftist society, a Marxist society, a Stalinist society, a communist society, a democratic socialist society, a revolutionary training society, and a radical, environmentalist, climate change society whose single, overriding consensus of opinion is the necessity to eliminate root and branch the legacy of the Enlightenment: the world of reason, science, progress, technology, constitutional government and individual liberty. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has established a guaranteed, unconditional, basic income for all financed by the confiscation of the wealth of those who work for their daily bread. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has robbed people of their freedom and dignity by reducing them to the level of legal property and chattel slaves of the proletarian state. They have proclaimed that a progressive society provides lifetime welfare support to the class of leeches and parasites who refuse to work in the name of social equity and fundamental fairness. They have proclaimed that a progressive society recognizes that gender has nothing whatever to do with genes, chromosomes or the facts of reality and can be changed at will by means of surgery and hormone therapy. They have proclaimed that a progressive society recognizes that gender is fluid and nonbinary in character and people can possess multiple genders at one and the same time, as they can possess psychotic multiple personalities, or they can possess no gender at all if they wish. They have proclaimed that a progressive society mandates that honest, virtuous people toil from dawn to dusk and toil until the day they die so that the shiftless scum of the earth may live like kings supported by the fruits of their honest toil. They have proclaimed that a progressive society is run by committees representing proletarian communities, feminist communities, nonwhite communities and native communities which have launched a Final Solution against the preeminent oppressors, exploiters and victimizers of mankind: the class of successful, white males of European ancestry. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has swept away the liberal capitalist order and placed the state and economy on a militarized, collectivized, lockstep basis. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has mandated that all white people pay all black people all of their wealth in the name of social reparations and social justice because one hundred and fifty years ago, some whites enslaved some blacks in the South. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has deindustrialized itself, eliminated the manufacturing, agricultural, transportation and infrastructure sectors, and reduced human existence to the lowest and most wretched level possible. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has eliminated the dangerous, destabilizing, divisive bourgeois institution of free speech and subjected the friends of liberty to round the clock harassment, coercion and intimidation. They have proclaimed that a progressive society has abolished secret ballots at the workplace to organize labor unions, forced every worker to join a labor union, placed labor unions in charge of businesses, and transformed labor unions into red fronts driven by an agenda of subversion of the free world. Listen to the voice of a large, ugly, frightening creature exhaling two streams of fire and scorching freedom and progress in its path. Listen to its condemnation of capitalist progress as a lash of environmental racism and its exaltation of primitive socialist society as a system of environmental justice. Listen to its defense of communist slavery in the name of social justice and the rights of feminist, proletarian and nonwhite communities. Listen to its recruitment of hoodlums from the black and brown sewers to spread violence and revolution in the streets in the name of addressing climate change. Listen to its defense of climate fear mongers and climate doomsday peddlers masquerading as climate scientists and climate researchers and advocating the dismantling of industrial civilization. Listen to its efforts to halt the material advancement of mankind and send the hands of time racing backward at the speed of light in the name of reducing greenhouse gas emissions and preserving the air, the water, the trees and the animals. Listen to its efforts to raze the institutions of freedom, enlightenment, and technological mastery and development with the bulldozers of Marxist colonialism, imperialism, plunder, despoliation, and a green, environmentalist slave plantation: "I support the Green New Deal. It is a bold proposal to protect the environment and address the problems of environmental justice and environmental racism. As Representative Ocasio-Cortez stated when she introduced the resolution in the House, the Green New Deal is 'really about providing justice for communities and just transitions for communities. So, really the heart of the Green New Deal is about social justice.' There are hopeful signs that the movement to address climate change is gaining strength, especially among the young and among black and brown youth in particular. However, as an environmental professional, I share the anxiety of many climate scientists that we are running out of time. I desperately hope that I am wrong. Efforts by many countries to reach an agreement to reduce greenhouse gases have failed so far. But no one is willing to confront the root cause of this: the vast quality of life gap between countries like India and the more developed countries. This gap has historical roots in the colonialist, imperialist, and neocolonialist plunder of the colonies, leading to uneven development around the world." (We Need A Global Green New Deal by M. Siddique, Communist Party USA). Every May 1st in communist countries was celebrated as International Workers' Day. On this day, the latest military hardware was paraded down the streets in a massive show of force, in the form of guns, tanks and missiles, of the power and authority of the red totalitarian regimes. These mighty boulevard processions are alive and well in the feverish minds of today's reds. But at the end of these boulevards there now stands a junction. It is the intersection at which the Marxist parades meet the environmentalist parades. It is the point of contact and alliance between two red fronts who have declared war against humanity.

FAUSTIAN ANTIARCHITECTURE

Architecture is the art of designing and constructing buildings. Its guiding principle is that the function or purpose of a building should determine its form or design. Laid down by reason and common sense, this principle that form follows function and follows nothing but function is conspicuously, overtly and unabashedly transgressed by the architectural style which is distinctively Western, the style which instantiate the will to power, the striving after the infinite and the exaltation of pure space which lie at the basis of Western culture. This style is Modernism and it is an architecture of pure space the likes of which no other culture in the history of world had ever before produced. Its precursor in the West was the Gothic style which arose in the twelfth century AD, a style whose pointed arches, rib vaults, flying buttresses, large windows and elaborate tracery provided the first architectural definition of space and nothingness in the history of mankind and placed Western architecture upon a course of derangement and psychosis which mirrored the irrational currents surging through philosophy, the sciences and the arts, currents which announced Western culture as the world's wellspring of romanticist thought and the world's preeminent church of the philosophy of the will. Gothic and Modern architecture, two styles born in the plains and forests of Northern Europe one thousand years ago, in a gloom, a darkness, an expanse, and a mystical, bodiless infinity which can only be described in terms of a figure from legend whose sold his soul to the Devil and received unchecked power in return. This landscape upon which the West was born can only be described as Faustian in character and Johann Faust's satanic architecture, the architecture of volume and expanse which rejects the world of physical reality, is Faust's, the romanticists', the will worshipers' and the West's schizophrenic breakdown expressed in the form of blueprints, bricks, glass, steel and reinforced concrete, a mental breakdown in the guise of buildings which tower above cities, states and continents, and make civilized people recoil from them, as from a remorseless monster, in horror and fear. The function of a Gothic cathedral is to provide a statement of the Faustian religion of infinite space and the building fulfills this function and provides Faust's votaries with an appropriate venue in which they may worship, pray, commune and meditate. By contrast, the function of a secular building, such as a home, a school, an office or factory, can never be fulfilled by any transplantation of the Gothic style, which is what the Modernists seek to effect, and in consequence buildings designed in the Modern style are impractical, unusable, uncomfortable and uninhabitable. Despite their official strictures and protestations that form must follow function, the Modernists design buildings without functionality of any kind, buildings which serve as pure Faustian ideological statements, and buildings which are designs for the dissolution of the self and not designs for living on earth. Rejecting the fundamental principle of sanity and common sense that a building has to fulfill the purpose for which it was intended, Modern architecture is the negation of architecture and is architecture in name only. Brought into being by a bolt of black lightning appearing at the dawn of the twentieth century at the beginning of the accelerating downfall of the West, the world of Modern architecture is the reinforced concrete apartment building in Paris designed by August Perret. It is Postal Savings Bank in Vienna designed by Otto Wagner. It is the AEG Turbine factory in Berlin designed by Peter Behrens. It is the Steiner House in Vienna designed by Adolf Loos. It is the Stoclet Palace in Brussels designed by Joseph Hoffmann. It is the Theatre des Champs Elysees in Paris designed by August Perret. It is stepped concrete apartment building in Paris designed by Henri Sauvage. It is the Centennial Hall in Wroclaw designed by Max Berg. It is the Fagus Factory in Alfeld designed by Walter Gropius and Adolf Meyer. It is the Glass Pavilion in Cologne designed by Bruno Taut. It is the Larkin Administration Building in Buffalo, New York designed by Frank Lloyd Wright. It is the Unity Temple in Oak Park, Illinois designed by Frank Lloyd Wright. It is the Robie House in Chicago designed by Frank Lloyd Wright. It is the Corbusier Haus in the Weissenhof Estate in Stuttgart designed by Le Corbusier. It is the Villa Savoye in Poissy designed by Le Corbusier. It is the Second Goetheanum in Dornach, Switzerland designed by Rudolf Steiner. It is the Guild House in Philadelphia designed by Robert Venturi. It is the Guild House in Philadelphia designed by Robert Venturi. It is the Wexner Center for the Arts in Columbus, Ohio designed by Peter Eisenman. It is the Glass house Pavilion in New Canaan, Connecticut designed by Philip Johnson. Look at the world of Faustian architecture and see the congregations in its naves dissolve into pure space. See its cathedrals of volume and subjectivity repudiate the outer world of material, locational, light defined existence. See its language of mass without weight, distance without end and area without occupation shout down the counsels of utility, workability and livability. See its arches and vaults soaring into the infinite. See its structures without gravity and its loads without support float through the void. See its denial of physical reality and its projection of the primacy of the will. See its religion of disembodiment, its piety toward absolute nothingness, and its exaltation of what lacks all being. See its reduction of existence to a broad expanse of pure consciousness. See its sacrifice of function and utility upon the altars of a faith whose tenets are vastness, darkness, depth, dynamism, grandness without scale or proportion, pure, unchecked gigantism, and leaping, springing and propulsion into space. Rejecting Classical Apollonian architecture in which every type of building fulfilled its function, and temples functioned as pure symbols of reason and places of veneration of existence, and secular buildings functioned as practical places of work, business and habitation, Western Faustian architecture in its style of Modernism is an architecture of pure form without function and is unfit for work, business or habitation. It is the most impractical architecture the world has ever seen and its brazen rejection of functionalism and its commitment to expressing nothing more than an ideology is the funeral pyre and hearse of the art and practice of architecture: "Space—speaking now in the Faustian idiom—is a spiritual something, rigidly distinct from the momentary sense present, which could not be represented in an Apollonian language, whether Greek or Latin. But the created expression space of the Apollonian arts is equally alien to ours. The tiny cella of the early Classical temple was a dumb dark nothingness, a structure (originally) of perishable material, an envelope of the moment in contrast to the eternal vaults of Magian cupolas and Gothic naves, and the closed ranks of columns were expressly meant to convey that for the eye at any rate this body possessed no Inward. In no other Culture is the firm footing, the socket, so emphasized. The Doric column bores into the ground, the vessels are always thought of from below upward (whereas those of the Renaissance float above their footing), and the sculpture schools feel the stabilizing of their figures as their main problem. The extreme of [Faustian] disembodiment of the world in the service of space is Impressionism. Given this world feeling, the Faustian soul in the springtime necessarily arrived at an architectural problem which had its center of gravity in the spatial vaulting over of vast, and from porch to choir, dynamically deep, cathedrals. This last expressed its depth experience. But with it was associated, in opposition to the cavernous Magian expression space, the element of a soaring into the broad universe. In the cathedral of Florence the cupola crowns the long Gothic body of 1367, and the same tendency rose in Bramante's scheme for St. Peter's to a veritable towering up, a magnificent Excelsior, that Michelangelo carried to completion with the dome that floats high and bright over the vast vaulting. Faustian architecture begins on the grand scale simultaneously with the first stirrings of a new piety (the Cluniac reform, c. 1000) and a new thought (the Eucharistic controversy between Berengar of Tours and Lanfranc 1050), and proceeds at once to plans of gigantic intention; often enough, as in the case of Speyer, the whole community did not suffice to fill the cathedral, and often again it proved impossible to complete the projected scheme." (The Decline And Fall Of The West by Oswald Spengler, Chapter VI). Born in the offices and studios of Faust, Modern architecture has produced a child called Postmodernism which is as diseased as its parent. Postmodernism is not postModern but hyperModern. Its Modernist rejection of functionality appears in the construction of complexity, contradiction, fragmentation, asymmetry, disorder, unbalance, and oblique buildings which tilt, lean and are about to fall. It is the same architecture of pure space and pure form. Postmodernism is Modernism and Modernism is Postmodernism and these variations of the same theme, the theme of nonfunctionality, are the riders of an apocalypse of a field which once designed buildings for man.

SCULPTING PSYCHOSIS

In the early part of the twentieth century, the psychiatrist Hans Prinzhorn wrote a book entitled The Artistry Of The Mentally Ill. This was the world's first study of psychiatric art works and it was based upon a compilation of thousands of examples taken from mental institutions across Europe. Civilized people saw this in this book and its art collection an expose and gallery of cultural disintegration, and they saw in the praise which the book's compilation received from leading artists throughout the world, such as Paul Klee, Max Ernst and Jean Dubuffet, dramatic and striking evidence of the terminal illness which had struck the West. This was the illness of nonrepresentationalism and it was the end stage development of romanticism, the guiding, fundamental religion of the West, a religion which has seen no antecedents or parallels in any other culture in the world. Exalting subjectivity and individual license, acclaiming the schizophrenic as a hero of the people, and voyaging into diseased planes of total unreality, romanticism set off the West in diametrical opposition to the reason based culture of the Greeks and Romans whose preeminent symbol was Apollo. Unique in the history of mankind, the West's worship of subjectivity and the will gave a necromancer, an alchemist and a diabolical theologian named Faust the keys to the art schools and the art studios of Europe, and in the twentieth century, he placed on their shelves a final version of the orthodoxy. He called this latest, most consistent and most virulent form of romanticism by the name of formalism, and with its fearsome tenets, he knocked the art of sculpture off its plinths and pedestals and sent it tumbling into the dustbin of history. To give philosophic voice and expression to this twentieth century climax of romanticism, Faust appointed his favorite philosopher to the task. This was an eighteenth century philosopher named Immanuel Kant, and with Kant's esthetic philosophy which proclaimed that artistic creation should be concerned exclusively with form and technique to the exclusion of all matter and content, and that artistic creation involves the free play of pure forms, pure sensations and pure imagination without reference to objects in reality, Faust composed a program and manifesto for the formalists who were now in charge of sculpture. Composed by Kant channeling the spirit of Faust, this program was the end of the line of Western romanticist sculpture, and after one thousand years of development into pure subjectivity, sculpture finally shattered in the twentieth century into rubble and debris, and the tidal waves of Faustian mental sickness swept the artists, the academics the apologists, the workshops, the museums and the exhibition rooms into the abyss. The voices of formalist sculpture proclaimed that progressive sculpture projects volumes and voids and nothing else. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture is nonfigural sculpture which presents random fragments and facets of objects. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture is an accumulation of masses, shapes and forms. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture is not an object of beauty but a projection of the disorder which lies at the heart of existence. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture is nonfigurative and is an abstraction from pure nothingness. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture is a projection of pure space without substance or essence of any kind. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture projects motion, leaning and reclining without anything which moves, leans or reclines. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture consists of figures which are mutilated, pierced and pulled apart. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture captures the essence of reality which is empty space. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture is an exercise in pure form, pure style, pure technique, and the shaping and casting of nothing. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture is the projection of zeroes interacting with absolute space. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture consists of indeterminate masses whose only purpose is to be trod upon as one trods upon hills and mountains. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture consists of carvings of nothing, moldings of nothing, castings of nothing and assemblages of nothing. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture portrays nothing in the natural world, and only the subjective essence and idea which is the basis of all reality. They proclaimed that progressive sculpture consists of pure forms which are nothing, represent nothing, and are in endless motion and flight. Look at the world of formalist sculpture and see its random assemblages of found objects. See its monstrosities put together with cardboard, wood, metal and wire. See its molding, forming and carving of masses into indeterminate and unspecified lumps of nothingness. See its zeros hanging from walls and its ciphers sitting on pedestals. See its voids in three dimensions peddled as sculptures in the round. See its sculptures devoid of definition designed to shock and outrage spectators. See its rejection of sculpture as a form of representation and in favor of cubist abstractions from emptiness and negation. See its practitioners collecting pieces of garbage from the streets and signing and exhibiting them as works of high art. See its societies and communities proudly proclaim their independence from all standards of good taste, esthetic pleasing and sound judgment and reduce artistic creation to a fountain, bowl and receptacle of raw sewage. Exalted by judges, juries and boards of madmen awarding prizes and honors for cultural and psychological degeneracy, the works of formalist sculpture have smashed the ancient statues of beauty and dignity and buried the West in the rubble: "Pablo Picasso was another vital early pioneer in the realm of abstract sculpture, although he may not have intended to be. Around 1912, Picasso started expanding his ideas about Cubism into the three dimensional realm. He began by making collages, which due to their layered surface and use of found materials and objects in lieu of paint, already had a sort of three dimensional quality. Then he translated the idea of collage into full three dimensional space by assembling actual objects, especially guitars, out of materials like cardboard, wood, metal and wire. Traditionally, sculpture resulted from either a mold, or from forming of mass like clay, or from some sort of reductive process like carving. Picasso had inadvertently challenged that tradition by creating a sculptural item through the act of assembling disparate pieces of found materials into a form. Furthermore, he blew minds by hanging this assemblage on the wall rather than setting it on a pedestal. Art viewers were baffled and even outraged by Picasso's guitars, demanding to know whether they were paintings or sculptures. Picasso insisted they were neither, saying, 'It's nothing, it's the guitar!' But whether he had intended to or not he had challenged the fundamental definition of sculpture, and started one of the longest lasting debates about abstract art. As revolutionary as artists such as Picasso and Brancusi may have seemed to art viewers in their time, it's interesting to note that 1913 is also the year that the Dadaist artist Marcel Duchamp appropriated the term ready made to designate works of art consisting of found objects, signed and exhibited by an artist as their work. According to Duchamp, ordinary objects could be 'elevated to the dignity of a work of art by the mere choice of an artist.' In 1917, Duchamp exhibited Fountain, perhaps his most famous ready made, consisting of a urinal placed on its side and signed R. Mutt. Duchamp had created Fountain for submission to the first exhibition of New York's Society of Independent Artists, which was heralded as a completely open show of contemporary art, with no juries and no prizes. The work was bizarrely rejected from the show, causing uproar in the art community since the whole point of the exhibition was not to pass judgment on the work. The Society's board issued a statement about Fountain that said, 'it is, by no definition, a work of art.' Nonetheless, the work went on to inspire generations of creatives to come." (Abstract Sculpture--The Language Of The Full And The Empty by Phillip Barcio). The dawn of the twentieth century see the gates of hell swing wide open. Inside was a spreading, blazing cancer of the soul. Brought to a fever pitch of violence and intensity by centuries of baneful development, this was the cancer of subjectivism. Its cells attacked the art of sculpture, the art which had brought the world Apollo's progeny of Myron, Phidias, Polyclitus, Praxiteles, Scopas and Lysippus. Two thousand years later in the Faustian culture of the West, there was an uncontrolled division of cancer cells in the sculptor's studio. These cells traveled under the names of Pablo Picasso, Paul Klee, Max Ernst, Jean Dubuffet, Henri Matisse, Marcel Duchamp, Henri Moore, Constantin Brancusi, Ernst Barlach, Kurt Schwitters, Naum Gabo, Alexander Calder, David Smith and Claes Oldenburg. These were the carvers, casters, collectors, assemblers and modelers of a severe mental disorder and they brought this plastic art which Apollo had ennobled to an evil Faustian finish.

SUBSTANTIVE DUE PROCESS AND THE SURVIVAL OF LIBERTY

For thousands of years since civilized people first walked upon the earth and organized societies, the individual has been viewed as possessing inherent rights, freedoms and dignity which the state cannot take away. This right was recognized in Classical culture by both Greek city states and Roman law, and the Anglo-Saxon branch of Western culture first enshrined it in 1215 in the Magna Carta. The primacy of the individual over the state is expressed in the Magna Carta in the statement that no person shall be "taken or imprisoned or disseised of his free tenement or of his liberties or free customs, or outlawed or exiled or in any way ruined except by the law of the land." It is expressed in the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution which states that "no person shall be deprived of his life, liberty or property without due process of law." These statements signify two rights which the individual possesses. The first is a substantive right, the right to life, liberty and property, which is the right not be deprived of these without just cause. This right is contained in the Fifth Amendment because it contains the words life, liberty and property. If these rights did not exist, the amendment would not contain the words. In all legal documents, texts, statutes and constitutional law, the mention of entities entails their existence. If it did not, then jurisprudence would deal in fictional entities and would lack all basis in reality. A socialist constitution would never contain any such guarantee as the Fifth Amendment because in a socialist society, the individual does not possess the rights to life, liberty or property. No constitution in any communist state in history has ever featured anything like the Fifth Amendment. The substantive right contained in the Fifth Amendment means that the individual cannot be deprived of these rights unless he commits an act of force or aggression against others, and that in the absence of aggression, the state cannot control or regulate these rights in any manner whatever. The second right contained in the Fifth Amendment is a procedural right and states that the individual cannot be deprived of his life, liberty or property without correct procedures being followed by the state, such as the requirement of a fair and impartial trial in a court or law, or the requirement of the consent of the majority in a legislature. The substantive right contained in the amendment is the basic right and places a limitation on the powers of the state and states that even if correct procedures are followed, the state may still not deprive an individual of his life, liberty or property if he has not committed an act of force or aggression against others. It is impossible that a procedural guarantee not contain a substantive dimension, because it has to mention the entities which the individual cannot be deprived of without correct procedures being followed. The basic substantive interpretation of the Fifth Amendment guarantees to the individual the following rights. It guarantees the right not to be executed for a crime which is not act of serious force or aggression such as murder. It guarantees the right not to subject to involuntary servitude unless as punishment for a crime of force or aggression. It guarantees the right to speak and express oneself freely. It guarantees the right to the security of one's person, which entails the right of a woman to procure an abortion, on the recognition that what exists at the moment of conception is a potential human life and not an actual human life. It guarantees the right to own and dispose of private property. It guarantees the right to operate a private business without state regulation or interference. It guarantees the right to make a contract without state regulation or interference and the right to freely negotiate the terms and conditions of one's labor. The substantive interpretation of the Fifth Amendment guarantees to the individual a package of freedoms which embraces freedom of the mind, freedom of the body and freedom of the market, without which the individual cannot truly be said to be free or to live in human dignity. Over the past eighty years, the doctrine of substantive due process employed as a defense of economic liberties has fallen under sustained bombardment and attack in America. In 1937, under pressure from the mobs who were now in control of the nation, the United States Supreme Court repudiated economic substantive due process. Prior to this in the first three decades of the twentieth century, the court had struck down over two hundred state and federal laws on grounds of unconstitutional economic regulation. In the 1937 decision West Coast Hotel Company Versus Parrish, the court set forth the new red dispensation. Listen to the voice of the new court of mob rule which ignored logic and common sense and denied that the mention of the word liberty in the Fifth Amendment entails that such a thing as liberty must in fact exist. Which reduced the Fifth Amendment to a mere procedural guarantee and granted to the state the power to regulate and interfere with the operation of private businesses and private freedom of contract without restraint or limitation of any kind and subject to nothing more than the whim of the majority. Which employed the doctrine of due process to establish that human beings have no substantive rights and are not free born agents, and have no protection against encroachments by the government on their economic life, and must work, exist and produce wealth to serve the welfare and interests of the community: "The Constitution does not speak of freedom of contract. It speaks of liberty and prohibits the deprivation of liberty without due process of law. In prohibiting that deprivation, the Constitution does not recognize an absolute and uncontrollable liberty. Liberty in each of its phases has its history and connotation. But the liberty safeguarded is liberty in a social organization which requires the protection of law against the evils which menace the health, safety, morals and welfare of the people. Liberty under the Constitution is thus necessarily subject to the restraints of due process, and regulation which is reasonable in relation to its subject and is adopted in the interests of the community is due process." (Majority opinion by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes). Listen to a voice from the distant past before the mob seized control over the nation. A voice which held fast to the precepts of logic and common sense that the mention of the word liberty in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments entails that liberty exists and that if this were not the case, the amendments would refer to nothing and would lack all meaning. A voice which recognized that the right to liberty includes liberty of contract, the right of a person to enter into agreements concerning employment, sales and tenancy without restriction by the government. A voice which recognized that the common sense doctrine of substantive due process forbids the state from establishing such a thing as a legal day's work or from setting a maximum number of hours a person may work. A voice which recognized that the relationship between an employer and an employee is a private relationship between two private free born actors and may not be abridged or regulated by the state. A voice which recognized that substantive due process provides the basis for procedural due process without which the latter becomes a string of meaningless marks. A voice which has been drowned out by a national chorus of the reds rising to a stentorian blast over the past eighty years and consigned to the stacks and shelves of legal and cultural nonexistence: "The mandate of the statute, that 'no employee shall be required or permitted to work,' is the substantial equivalent of an enactment that 'no employee shall contract or agree to work,' more than ten hours per day; and, as there is no provision for special emergencies, the statute is mandatory in all cases. It is not an act merely fixing the number of hours which shall constitute a legal day's work, but an absolute prohibition upon the employer permitting, under any circumstances, more than ten hours' work to be done in his establishment. The employee may desire to earn the extra money which would arise from his working more than the prescribed time, but this statute forbids the employer from permitting the employee to earn it. The statute necessarily interferes with the right of contract between the employer and employees, concerning the number of hours in which the latter may labor in the bakery of the employer. The general right to make a contract in relation to his business is part of the liberty of the individual protected by the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution." (Lochner Versus State of New York, United States Supreme Court, 1905. Majority opinion by Associate Justice Rufus Peckham). The doctrine of substantive due process is as old as civilization. Whenever in any statutes or constitutions, the words life, liberty or property have been mentioned, in any context, the rights have been held to exist and to be subject to state protection. Such has been the plain, straightforward, common sense reasoning of free people. The reds' assassination of substantive due process with respect to economic rights in the late 1930s sounded the death knell of freedom in America. Demanded by the new red majority in charge of the nation, the repudiation of economic due process commenced the cancerous growth of totalitarian government and lowered the curtain on Anglo-Saxon liberty.

RIDERS OF THE APOCALYPSE

The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse were four allegorical mounted figures described in the Book of Revelation. Called Pestilence, War, Famine and Death, their arrival was said to herald the end of the world. The twenty first century has seen triumph of the reds across America and this triumph has appeared symbolically in the ascendancy of four political figures. These figures stand for the different forms of the reds' attack and the different ways in which the reds have destroyed the ideals and institutions which founded the nation. These figures are four members of the House of Representatives: Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, Ayanna Pressley, Ilhan Omar and Rashida Tlaib. Ocasio-Cortez stands for the reds' Marxism, Pressley stands for the reds' national socialism, while Omar and Tlaib stand for the reds' community of Islam. They stand for a triple headed monster which breathes the fires of antienlightenment and has incinerated the liberal democratic order. This large, ugly, frightening creature assembled by the reds has issued a program and manifesto for an antiliberal society which has hurled civilized order into the dustbin of history. Repudiating the America fought and died for on the fields on Lexington and Concord, the reds' new version of the nation proclaims that a progressive society forces the producers to care for the nonproducers and gives the government the power to confiscate all the wealth of the producers. It proclaims that capitalism is a system of global pandemics, economic collapse and systemic racism against blacks and must be replaced by a national socialist regime which will install blacks as masters of the jungle, kings of the tribe, and protectors of the air, water, trees and animals against the onslaughts of modern civilization. It proclaims that capitalism is a system of racial injustice and police killings and a progressive society encourages people to take to the streets and demand its overthrow by force and violence. It proclaims that a progressive society is a totalitarian community which has commandeered every man, woman and child, every student, nurse, doctor, farm worker and grocery clerk, to serve in a people's liberation army and smash the false idols of human freedom and human dignity. It proclaims that capitalism is a system of endless corporate bailouts and ruthless exploitation by idle billionaires and must be replaced by a regime which grants rent, meals, medication, mortgage payments and unemployment insurance to the proletarian scum of the earth. It proclaims that the history of capitalism is a history of white racism and this system must be replaced by a regime which forces white people to care for black people as slaves care for their masters. It proclaims that a progressive society has abolished the police, the jails and the detention centers, legalized political violence, and placed terrorists who murder in the name of Marxism and Islam in charge of the government. It proclaims that a progressive society has declared open war against successful, law abiding white people, deprived them of all their rights and freedoms, and established a new Aryan class composed of blacks, hispanics, illegal immigrants and indigenous people, and given them schools, homes, health care and jobs stolen from the white man. It proclaims that a progressive society has abolished borders and immigration controls and become a cesspool for the raw sewage of superstition and fear streaming in from the wastelands and dust bowls of the East. It proclaims that a progressive society has fomented a race war and class war against successful white people and segregated them, prevented them from owning homes and educating their children in public schools, and zoned their property, their businesses, their careers and their lives out of existence. It proclaims that a progressive society has razed, looted and burned to the ground liberal, humane, scientific, technological civilization and appointed indigenous peoples and tribal nations as lords and masters of the earth. It proclaims that a progressive society is a social justice, welfare society which has confiscated one hundred percent of the wealth produced by those perform honest work and earn their daily bread and used the proceeds to give to the layers of dirt which foul the streets and squares the following benefits: free health care, free hospital care, free child care, free housing, free college education, free psychiatric care, free social services, unlimited paid family leave, unlimited paid medical leave, unlimited paid sick days, a guaranteed, unconditional, lifetime income, and cancellation of all student debt. It proclaims that a progressive society allows unions to intimidate employees into joining them by mandating an open ballot for union organization at the workplace. It proclaims that a progressive society guarantees a minimum wage to all workers which has no relation to their merit or productivity. It proclaims that a progressive society taxes corporations, the wealthy and the successful out of existence so that the rabble, the refuse and the riff raff of the world may disport themselves in luxury and splendor. It proclaims that a progressive society has abolished advanced industrial civilization under the banners of zero carbon emissions, antifracking and a Green New Deal. Look at the world of America today and see it descend into final destruction. See how it has repudiated the liberal order and embraced the identity politics of the radicals and the reds. See how it has sacrificed the rights, freedoms and dignity of the individual in the blazing tents and tabernacles of the reds marked Gender, Race and Class. See how it has condemned the free traditions and free institutions of America, smashed the City Upon A Hill which made America magnificent and exceptional in the world, and reconstructed the nation in the color of red, symbol of the triumph of communism, fascism and national socialism over the world of the Enlightenment in which the nation was founded. See how it how its citizens have cast their votes for the speakers, incendiaries and firebrands for the reds and their parties of totalitarianism on behalf of women, nonwhites, Muslims and the poor. See how it has defunded, dismantled and dissolved the police, impeached and convicted the rule of law and order, and looted, burned and blown up people's inalienable rights. See how it has proclaimed open borders for the enemies of civilized society and their networks and affiliates who march under the banners of global jihad and the faithful's fight against the voices of reason. See how it has voted no to constitutional government, voted yes to a socialist leviathan which will tax wealth and liberty out of existence, and packed the ballots, the courts and the legislatures with the daggers of high treason. These daggers have betrayed and overthrown the ideals upon which the nation was founded and elected an alien regime in their place. This regime has brought forth spiritual pestilence, spiritual war, spiritual famine and spiritual death upon the nation. Cheered on by the mob and traveling under the names Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, Ayanna Pressley, Ilhan Omar and Rashida Tlaib, these four scourges have greeted the nation at its final stop. "Representative Jeff Van Drew (R-NJ) told the Republican National Convention Thursday night that the party he once knew turned from liberal to radical after seeing members of the far left Squad take charge of the Democratic Party. 'How I became a Republican says a lot about today's Democratic Party,' Van Drew said at the beginning of his speech. The South Jersey congressman talked about when he was a local dentist and was asked by the Democratic Party to run for a town council seat. 'I had my doubts, and I explained that my views were middle of the road to conservative,' Van Drew said. But local leaders urged him that the Democrats were a big tent party. As Van Drew advanced in his political career, he noticed that the Democrats as a party had become 'less accepting of American tradition, less believing in American exceptionalism, and less supportive of traditional faith and family.' 'This was not the party that I knew,' he said. Once Van Drew was elected to Congress as a Democrat, he already showed his true colors by casting his first vote in Congress against Nancy Pelosi for speaker. 'Imagine how I felt after seeing members of The Squad quickly take control of the Democratic Party just weeks after being elected,' Van Drew said. 'The party had moved from liberal to radical.' 'This new Democratic Party wasn't just for higher taxes. Now they were for open borders, against our police, and against our God given rights,' he continued. After a no vote on impeachment, Van Drew met with President Donald Trump and changed his party affiliation to Republican. Van Drew closed his speech by saying there are a lot of former Democrats who support Trump and are disgusted at what the Democrat Party had become. 'Here's my advice: be true to who you are now, not who the Democrats used to be,' he said. 'That's why I am a proud Republican and why I will be voting for Donald Trump.' " (Jeff Van Drew: Democrats Turned from Liberal To Radical After The Squad Took Over by Katherine Rodriguez). The bells are tolling in Satan's church of the cultural cataclysm ushering in the suicide of America.

INVADERS FROM A RED PLANET

Hurling through intergalactic space is a manned vessel on a mission of subjugation. It left its home planet decades ago with orders to colonize another world and stamp it with the gospel of the reds. On board this vessel is a chronicle cherished by the captain and crew. It is a history of the red takeover of the home planet and it fills them with hope and inspiration for their future endeavors. It is the story of the decline and fall of a civilization at the hands of an ascendant mob driven by the demons of envy, jealousy, vengeance and victimization and determined to destroy the institutions of reason and liberty, and construct upon the ruins a primitive tribal dispensation of gender, race and class politics. It is the story of free nations convulsed by civil wars and revolutions. It is the story of proletarian agitations and new left riots. It is the story of sparks called social justice igniting and bursting into flames of red totalitarian tyranny. It is the story of rampages without end smashing cities from coast to coast. It is the story of wars waged against the police and against the establishment of law and order. It is the story of Marxists taking down historical statues, renaming commercial products, renaming sports teams, renaming city streets, and spraying graffiti on concrete and asphalt. It is the story of Marxism peddled in black packages labeled Antifa and Black Lives Matter. It is the story of history being rewritten by the reds and the struggle for capitalist freedom and dignity for all slandered as the march of white racism. It is the story of an election held in the early decades of the twenty first century, an election whose victors were Marxists who had taken over a mainstream party, and an election from which there would be no turning back. It is the story of reds in the government promoting anarchy in the streets. It is the story of violent disturbances planned and organized by red hoodlums marching under the banners of Antifa. It is the story of trained Marxists looting and burning cities in the name of black nationalism. It is the story of the reds condemning capitalism as a system of police brutality, demanding the defunding and dissolution of the police, and placing streets and neighborhoods under the control of Marxist warlords. It is the story of red activists distributing signs and slogans demanding the abolition of free speech. It is the story of politicians working with red terrorists to set up socialist societies modeled after Venezuela, Cuba and Pol Pot's Cambodia. It is the story of red rioters shooting, stabbing and burning police officers and running them over with cars and granted total immunity from prosecution. It is the story of local governments encouraging violence and destruction and mayors and governors raising clenched fists in a salute to the Black Blocs of lawlessness and mob power. It is the story of city officials prohibiting the police from dispersing rioters and allowing Antifa thugs to occupy cities. It is the story of city councils fomenting urban disorder in the name of the liberation of marginalized and the disadvantaged. It is the story of prosecutors who refuse to prosecute reds who rampage and trespass but press charges against law abiding citizens who defend themselves against the reds. It is the story of politicians raising bail money for red marauders and demanding that all charges against them be dropped. It is the story of public officials denying the existence of red terror groups and calling them mere phantoms and fantasies of the bourgeois imagination. It is the story of whites forced to give blacks all their wealth and income for the crime of being white and in the name of social reparations and social rights. It is the story of students and professors platforming and proselytizing for the reds' war against civilization. It is the story of politicians condemning capitalism as a system run by white supremacists and right wing militia groups and advocating its overthrow by storming brownshirts whose swastikas are marked Women, Nonwhites and the Poor. It is the story of politicians condemning capitalism as a system of police misconduct and police violence and advocating the establishment of a fire breathing, triple headed monster in its place, called Marxism-Antifa-Black Lives Matter.

It is the story of free speech lying prostrate on college campuses, bleeding and dying from multiple wounds. It is the story of schools transformed into breeding grounds and recruitment centers for red incendiaries. It is the story of school teaching students to hate the capitalist system as a lash of racism, classism and sexism and to agitate for the establishment of a primitive swampland and government by tribe in its place. It is the story of schools teaching students that the soldiers and statesmen who fought for freedom during the great revolutionary wars of the Age of Enlightenment were not heroes but villains and that the only heroes of humanity are the red butchers of steppes, plains, jungles and rice fields. It is the story of schools transformed into churches of indoctrination spewing out the waste water of hatred toward successful white males, the liberal democratic order, and the American system which protects the rights of all without regard to gender, race or class. It is the story of the march of revolutionaries into every institution of modern life, from the newsroom to the boardroom to the screening room to the seminar room, and subverting every power, authority, tradition and ideal derived from the Western, liberal, rationalist age. It is the story of nations ruled by the revolutionary left and the reds pulling the strings in every aspect of public and private life. It is the story of reds attacking and intimidating the voices of conscience and morality, labeling all resistance to totalitarianism acts of capitalist racism, and sending their opponents into the people's gulags, firing squads and death camps. It is the story of red politicians abolishing constitutional government by packing, neutralizing, shutting down and blowing up the judiciary, and ruling by executive, legislative and mob decree. It is the story of Russia in 1917 and Germany in 1933 returning to life and action, and the red fronts, the red guards, the red shirts and the red police storming the capital cities of the world, flying the flags of communism, fascism, national socialism and social democracy, and lowering the curtain on human civilization. Look at the world created by the reds and see its rejection of individual rights. See its construction of grievance factories churning out bombs to blow up the liberal democratic order. See its mass production of marginalized groups which seek to overthrow constitutional government in the name of social justice. See it weave a blanket called victimhood and cast it across society and blind the people's eyes to the noonday light of liberty. See it enforce identity politics with the goose stepping marches of diversity bureaucrats, diversity officers and diversity program organizers obeying the will of a fuhrer called the mob. See it promote racism against whites, sexism against males and ethnic hatred toward people of European ancestry in the name of social inclusion and affirmative action. See it break down the doors of private establishments and run bulldozers into student populations demanding accommodation for homosexuals, transgenders, multiple genders and nonbinaries. See it condemn the voices of capitalist freedom and Enlightenment values as purveyors of hate speech and microaggression who must be silenced forever by the people's progressive speech codes. See it attack the defenders of reason, science and modernity with red cadres shouting slogans demanding the distribution of wealth, opportunities and privileges to mystical tribes of lesbians, gays, blacks, browns, indigenous nations and the global proletarian scum. See it enforce ideological lockstep, comprehensive thought control and the people's red party line in the name of protecting society's vulnerable groups composed of women, nonwhites, transgenders, Muslims and the poor. See it transform courtrooms, legislatures and college campuses into perpetual motion machines spreading epidemics of political persecution in which men accused of sexual assault are deprived of a fair hearing, deprived of the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, deprived of the right to have independent witnesses or physical evidence presented against them before being found guilty, and then mauled to death by mobs trained to hate and kill them as lethal poisoners of women, mobs fueled by fanaticism and extremism and unleashed by their feminist masters and general staff: "Diversity bureaucrats exist to service the grievances of an evolving—and potentially unlimited—number of supposedly oppressed groups recognized by postmodern identity politics. Thus, by promoting social justice and encouraging 'marginalized' students to embrace victimhood, diversocrats ensure their own job security. The mission of campus diversity officers is self-perpetuating. Affirmative action (ie racial and ethnic preferences in admissions) leads to grievance studies. Increased recognition of LGBT rights requires ever greater accommodation by the rest of the student body. Protecting 'vulnerable' groups from 'hate speech' and 'microaggressions' requires speech codes and bias response teams (staffed by diversocrats). Complaints must be investigated and adjudicated (by diversocrats). Fighting 'toxic masculinity' and combating an imaginary epidemic of campus sexual assault necessitate consent protocols, training, and hearing procedures—more work for an always growing diversocrat cadre. Each newly recognized problem leads to a call for more programs and staffing." (The Campus Diversity Swarm by Mark Pulliam). The planet targeted for conquest in the far reaches of space and time has been identified as Planet X and located in the Andromeda Galaxy. The invaders' home planet: Earth.

THE THIRD RAIL, LAID DOWN BY THE REDS

The third rail in an electric railroad system is the additional rail which supplies electric power to the train. Carrying 800 volts of electricity, the third rail brings instant death to anyone who touches it. In 2013, the 111th Congress passed, and President Barack Obama signed, the Affordable Care Act which laid down a third rail in American politics, bringing instant political death to anyone who dares to challenge it. This third rail is the principle that health care is a universal human right to be financed by public tax dollars. This has become the national consensus in America in the twenty first century and the acceptance that an individual has a right to the wealth produced by others to finance his health care has become an indispensable precondition for success in political life, and is a principle so widely and deeply held by the American people that Supreme Court justices have been afraid to nullify a law which, in its granting to Congress the power to force people to obtain a product, is plainly unconstitutional. Obeying the will of the people, the United States government established a health care entitlement law which served as the final nail in the coffin of American freedom and liberty as it shredded the Constitution and hurled the shards into the dustbin of failed republics. The American people, together with their rubber stamps in the Congress and the White House, enacted a law which composed a program and manifesto for a system of comprehensive welfare entitlements and top to bottom business regulations which have made the American constitutional City Upon A Hill a thing of the distant past never to return. The culmination of a trend of statism brought by mob rule which commenced at the dawn of the twentieth century, a trend peddled as the high water mark of social and political progressivism, the Affordable Care Act has made America morally unrecognizable from the America fought for and died for on the fields of Lexington and Concord and the America established by the Treaty of Paris of 1783. Composed by an America which is American in name only and is devoid of the spirit and soul of the nation, the program and manifesto of the Affordable Care Act proclaims that health insurance companies are prohibited from denying insurance coverage to people suffering from preexisting health conditions. It proclaims that insurance companies are not allowed to offer lower cost insurance to healthy, low risk people. It proclaims that healthy people have a social duty to pay higher insurance premiums to subsidize the insurance premiums paid by unhealthy people. It proclaims that health insurance companies are prohibited from charging older people premiums which reflect their higher risk and that younger people have a social duty to subsidize the premiums paid by older people. It proclaims that a progressive society recognizes that rights are not derived from man's nature as a free born agent but are derived from the higher existence of the state and community and recognizes that the state is morally obligated to grant to individuals the right to receive health care paid for by others. It proclaims that a progressive society charges successful people 3,000 dollars per month in health insurance premiums so that unsuccessful people can pay no premiums. It proclaims that a progressive society is a Medicaid society and a Medicare for all society which prohibits the individual from keeping the fruits of his labor. It proclaims that a progressive society gives the refuse, riffraff and scum of the earth free health coverage in the name of social justice and social inclusion. It proclaims that a progressive society offers gold plated health insurance plans to the lowest specimens of subhumanity and gives them free health coverage for life. It proclaims that a progressive society transforms every citizen into a ward of the state and makes him qualified to receive one hundred percent financial assistance to obtain health care. It proclaims that a progressive society forces all people to obtain health insurance so that the premiums of the healthy will subsidize the health care of the sick. It proclaims that a progressive society enacts a regime of programs, regulations, subsidies and interventions to ensure that the sewers of leeches and parasites are given health insurance on the backs of the producers and creators of wealth. It proclaims that a progressive society covets people's wealth, steals people's wealth, coercively redistributes the spoils, and violates the right to private property to guarantee that the neighbors next door, the hoodlums down the street, and the fiends of vice in the lairs of iniquity are one and all recipients of free health insurance. Look at the world of the reds and see how it controls private conduct. See how it crushes human liberty beneath the administration of the people. See how it subjects private economic activity to public regulatory power. See how it creates a totalitarian order under the banners of the Constitution's Commerce Clause. See how it extends governmental power to every aspect of human life and makes it against the law to breathe without permission from the state. See how it outlaws private commerce and transforms the economy into a state owned corporation. See how it mandates that individuals obtain products which the state wants them to obtain and commands that individuals recognize the state as their lord and master. See how it gives the government to power to compel acts of commerce and to prohibit freedom of choice. See how it gives the state the authority to direct, adjust, order, rule, create and extinguish every thought and action of the individual. See how it pushes constitutional interpretation beyond the limits of reason, sanity and common sense and calls a penalty a tax, and manufactures a unicorn called a penalty-tax, and gives the federal government the power to force individuals to buy health insurance as a legitimate exercise of the government's taxing power: "Whatever may be the conceptual limits upon the Commerce Clause and upon the power to tax and spend, they cannot be such as will enable the Federal Government to regulate all private conduct and to compel the States to function as administrators of federal programs. That clear principle carries the day here. The striking case of Wickard v. Filburn, which held that the economic activity of growing wheat, even for one's own consumption, affected commerce sufficiently that it could be regulated, always has been regarded as the ne plus ultra of expansive Commerce Clause jurisprudence. To go beyond that, and to say the failure to grow wheat (which is not an economic activity, or any activity at all) nonetheless affects commerce and therefore can be federally regulated, is to make mere breathing in and out the basis for federal prescription and to extend federal power to virtually all human activity. Article I, §8, of the Constitution gives Congress the power to 'regulate Commerce among the several States.' The Individual Mandate in the Act commands that every 'applicable individual shall for each month beginning after 2013 ensure that the individual, and any dependent of the individual who is an applicable individual, is covered under minimum essential coverage.' If this provision regulates anything, it is the failure to maintain minimum essential coverage. One might argue that it regulates that failure by requiring it to be accompanied by payment of a penalty. But that failure—that abstention from commerce—is not Commerce. To be sure, purchasing insurance is Commerce; but one does not regulate commerce that does not exist by compelling its existence. In Gibbons v. Ogden, Chief Justice Marshall wrote that the power to regulate commerce is the power 'to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed.' That understanding is consistent with the original meaning of regulate at the time of the Constitution's ratification, when 'to regulate' meant 'to adjust by rule, method or established mode' (Webster, An American Dictionary of the English Language, 1828), 'to adjust by rule or method' (Johnson, A Dictionary of the English Language, 1785), 'to adjust, to direct according to rule' (Ash, New and Complete Dictionary of the English Language, 1775), 'to put in order, set to rights, govern or keep in order' (T. Dyche & W. Pardon, A New General English Dictionary, 1777). It can mean to direct the manner of something but not to direct that something come into being. There is no instance in which this Court or Congress (or anyone else, to our knowledge) has used regulate in that peculiar fashion. If the word bore that meaning, Congress' authority 'to make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces' would have made superfluous the later provision for authority 'to raise and support Armies,' and 'to provide and maintain a Navy.' " (National Federation of Independent Business Versus Kathleen Sebelius, United States Supreme Court, 2012, Dissenting Opinion by Justices Antonin Scalia, Anthony Kennedy, Clarence Thomas and Samuel Alito). The United States Supreme Court, in its decision in National Federation of Independent Business Versus Kathleen Sebelius, violated the laws of logic and the text of the Constitution and ruled that the individual mandate in the Affordable Care Act imposes a tax and not a fine and thus falls within Congress's taxing power. The decision obliterated the distinction between a tax and a fine, ignoring the fact that a tax relates to legal activity while a fine relates to illegal activity or illegal nonactivity. Under the Affordable Care Act, it is illegal not to carry health insurance and this omission is subject to a fine. Judges, politicians and professors have sought to insulate the Affordable Care Act from constitutional nullification by inventing a doctrine called severability. According to this doctrine, if some provisions of a law are found to be unconstitutional, the remaining provisions can nonetheless still continue in force as law. This doctrine transforms judges into lawmakers because the absence of the unconstitutional provisions has changed the original law, and the new edited law, given force by the court, has not been ratified by the legislature. The reason behind all these efforts to preserve the Affordable Care Act is fear, abject, relentless, unremitting fear. It is fear in the day and fear in the night. It is the fear of touching the third rail of American politics. This third rail, this mob power, this religion of universal health care entitlement, has electrocuted the nation.

FEAR IN THE NIGHT

Mr X suffers from a recurring nightmare. After every episode, he wakes up in a cold sweat screaming. In his nightmare, the universe has been turned upside down. In it, the West is no longer the West, free nations are no longer free, everything good in the world has been condemned as evil, everything evil has been exalted as good, everything just has been vilified as unjust, everything unjust has been dignified as just, and one thousand years of liberal civilization have been reduced to ashes and swept into the dustbin of history. He has written down the contents of his dream and reads it every night when dusk descends and the land is engulfed in twilight. In his dream, the world is being ravaged by two groups with Marxist origins and agendas: Antifa and Black Lives Matter. There has been a cultural revolution and socialism has become a global religion. Urban police forces have been defunded, dismantled, dissolved and abolished. White people have been forced to make multitrillion dollar payments to black people in the name of reparations because slavery once existed. Blacks have been released from jails and it is illegal to arrest or jail blacks for anything. Black and hispanic students have been given automatic high grades in every subject in the name of social equity. It is proclaimed that those who possess more by dint of hard work and superior initiative did not in fact create what they possess, did not in fact build their businesses, and must give it all back to those from whom it was stolen: the employees and society. It is proclaimed that a progressive society forces everyone to share his property and resources with everyone else and those who dissent must be persecuted and driven out of their families, homes, schools and offices. It is proclaimed that a progressive society is an egalitarian society which coerces people to hand over everything they own to their lords and masters: the state, the government and the community. It proclaimed that men who are accused of sexual assault must be found guilty as charged on the basis of the word of the accuser or accusers on the grounds that an accusation or a series of accusations constitutes actual and irrefutable evidence. It is proclaimed that men who touch women without their consent are guilty of the most heinous crime imaginable against humanity and must be hanged until they die and hanged a thousand times again. It is proclaimed that a progressive society consists of a collective barracks, a collective dining hall and has abolished money and required everyone to work without compensation. It is proclaimed that a progressive society has abolished private property, redistributed wealth on an equalitarian basis, and given bread and circuses, food and entertainment, and lifetime welfare support, to the savages and scum of the earth. It is proclaimed that a progressive society is a violent, bloody people's autocracy modeled after the Soviet and Chinese communist dictatorships. It is proclaimed that a progressive society is a democratic socialist tyranny in which the voters have imposed the redistribution of all wealth, the nationalization of all businesses, and the control of all thought. It is proclaimed that a progressive society has established a taxation rate of one hundred percent, a regime of comprehensive, cradle to grave entitlements, and a megaphone of egalitarian shouting which has hammered the love of servitude into the minds of the masses. It is proclaimed that a progressive society is a brotherhood of slaves who cherish their red totalitarian straitjackets as the passports to a people's utopia. It is proclaimed that a progressive society is a flooding cesspool with open borders which grants legal residence and citizenship to the moral vermin who march under the banners of Marxism and Islam. It is proclaimed that a progressive society is a Dekulakization regime, a Great Terror regime, a Great Leap Forward regime, a Cultural Revolution regime, an Angkar Party regime, and a Back to the Land regime which has murdered billions of people across the world in the name of social justice. It is proclaimed that a progressive society is a collectivist society, a New Deal society, and a Green New Deal society which has embraced the tenets of primitivism, antiindustrialism and an omnipotent state. It is proclaimed that a progressive society rejects the Enlightenment values of personal liberty and the protection of private property and implements a regime of coerced fraternity and social regulations on business. It is proclaimed that a progressive society rejects the liberal principle of meritocracy and advancement of the best and the brightest and established a regime of racial, ethnic and gender preferences and excluded white males of European ancestry from higher education and professional employment. Look at the order of the reds unfurled in Mr X's nightmare and see it achieve victory in its campaign to abolish the concept of personhood and enslave the minds and bodies of the people. See it place governments in the vice grip of socialist parties and foment revolution to transform free societies into slave pens. See it call for red unity and organize communist-fascist-nationalist socialist movements and squads designed to bring every aspect of human life, from the economy to academia to the sciences to the arts, under the domination and control of gender, race and class commissars. See it repeal property rights, private choices and freedom of contract and place all economic activities and omissions under the supervision of the state. See it establish guaranteed lifetime health insurance for the most worthless, contemptible specimens of subhumanity on the backs of the honest toilers. See it ensure red rule in perpetuity by opening the borders to Marxists and Islamists streaming in like raw sewage from every corner of the earth, by packing, shutting down and blowing up the judiciary, and by removing all constitutional checks and balances upon its power. See it crush individual freedom beneath a leviathan marked Gender, Race and Class Supremacy lorded over by women, nonwhites, transgenders and the poor. See it replace liberal constitutions with socialist constitutions which have repealed the freedom and dignity of the individual, enslaved, disenfranchised and instrumentalized individual, made him pull a chariot marked Socioeconomic Rights, and lashed him onward to provide endless welfare benefits to his neighbor, to his neighbor's neighbor, and to the human driftwood floating on the high seas and washing ashore on civilization. See it launch fireworks of praise to Soviet communism, democratic socialism, national socialist feminism, swastika wielding black power politics, and any and every red ideology which promises to eradicate civil liberties and place mankind on the road to serfdom. See it make socialism the ruling party, the party which panders to the demons of envy, jealousy, covetousness and frustration which haunt the souls of the masses, and make it the party which will rule for a thousand years: "Joe Biden says he's not a socialist. 'I beat the socialist,' he protests. He won the nomination for president, but as Bernie Sanders declared in April: 'We have won the ideological battle'. Biden is the liberal figurehead of what has become a socialist party. Biden's platform—the Biden-Sanders Unity Task Force—is a manifesto for state domination of the economy. Even Biden's rhetoric—calling for 'revolution' to 'fundamentally transform' America—is socialist now. Ah, but this socialism isn't going to be like Soviet communism, we are told. This is democratic socialism. That is, we will still have the vote, and our civil liberties. But as F.A. Hayek argued last century in The Road to Serfdom, you cannot preserve individual freedom if the state controls your most basic economic choices. We have seen that ourselves: once Obamacare guaranteed health insurance, Catholic nuns had to go to court to preserve their basic religious liberties. Moreover, what the Democratic Party has planned is fundamentally undemocratic. They rejected the last democratic election; if they win in 2020, they intend to rig the system so they can never lose again. They want to pass amnesty and create millions of new Democratic voters. They will pack the courts with liberals to override any checks on their power. I was born in a white supremacist country—South Africa. I went back to South Africa as a graduate student—and a confirmed leftist, enthusiastic about the socialist nature of South Africa's new constitution, which provided 'socioeconomic rights' for basic necessities like health care. What I learned was jarring: not only did socialism make people worse off, but it was impossible to get rid of after it failed. South Africa's ruling party has been in power for 26 years." (Blue State Blues: Once Socialism Gets In, You Can Never Vote It Out by Joel Pollak). Mr X lived in the late nineteenth century at a time when the dusk which would soon descend upon the West was gathering. He did not recognize all the details of his dream, for it took place in the next century, but he understood its forms and lineaments. He saw the essence of his dream growing and expanding all around him. He saw the fearsome and terrifying trend lines of statism and tribalism developing speed and momentum. Whenever he woke up bathed in alarm and anxiety, he knew darkness would soon fall, a darkness which would abolish the noonday world, a night which would reign for all eternity.

THE SEWERS OF LONDON

Hidden beneath London's city streets lies a system of interconnecting tunnels the size of railway cars which take raw sewage from people's homes, schools, offices and factories. Engineered in the Victorian Era, the system features cathedral shaped pumping stations and was celebrated as one of the wonders of the world. In the first half of the twentieth century, London's venerable sewer system was confronted by its greatest challenge and failed the test. It was unable to carry away and flush out a mountain of sewage which had accumulated and ensconced itself in the heart of the city, in the fashionable West End known for its educational and cultural institutions, in a district called Bloomsbury. For over four decades, a circle of subversives who championed formalism in the arts and red intellectualism composed in their paintings, novels, essays and treatises a picture of the decline and fall of the West which convinced civilized people who saw and read it that the end had in fact arrived and a tidal wave of decadence and degeneration had crashed all around them. Known as the Bloomsbury Group, the promoters and proselytizers of civilization's descent into the sewers were authors whose works filled volumes and whose paintings filled galleries but which civilized people were able to assemble into a single bound collection and scroll of satanic parchment and present to the world as a program and manifesto of late Western romanticist cultural psychosis. This program proclaimed that a progressive novel is a stream of consciousness without action or narrative of any kind. It proclaimed that a progressive novel presents a fractured story, a broken chronology, and a study of psychology and emotion without reference to people acting, struggling, triumphing or doing anything. It proclaimed that a progressive novel is uneventful, refracted, dissolved, banal and submerged in visual and auditory impressions which have no relation to reality. It proclaimed that a progressive novel consists of stylistic virtuosity and poetic visions floating through seas of pure consciousness. It proclaimed that a progressive novel consists of thoughts, words, expressions and intentions without relation to each other and without relation to the external world. It proclaimed that a progressive novel details a day in the life of a character who does nothing and accomplishes nothing. It proclaimed that a progressive novel features an anticipation of a visit, a reflection upon a visit, and a meditation on the passage of time. It proclaimed that a progressive novel consists of soliloquies, recitations and interior monologues washing over the pages in waves of total mental disorder. It proclaimed that a progressive novel is the biography of a dog and a transcript of a dog's point of view. It proclaimed that a progressive novel is a meaningless description of the staging, performance and audience of a play and features consciousness looking at itself in a mirror. It proclaimed that a progressive novel is a description of surging emotions, minds in flux, discontinuous writing processes, and moral and psychological depravity. It proclaimed that a progressive painting consists of lines, colors, forms, relations and combinations without representation of reality. It proclaimed that progressive painting consists in the free play of pure forms and sensations and is a purely subjective affair. It proclaimed that progressive painting expresses personal experiences and particular emotions and is without objective meaning or content of any kind. It proclaimed that esthetic judgments are matters of subjective taste about which there is no reasoning or disputing. It proclaimed that there is no objective means of recognizing a work of art as beautiful or ugly. It proclaimed that there is no objective means of distinguishing between art and nonart. It proclaimed that whatever man made object which one reacts to in a positive manner, whatever moves one and arouses pleasurable feelings in one, is on that account a work of art and is a thing of beauty. It proclaimed that a progressive society creates a demand for goods and services by printing money and putting it in the pockets of the masses. It proclaimed that a progressive society regulates business cycles with fiscal policies involving the borrowing and printing of money. It proclaimed that a progressive society rejects all objective standards of monetary value, such as the gold standard, and creates money out of thin air, spends money which does not exist, and spends money it does not have. It proclaimed that a progressive society is a state interventionist society which inflates the money supply to stimulate spending and eliminate recessions and depressions. Look at the world of the Bloomsbury Group and see its exaltation of schizophrenic breakdown. See its worship of madness as the source of artistic creativity. See its bohemians wandering through seas of aimlessness and frozen in fetal position in corners of withdrawal. See its visions and halos blazing forth with vice and degeneracy. See its promotion of ugliness, nontalent and an aristocracy of the artistically incompetent. See its support for red activists of all stripes and varieties hawking the wares of gender, race and class formations. See its dissociated mental processes and multiple personalities. See its mental states trapped in spheres of psychosis and aware only of themselves. See its letters, diaries and memoirs hermetically sealed in chambers of self absorption, mental navel gazing and abnormal introspection, See its rejection of rational perception and its ascent into the Himalayan morbidities of mystical experience. See its rejection of scientific understanding and its refusal to anchor itself in present day realities. See its rejection of the world of the sane, the world of space, causality, substance and solidity, and its deterioration into cognitive, emotional and psychological disturbance. See its autobiographies of Distraction and Derangement submerged in the waters of mental annihilation. See its works of fiction blackened by the authors' mental disease and caught in a vice grip of the authors' problems in living. See its minds crowded with voices rising to a mighty chorus and blasting out in stentorian tones a message of the suicide of the West and the doom of civilization. This is the world of the Bloomsbury Group whose members comprise a fearsome and terrifying role call of riders of the Western apocalypse: "The most famous literary voice hearer was Virginia Woolf. Photographed by Man Ray for Vogue's roll call of influential people in 1924, appearing on the cover of Time in 1937, and subjected to further iconization in the Burton/Taylor film of Albee's Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? in 1966, Woolf remains perennially fascinating as a compelling amalgam of female aristocratic beauty, doomed talent, Bohemian and suicide. But surely no one's really afraid of this safely contained popular image of creative madness? Woolf's private agonies of soul lay behind the glamorous iconic image: between the ages of 13 (when her mother died), and 33 (when her first novel was published), she suffered a series of major psychotic breakdowns, involving, most famously, birds singing in ancient Greek. But she learned to manage the public image, accepting the hereditary-genius stereotype as the daughter of the irascible and often brilliant Leslie Stephen and using the infamous rest cure for neurasthenia as an opportunity to withdraw into creative mind wandering. She also learned to manage the voices and had no further complete breakdown until the end of her life. Populists, feminists, literary critics, gay activists, have since claimed her as their own. But her archive can be seen as a serious resource for research into the experience of hearing voices. In a 1919 essay, Woolf exhorted her reader to scientifically 'examine an ordinary mind on an ordinary day'. She saw no contradiction in describing the mind as a visionary 'luminous halo' in the very next sentence. Her voices were at once mystical experiences and objects of her own scientific investigation. In letters, diaries and memoirs, she discusses how entering the 'queer' place of composition allowed her to step into memories that felt more real than the present; how this required shifting her mental state voluntarily into one of controlled dissociation. This is the same splitting of consciousness that involves splitting off some mental processes so self awareness operates in two or more spheres each closed off from the other. This consciousness dissociation manifests in extreme form in multiple personality disorders. Her fiction, directly or indirectly, explores this shift in mental states. In On Being Ill, Woolf describes the uncanny slipping away in illness of the structures of the familiar world, of time, space, secure embodiment and emotional centeredness. This is what psychiatrist Karl Jaspers (1913) had described as the prodromal phase of psychosis: a phase unavailable, he claimed, for understanding or anchoring to the present. Woolf thinks not. In To the Lighthouse, Woolf's most autobiographical novel, Lily Briscoe enters her own 'queer zone' after the death of her friend and host Mrs Ramsay. Although poised to leap riskily into the 'waters of annihilation, as she embarks upon her painting, she summons all her will as she takes up her brush, calling up past scenes in her mind while holding a 'vice like' grip on the perceptual present. Woolf's imaginary voices spurred her on to invent ever new possibilities of fictional voice. In Mrs Dalloway, she invents a manner of writing that is the modern equivalent of the Greek chorus, reinventing the crowd as a multitude inside and outside the head. Ethical insights follow: in creativity and distress, she recognised we are many and not one." (It's Important To Listen To Imaginary Voices—Just Ask Virginia Woolf by Patricia Waugh). In the nineteenth century, Father Thames introduced his three children to the city of London: Diphtheria, Scrofula and Cholera. But the newly constructed sewer system was able to turn them away and protect the city from the plagues they brought. In the twentieth century, Father Thames brought a fourth child which city, now accelerating by the nanosecond in cultural free fall, was unable to remove. Peddling filthy novels, filthy paintings, filthy esthetic doctrines, filthy political ideologies and filthy red statist nostrums, this was the plague brought by the Bloomsbury Group. Presided over by Virginia Woolf, Clive Bell, Lytton Strachey, John Maynard Keynes, Vanessa Bell, E. M. Forster, Roger Fry, Duncan Grant, Desmond McCarthy and Leonard Wolff, it tolled the bells across London and in capital cities across the world for the final destruction of rational order.

HUME'S HOSPITAL

An asylum is an institution which offers shelter and support to people who are mentally ill.

In Britain in the eighteenth century, thousands of people lived in asylums and were officially classified as lunatics and imbeciles. During this time, there lived a prominent British philosopher who was assiduously read by inmates of the nation's asylums. A product of the subjectivist tendencies which have characterized Western culture from its very beginnings, which have defined the West and marked it off from the Classical world of Apollo and Aristotle as midnight is marked off from noonday, David Hume was the author of a hugely influential system of skepticism which advanced the diseased trajectory of Western philosophy as it transported mental patients to a land of academically sanctioned insanity to which they yearned to go. Throughout Britain, at the Bethel Mental Hospital in Norwich, at Guy's Hospital in London, at St Luke's Hospital in London, at the Hospital for Lunatics in Newcastle Upon Tyne, at the Manchester Lunatic Hospital, at the York Asylum, at the Leicester Asylum and at the Liverpool Lunatic Asylum, the inmates studied a thinker who gave voice and expression to the attitudes of moral miscreants with disordered minds whose problems in living were but mirrors and reflections of the pathologies of the culture all around them, steeped as it was in Apollo's mortal enemy: Faust. Imbued as it was with Faust's will, Faust's emotions, Faust's discontent and Faust's romanticism. The Faustian Hume, the philosopher Hume and the inmate Hume composed a program and manifesto for the closing of the human mind and the rejection of all that the asylum inmates had rejected and all that the West had itself rejected: rational, ordered, civilized ways of thinking, believing and acting. Hume proclaimed that we never experience physical objects but only our own sensations, impressions and ideas, and there is no world of matter which exists outside of consciousness. He proclaimed that inductive reasoning yields only statistics and percentages of probability. He proclaimed that the notion of causality cannot be justified rationally and the belief that fire causes paper to burn is simply the result of custom and habit and has no basis in reality. He proclaimed that we never perceive that one event causes another event but only perceive a constant conjunction of events which is governed by pure chance. He proclaimed that we can never draw any causal inferences from past experience and can never be certain that the future will resemble the past. He proclaimed that passion rather than reason governs human behavior and that reason is nothing more than the property of the passions. He proclaimed that moral judgments are based upon emotion and sentiment rather than reason and logic and there is no basis for inferring what man ought to do, the life he ought to lead, from his nature and essence because his nature and essence is that of an animal. He proclaimed that we can have no notion of an enduring self because we perceive only a bundle and flux of sensations. Listen to the philosopher proclaim that the mind is locked within the realm of its own sensations, and these are the ideas, impressions and perceptions, both simple and complex, of nothing whatever which is real: "All the perceptions of the human mind resolve themselves into two distinct kinds, which I shall call impressions and ideas. Simple perceptions or impressions and ideas are such as admit of no distinction nor separation, whereas the complex are the contrary to these, and may be distinguished into parts". (A Treatise On Human Nature by David Hume). Listen to the philosopher proclaim that there are no necessary connections in nature, no such thing as causality, but only the play of pure chance, and we only think in terms of causality by virtue of a settled, regular tendency of the mind, and objects on the surface of the earth can float upward, and water can freeze after being subjected to heat, without contradiction: "Experience cannot establish a necessary connection between cause and effect, because we can imagine without contradiction a case where the cause does not produce its usual effect. The reason why we mistakenly infer that there is something in the cause that necessarily produces its effect is because our past experiences have habituated us to think in this way." (A Very Brief Summary Of David Hume by Shane Drefcinski). Listen to the philosopher proclaim that the law of causality is a mere human convention which is not applicable to the realm of nature whose events are governed by the laws of probability: "Only in the pure realm of ideas, logic, and mathematics, not contingent on the direct sense awareness of reality, can causation safely be applied—all other sciences are reduced to probability." (An Enquiry Concerning Human Understanding by David Hume). Listen to the philosopher proclaim that we can never know that the future will be like the present in nature because anything can happen at any moment, and it is only by tradition and agreement that we think the future is predictable: "Custom renders our experience useful to us, and makes us expect, for the future, a similar train of events with those which have appeared in the past". (An Enquiry Concerning Human Understanding by David Hume). Listen to the philosopher proclaim that it is conceivable that the course of nature might cease to be regular and that rainfall may turn into diamonds and elephants may give birth to wolves. Listen to the philosopher proclaim that we believe by mere impulse and instinct that the course of nature is predictable and that the sun will not turn to dust in the morning, but we have no rational grounds for believing so: "Nature, by an absolute and uncontrollable necessity has determined us to judge as well as to breathe and feel." (An Enquiry Concerning Human Understanding by David Hume). Listen to the philosopher proclaim that there are no such things as material substances or selves which are as they are because existence is comprised of feelings and sensations outside of which there is nothing: "For my part, when I enter most intimately into what I call myself, I always stumble on some particular perception or other, of heat or cold, light or shade, love or hatred, pain or pleasure. I never can catch myself at any time without a perception, and never can observe any thing but the perception. When my perceptions are removed for any time, as by sound sleep—for so long I am insensible of myself, and may truly be said not to exist." (A Treatise On Human Nature by David Hume). Listen to the philosopher proclaim that reason is a ghost without power which lies prostrate before a juggernaut called passion and has no relation or relevance to the rules of morality: "Morals excite passions, and produce or prevent actions. Reason of itself is utterly impotent in this particular. The rules of morality, therefore, are not conclusions of our reason." (A Treatise On Human Nature by David Hume). Listen to the philosopher proclaim that reason is completely subordinate to the emotions because existence itself is passion and unreason: "Reason is, and ought only to be the slave of the passions, and can never pretend to any other office than to serve and obey them. A passion is an original existence, or, if you will, modification of existence." (A Treatise On Human Nature by David Hume). Listen to the philosopher proclaim that feeling rather than knowing governs moral choices and all man's actions are grounded in whim and fancy. Listen to the philosopher proclaim that reason is incapable of grasping the nature of a reality which exists outside the mind. This reality is a dark, unknowable, indefinable thing in itself the attempt to know which can drive a person to distraction. The sole existence about which we can have any knowledge is just the existence of our own sensations, mind and consciousness: "Where am I, or what? From what causes do I derive my existence, and to what condition shall I return? I am confounded with all these questions, and begin to fancy myself in the most deplorable condition imaginable, environed with the deepest darkness, and utterly deprived of the use of every member and faculty. Most fortunately it happens, that since reason is incapable of dispelling these clouds, Nature herself suffices to that purpose, and cures me of this philosophical melancholy and delirium, either by relaxing this bent of mind, or by some avocation, and lively impression of my senses, which obliterate all these chimeras. I dine, I play a game of backgammon, I converse, and am merry with my friends. And when, after three or four hours' amusement, I would return to these speculations, they appear so cold, and strained, and ridiculous, that I cannot find in my heart to enter into them any farther." (An Enquiry Concerning Human Understanding by David Hume). Despite Hume's loud protestations to the contrary, his philosophy is self refuting. The doctrine that we do not perceive physical objects is the doctrine that we do not perceive anything and is the doctrine that we are unconscious. The doctrine that certainty about nature is impossible is self refuting. The doctrine that induction necessarily yields only non necessity is self refuting. The doctrine that there are no laws of nature except laws of probability is self refuting. The doctrine that nothing is as it is, is self refuting. The doctrine that I know that there are no selves is self refuting. The philosopher Hume proclaims that all we can know is a flow of fleeting sensations and memories inside of our own heads, that reality itself contains no material objects or selves and is an indeterminate, unknowable void, that actions occur without rhyme or reason and purely by chance and that stones can grow like plants from the ground, that causal relations and logical necessities exist only within the realm of our own arbitrary conventions, that objects can appear and vanish spontaneously from one moment to the next without a cause of any kind, and that man is controlled by his animal passions and is incapable of acting rationally or in a truly human manner. Thus proclaims the Faustian Hume and Hume the inmate of mental hospitals throughout the world. The voices of Hume's sickness of the soul have risen to a deafening, satanic chorus and shouted out the final act of the West.

MONADS AND MADNESS

Roget's Thesaurus is a world famous, authoritative English language dictionary of synonyms published in 1852 by Peter Mark Roget. Consulted by writers in every country in the world, the most recent edition, the eighth, contains over a half a million words. Under the entry marked insane, the following results are included: mentally ill, severely mentally disordered, of unsound mind, psychotic and schizophrenic. A random selection of any result among all those listed for this entry would provide an accurate description of the thought of a preeminent and hugely influential philosopher of the West. The currents of cultural subjectivism coursed through his soul like dark electricity and created a monster of psychosis which only the West could create, a deformity of thought which the Classical world of common sense and soundness of mind would have dismissed out of hand as something evil and alien. The voice of antireason and the antiApollo, the voice of the West's own founding spirit, the voice of a necromancer, alchemist and adventurer of the will named Faust, spoke when Gottfried Wilhelm von Leibniz set forth his program and manifesto for the imprisonment of the human mind behind the bars of a stark, severe mental breakdown. This seventeenth century scion of Faust who ran away from Apollo as Dracula ran away from the noonday light proclaimed that reality consists of spiritual, immaterial automata called monads. He proclaimed that these monads are units of pure mental force. He proclaimed that what we regard as matter is an illusion which is produced by the activities of these monads. He proclaimed that these monads support everything we perceive and feel in the world. He proclaimed that there is no world of natural phenomena but only a world of supernatural monads and physics is a purely mentalistic science. He proclaimed that the laws of dynamics are the laws of monadic forces. He proclaimed that there are no such things as physical space or physical time but only supernatural space and supernatural time. He proclaimed that mental monads at the basis of all reality are simple, individual substances, supernatural points with no shape or magnitude. He proclaimed that monads are mirrors and representations of the illusory world of physical objects. He proclaimed that what is called nature is nothing more than the totality of internal representations in monads. He proclaimed that all information is mental information and internal information and all ontology is the ontology of pure minds. He proclaimed that all monads are programmed by God who is the ultimate programmer. He proclaimed that the community of monads is governed by a preestablished harmony set by God. He proclaimed that all states, perceptions, transitions and sequences are purely mental in character. He proclaimed that matter is a function of mind and cannot exist without the processes going on inside the monads. He proclaimed that monads are organized into a hierarchy of groups in which each group is governed by a dominant monad and the totality of groups is governed by God. He proclaimed that different types of monads create different realities and the world appears differently to human monads and to angel monads. He proclaimed that monads are the ultimate units of existence and are unaffected by time and are subject only to creation and annihilation decreed by God. He proclaimed that the world is contingent upon the will of God and could have been arranged differently if God had so willed, and water would now freeze when heated to 100 degrees Celsius if God had so decided. He proclaimed that monads are completely independent of each other and are noninteracting and only appear to cause each other's movements by virtue of the principle of preestablished harmony. He proclaimed that every monad is like a clock and behaves independently of all other monads but is synchronized with all other monads by God. He proclaimed that every monad follows a programmed set of instructions written by God and at every moment knows exactly what to do. He proclaimed that all knowledge is apriori in character, all predicates can be deduced from their subjects, and a monad need only look inside itself and contemplate its own forms and categories in order to know the laws and phenomena of nature. He proclaimed that the most primary, the most fundamental and the most real level of reality is the supernatural level of pure minds, which consists of monads, their perceptions and their desires. Listen to the philosopher Leibniz proclaim that sense experience is not necessary to acquire necessary knowledge about the world. All that is necessary is a process of pure, inward mental inspection in the manner of the ancient seers, soothsayers and witch doctors: "So if I were capable of considering distinctly everything which is happening or appearing to me now, I would be able to see in it everything which will ever happen or appear to me for all time. And it would not be prevented, and would still happen to me, even if everything outside me were destroyed, so long as there remained only God and me (Discourse on Metaphysics by Gottfried Wilhelm von Leibniz). Listen to the philosopher Leibniz proclaim that knowledge of necessary truths resides mystically within us and does not require any process of empirical discovery. It is acquired by a mere act of mere self consciousness, self reflection and self deduction: "It is also through the knowledge of necessary truths, and through their abstract expression, that we rise to acts of reflection, which make us think of what is called I, and observe that this or that is within us: and thus, thinking of ourselves, we think of being, of substance, of the simple and the compound, of the immaterial, and of God Himself, conceiving that what is limited in us is in Him without limits. And these acts of reflection furnish the chief objects of our reasonings." (The Monadology by Gottfried Wilhelm von Leibniz). Listen to the philosopher Leibniz proclaim that natural facts are arbitrary and nonnecessary and their opposites are possible and imaginable. Thus it is not a matter of necessity that water conducts electricity, that gold is malleable and that paper burns at 233 degrees Celsius and these facts could have been otherwise and different. Necessary truths are grasped by a process of internal analysis, examination and reasoning independently of all external experience: "There are also two kinds of truths, those of reasoning and those of fact. Truths of reasoning are necessary and their opposite is impossible: truths of fact are contingent and their opposite is possible. When a truth is necessary, its reason can be found by analysis, resolving it into more simple ideas and truths, until we come to those which are primary. It is thus that in Mathematics, speculative Theorems and practical Canons are reduced by analysis to Definitions, Axioms and Postulates." (The Monadology by Gottfried Wilhelm von Leibniz). Listen to the philosopher Leibniz proclaim that the world of matter is a mere appearance which conceals true reality of mind. That there is nothing physical which exists in the universe and everything we perceive, every animal, plant, mountain and body of water, is a but shadowy emanation of the immaterial, living, self thinking monads which populate the universe. That there are no material atoms or material particles anywhere but only spiritual atoms and spiritual particles and these supernatural minds swarm over all of existence. That existence is mind, soul, spirit and monads outside of which there is nothing: "Whence it appears that in the smallest particle of matter there is a world of creatures, living beings, animals, entelechies, souls. Each portion of matter may be conceived as like a garden full of plants and like a pond full of fishes. But each branch of every plant, each member of every animal, each drop of its liquid parts, is also some such garden or pond. And though the earth and the air which are between the plants of the garden, or the water which is between the fish of the pond, be neither plant nor fish; yet they also contain plants and fishes, but mostly so minute as to be imperceptible to us. Thus there is nothing fallow, nothing sterile, nothing dead in the universe, no chaos, no confusion save in appearance, somewhat as it might appear to be in a pond at a distance, in which one would see a confused movement and, as it were, a swarming of fish in the pond, without separately distinguishing the fish themselves. Hence it appears that each living body has a dominant entelechy, which in an animal is the soul; but the members of this living body are full of other living beings, plants, animals, each of which has also its dominant entelechy or soul." (The Monadology by Gottfried Wilhelm von Leibniz). The original edition of Roget's Thesaurus contained 15,000 entries which provided colors, connotations and spectrums of meanings. Civilized people who stood aghast at the terrifying development of Western philosophy from the blazing fever swamps of Faust saw a conspicuous omission under the entry marked insane: they saw every conceivable word and phrase save one: the philosophy of Gottfried Wilhelm von Leibniz.

SPINOZA AT THE STAKE

The Index of Forbidden Books was a list created by the Catholic Church of publications judged to be heretical by the Church's Sacred Congregation of the Index. Works by atheists and pantheists shared space on this list, and the thought of the Greek philosophers of Apollonian reason vied for prominence with the thought of the pantheists. World renowned among the latter group was a philosopher in the seventeenth century who gave voice and expression to a form of mysticism which competed with Christianity to rule the souls of the unenlightened and the ignorant. The dark, satanic currents of pantheism coursed through the thought of Baruch Spinoza and made him a target for expulsion and excommunication by his competing religionists in the Catholic Church. His program and manifesto of mysticism was exalted as the bible of pantheistic philosophy and the harbinger of a second Dark Age which his votaries hoped and prayed would arrive and, like the Church which ruled the first Dark

Age, sweep away the heresies of Greco-Roman rationalism, but would do so now in the name of an imminent God instead of a transcendent God. Composer of the last Latin masterpieces of mysticism in the West, Spinoza proclaims that perception is illusory and everything which exists is one reality and one substance and is called God. He proclaims that reality is a single, fundamental, infinite substance and what are perceived to be separate physical objects are in point of fact mere modes and modifications of the infinite. He proclaims that existence is a single being which has infinitely many attributes, of which thought and extension are two. He proclaims that the physical is the mental and the mental is the physical and nothing is anything within the infinite existence of God. He proclaims that the infinite substance emanates both mind and body and neither mind nor body and the two are fundamentally the same. He proclaims that there is no mind-body dualism because mind and body are one and the same substance. He proclaims that the fundamental nature of reality is neutral, being neither idea nor matter and both idea and matter, at one and the same time. He proclaims that human freedom and dignity are illusions and man's thoughts and actions are controlled by the divine, all pervasive, mystical substance. He proclaims that God creates being and is immanently within everything which exists. He proclaims that God is simultaneously within all things and is mystically identical to the natural order. He proclaims that being and nothingness are one and the same thing and are God. He proclaims that all things obey the laws of God's nature and nothing and nobody is free. He proclaims that God is all things, creates all things, and causes all things to flow toward it and into it. He proclaims that existence exists in nothingness and nothingness exists in existence and the enlightened soul has grasped their fundamental compatibility and identity. He proclaims that the natural order is the development and unfolding of God. He proclaims that the universe comes into existence and progresses out of God. He proclaims that God is present in every form of life and the evolution of life is the evolution of God. He proclaims that God, being and negation are disseminated throughout the universe and are essentially and fundamentally the same. He proclaims that God's attributes cause and are one with the intellectual, volitional, emotional and material aspects of the world. He proclaims that God is the endless web of existence and the infinite interconnectedness of all things. He proclaims that God is an infinitely productive being and is the endless variations of creation and causation. He proclaims that God is the lifeline, the energy and the guide of the universe. He proclaims that God is both immutable and evolving, both unchanging and changing, both at rest and in motion, at one and the same time. He proclaims that God is everything at once and is both black all over and white all over at one and the same time. He proclaims that the physical order is the ideational order and the two are identical within the essence of God. He proclaims that God's essence underlies all things and is the goal toward all things work. He proclaims that universe is God's mind, soul and self consciousness. He proclaims that the universe is God's act of living, flourishing and self realization. He proclaims that the individual is God, this God who is aware only of himself, this God who is the only thing which truly exists, and therefore all knowledge of the world is acquired through a process of pure analysis, definition and deduction independently of all sense experience. Look at the world of Spinoza and see its rejection of concrete individual existence. See its rejection of separateness and multiplicity. See its rejection of reason and common sense and its promotion of mysticism and pantheism. See its definition of existence as oneness, indetermination, infinity and unintelligibility. See its exaltation of antiempiricism as eternal wisdom and the hieroglyphs of ancient sorcery as the keys to supreme enlightenment. See its exaltation of union with the One, absorption into the One, and the mystical apprehension of a reality held to be inaccessible to sense perception. See its projection of existence as a single, mental, supernatural monad outside of which there is nothing. See its manifesto of a philosophy transcendent, imminent and light years removed from what sane people see and understand. See its staging of mental breakdown in the amphitheatres of universal God manifestation. See its exaltation of the Kabbalists, the Rosicrucians, the Latinists, the alchemists, the transmutationists, the occultists, the doctors, the theologians, the town officials, the terminologists, and the masters of the orders and lodges of schizophrenic disintegration, dissolution and dissemination through endless mystical space: "Spinoza is one of the few people who can be called a true individual. Yet, in accordance with his philosophical beliefs, he denied such individuality by recognizing that true individuality is the realization of universality. Through published material it is known that Spinoza is maintained as having been a Rosicrucian. We can divide that claim into two parts, thus approaching the proof dualistically. The term Rosicrucian can be used generically as Rosicrucian in thought or, secondly, specifically, as being affiliated with a Rosicrucian group or body. In the former writings most notably his Ethics are very much in agreement with Rosicrucian philosophy. In our terminology we would not only relegate Spinoza as a rationalist, which he indeed was, but also as a mystical pantheist which concurs so closely with the Rosicrucian teachings that it seems almost identical in many instances. There are many ideas in Spinoza's works which point in that direction. For instance, we can briefly state that Spinoza's definition of God is likened to an omnipotent, impersonal essence infusing all existence and inseparable from that existence. This definition accounts for Spinoza's pantheism. Then, simply, Spinoza proceeds to explain how creation manifests by using a rather complex structure of explanation, as do the Rosicrucians. Let us refer to the title page of Spinoza's Theological and Political Treatise where we find the Latin phrase apud Henricum Kunraht. First of all, Heinrich Khunrath died in 1605, almost thirty years before Spinoza was born. Then, we may wonder, why does the name appear? If we look a little further we find that Heinrich Khunrath was a Rosicrucian and that his major work Amphitheater of Eternal Wisdom contained seven Arcanes, or Rosicrucian Keys. We find on one of his plates the symbol of the Hieroglyphic Monad designed by the English Rosicrucian John Dee. That symbol also appeared next to the invitation to Christian Rosenkreuz in the third Rosicrucian Manifesto published in the 17th Century—the Chymical Wedding of Christian Rosenkreuz. It is a distinct possibility that a chain of Rosicrucian influence was being passed on traditionally from person to person, showing a Rosicrucian link. If we translate Spinoza's apud Henricum Kunraht as 'in the house of Heinrich Khunrath,' perhaps Spinoza was revealing his Rosicrucian association in the roundabout manner used by many other Rosicrucians throughout history to reveal their association. We know for a fact that Spinoza was in contact with, and impressed by, two Rosicrucians. First, there was Wilhelm Gottfried Leibniz, whose affiliation with the Order is established by a published letter stating that he was at one time the secretary of a Rosicrucian Lodge. And secondly, there was Dr. Helvitiuș, whom Spinoza commented to in a letter to Jarig Jellis concerning Dr. Helvitiuș' alchemical transmutation. Spinoza allegedly observed one such transmutation. Also, we find that Spinoza's well known friend, Jan de Witt, the Grand Pensionary of Holland, was tutored at an early age by Isaac Beekman, a known Rosicrucian. Could such influence have a lasting effect upon Jan de Witt as is often the case? And, if so, could that influence have been passed on to Spinoza?" (Benedict Spinoza: Philosopher, Mystic, Rosicrucian by Gary Stewart). Tutored by Satan in his chambers of hatred of existence, Spinoza made loud protestations of fidelity to reason simply because he had been born in an age of reason, in the West's supreme age, in the Age of Enlightenment. In point of fact, Spinoza was the mortal enemy of reason. The Greek god of reason and the sun, Apollo resolutely rejected the world of Spinoza. He affirmed the existence of separate, multiple, determinate existence. He affirmed the primacy of the individual and the existence of physical objects. He rejected apriori methods of thought and affirmed the primacy of induction. He compiled a list of forbidden ideas and taught civilized people never to entertain them. The prince and prophet of pantheism, Spinoza burns at the stake in Apollo's noonday world and blazes with the Christians who came before him and the reds who came after him.

HEGEL'S MAGIC

Prophecy and clairvoyance are so widely believed by the masses that magicians are credited with possessing psychic powers. In the nineteenth century, a mountebank, a charlatan and a scribbler clothed himself in academic garb, united a religion of magic and mysticism with a uniquely Western pathology called idealism, and set the world on fire with enthusiasm for his talents, insights, powers and abilities. The dark, diabolical currents of ancient witch doctory combined with the Western idealist rejection of the physical world, a rejection unheard of and unknown in Classical times, coursed through the soul of Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel and made him compose a program and manifesto of mental abnormality and malfunction which voiced the ethos of romanticism and subjectivism patented by Faust in the West, as it expressed the spirit dreams of sorcerers hurtling through the skies of primitive man. It was a program and manifesto which made reasonable, civilized people from every corner of the earth flee from it in fear and trembling as fleeing from a deadly plague, and made them wonder when civilization itself would come crashing to an end. Hegel the insane Western idealist and denier of matter, and Hegel the insane sorcerer and gymnast of apriori deduction and mental acrobatics, delivered voluminous lectures to his university students and proclaimed to them the following. He proclaimed that true philosophy must start out from religion and philosophy. He proclaimed that the world of finite, determinate, physical objects does not exist. He proclaimed that reality is the abstractions and infinitude of the Absolute Mind. He proclaimed that sense certainty is an illusion and what exists is pure thinking, pure conceptualization and pure awareness. He proclaimed that sense experience is deception and matter is unreal. He proclaimed that the world of tables and chairs is a mere appearance and the supersensible world of mental force and mystical understanding alone is real. He proclaimed that reality is mind, soul, consciousness and self consciousness and has nothing whatever to do with what the deluded call matter and nature. He proclaimed that reality resides in the activities of consciousness and in the kingdom of the spirit. He proclaimed that knowledge of the world is acquired without observation and by a process of pure mental inspection. He proclaimed that the so-called physical world is a reflection of mind which alone is real. He proclaimed that determinate physical beings are created by and presuppose the existence of an infinite, indeterminate mind which is the fundament of all reality. He proclaimed that because mind is the only thing which truly exists, truth is just the harmony or coherence between thoughts and has nothing whatever to do with any correspondence between thoughts and alleged physical facts. He proclaimed that reality transcends the world of everyday objects and is the internal coherence of the Absolute Idea. He proclaimed that existence is pure speculative thought and the self comprehension of the superhuman abstract mind. He proclaimed that what the ignorant call matter is nothing more than the self objectification of the Absolute Mind. He proclaimed that the universe is an infinite self thinking spirit. He proclaimed that existence possesses a mental value alone and pure apriori reasoning is the sole coin of the realm. He proclaimed that existence is absolute consciousness and its special, higher antisystem of antilogic in which change brings about the unity of contradictions, the unity of A and non A, and the situation, which only the mystically enlightened can grasp, that a thing can be both black all over and white all over at one and the same time. He proclaimed that the hallmark of philosophical wisdom resides in the recognition that nothing is external, everything is internal, and is abstract, intellectual, conceptual and psychological in character. He proclaimed that the only real mode of existence is abstraction and the evolution of the universe is nothing else than the evolution of the Absolute Mind which is God. He proclaimed that the all so-called material entities are nothing more than thought entities; the history of the world is the history of the production of these entities by the divine absolute mind; and the study of material entities as though they were real entities is a consequence of the alienation of the individual from its matrix in God. He proclaimed that there is no distinction between subjects and objects because objects do not exist, and what finite, limited minds call objects are nothing more than the cloaks and exoteric shapes of the Absolute Mind. Look at the world of Hegel and see its exaltation of precognition, clairvoyance and extrasensory perception sold and packaged as academic and philosophic apriorism. See its exaltation of theories without evidence and mystical intuition unmoored to reality. See its philosophy of magic and its production of ideas and systems like rabbits out of hats. See its Freemasons, Rosicrucians, Hermeticists and ancient priests passing secret messages in the dark. See its logic of contradiction and incoherence, its encyclopedias of madness and mental radio, and its libraries of psychic somersaults exalted as the highest forms of thought and literature. See its occultists and alchemists purge and purifying the mind of all concern with empirical reality. See its program to annihilate physical objects within the charnel houses of the Universal Mind, the Absolute Idea and the Earth Spirit. See it reduce philosophy and the sciences to a phenomenology of pure consciousness, to reflections in a bottomless well called the Cosmic Mind, and to the exhibition of the psychotic's state of total detachment. See its manifesto to transfigure the natural into the supernatural, to transform the individual into an emanation from God, to reject the existence of separateness and multiplicity, and to disseminate schizophrenic raving through every region of the universe: "Hegel's library included Hermetic writings by Agrippa, Boehme, Bruno, and Paracelsus. He read widely on Mesmerism, psychic phenomenal dowsing, precognition, and sorcery. He publicly associated himself with known occultists, like Franz von Baader. He structured his philosophy in a manner identical to the Hermetic use of 'Correspondences!' He relied on histories of thought that discussed Hermes Trismegistus, Pico della Mirandola, Robert Fludd, and Knorr von Rosenroth alongside Plato, Galileo, Descartes, and Newton. He stated in his lectures more than once that the term speculative means the same thing as mystical. He believed in an Earth Spirit and corresponded with colleagues about the nature of magic. He aligned himself, informally, with Hermetic societies such as the Freemasons and the Rosicrucians. Even Hegel's doodles were Hermetic, as we shall see when I discuss the mysterious triangle diagram. The final Hermetic period of Hegel's life is his time in Berlin, from 1818 until his death on November 14, 1831. This is contrary to what one might expect. It might be assumed that Hegel's Hermeticism was merely an aberration of youth, which the 'arch rationalist' moved away from as he matured. Surprisingly, precisely the reverse seems to be the case. In Berlin, Hegel developed a friendship with Franz von Baader, the premiere occultist and mystic of the day. Together they studied Meister Eckhart. The preface to Hegel's 1827 edition of the Encyclopedia of the Philosophical Sciences in Outline makes prominent mention of Boehme and Baader. His revised 1832 edition of the Science of Logic corrects a passage so as to include a reference to Boehme. His preface to the 1821 Philosophy of Right includes alchemical and Rosicrucian imagery. His 1831 Lectures on the Philosophy of Religion show the influence of the mystic Joachim of Fiore, as well as certain structural correspondences to the thought of Boehme. In sum, all the evidence indicates that in the last period of his life, Hegel's interest in the mystical and Hermetic traditions intensified, and that he became more bold about publicly aligning himself with Hermetic thinkers and movements. The divisions of Hegel's philosophy follow a pattern that is typical of many forms of mystical and Hermetic philosophy. The Phenomenology represents an initial stage of purification of raising the mind above the level of the sensory and the mundane, a preparation for the reception of wisdom. The Logic is equivalent to the Hermetic ascent to the level of pure form, of the eternal, of Universal Mind or Absolute Idea. The Philosophy of Nature describes an emanation or othering of Universal Mind in the form of the spatiotemporal world. Its categories accomplish a transfiguration of the natural: we come to see the world as a reflection of Universal Mind. The Philosophy of Spirit accomplishes a return of created nature to the Divine by means of man, who can rise above the merely natural and actualize God in the world through concrete forms of life (eg the state and religion) and through speculative philosophy." (Hegel And The Hermetic Tradition by Glenn McGee). In Germany in the eighteenth century, there lived a shaman who had power over fire and water, who wandered through classrooms in trances and seances, and who was able to vacate his body and journey to the spirit world high above the universe. This channeler of the supernatural, the paranormal, the paranoiac and the philosophies of idealism which walked in the footsteps of Faust wrote down his madness in professorial volumes which filled vast university shelves. When the philosopher Hegel proclaimed that physical objects do not exist, that perception is the perception of nothing and consciousness is the consciousness of nothing beyond itself, that everything which exists is the Absolute Mind which is nobody's mind, that this mind operates in accordance with a new dialectical superlogic according to which contradictions are the law of reality and the world is both A and non A, both position and negation, at one and the same time, and that knowledge of the world is to be derived by a process of pure deduction from this higher, mystical logic independently of all sense experience, sane people saw a monster rampaging through the modern world. This was a two headed monster from the East and the West. It was a monster of ancient Eastern sorcery and Western Faustian idealism and it calumniated the nonWestern god Apollo as it lowered the curtain on civilization.

ABORTION, THE REDS AND THE CHRISTIAN RIGHT

Superstition has many faces and mysticism wears many masks. The present age has seen two main forms of mysticism vie for the control of man's soul: the mystics of matter on earth and the mystics of God in heaven. This struggle for power between the reds and the Christian right is nowhere more in evidence than in the issue of abortion. Common sense supports the right of a woman to procure an abortion on the grounds that an actual human life cannot possibly commence at the moment at which a spermatozoon meets an ovum or at any time shortly thereafter. Common sense understands that a potential human life commences at this point but not the existence of a real person or a real human being. Common sense recognizes that man is a rational animal and that this empirical definition precludes the ascription of actual human status to a fertilized human egg. Common sense recognizes that a human being's life commences at birth. The Christian right is opposed to abortion because it rejects the definition of man as a rational animal and views man as defined by a mystical essence which was infused in the ovum by God at the moment of fertilization. Common sense rejects the doctrine of mystical essences as a denial of the facts of reality, as the equating of a potential human life with an actual human life, and as an affront to fundamental human sanity. In contrast to the Christian right, the reds support the right to an abortion, but do so on grounds completely at variance with common sense. In common with the Christian right, the reds reject the definition of man as a rational animal. But instead of defining man as a mystical soul or essence as the Christians do, they define man in the context of their ontology of materialism. According to this ontology, everything which exists is matter, what is called mind is only a form of matter, and what is called thinking consists only in the movements and modifications of matter and possesses no spiritual quality or dimension. There is thus no essential, qualitative distinction between a spermatozoon, an embryo, an ape and a man and any may be killed in an instant if social needs and interests require. Because there is no such thing as mind or reason, there is no such thing as human freedom or dignity, and a man has no more right to life than an embryo and an embryo has no more right to life than a man, and a mother may kill her embryo as she deems fit, just as a state may wipe out the members of a nation or a class as it deems fit, as enemies of the people. While the Christians proclaim that embryos possess human rights, the reds proclaim that nobody possesses human rights and that the individual exists to serve the interests of a gender, race or class totality, and that his life does not belong to him but belongs to the state and community. The reds grant a mother only provisional property rights over her embryo, while they grant the state absolute rights over the mother, and the right to force the mother to give birth if political exigencies supervene. The reds grant women the right to procure abortions on purely party political grounds and may revoke this right at any time on purely party political grounds. In societies ruled by the reds, the state alone possesses the right to life, liberty and property, and the individual has been reduced to a cog in the machinery of the social organism. In Soviet Russia in 1920, abortion was legalized on the grounds that women were unable to take care of their children after fighting in the communist revolution and civil war. In 1936, the Soviets criminalized abortion on the grounds that it was inhibiting population growth. In 1955, the Soviets again legalized abortion on the grounds that population growth was sufficient. Listen to the words of the mystics of God who proclaim that human life commences at the very moment of conception. Who proclaim that an actual human life and an actual human person appears at the instant when an ovum is exposed to male reproductive material. Who proclaim that real live people inhabit a mother's womb and are entitled to the full protections of the law. Who proclaim that human embryonic cells possess human personhood and must be accorded constitutional protection. Who proclaim that the killing of an embryo is the killing of a person and that abortion and infanticide are one and the same act. Who have swung wide open the gates of the mad houses and let out the inmates who scream that woman's uteruses are inhabited by angels and demons and by God himself: "Human life must be respected and protected absolutely from the moment of conception. From the first moment of his existence, a human being must be recognized as having the rights of a person--among which is the inviolable right of every innocent being to life. 'Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, and before you were born I consecrated you. My frame was not hidden from you, when I was being made in secret, intricately wrought in the depths of the earth.' Since the first century the Church has affirmed the moral evil of every procured abortion. This teaching has not changed and remains unchangeable. Direct abortion, that is to say, abortion willed either as an end or a means, is gravely contrary to the moral law. 'You shall not kill the embryo by abortion and shall not cause the newborn to perish. God, the Lord of life, has entrusted to men the noble mission of safeguarding life, and men must carry it out in a manner worthy of themselves. Life must be protected with the utmost care from the moment of conception: abortion and infanticide are abominable crimes.' " (Catechism of the Catholic Church). Look at the world of the reds and see lands engulfed in moral eclipse and lands consumed in eternal midnight. See how their governments order mothers to have abortions as they order death squads to depopulate nations. See how they establish maximum child policies as they contract liberty down to a vanishing point. See how they interrogate mothers and charge them with the crime of being pregnant. See how they kill embryos as socially undesirable as they wipe out the producers and creators as exploiters of the proletariat. See how their police officers escort pregnant women to hospitals and deliver them into the hands of the doctors of the party. See how these doctors aspirate embryos from the women's wombs as they vacuum out last remnants of human dignity from their souls. See how they subject pregnant women to threats, intimidation and blackmail against a backdrop of internment camps and detention centers. See how they order pregnancies to be terminated as they command those who are talented and successful to bow down before the officials, leaders, parties and congresses of the people's state. See how they force free people into airless, lightless, windowless government buildings and deprive them of their minds, their persons, their voices, their privacy, their security, their capacity for independent thought, their families and their unborn children, and then make them march into living death to the drumbeats of red propaganda: "She says last December 28, police showed up at her house at midnight. 'I thought they wanted to interrogate me again,' she says. 'But they took me to the hospital instead. They administered another health check, and then they told me I was pregnant.' She was six weeks along. Before she could share the news with her husband, local authorities returned to her house the next day. 'They ordered me to get an abortion,' she says. The authorities warned her a third child wasn't permitted. 'They told me I couldn't have the baby because I've had two others, and that a third was not allowed,' she says. 'I told them my husband is a Kazakh citizen and that I'm carrying a Kazakh citizen. But they insisted that I have an abortion.' After that, she says, authorities called her every day, urging her to go to the hospital for an abortion before the fetus grew bigger. 'Finally I told them, no' she says. 'I'm not willing to do it.' It didn't matter. 'The police and local officials came and took me and my brother to a government building,' the woman says. 'They made my brother sign a document saying that if I don't get an abortion, he would suffer the consequences. I knew this meant he'd be detained in a camp. I'd do anything to protect my brother, so I agreed to the abortion.' Two days after her pregnancy was terminated, she says, police took her brother to an internment camp anyway. She spent ten days in the hospital recuperating. 'I was staying in the solitary ward,' she says. 'There was a camera facing my door. They wouldn't let me see my children. They gave me some newspaper articles about the Nineteenth Party Congress, saying I should know China's leaders by heart.' " (They Ordered Me To Get An Abortion: A Chinese Woman's Ordeal In Xinjiang by Rob Schmitz). In the tiny darkness of a woman's womb a drama of immense proportions is being played out. Its protagonists are two of Satan's emissaries and they are fighting for control over civilization. Their positions on abortion reflect their agenda of totalitarian destruction. The mystics of God have invaded a woman's body and assumed control over her reproductive functions on the grounds that fertilized sex cells at the moment of conception are actual human persons and possess the right to life. The mystics of matter have proclaimed that embryos are not human beings possessing human rights because the mind does not exist and there are no human beings anywhere who possess human rights. On a battlefield deep inside a woman's body, the totalitarians of the Christian right and the totalitarians of the left have engaged each other and tolled the death knell of human freedom.

DECADENCE SPELLED JAZZ

A man sits astride a large drum and jabs and pulses at it, sharply and rapidly. Another drummer joins in the staccato bombardment. A third man joins in, plucking a stringed instrument. Then a fourth man joins in, beating a drum with two short sticks. Then random chanting voices join in. Then a crowd begins to dance in a conflict of movements and a hieroglyph of madness. This is not Africa in the age of primitive man. This is New Orleans in the nineteenth century in a place then known as Congo Square and today known as Louis Armstrong Park. This was the site of infection of a cultural disease which would blossom into a full grown cancer in the twentieth century by its marriage of African jungle music with Western musical formalism to produce a genre of antimusic which would lend its name to an age and capture the allegiance of mobs throughout the world whose souls were steeped in the colors and vapors of vice and degeneracy. In this park in New Orleans over a century ago was the origin of jazz music. Arising from black America and aided, abetted and fanned into a blazing inferno by the Kantian formalism which had taken hold of the art world in the West, jazz played out in its rhythms, its syncopations, its improvisations, its drums, its pianos, its brass instruments and its woodwinds the crashing, banging death rattle of music: it played out pure, unadulterated noise. The universe of jazz is suffused with the rejection of melody and peddles its rejection under many flags. These are inscribed with names such as modal jazz, avant garde jazz, free jazz, blues jazz, ragtime jazz, scat singing jazz, progressive jazz, bebop jazz, Latin jazz, African-Cuban jazz and Dixieland jazz. These are words in a fearsome and terrifying alphabet invented by the demons of Africa and the demons of the West, a set of letters which spell out a genre of music whose animal sensations, animal teasing and animal passions create an irritation of the auditory nerves through their repudiation of a rationally satisfying, purposeful sequence of musical notes. It is a genre from which civilized people have run away as from a deadly moral and spiritual plague. It is genre which they have called a jungle uproar, an auditory exhibition of pigs in a trough, and an orchestration of cultural decadence which is harsh, loud, unpleasant and disturbing. While Siberian villagers used jazz to scare away bears, and the genre's dissonance and disorder caused fatal heart attacks in world renowned conductors, it found a warm and embracing home in the speakeasies and lairs of vice of the 1920s and its wild popularity among the masses gave this first decade of the free fall of the West the name: the Jazz Age. Look at the world of jazz and see its fusion of the music of Western decadence and the music overgrown with the forests and vegetation of African savagery. Look at the piano playing which is not piano playing. Look at the rejection of tonality in the name of harmonic innovation. Look at the experiments in the generation of random noise. Look at the music of disorganization and confusion paraded as a serious art form. Look at the sacrifice of rational principles, rational techniques and rational structures upon the altar of subjective self expression. Look at the maelstrom of formalist psychosis whirling and howling with voices from the East and voices from the West, the voices of the shamans, the witch doctors, the Ellingtons, the Beiderbeckes, the Debussys and the Schoenbergs, and sweeping away the ramparts of progress and civilization: "While for an outside observer, the harmonic innovations in bebop would appear to be inspired by experiences in Western serious music, from Claude Debussy to Arnold Schoenberg, such a scheme cannot be sustained by the evidence from a cognitive approach. Claude Debussy did have some influence on jazz, for example, on Bix Beiderbecke's piano playing. And it is also true that Duke Ellington adopted and reinterpreted some harmonic devices in European contemporary music. West Coast jazz would run into such debts as would several forms of cool jazz, but bebop has hardly any such debts in the sense of direct borrowings. On the contrary, ideologically, bebop was a strong statement of rejection of any kind of eclecticism, propelled by a desire to activate something deeply buried in the self. Bebop then revived tonal-harmonic ideas transmitted through the blues and reconstructed and expanded others in a basically nonWestern harmonic approach. The ultimate significance of all this is that the experiments in jazz during the 1940s brought back to African-American music several structural principles and techniques rooted in African traditions." (Bebop: A Case in Point. The African Matrix in Jazz Harmonic Practices by Gerhard Kubik). Look at the world of jazz and see its systematic rejection of song, melody and musical order under the banners of a new religion. Born in the temples of African hubbub and Western formalist pandemonium, this is a religion of pure, untrammled subjectivity which has declared total war against the art of music. Inscribed by African wildcats and Western composers, the banners of this religion contain the following tenets. Freedom of expression. Free improvisation. Free jazz. No musical norms. No harmonic framework. Strict atonality. No progression of chords. No compositional rules, standards, techniques, structures or norms. No thematic development. No pleasure or satisfaction in listening. These banners encircle a central altar upon which the music known and loved by civilized people for thousands of years has been offered up in sacrifice. It has been offered up in sacrifice to dark, satanic gods who proclaim that progressive music is conceptual art, abstract painting, incoherent, unintelligible vibrations traveling through the air, and primitive, barbaric, discomfiting, blasting, deafening, unhinged, psychotic noise: "Free Jazz, as the name implies, is all about freedom. The goal of Free Jazz is to allow greater freedom of expression through completely free improvisation. Each artist, naturally, expresses him or herself differently, and this is precisely why Free Jazz is a notoriously difficult genre to define. It's not about any one particular characteristic or technique. Instead you can only define Free Jazz in the negative: Free Jazz is the systematic rejection of musical norms and established rules in favor of personal expression. The whole trend of Modern Jazz is towards greater freedom in improvisation. The way this was done was by reducing the importance of chords. This is because chords restrict your improvisation by forcing you to work within a given harmonic framework or chord progression. By reducing the importance of chords, you free up your ability to improvise. Free Jazz is often atonal, with or without a tonal center, and is NOT in any particular diatonic key (instead, you could say that it is chromatic). This allows the soloist almost complete freedom in improvisation because you don't have to worry about chords or keys or modes anymore. The soloist can use any of the 12 notes in any order--and all notes are created equal! Twentieth century classical music also made use of atonality. After a brief period of free atonality in the early 1900s, Classical composers like Schoenberg created a very rigid, structured, and academic way of playing atonally which was called 12 Tone Serialism. The goal was to create music which completely lacked any sense of tonality, where you use each of the 12

notes (or 'pitch classes') without repeating any, in such a way that no tonality is established. Jazz is far less academic about atonality. The high degree of structure found in serialism is not found in Jazz. This is probably because it's too difficult to improvise using such rigid and complex rules, and because it completely defeats the purpose of Free Jazz--which is to have more freedom to improvise. There's no point breaking the old rules just to create new ones. In Free Jazz, you're allowed to play both tonally and atonally, it's up to you. But of course, Free Jazz is about more than just playing atonally. As I stated at the beginning, Free Jazz is the systematic rejection of musical norms. And there are plenty of other musical norms to reject. The ultimate goal of Free Jazz is freedom of expression through free improvisation--this was achieved by breaking musical rules. Interestingly, Free Jazz is not completely free--Free Jazz musicians still employed tonal centers, or thematic development in order to impose some structure onto their song and improvisation. So perhaps complete freedom is undesirable. As I've said in previous lessons: Music without structure is noise. Free Jazz is not easy to listen to, and it's not supposed to be. You have to know what to listen to. Free Jazz is like conceptual art--the idea behind it is just as important as the music itself. It's not like a Mozart song, which innately sounds pleasant. You have to really understand what you're listening to in order to appreciate it. And sometimes it'll sound like a cat walking across a piano. But other times it will sound very powerful and emotive." (Walk That Bass in thejazzpianosite.com). In homes, schools, businesses and offices throughout the world, an illicit establishment has taken root. In its dark, smoky halls, music has been beaten to death by the saxophones, trumpets, trombones, pianos, basses, drums, and guitars of a new kind of noise. It is an African-Western wave of destruction called jazz.

WANTED: BISHOP BERKELEY

Between 1812 and 1819, Francisco Goya produced an oil on panel masterpiece entitled The Madhouse. It depicts the inhabitants of a mental asylum in various and sundry poses. Up until the deinstitutionalization movement which commenced in the mid twentieth century, mental asylums were places of involuntary confinement of people who suffered from a severe form of mental abnormality called psychosis or insanity. This was characterized by a state of total detachment from reality and a descent into a realm of delusions and hallucinations. In Britain in the eighteenth century, civilized people who studied philosophy and exalted the progress of modern civilization saw a conspicuous absence in the records of inmates housed in the asylums of the nation. He was nowhere to be found in any of the asylums from Norwich to London to Leicester to Liverpool. He was to be found instead in the office of lecturer, professor, dean and Bishop of Cloyne in the Church of Ireland. Civilized people understood that among all the inmates chained, confined and straitjacketed in Britain's mental asylums, this man should have occupied pride of place by virtue of his unabashed, systematic, academic, philosophical advocacy of the doctrine of idealism. But he was a man of his time, a man of his age, a product of a culture which espoused the currents of idealism and subjectivism as its guiding religion from the moment of its conception in 1000 AD in the gloomy, evening lands of ancient Germany. This culture was the romanticist culture of the West, whose most famous and representative legend of Faust, an unprincipled adventurer on the raging seas of passion, expression and will, was as far removed from the Classical legend of Apollo, symbol of reason and reality, as mental sickness is removed from mental health. This man, this professor, this dean, this high church official, was George Berkeley. His influential contributions to philosophy were contributions made by and for a cultural madhouse called the Faustian West and in the eyes of civilized people were contributions devoid all rational value and worth. Composed in the darkest depths of Faustian midnight from which Apollonian noonday had been banished forever, Berkeley's program and manifesto proclaimed that there are only two kinds of things which exist in the world: spirits and ideas. Spirits are minds which produce and perceive ideas. He proclaimed that philosophy must deny the existence of physical objects and affirm that the sole existents are sensations, states of mind, conscious experiences, and the immaterial subjects which have them. He proclaimed that the things we see with our eyes and touch with our hands do not in point of fact exist. He proclaimed that the belief in the existence of corporeal substances has no basis in reality and no practical use in ordinary discourse. He proclaimed that there are no such things as mind independent objects and the only possible philosophy is that of subjectivism, idealism and immaterialism. He proclaimed that what the ignorant call a material thing, such as a mountain or a river, is nothing more than collections of ideas produced in the mind of man by the mind of God. He proclaimed that the source of all our sensations is not material things, because the latter are constructed out of our sensations, but rather the mind of God who gave them to man as the signs and symbols of his wisdom. He proclaimed that when we open our eyes and perceive a field or a meadow, we perceive nothing physical but only ideas which are imprinted upon us by the spirit, the sense and the will of God. He proclaimed that the philosophy of empiricism is a complete misconception because nature does not exist as a reality independent of consciousness, and the only true, enlightened philosophy is that of mysticism and idealism which affirms that what exists are ideas which are perceived in the mind of man and God. He proclaimed that the perception of a rock is an idea which God's mind has produced in us and the rock would continue to exist even if nobody perceived it because God is an infinite mind which perceives all ideas. He proclaimed that no phenomenon is a real phenomenon unless it is an observed phenomenon. He proclaimed that there are no qualities which are inherent in objects because there are no physical objects but only ideas which we observe. He proclaimed that the sole reality is a spiritual reality and not any solid, physical reality which only the deluded believe in. He proclaimed that the notion of a material object which is independent of all consciousness is incoherent nonsense and must be replaced by a philosophy of pure minds and their ideas. Look at the world of Berkeley and see its principles, theories, visions and dialogues promoting total mental derangement. See its denial that physical objects exist and that there is a world which endures outside the forms and categories of thought. See its reduction of the items of the universe to ideas in the minds of those who perceive them. See its ontology consisting of minds and ideas residing in these minds. See its rejection of a belief which no sane human being would ever reject, the most fundamental of all beliefs, the belief that physical objects exist and are directly perceived by man. See its rejection of Aristotelian philosophy, Greco-Roman philosophy, common sense philosophy and the plain man's philosophy the first principle of which is that all perception is the perception of something, and is the perception of physical objects, and that the objects of sense are real, substantial and exist outside the forms and mechanisms of consciousness. See its development of five hundred years of Western philosophy to its fearsome and conclusion, its construction of the currents of Faustianism, Cartesianism, romanticism, skepticism, relativism, subjectivism and antiClassical philosophy into a living, breathing, stalking monster. Denying that what we immediately perceive are external objects, rejecting the existence of matter and sensible species, and disbelieving the existence of everything in the universe except the existence of minds and their ideas, this is the monster of schizophrenic disintegration. Denying the self evident principle that consciousness is primarily the consciousness of something beyond itself, a principle recognized by the learned, the unlearned, the pious, the impious, and every person possessing sound mind and judgment, this frightful, monstrous Berkeleian form has made the citizens of the West the disciples of psychological breakdown and burned the mind to cinders: "George Berkeley published his New Theory of Vision in 1709, his Principles of Human Knowledge in 1710, and his Three Dialogues in 1713. Everyone regards him as having great merit as an excellent writer, and a very acute and clear reasoner, on the most abstract subjects—not to speak of his very conspicuous personal virtues. Yet the doctrine that is mainly propounded in the works I have mentioned, and especially in the second and third of them, has generally been thought so very absurd that hardly anyone thinks he believed it himself or that he seriously meant to convince others of its truth. He maintains that there is no such thing as matter; that sun and moon, earth and sea, our own bodies and those of our friends, are nothing but ideas in the minds of those who think of them, and don't exist when they are not the objects of thought. All there is in the universe, Berkeley holds, falls into two categories, namely minds and ideas in the mind. He thinks he has demonstrated this, by a variety of arguments based on principles of philosophy that everyone accepts. But however absurd this doctrine might appear to uneducated people, who consider the existence of the objects of sense as the most evident of all truths and not open to question for anyone in his right mind, the philosophers who had been accustomed to regarding ideas as the immediate objects of all thought were not entitled to take such a dim view of this doctrine of Berkeley. Of all the opinions that have ever been advanced by philosophers, Berkeley's view that there is no material world seems the strangest and the most apt to bring philosophy into ridicule with plain men who are guided by the dictates of nature and common sense. So it may be worthwhile to trace this offspring of the doctrine of ideas from its birth, and to watch it growing up until it was so strong that a pious and learned bishop, Berkeley, was bold enough to usher it into the world as demonstrable from universally accepted principles of philosophy, and as an admirable device for advancing knowledge and defending religion. During the reign of the Aristotelian philosophy, men were little disposed to doubt. The existence of the objects of sense was held as a first principle; and the accepted doctrine was that the sensible species or idea is the very form of the external object, separated from its matter and sent across into the perceiving mind. So in that philosophy there is no hint of skepticism about the existence of matter. Descartes taught men to doubt even things that had been taken for first principles. He rejected the doctrine of species or ideas coming from objects; but still maintained that what we immediately perceive is not the external object but an idea or image of it in our mind. This led some of his disciples to disbelieve the existence of every created thing in the universe except themselves and their own ideas." (Essays On The Intellectual Powers Of Man by Thomas Reid). The Bethlem Royal Hospital is the oldest, the most venerable and the most famous mental hospital in Britain. Founded in the fourteenth century, it required its inmates to wear a special, distinguishing star on their cloaks and capes. In the eighteenth century, civilized people who stood aghast at the insanity accelerating in the halls of philosophy, noticed an absence among the badge wearers of Bethlem and sought in vain to rectify it. They saw the absence of a leading philosopher of the time who proclaimed to his disciples that existence is consciousness and that to be is to be perceived. They saw in Bethlem the greatest inmate who was never there. They saw George Berkeley.

LOCKE'S SECRET SUBSTRATUM

The practices of the occult project the existence of an underlying layer or substance of reality which is held to be nonphysical and unknowable. The worlds of magic, witchcraft, sorcery, alchemy, voodoo, cabbalism and diabolism are worlds which deny the primacy of nature and matter and exalt visions of a higher, mystical, supernatural realm. In Britain in the seventeenth century, during the heyday of the Age of Enlightenment, when civilized people thought that the demons of occultism had been banished forever from the precincts of civilization, they were in fact securely ensconced in the paneled corridors of philosophy and the dignified orchards of academia. They had in fact never left the culture because they were an inherent feature of it, arising from the evening lands of ancient Germany where the West was born, and guiding and shaping the West's subsequent development. These demons had a father who taught them all that they knew and sent them on their way to set into motion the course of Western philosophy. This father, this emissary from Satan, this sinister prince of total darkness, this Grim Reaper of men's souls, was Faust. German necromancer and witch doctor of the raging will and its boundless subjectivity, Faust banished the noontday world of Apollo, symbol of the distant, ancient, unWestern culture of the Greeks and Romans, from Europe and made a vast land reaching from the British Isles to the Baltic states the exclusive preserve of the demons of the occult. In the seventeenth century, one of Faust's foremost doctors and professors was given the task of composing a monumental treatise which defended the view that consciousness perceives only its own contents and what lies beyond consciousness is an occult, immaterial, unperceivable substratum. He obeyed Faust's orders and became one of the most influential philosopher in the history of the West. A prominent Oxford academic and the scion and descendant of a long line of Faustian philosophers beginning with Descartes, his name was John Locke. Channeling Faust, Descartes, Malebranche and the entire spirit of subjectivism which animated the West and set it light years apart from the common sense culture of Apollo, Locke set forth a program and manifesto of subjectivism and occultism which accelerated the trajectory of Western philosophy into its utter doom in the screaming fetal position of total psychosis. Professor Locke proclaimed that the mind immediately perceives nothing more than its own ideas. He proclaimed that the common sense view that perception is a two part relation existing between a perceiving subject and the physical object which he perceives is hopelessly naive and betrays a lack of philosophic wisdom, experience and judgment. He proclaimed that perception is instead a three part relation existing between a perceiving subject, the idea he perceives, and a supernatural, unperceivable, external object. He proclaimed that ideas are the things which we perceive and forever block us from perceiving a world outside of consciousness. He proclaimed that our ideas are copies, pictures and paintings of a reality which is mystical and can never be copied, pictured or painted in any manner. He proclaimed that our ideas are veils of perception which prevent us from seeing reality. He proclaimed that the only progressive theory of perception is a representative theory of perception according to which we are trapped in a prison house of our own representations which are representations of nothing. He proclaimed that the things which exist in reality are immaterial substances which have nothing whatever in common with our own ideas or with anything we can know. He proclaimed that reality consists of mystical objects and supports whose nature is the essence of obscurity and is "I know not what". He proclaimed that we have no experience of objective reality and can never hope to have any experience of it. He proclaimed that reality is beyond the realm of what can reasonably and rationally be known. He proclaimed that reality possesses no qualities which the mind, which is limited, finite and forever locked behind its own bars, can ever perceive. He proclaimed that reality consists of things without properties and particulars without determinations. He proclaimed that the common sense theory of empiricism, according to which perception is the perception of something and is not the perception of itself or of mental ideas, is incoherent and problematic and must be replaced by the recognition that the real substances and essences of the world are in principle unobservable, uncognizable and forever inaccessible to us. Look at the world of John Locke and see its rejection of the existence of the physical objects. See its proclamation that ideas are the only things which we can perceive. See its proclamation that our all putative knowledge is in point of fact no knowledge at all because it relates only to the realm of consciousness. See its proclamation that man is forever imprisoned behind a screen of perception and can obtain no reliable or accurate information about a world outside of perception. See its proclamation that what we perceive are internal resemblances and representations which are resemblances and representations of nothing in reality. See its proclamation that all consciousness is inherently filtering, distorting and subjective in character and we can never step outside it and perceive a realm of external existence. See its proclamation that knowledge is a relation which exists between ideas and has nothing whatever to do with material existence. See its proclamation that there is no difference between an act of perception and an object of perception and all objects of perception and acts of perception are completely mental in character. See its proclamation that the scope of human knowledge is just the dark stage of consciousness itself and never at any point impinges upon the range and extent of objective reality. See its proclamation that we can have no meaningful ideas of a physical substance, no real understanding of the reality which exists outside the mind, and the only possible philosophy is one of skepticism, doubt, denial and schizophrenic disintegration: "Locke spends a fair amount of time in Book IV responding to worries that he is a skeptic or that his account of knowledge, with its emphasis on ideas, fails to be responsive to the external world. The general worry for Locke is fairly simple. By claiming that ideas are the only things humans have epistemic access to, and by claiming that knowledge relates only to our ideas, Locke seems to rule out the claim that we can ever know about the external world. Lockean agents are trapped behind a 'veil of ideas.' Thus we cannot have any assurance that our ideas provide us with reliable information about the external world. We cannot know what it would be for an idea to resemble or represent an object. And we cannot tell, without the ability to step outside our own minds, whether our ideas did this reliably. This criticism has historically been thought to endanger Locke's entire project. Gilbert Ryle's memorable assessment is that 'nearly every youthful student of philosophy both can and does in his second essay refute Locke's entire Theory of Knowledge.' Recent scholarship has been much more charitable to Locke. But the central problem is still a pressing one. Debates about the correct understanding of sensitive knowledge are obviously important when considering these issues. At first blush, the relation involved in sensitive knowledge seems to be a relation between an idea and a physical object in the world. But, if this reading is correct, then it becomes difficult to understand the many passages in which Locke insists that knowledge is a relation that holds only between ideas. Also relevant are debates about how to correctly understand Lockean ideas. Recall from above that although many understand ideas as mental objects, some understand them as mental acts. While most of the text seems to favor the first interpretation, it seems that the second interpretation has a significant advantage when responding to these skeptical worries. The reason is that the connection between ideas and external world objects is built right into the definition of an idea. An idea just is a perception of an external world object. However the debates discussed are resolved, there is a consensus among commentators that Locke believes the scope of human understanding is very narrow. Humans are not capable of very much knowledge. Locke discusses this in 4.3, a chapter entitled Extent of Humane Knowledge. The fact that our knowledge is so limited should come as no surprise. We have already discussed the ways in which our ideas of substances are problematic. And we have just seen that we have no real understanding of the connection between our ideas and the objects that produce them." (John Locke by Patrick Connolly). Among the most famous and influential philosophers in the West, John Locke was given a sinister assignment by his master Faust. It was an assignment to sweep away the antiFaustian currents of empiricism and common sense which defined the Age of Enlightenment. Common sense affirms that when we perceive, we perceive something. Common sense affirms that the notion of perception which was the perception of nothing is a contradiction in terms. Common sense thus affirms that the act perception proves the existence of the physical world. Rejecting these tenets of empiricism and common sense and proclaiming that all perception is the perception of our own ideas and that the world outside of perception consists of mystical, occult substances, Faust's student Locke fulfilled his assignment with the highest distinction. Composed in the late eighteenth century, his Essay Concerning Human Understanding placed the West back on its Faustian track and allowed subjectivism to pick up speed and burn the mind to cinders.

ENGLAND THEN AND NOW

In his play Richard II, Shakespeare celebrates an island surrounded by the Irish Sea on the west, a channel on the south, and the North Sea on the east. Between the third and seventh centuries, the Angles, the Saxons and the Jutes founded kingdoms of liberton on this island. In 1066. William, Duke of Normandy, conquered this island, consolidated its institutions, customs and constitution, and made a comprehensive record of the extent, value, ownership, assets and liabilities of this greatest land of liberty Europe had seen since the fall of Classical world. Shakespeare celebrates this land thus: "This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England." Shakespeare wrote tragedies; he wrote plays with unhappy endings which portrayed the downfall of main characters; but nothing Shakespeare ever wrote and nothing he ever thought or imagined could ever have prepared him or led him to predict the the greatest tragedy which would befall a nation in modern times. It was the downfall commencing in the twentieth century of his own land, the land which gave the West its conceptions of human freedom and human dignity, before the rise of statism and socialism brought by the raging fury of the mob. In 1215 was born the Magna Carta, the charter of individual rights and freedoms obtained from King John by his barons at Runnymede. This was the seminal document of English liberal constitutional practice and planted the seeds of liberty throughout the European continent. From this time onward to the twentieth century, the institutions which marked and defined England remained safe and secure in the hands of the Normandys, the Plantagenets, the Tudors and the Stuarts who had the devotion to liberty flowing through their veins. But since the dawn of the twentieth century, civilized students of history have observed a sure, steady descent of Britain into the malarial fever swamps of the reds with the result that the Britain of the present day is morally, spiritually and culturally unrecognizable from the Britain founded, settled and strengthened for centuries by the traditions, documents, treatises, law books, court rulings and the "mother of all parliaments" dedicated to cause of government by free born individuals unchained to the sinister chariots of social justice and government of and for the establishment of liberty. Civilized students of history have heard and read a program and manifesto put out in the present day by England's red establishment and majority which is as unEnglish as can be, a consensus which represents the fearsome and terrifying culmination point of a century of moral treason and popular back stabbing of the nation. Echoed by every pundit and politician in the land, this public declaration by Britain's main street reds of the aims and policies of a latter day leviathan proclaims that a progressive society votes unanimously in its parliaments to transform itself into a totalitarian police state. It proclaims that a progressive society prohibits its citizens from traveling abroad except on state approved business on grounds of public health. It proclaims that a progressive society prohibits its citizens from visiting pubs, restaurants, gymnasiums and swimming pools on grounds of public health. It proclaims that a progressive society prohibits the practice of sports and team games on grounds of protecting public health. It proclaims that a progressive society keeps its citizens under house arrest on grounds of protecting public health and only allows state mandated exemptions for essential work and shopping. It proclaims that a progressive society steals its citizens' civil liberties and places them under permanent lockdown on grounds of protecting public health. It proclaims that a progressive society establishes on grounds of protecting public health an authoritarian model of politics which transforms the relationship between the state and citizen into one of master and slave. It proclaims that a progressive society prevents children from taking their parents out of care homes on grounds of protecting public health. It proclaims that a progressive society prevents children from entering schools if their parents are not wearing face masks on grounds of protecting public health. It proclaims that a progressive society places its citizens' freedoms, careers and livelihoods under permanent lock and key on grounds of protecting public health. It proclaims that a progressive society enforces hate speech codes in private homes and prohibits people from engaging in politically incorrect speech at the dinner table. It proclaims that a progressive society has abolished private conversations, private meetings, private dwelling places and the sanctity of private homes and prevented its citizens from criticizing women, nonwhites, transgenders, homosexuals, punks and goths anywhere and everywhere, throughout the length and breadth of the land, on the grounds of stamping out hate crimes. Look at Britain today and see its criminalization of politically incorrect speech. See its abolition of the right to be offensive to the reds' protected groups and to the reds' cultural establishment. See its prosecution of those who call a spade a spade and identify transgender individuals as gender dysphoric psychotics. See its rescindment of the right of free people to speak freely within their own homes. See its organization of red guards and red rioters to invade people's private homes and police the dinner table conversations they have with friends and family. See its installation of surveillance microphones in the living rooms of the people in order to prohibit speech which disparages victimized and marginalized groups. See its prohibition of criticism of Muslim extremists, fanatics, zealots and terrorists who are intoxicated with a fever of violence. See its rejection of liberal governance in the name of public order. See its suppression of the voices of reason ranged against the peddlers of gender, race and class politics. See its prosecution of those who reject the reds' religion of tribal identity and its dogmas of national socialist statism and dictatorship. See its construction of a church, a dark, satanic church of human submission, on whose altars have been sacrificed one thousand years of leagues, associations and parties dedicated to the cause of free speech and free expression, and in whose dungeons are chained the activists for this distinctively English cause, insulted, abused, harassed, persecuted and imprisoned by the ministers, bureaucrats and dark riders of the English apocalypse: "Scotland's proposed hate crime bill will penalize anyone whipping up hatred against protected groups. That includes people making insulting remarks within their own home, Justice Secretary Humza Yousaf has revealed. Quizzed on the bill by the Scottish Parliament's Justice Committee on Tuesday, Yousaf assured critics that the proposed legislation would protect the right to be offensive. However, anyone stirring up hatred against others on the basis of religion, age, disability, sexual orientation, transgender identity or variations in sexual characteristics will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law, he said. That includes off color dinner table conversations with friends and family. Asked whether people would be allowed to speak freely within their own homes, Yousaf said he disagreed 'in terms of principle and policy' with the idea of keeping the law out of the living room. 'Let's just give an example, which is intentionally stirring up hatred against Muslims,' he said. 'Are we saying that that is justified because it is in the home?' The bill's definition of hate speech is a broad one, and its text would criminalize anyone acting in 'a threatening, abusive or insulting manner' towards one of its protected groups. Yousaf did not speculate on how Scottish authorities would police conversations inside the home. However, the bill as it currently stands would not require an actual victim, just proof that the perpetrator was motivated by malice or ill will. According to the bill, a report by a 'single source' could be enough to secure a conviction. The justice secretary was roasted online for his Big Brother aspirations. Conservative MSP Alison Harris accused Yousaf of 'trying to force through dangerous attacks on our freedoms,' while Harris' fellow Conservative Gordon Lindhurst called Yousaf's suggestion 'deeply concerning.' As commenters slammed Yousaf online on Wednesday, he doubled down and replied to his critics. 'If you invite ten mates round and it can be proven beyond reasonable doubt that you intentionally stirred up hatred against Jews, why should this not be prosecuted,' the minister argued. Yousaf's bill, which amends the 1986 Public Order Act, was introduced in April. Though championed by First Minister Nicola Sturgeon and her Scottish National Party (SNP), it has been fiercely criticized by academics, artists, the Scottish Catholic Church, police associations, and free speech activists for apparently squashing freedom of expression. The London based Free Speech Union said this summer that it would 'enable groups claiming to speak for people in these protected categories to lobby the authorities to prosecute anyone who challenges their identitarian dogma.' The 1986 Public Order Act covers a wide range of riot, harassment, drunkenness and harassment offenses. Its prohibition of abusive or insulting speech, however, includes a dwelling defense, which protects this speech inside private homes. Yousaf's bill would do away with this caveat." (Scotland's Justice Minister Wants To Punish Citizens Over Insulting Conversations AT HOME by RT News). England before the twentieth century. Welfare handled by private charities and the volunteer sector. Poverty ascribed to idleness and poor behavior, and the indigent encouraged to seek work and to better themselves. The notion of social responsibility rejected as a violation of individual liberty and the government prohibited from robbing Peter to pay Paul. The right to private property exalted as indefeasible and inalienable and private homes and businesses exalted as sacred precincts which the state may not trespass. Freedom of speech exalted as the inherent right of an individual viewed as born and conceived in a state of liberty. England over the past one hundred years. Society reified as a mystical organism and exalted as superior to the lives of individuals. The individual instrumentalized in the service of society and forced to bow down in submission before the needs and interests of others. Individuals no longer viewed as individuals but as members of gender, race and class tribes. A monster brought to life by the dark, surging currents of radical ideologies and spewing out jet flames marked hate speech codes and antidiscrimination laws and gas explosions marked social justice and welfare entitlement. Such is the definition, the essence and the paradigm of a tragedy. It has brought a world of suffering, destruction and distress which Shakespeare was not able to foresee, a world which, after one thousand years, has lowered the curtain on this blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England.

THE WHEEL OF HISTORY

Civilized people who are students of mass politics understand the nature of historical time. They understand that time is not a linear, progressive march but a cyclical development which consists of repeating ages. They understand that when dealing with the fundamental character of the masses, when studying the layers of moral filth and the strata of psychological degeneracy which brought the demons of envy, jealousy, resentment, discontent, hatred, malice, revenge, entitlement and victimization to life and sent them rampaging across the earth, it is impossible to conclude that so long as the masses remain in charge, there can be any moral or political progress of mankind. Nowhere has the principle of the eternal repetition of social and political events been illustrated more clearly, starkly, tragically and severely than in the case of two elections separated by a span of less than a century: the federal election held in Germany in 1933 and the presidential election held in America in 2020. In Germany in 1933, something happened which was unique and unprecedented in the history of nations. The elections held that year were the first time in history that an educated, informed, literate citizenry raised its hands, cast its ballots and voted into power a red party, a national socialist party, a movement of radicals and revolutionaries, dedicated to taking away all the rights and liberties of the people. It was the first time in history that the people of a nation decided by peaceful, democratic means to dissolve and do away with their own freedom. The world had never seen anything like this before. From an 89 percent turnout, the National Socialist German Workers' Party tallied 45 percent of the vote and its coalition partner, the German National People's Party, tallied eight percent. Together these red, statist, anticapitalist, antiliberal parties formed a working majority in the Reichstag and elected Adolf Hitler as chancellor of the nation. What ensued was a reign of violence, terror, repression and propaganda throughout the land established under the democratic mandate given to Hitler by the German people. In the United States presidential election of 2020, the wheel of history made a full revolution and brought the German election back to life and fashioned it as the Grim Reaper on a mission to claim the souls of the American people. In this election, from a voter turnout of 66 percent, the highest turnout in 120 years, Joe Biden received 75 million votes or 51 percent of the total and Donald Trump received 71 million votes or 49 percent. In the electoral college which decides the winner, Biden received 290 electoral votes to Donald Trump's 248. This victory of the first explicitly socialist, statist candidate for the presidency was a century in the making. It was the culmination of a long march by the reds which commenced at the dawn of the twentieth century and saw the following developments. Proletarian politics which was peddled as progressivism, social security and a New Deal. Race politics which enacted the Civil Rights Act of 1964 which abolished freedom of association in private business establishments. Gender politics which abolished due process of law protections for men accused of sexual assault, criminalized the sexual touching of adult women, and mandated the conviction of male defendants on the basis of the word of an accuser or a series of accusers. Green politics which advocated an antiindustrial revolution and a movement of nihilistic world destruction in the name of achieving zero carbon emissions for the sake of the air, the trees, the water and the animals. The construction of a raging monster labeled Identity Politics which sprayed out jet flames which razed liberal equality to the ground and gas explosions which burned constitutional government to cinders and established a regime of preferential treatment in the name of diversity, equity and inclusion for a new Aryan master class composed of women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders, Muslims, indigenous savages and the poor. Health care proclaimed as a universal human right to be paid for on the backs of the producers and creators of wealth. It was a long march to the year 2020, a long march by the black shirts, the brown shirts, the green shirts, the Marxist shirts and the Maoist shirts aligned against liberal capitalist civilization, a long march on Washington which culminated in the election of Joe Biden as president by 75 millions reds who had taken command over America. In this fateful year, in this year of catastrophe which evoked the spirit of Germany, fifty one percent of the American voting population gave more votes to Joe Biden than to any other presidential candidate in American history, and cast their ballots for a program and manifesto which will establish the primacy of government power over the people and lower the curtain on American liberty, prosperity, industrial progress and constitutional government. Through mail in voting and in person voting, the American people gave their democratic imprimatur to the program and manifesto of Joe Biden and his Democratic Party. It proclaims that modern industrial civilization has blighted the planet with air pollution, water pollution and toxic sites. It proclaims that modern industrial civilization has committed serious harm to low income communities, indigenous communities and communities of color. It proclaims that modern industrial civilization is crisscrossed with highways which enforce racial segregation. It proclaims that modern industrial civilization is a dictatorship of coal companies which has committed genocide against the Navajo nation and denied access to drinking water, sewage treatment facilities, health care benefits and pensions to millions of working people. It proclaims that modern industrial civilization has poisoned the atmosphere with runaway carbon pollution. It proclaims that law enforcement agencies must look like the communities they serve and be compelled to hire and promote unqualified women and nonwhites through their ranks. It proclaims that women and nonwhites must be appointed as judges in the name of progressive politics and social inclusion. It proclaims that the capitalist system is fundamentally flawed because it impoverishes the working class and allows the idle, nonworking rich to capture one hundred percent of the economic cake. It proclaims that capitalism is a system which denies housing, health care, child care and higher education to the working class. It proclaims that capitalism is a system which denies opportunity to the working class and reserves the income ladder to the rich. It proclaims that capitalism is a system which pays women and nonwhites an infinitesimal fraction of what it pays white males. It proclaims that a progressive society has forged a new social and economic contract with the people which will abolish individual liberty in the name of shared prosperity. It proclaims that capitalism is a dictatorship of large corporations and the wealthiest few. It proclaims that housing and health care are rights and not privileges and those who work and produce wealth have a social obligation to provide them to the particles of grease floating in the sewers. It proclaims that a progressive society never allows any specimens of depravity anywhere in the world ever to go hungry or be without a home. It proclaims that a progressive society raises employees' wages to infinity, reduces entrepreneurs' profits to zero, and forces everyone who works to join a union. It proclaims that a progressive society gives unlimited banking and financial services to the masses so that moral vermin can live like millionaires. It proclaims that capitalism is a system of unabashed racism and discrimination, disenfranchisement, segregation, exclusion and suppression of women, nonwhites and indigenous communities. It proclaims that capitalism is a system of legalized racism and entrenched income and wealth inequality which unfairly denies well paying jobs to the layers of dirt and froth which blanket urban streets. It proclaims that a progressive society places human rights under permanent lockdown and economic production under permanent shutdown in the name of protecting public health. It proclaims that capitalism is the pitiless lash of the white man which has targeted black Americans, latino Americans, native Americans and women for extermination. It proclaims that capitalism is a system which works for the wealthy and the well connected and is rigged against the proletarian scum who alone perform work. Religious sages among the Hindus, the Buddhists and the Jains have seen visions of time as a wheel which rotates for infinity. Sober students of history who have studied the thought and career of the masses have come to the same conclusion through empirical inference. They have seen sad, dark and dismal parallels between Germany in 1933 and America in 2020. They have seen a dime store Hitler, a cheap American knock off version of the German fuhrer, installed into power. But this president elect and his people, his policies, his programs and the 75 million reds who cast their ballots for him are just as dangerous. They have assumed control over the world's arsenal of liberty and will blow up the house.

THE REDS' INFLATION: RAVAGER OF NATIONS

The scene: Weimar Germany in the early 1920s. A loaf of bread in Berlin which cost 160 German marks in December 1922 cost 200,000,000,000 marks in December 1923. In November 1923, the US dollar is worth 4,210,500,000,000 marks. In Aachen in 1923, 50,000 mark bills are in circulation. In Leipzig in 1923, 500,000 mark bills are in circulation. In Westphalia in 1923, five million mark coins are in circulation. In Danzig in 1923, five million mark bills are in circulation. In Trier in 1923, 50,000,000 mark bills are in circulation. In Dresden in 1923, 500,000,000 mark bills are in circulation. In Berlin in early 1923, five billion mark bills are in circulation. In Plauen, fifty billion mark bills are in circulation. In Berlin in late 1923, 500 billion mark bills are in circulation. In Stuttgart in 1923, five trillion mark bills are in circulation. In Eschweiler in 1923, 500 trillion mark bills are in circulation. From 1918 to 1923, the paper mark to gold mark exchange rate increases from one paper mark to a gold mark to one trillion paper marks to a gold mark. The foregoing were the symptoms of a fatal disease brought to society by the reds: the expansion of the currency of a country by the issuance of paper money not redeemable in gold. The reason for this issuance is to finance welfare payments to the reds' natural constituency, the moral vermin and proletarian sewers of society, and in so doing, to enable these classes to live like multimillionaires at the expense of those work, earn and save money. The reds' justification of currency expansion is a program and manifesto for the abolition of money, the advancement of universal welfare entitlements, and the sacrifice of real work and earned wealth upon the altars of government decreed counterfeit values. This declaration of the reds' sinister aims and policies, and the reds' religion of universal insanity, proclaims that a progressive society affirms that there can never be too much money in circulation and seeks to bring about a rapid increase in the quantity of money as compared to productive output. It proclaims that a progressive society affirms that the greatest and most successful monetary phenomenon involves the production of imitation money with the aim of defrauding and stealing from those who earn their daily bread through honest toil and of stuffing the pockets of the people's proletarian vandals and marauders. It proclaims that a progressive society keeps the money presses rolling round the clock in order to make billionaires out of spendthrift consumers, irresponsible ne'er do wells, and people who have perfected the black arts of revolutionary sabotage and know less than nothing about how to live like moral people who work for every penny they own. It proclaims that a progressive society operates banks of humming machines whose types and plates churn out green pieces of paper which make leeches and parasites rich beyond their wildest dreams. It proclaims that a progressive society is a printing press society whose rate of inflation runs at one thousand percent and transforms beggars, thieves, derelicts and degenerates into the gilded lords of the earth. It proclaims that a progressive society has a wage and price index which is as high as the ratio of money to work output, and celebrates as wages and prices blast through the roof of sound judgment and rational behavior, and explode into a deranged fireworks display for those who worship at the altars of magically created wealth. It proclaims that a progressive society ramps up the quantity of money to infinity and turns out the lights of wisdom and prudence. It proclaims that a progressive society has swept away a bourgeois relic from an earlier time, the discipline of a gold standard of monetary valuation, and made government dominated money an uncontrolled phenomenon in the name of financing cradle to grave welfare entitlements. It proclaims that a progressive government prints vast quantities of money on orders from the people in order to pay for social spending without raising the people's taxes. It proclaims that a progressive government prints paper money unmoored to any objective metal standard and sends million dollar checks to the people so that they can spend their way into an enchanted utopia of prosperity. It proclaims that a progressive government prints vast quantities of money in order to create wage and price inflation so that it can cheat bondholders by paying them back with cheaper money or with money with reduced purchasing power. It proclaims that a progressive society pumps up its economy with printed money and institutes wage and price controls to restrain the accelerating collapse. It proclaims that a progressive society never holds down government spending, never restrains government money creation, and celebrates inflation rates exceeding one thousand percent. It proclaims that a progressive society prints unlimited amounts of money as a cure for all the ills of the world. It proclaims that a progressive government borrows money from bondholders and pays back the debt with lower value money produced by inflation. It proclaims that money totals equal real things and a progressive government has set up its command center in the treasury house and blanketed the nation with a thick woven fabric called printed wealth. It proclaims that a progressive government has no unfunded pension programs because all such programs are guaranteed by the government's own money press. Look at the world of the reds and see its escalations of wages, prices and unemployment to infinity. See its addicts waiting for the next injection of fiat money, each dose stronger than the one before. See its fiends intoxicated by paper wealth and hallucinating great wealth and riches. See its devotees of the occult scaling peaks of euphoria produced the counterfeit stimulus of pseudomoney. See its lines of cash snorted by the masses and giving them visions of gardens blooming with gold and unlimited affluence for the asking. See its multitudes rendered wild, excited and delirious by everincreasing doses of paper money fed to them by the high priests of voodoo monetary manipulation. These are the practitioners of diabolical creation who can conjure up wealth out of thin air, flood the nation with coins, notes, checks, credit and money orders counterfeited by the state, and transform street

paupers into palace princes clothed in the decadent raiments of printed money without real value. These raiments are Satan's medium of exchange whose increase cannot be controlled, and signify the bankrupt end of civilization: "There is no way that I know to avoid the interim effect of slowing down inflation. In the long run there is no relation between inflation and unemployment. On the average, suppose a country gets accustomed to 10 percent inflation. That's perfectly livable, that's something people can get along with. What will happen? Everybody will know that it's going on. All wages will automatically tend to go up by 10 percent more a year than they otherwise would. All prices will tend to go up by 10 percent more. Instead of interest rates being 5 percent, they will be 15 percent. Everything will get adjusted to it. We have a great deal of evidence that the average rate of inflation over a period of time has no relationship at all to the average rate of growth or the average level of unemployment. The thing is that only surprises matter. It isn't inflation that produces a stimulus; it's only higher inflation than you expected. It's only the surprise. If you get adjusted to it, it doesn't do any good. It's just like again alcoholism and drug addiction. When a fellow first gets started on drinking, all it takes is one drink to make him happy. But after his body gets adjusted to that, it takes a little more, and pretty soon he's taking a half a bottle. Similarly with drugs. It takes bigger and bigger doses to have the same effect. And similarly with inflation. As a country gets accustomed to higher and higher rates of inflation, it needs a bigger dose to have any stimulating effect." (Money And Inflation by Milton Friedman). Lenin proclaimed that the best way to destroy the capitalist system is to debauch the currency. He proclaimed that red central bankers in capitalist countries are the communists' best friends. He proclaimed that currency expansion should be promoted in capitalist countries because it leads to inflation which breaks down markets, bankrupts the producing classes, and prevents businesses from planning beyond the range of the moment because they do not know what their money will be worth the next moment. He proclaimed that a currency collapsing from price inflation will transform the bourgeois into the proletariat overnight and bring about radical change in short order. He proclaimed that capitalist treasuries must be encouraged to churn out worthless scraps of paper by the billions in order to destroy the value of money as a means of payment and return society to a primitive communist state of pure barter. These sentiments have been repeated by reds throughout the world since they were first uttered by Lenin in 1919. Civilized people have heard these words all around them in every home, school and office in the land. They have heard the sounds of revolution coming and the death knell of the West.

AYN RAND VERSUS ARISTOTLE

Counterfeit money is imitation currency which is produced without the sanction of the state. The counterfeiting of money is a global, multibillion dollar industry and governments have had to employ sophisticated anticounterfeiting devices such as holograms, multicolored bills, embedded strips, raised printing, microprinting, watermarks, colors which change with the light, and designs which disable photocopiers. Students of common sense, Aristotelian philosophy have detected a counterfeit system in circulation and warned their colleagues to be on guard against it. This is the system called objectivism and its author is Ayn Rand. Peddled as a system of realism and common sense, Rand's system has been detected by students of philosophy as a counterfeit product which departs from realism and common sense on three significant points. These points lie in the fields of ethics and theory of knowledge. In the field of theory of knowledge, Rand is opposed to the common sense axiom that when we perceive, we perceive something, which is a physical object. A perception which was not the perception of a physical object would be the perception of nothing and is a contradiction in terms. The act of perception is not the object of perception but proves the existence of the object or the existence of the physical world. The philosophy of subjectivism is a philosophy of unconsciousness. Listen to Aristotle, the preeminent philosopher of common sense, discourse about the objectivity of perception. Listen to him proclaim that in the act of perception, the perceiver acquires the qualities of the perceived and perceives the object directly: "The perceiver is potentially what the perceptible object actually is already, as we have said. While it is being affected, then, it is unlike the object; but when it has been affected it has been made like the object and has acquired its quality." (On The Soul by Aristotle). Listen to Aristotle when he proclaims that the act of perception is the direct reception of the forms of physical objects without their matter: "The general point to be grasped is that each sense receives the perceptible forms without the matter. Wax, for instance, receives the design on a signet ring without the iron or gold; it acquires the design in the gold or bronze, but not insofar as the design is gold or bronze." (On The Soul by Aristotle). Listen to Aristotle when he proclaims that the act of perception involves the direct affecting and alteration of the sense organ by the physical object: "In a way even the senses undergo alteration, since actual perception is a motion through the body in the course of which the sense is affected in a certain way." (Physics by Aristotle). Now listen to Ayn Rand promote a subjective theory of perception. Listen to her proclaim that the objects of perception are subjective sensations and not physical objects. Listen to her proclaim that man perceives associations, integrations and internal stimuli and not any world of actual material entities: "The higher organisms possess a much more potent form of consciousness: they possess the faculty of retaining sensations, which is the faculty of perception. A perception is a group of sensations automatically retained and integrated by the brain of a living organism, which gives it the ability to be aware, not of single stimuli, but of entities, of things. An animal is guided, not merely by immediate sensations, but by percepts. Its actions are not single, discrete responses to single, separate stimuli, but are directed by an integrated awareness of the perceptual reality confronting it. It is able to grasp the perceptual concretes immediately present and it is able to form automatic perceptual associations, but it can go no further." (The Virtue of Selfishness by Ayn Rand). Listen to Rand proclaim that the objects of man's perception include sensory confusion, sensory chaos, sensory retentions and crowds of sensations and never any such things as actual physical objects. Listen to Rand proclaim that knowledge of sensations gives knowledge of reality. Listen to Rand proclaim that there is no direct awareness or direct perception of reality but only a mediated awareness because sensations are the components of perceptions, and alone are what are given and self evident: "Sensations, as such, are not retained in man's memory, nor is man able to experience a pure isolated sensation. As far as can be ascertained, an infant's sensory experience is an undifferentiated chaos. Discriminated awareness begins on the level of percepts. A percept is a group of sensations automatically retained and integrated by the brain of a living organism. It is in the form of percepts that man grasps the evidence of his senses and apprehends reality. When we speak of direct perception or direct awareness, we mean the perceptual level. Percepts, not sensations, are the given, the self evident. The knowledge of sensations as components of percepts is not direct, it is acquired by man much later: it is a scientific, conceptual discovery." (Introduction To Objectivist Epistemology by Ayn Rand). Rand falsely ascribes to Aristotle a position resembling the Platonic doctrine of pure forms. She states that Aristotle believed that essences actually exist in physical objects and that the mind perceives these directly. Now listen to Aristotle describe the mind's progression from particulars to universals and the process of abstraction from the data of sense. Listen to Aristotle's explicit repudiation of the doctrine of pure forms and the mystical intuition of these forms by the mind: "When one of a number of particulars has been perceived, the earliest universal is present in the soul. For though the act of sense perception is of the particular, its content is universal. It is man, for example, not this man Callias. A fresh perception is made among these rudimentary universals, and the process does not cease until the true universals, are established, for example, such and such a species of animal is a step towards the genus animal, which by the same process is a step towards a further generalization. Thus it is plain that we must get to know first premises by induction, for this is the way in which perception instils universals." (Posterior Analytics by Aristotle). Rand is opposed to the common sense view that knowledge is absolute and not contextual. Common sense affirms that the statement that all knowledge is dependent upon circumstances, settings and conditions is inconsistent inasmuch as the truth of the statement is held to be absolute and independent of circumstances, settings and conditions. Listen to Rand proclaim as a fixed, unchanging absolute the statement that all truth and conceptualization are purely contextual, provisional and temporary in character: "Concepts are not and cannot be formed in a vacuum; they are formed in a context; the process of conceptualization consists of observing the differences and similarities of the existents within the field of one's awareness (and organizing them into concepts accordingly). From a child's grasp of the simplest concept integrating a group of perceptually given concretes, to a scientist's grasp of the most complex abstractions integrating long conceptual chains—all conceptualization is a contextual process; the context is the entire field of a mind's awareness or knowledge at any level of its cognitive development." (Introduction To Objectivist Epistemology by Ayn Rand). Rand opposes the common sense view that human rights belong only to those who live and flourish like human beings and not to a class of moral and spiritual vermin. Common sense affirms that the definition of man as a rational animal precludes a universal application of the principle of nonaggression on the grounds that those whose lives and careers fall short of this definition are not in justice entitled to receive human dignity or human respect. Listen to Aristotle affirm the common sense principle that nonflourishing human beings, those whose lives and careers are marked by the renunciation of reason, are not entitled to receive protection from the state: "We become just by the practice of just actions, self controlled by exercising self control, and courageous by performing acts of courage. Lawgivers make the citizens good by inculcating good habits in them, and this is the aim of every lawgiver; if he does not succeed in doing that, his legislation is a failure. It is in this that a good constitution differs from a bad one. The end of politics is the best of ends; and the main concern of politics is to engender a certain character in the citizens and to make them good and disposed to perform noble actions." (Ethics by Aristotle). Now listen to Rand promote liberal political equality, deny that man has a definition as a rational animal, and proclaim the right of human appearing animals, or those whose lives and careers do not live up to this definition, the right not to be aggressed against. "Whatever may be open to disagreement, there is one act of evil that may not, the act that no man may commit against others and no man may sanction or forgive. So long as men desire to live together, no man may initiate—do you hear me? no man may start—the use of physical force against others." (Atlas Shrugged by Ayn Rand). Students of philosophy who exalt the Aristotelian world of common sense have deployed their sophisticated mental anticounterfeiting devices and detected a fraud. Created by Ayn Rand and peddled as the philosophy of objectivism, it is an unwelcome, unwanted, unbelonging interloper in the community of the sane and the civilized.

HUMAN EVENTS

It is a fundamental tenet of rational political philosophy that when a government which invades the rights of the people cannot be removed by peaceful, democratic means, the time has arrived for violence. Governments which prevent individuals from living and flourishing as human beings ought to live and flourish, as rational, productive, self perfecting agents, lack basic moral legitimacy. If such governments cannot be removed by nonviolent means, then justice demands that they be removed by means of force and violence. In the last presidential election, 75 million Americans, or 51 percent of the voting population, voted to establish a regime led by Joe Biden and the Democratic Party which will entrench the program and platform of the reds' attack on liberal institutions and culture and establish a regime committed to gender, race and class supremacy. The new radical left majority which has assumed control over the nation has cast a pall over American freedom and constitutional government and filled civilized people with the darkest of thoughts. They behold a future as the fearsome and terrifying culmination of a century of red tub thumping and agitation and as they huddle together under a cloth and a cloud covering a coffin called America, they are determined to fight this threatening harm with the only weapon remaining to them, the weapon which justice demands when peaceful methods of effecting social change have all failed: with the weapons of force and violence. Civilized people are determined to fight with direct action a coming regime whose supporters have pulled down statues of Christopher Columbus, the Founding Fathers, Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt and Winston Churchill. They are determined to fight a regime which seeks to level down the creators and producers of wealth and value and enforce a fraternity of slaves. They are determined to fight a regime which will incinerate personal liberty and the protections of private property inside blast furnaces marked Social Justice. They are determined to fight a regime which proclaims that health care is a universal human right under which bacterial scum are cared for with money stolen from the honest toilers of the world. They are determined to fight a regime which seeks to overthrow the world of liberal modernity and the Age of Enlightenment and replace it with a reign of terror on behalf of women, nonwhites, homosexuals, transgenders, Muslims and the poor. They are determined to fight a regime which will tax income at a rate of one hundred percent and confiscate all private wealth and capital. They are determined to fight a regime which will exact reparations payments from whites for slavery which existed one hundred and fifty years ago. They are determined to fight a regime which will open the nation's borders to the proletarian refuse and the blazing Islamic sand blowing in from the wastelands of the world. They are determined to fight a regime which will effect radical changes to the Anglo-Saxon legal system and deprive men accused of sexual assault of the right to be presumed innocent, the right to have evidence presented against them, and the right not to be convicted on the basis of the word of an accuser or series of accusers. They are determined to fight a regime which will force working Americans to pay off university students' debts totaling 1.5 trillion dollars. They are determined to fight a regime which will establish cradle to grave reliance on the government and transform every citizen into a ward of the state. They are determined to fight a regime which will blame all personal failures on the capitalist system and rob Peter to pay for Paul's ineptitude and incompetence. They are determined to fight a regime which will mandate the closing of all shops and businesses, mandate prohibitions on socializing in private homes, mandate placing the people under house arrest, and mandate the wearing of face masks in all public and private places in the name of protecting public health. They are determined to fight a regime which will abolish liberal meritocracy and enact a system of preferential treatment for women and nonwhites in the name of diversity, equity and inclusion. They are determined to fight a regime which will resurrect the spirit of Mein Kampf with the slogans race and gender matter and race and gender are plus factors in all hiring and admissions. They are determined to fight a regime which will defund the police, dismantle law and order, and encourage masked hoodlums marching under the banners of Antifa and Black Lives Matter to occupy, patrol, smash, loot and raze to the ground the cities of the nation. They are determined to fight a regime which will ban books, films and television programs which do not conform to the people's red party line granting tribal power to women, nonwhites and indigenous peoples. They are determined to fight a regime which will ban freedom of speech and expression and enact hate speech codes targeting criticism of radical feminism, black nationalism, Marxist revolution and Islamist terror. They are determined to fight a regime which will condemn the liberal order as systemically racist and replace it with the jungle politics of gender, race and class struggle. They are determined to fight a regime which will repeal the industrial revolution in the name of achieving zero carbon emissions and will turn back the clock to the year zero in the name of the air, the water, the trees and the animals. They are determined to fight a regime which will redefine the quality of life in accordance with a new standard of submission to the state and the renunciation of material prosperity. Civilized people have listened to the words of the incoming administration and heard ideologues proclaim that social security takes precedence over individual liberty. That a progressive society has all the properties of socialism and placed absolute power into the hands of gender, race and class tribes. That a progressive society is a communist society which has burned the cross of sacrifice on the backs of every man, woman and child. That a progressive society has placed the health care industry under government control and guaranteed the right to see a doctor to every specimen of moral corruption who walks the face of the earth: "She suggested that given Social Security's popularity, embracing things labeled socialism does not always turn out to be bad. During an appearance on FNC's Your World on Thursday, host Neil Cavuto asked Rep. Debbie Dingell (D-MI) about the possibility her party could continue to suffer from the perception it has embraced socialism. Dingell referenced her father in law John Dingell, Sr., who was also a congressman for Michigan and played a role in the implementation of Social Security, which at that time was criticized for having properties of socialism. 'You know, this is what I'm going to say, Neil. And I'm very blunt about this. None of us can be judgmental. We need to look at the number of people that voted for President Trump and why. I am someone who thinks that we have let Republicans define who we are. And I use this—you have seen all this—everybody using different phrases to brand them. My father in law was one of the authors of Social Security. He got called a socialist. He got called a communist. He had crosses burnt on his lawn. You tell me who in America is going to call Social Security a socialist idea right now. Democrats have got to own what they're doing. There are people at the dinner tables every night that are talking about issues that they are worried about, from whether their job is going to be safe, having trade deals, whether there's a level playing field, access to broadband in urban and rural areas, lowering the cost of prescription drugs, making sure people with preexisting coverage have—we have got a lot of common ground.' " (Democratic Representative Dingell Defends Socialist Label—'Democrats Have Got to Own What They're Doing' by Jeff Poor). Civilized people today have heard a battle cry for freedom resounding down the corridors of history. It begins with the phrase, "when in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another" and it ends with a call for violence to overthrow a tyranny which could not be overthrown by peaceful means. These words from the American Declaration of Independence are the preeminent beacons for civilized Americans today whose lives and careers have been crushed beneath the weight of a majoritarian tyranny composed of 75 million reds. Civilized Americans have seen the mob in the last presidential election vote into power a regime committed to abolishing American constitutional government and the right of the individual to live his life free of red totalitarian tyranny. Civilized people know the character of the mob and know that the only language it understands is the language of force. They are determined to defeat the mob's new government by the only method now open to them: by the method of violence.

A FORGOTTEN MAN'S PHILOSOPHY

